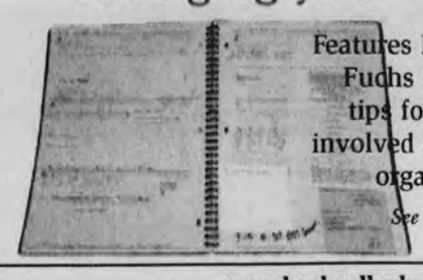
The Bucknellian

September 1, 2006

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

Volume 138, Number 1 | Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue | www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Managing your time



Features Editor Julia Fuchs '09 gives tips for getting involved and staying organized.

See page A8

Bison renovations offer more variety

By Mary Moore
Contributing Writer

Summer renovations to The Bison, the dining venue in the lower level of the Elaine Langone Center, revamped its structure, décor and overall atmosphere.

Both student need and accessibility issues drove the changes.

Dining personnel, University officials and members of the Bucknell Student Government (BSG) were collectively active in the decision making, though STV Group, an outside design firm, was contracted by the University to handle all renovations.

Although the current design differs slightly from the original plan, dining manager John Cummins has voiced pleasure in the variation.

"The result is better than we had originally planned," said Cummins.

Some of the most noticeable aspects of the renovation are the changes made at the C-Store. Not only did the location change, but the overall size was increased, as well as the selection of products. There are now more beverage selections and a considerably larger grocery area.

Previously, fresh produce products were only available on weekends, and now they will be available all week long. Both the Bison and Bostwick now carry fresh local bagels. Most importantly, the prices remain consistent with local convenient store prices.

The structural renovation, which has provided for the installation of an expanded refrigerating system, has allowed for better developed On-the-Go items and a greater variety of sushi and salads.

Another major change occurred in the deli area; the original eight foot counter has been expanded to over 16 feet, allowing two people to work at once, which diminishes wait time.

Some of the new additions to the Bison include a flat

See BISON page A2

Boston firm to assist in planning

By Chris Peterson
Contributing Writer

The University has hired an independent contractor to aid with campus master planning.

According to a recent news release by David Surgala, Vice President for Finance and Administration, the University has selected Shepley Bulfinch Richardson & Abbott (SBRA).

This firm will be the outside expert that will provide the University with "nationally informed, objective guidance on the best way to invest in improving and adding to our educational, research, office, and recreational buildings and grounds," Chief Communications Officer Pete Mackey said.

SBRA, stationed in Boston, Mass., will help plan how to manage different renovations and possible expansions over the next year or so. These renovations range from landscape enhancement to possible retail and commercial development. The firm will even attempt to help with possible energy saving opportunities and water management.

"Bucknell is initiating a comprehensive facilities master plan to ensure that it remains one of the most beautiful and functional campuses in America," Mackey said.

Though this means surveyors will have to spend time on the campus to put this plan into action, it should have little to no effect on student life.

"I expect the small amount of surveying that might need to be done will be during normal business hours, so students should not be affected," Surgala said.

The students will be relied on heavily for their input and opinions.

"We will be seeking student input as a vital part of campus and community focus groups on this plan," Mackey said.

The study itself should be finished in time for the University to initiate the renovations and expansions by 2007.

"The campus master plan itself should take around 14-16 months to complete, and it will involve faculty, staff, students and alumni," Surgala said.

SBRA was chosen from a field of almost 100 firms that were considered by the University for the managing and renovating of the campus itself. According to the website, it is a "national design practice providing the education, healthcare, science, corporate and

See PLAN page A2

University welcomes Class of 2010

Ellyn Ercolano—The Bucknellian

The Class of 2010 shows school spirit at the 'Ray for the Orange and the Blue event during orientation. Students learned the alma mater, heard athletes and alumni speak, ate free pizza and received free t-shirts.

Public Safety director seeks to mend relations

Courtesy of the Office of Communications

The new Public Safety director, Jason Friedberg, hopes to improve the relationship between students and officers.

By Michelle Laxer
News Editor

With the arrival of new Director of Public Safety Jason Friedberg, the campus community will be seeing much more of our officers around the campus due to Friedberg's plans to improve the relationship between the students and the department.

"I want [the officers] to be more visible," Friedberg said. Having officers constantly available anywhere on campus is part of Friedberg's "Liaison Program." He wants students to view Public Safety officers as their allies and resources.

"It's a re-focusing of efforts," said Friedberg.

The Liaison Program focuses on integrating Public Safety officers as members of the Bucknell community.

"It humanizes the officers," Friedberg said.

Students will see officers attending more and more campus events, but not merely to stand guard. They will be interacting with students and staff.

"We're going to any events, talking to people," Officer Brian Morris said.

"We want more exposure," explained Officer Mike Griffiths.

"There will be more foot patrols and bike patrols," Officer Morris said.

There will also be more dorm patrols.

"We're not trying to catch anyone," said Officer Griffiths. "We're just trying to be in the general public more."

"I did notice Public Safety a lot more during freshman orientation and other public events this year," said Brian Grayburn '07. "I suppose their presence can't be viewed as a negative thing."

Friedberg also has plans to work with the Lewisburg and East Buffalo police departments to help raise professionalism when dealing with downtown issues. Rather than immediately shutting down an off-campus party, Public Safety will first issue warnings. If complaints are still received, then Lewisburg police will be called in to shut down the party.

Friedberg does not want students to view officers as "heavy-handed authoritarians." With changes such as these, Friedberg hopes that students will feel as if they are being treated as responsible adults.

There will be immediate changes taking place within the department in about one month. Officers will be receiving new uniforms and updated patches.

"The uniforms will match

See DIRECTOR page A2

Learning center to improve teaching

24-hour computer lab finds new home in Taylor Hall

By Evan Unger
News Editor

The University has created a Teaching and Learning Center in the Ellen Clarke Bertrand Library to offer educational programs to faculty, staff and students.

As a result, the 24-hour lab been moved to Taylor Hall so that students still have constant access to computers.

The Center will teach new faculty members the University's best pedagogical practices, bringing them up to speed with current teaching methods. For current faculty, the Center will offer advanced classes to enhance their teaching on all levels.

The Center is divided into different teaching spaces including a conference room, two tutoring spaces and private rooms for consultations. The most impressive feature is its mock classroom. A model classroom has been created to include the latest technology, such as a projector and a lectern. Professors will be able to learn how to use the equipment and how to perform a mock lesson.

The Faculty Advisory Committee on Teaching (F.A.C.T.) oversees the Center. It consists of a group of professors who are committed to working on teaching practices. The primary focus of F.A.C.T. is student learning; it has formed a task force to determine the needs of students. The task force, which includes student workers, is generating a report that will outline weak areas in campus learning, such as the availability of tutors or an expanded Writing Center program.

The Teaching and Learning Center is a product of the University's philosophy that teaching is an important aspect of education, according to Associate

See TAYLOR page A3

New faculty have five-course load

By Nilanjana Saha
News Editor

The University has hired 12 new faculty members for the fall semester, offering a five course load annually to professors.

"We look for intellectual leaders, individuals who can provide the undergraduate experience that Bucknell wants to offer to its students," said Christopher Zappe, interim dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

Nine of the new professors are replacing faculty members who resigned or retired last year from various departments in the College of Arts and Sciences. The other three professors will be replacing professors in the Engineering College.

According to Dean of Engineering Jim Orbison, new professors have the most difficulty adapting to teaching full courses because the majority of them have recently finished their doctorates and have very little teaching experience. New professors go through orientation and have a senior faculty member serve as their mentor to help them during their first year.

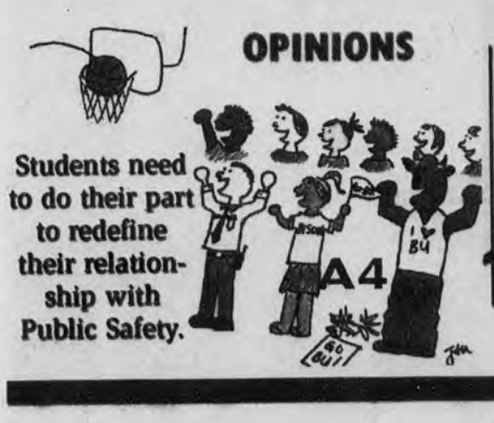
Assistant Professor of Sociology and Anthropology Elizabeth Durden spent the past two years teaching as a visiting professor at the University. "I find [Bucknell] to be a supporting environment, cultivating young faculty in both teaching and research. In regards to students, the sociology and anthropology department has very engaged and capable students," Durden said.

As the University begins to implement its plan to lighten the annual course load for professors, 36 additional faculty members will be

See FACULTY page A2

INSIDE THIS ISSUE

OPINIONS



Students need to do their part to redefine their relationship with Public Safety.

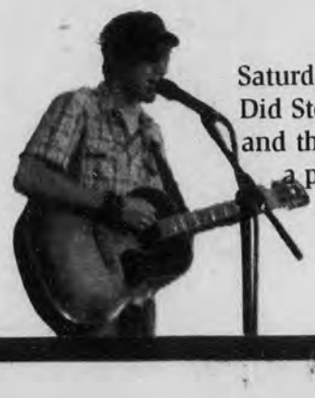
A4

FEATURES

First-years were rounded up for orientation activities, including color wars and a carnival.

A8

A&E



Saturday at Uptown: Did Stephen Kellogg and the Sixers score a perfect ten?

B6

SPORTS

Field hockey flies to 2-0 start and wins three league awards in first week.

B1

Public Safety Log

Wednesday, August 23

THEFT—Chi Phi Fraternity: OPEN: Student reports several personal and fraternity items taken from Chi Phi and put up for sale on eBay

Friday, August 25

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—Chi Phi Fraternity: CLOSED: During a follow up investigation alcohol was found in an underage student's room.

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—Swartz Hall: CLOSED: Underage Student found Intoxicated in restroom.

Saturday, August 26

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Galloway House: CLOSED: Three males broke an exterior light.

DISORDERLY CONDUCT—Sigma Phi Epsilon Fraternity: CLOSED: Students using a sling shot to shoot water balloons at McDonnell Hall

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—Larison Hall: OPEN: RA Broke Up an Unregistered Party

Sunday, August 27

LIQUOR LAWS VIOLATION—Bucknell West: CLOSED: Two underage students found consuming alcohol

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—Bucknell West: CLOSED: Student Charged with DUI

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—Larison Hall: CLOSED: Female student transported by ambulance to Evangelical Emergency Room for an alcohol overdose

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—Sigma Chi Fraternity: CLOSED: Lewisburg Police Department brought a male student back to campus after issuing him a DUI

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—7th Street House: CLOSED: Emergency phone blue light was damaged.

Monday, August 28

ASSIST OTHER PD (LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION)—Bell Alley: CLOSED: Lewisburg Police Department transported an underage intoxicated BU student to Evangelical Hospital for treatment

Wednesday, August 30

DRUG VIOLATION—Bucknell West: OPEN: Officer responded to fire alarm activation and observed drug paraphernalia in plain view. Unknown person(s) had also tampered with the smoke detector.

IN MEMORIAM

Lee Idleman '54

Wes Kinter
Contributing Writer

Former chair of the Bucknell Board of Trustees and University alumnus, Lee Idleman '54 passed away at the age of 73 on Monday, June 26, 2006.

Services were held on Friday, June 30, where friends and family gathered to pay their respects to the deceased.

Idleman was known for the many contributions he has made to the University, including serving on the Board of Trustees, between 1980 and 2005, in an active role and as an emeritus.

"For half a century, Lee Idleman gave this university his energy and devotion," said Bucknell President Brian C. Mitchell. "He was a dynamic and imaginative leader, and beloved by Bucknellians."

After his graduation from Bucknell in 1954, earning a degree in commerce and finance, "Idleman began his 40-year career on Wall Street in 1957 with Merrill Lynch in New York City, where he held various positions in research and portfolio management," reported "The Star Ledger." Idleman was also a member of Kappa Delta Rho Fraternity.

"Lee Idleman provided a wonderful example of leadership, service, and dedication to Bucknell, and we are grateful for his many lasting contributions to the university," said Judge Susan Crawford, chair of the University Board of Trustees.

Courtesy of Bucknell World

Lee Idleman '54 died on June 26. He served as the chair of various committees and established scholarships for students.

Among his many contributions to the University, Idleman served as a member of the Bison Club Executive Committee and was chair of the presidential search committee in 1984. Lee Idleman also received the Bucknell Alumni Association Award for Loyalty and Service to the University in 1994.

One of his largest contributions to the campus was his establishment of the Idleman Family Scholarship, which provided financial aid to bright students.

"Without Mr. Idleman and his family, I would not be able to attend Bucknell," said Nathan Patterson '05, a recipient of the Idleman Family Scholarship. "It is solely their generosity that has allowed me the opportunity to study and learn here."

This fall, in recognition of Lee Idleman's distinguished and extraordinary service to the university, Bucknell will host a service in the fall at which Mr. Idleman will posthumously receive the Stephen W. Taylor Medal, known as "the most signal honor" granted by the university.

"He was immensely proud to be a Bucknellian, and we are grateful to have known Lee Idleman," said Mitchell. "He and his family remain close in our thoughts and prayers."

BISON From page A1

screen plasma TV and all new chairs, as well as new floor tiling and carpeting. The patio area has also been equipped with brand new umbrellas and teak-wood tables, a student favorite.

"The patio and umbrellas are a nice touch. It's nice to be able to eat outside," said Lexi Wikstrom '08.

The general feedback from University students has been positive.

"The renovations have definitely transformed the Bison. The brighter, more open atmosphere makes it a much more inviting place to eat, and the lines are quicker to get through. The C-Store's larger selection of inventory makes shopping for everyday items on campus a lot easier," Claire Duffy '09.

Ty Hoffman '07 is pleased with the changes as well.

"I will definitely go there more now," said Hoffman.

On September 14, a Grand Reopening will take place from 4-6 pm at the Bison.

There will be a ribbon cutting at 5:45, presided over by both President Mitchell and Provost DeCredico.

PLAN From page A1

public markets." It has won over 50 design awards for the work it has done on numerous academic and administrative buildings.

This firm has contributed to the campus before. According to the news release, SBRA helped to design the addition to the Ellen Clarke Bertrand Library in the 1980s, renovations to the Olin Science Building and Biology Building in 1989 and 1990, and the Information Commons in the library in 1999. The firm even helped with the expansion of the Bison, a popular student dining area and hangout, in 1990.

The overall goal of this project is to help create better learning and living environments for students, better teaching and research space for faculty, and to continue to contribute to the beauty of the town of Lewisburg, Pa. With a staff of over 200 professionals, SBRA seems well equipped to help the University achieve its goal. And with the input and opinions of alumni, faculty, staff and students, the year 2007 should be filled with both excitement and change.

DIRECTOR From page A1

the officers' training and experience, and they will emit professionalism," Friedberg said. "They're going to look good and it will give them self-respect and pride."

Friedberg has replaced Vincent DeCerchio, who was Public Safety director for 15 years. "Everything is more professional and more efficient," said Officer Griffiths.

Friedberg has been involved with many other programs to change the image of Public Safety officers at colleges and universities prior to Bucknell. At one campus, there was the "Adopt-a-Cop" program, where one officer would visit a specific residential hall throughout the year to offer the students safety tips on numerous topics throughout the school year. Friedberg has attended events and informal dinners in civilian dress at other campuses so that students began to understand the difference between himself as an officer and himself as their resource.

"Students knew the difference and it never mixed," Friedberg said.

It is still too early for any noticeable changes in student attitudes towards the officers, but "things can only go in a positive direction," said Officer Dan Brobst.

"[Friedberg] has good ideas that will create a better image for everybody," said Officer Mike Koziol.

FACULTY From page A1

hired over the next three years, allowing the existing faculty members to teach five courses each year instead of six.

"We want our professors to stay scholars, remain students and intellectually curious as well as have more time to devote to students," Orbison said.

Although offering all the professors a five course load will be a gradual process, Zappe believes that the plan will allow the University to be competitive in hiring and retaining first-class faculty.

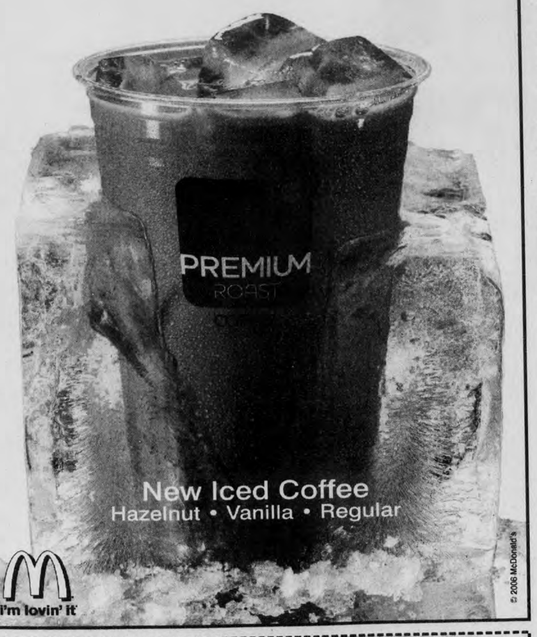
A drawback to a five course load is that the frequency of certain course offerings might have to be altered. Some electives will probably be offered only once per year instead of every semester.

Zappe believes a five course load will enhance student-professor interaction. Professors will be able to devote more time to undergraduate research and independent studies. They will have more time to devote to their own research, longer office hours and more time preparing for classes.

According to Zappe, over the course of the next few years the faculty as a whole is likely to change. As the "baby boom" generation begins to retire and is replaced by younger professors, interdisciplinary studies are likely to increase.

With recent graduates as professors, students will benefit from their updated research. "There will be new energy and new ideas, and students might also enjoy interacting with professors closer to their age," Zappe said.

be cool to yourself



FREE Medium Iced Coffee
With Purchase of a Sandwich*
(Breakfast or Large Sandwich)
*Excludes Dollar Menu and Snack Wrap®. Large Menu Sandwiches include Big Mac®, Quarter Pounder®† with Cheese, Ranch BLT, Club, Classic Premium Chicken Sandwich® and Filet-O-Fish®. Valid only at participating McDonald's® in Southeastern and Northeastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Kent & New Castle counties, Delaware. Current prices and participation based on independent operator decision. Void where prohibited. Valid when product served and may not be valid for custom orders. Limit one coupon per customer per visit. One free item per coupon. Cash value 1/20 of one cent. Price of required purchase posted on menu board. Prices may vary. Plus tax if applicable. Not valid in combination with any other offer, discount, coupon or combo meal. Coupon may not be transferred, copied or duplicated in any way or transmitted via electronic media. †Weight before cooking 4 oz. (113.4 grams). ©2006 McDonald's
Expiration Date: October 31, 2006
i'm lovin' it

Write for News.
e-mail etu001@

CUSTOMIZED SKINCARE
FOR THE TREATMENT OF ACNE
Each of these product lines allow us to meet the individual needs of our patients.
OBAGI La Roche Posay SkinCeuticals
• Vitamin Supplements
Healthy Skin provides internal skin care by enhancing the body's natural ability to provide nutrients.
• Blue Light Treatments
This special blue light simply and painlessly kills bacteria in your skin.
• Intense Pulsed Light
This treatment offers improvement in pore size and acne scars.
• Chemical Peels
Refines skins' texture and simulates skins natural renewal process.
• Microdermabrasion
Gently exfoliates the skin and leaves a smoother texture, promoting the growth of healthy, new skin cells.

CENTER FOR SKIN HEALTH
Ernest Normington, M.D., FACS
210 IPM Road in Lewisburg • (570) 524-7777 • www.drnormington.com

Fire temporarily closes Mya's Café

Smoke build-up on walls nearly destroys space; rebuilding has begun

By Abhay Agarwal
Contributing Writer

A fire broke out in Mya's Café, located on Market Street, on Aug. 4, 2006. The source of the fire is reported to be a floor model air conditioner.

No one was injured, even though customers were being served when the fire broke out and spread across the kitchen area.

Emergency services were called immediately. They brought the situation under control in roughly 30 minutes. Market Street remained closed for a few hours due to damage on the ceilings, walls and floors of the café.

Mike Purcell, assistant to the Director of Housing & Residential Life and volunteer for the fire department and EMS, immediately rushed to the site. The William Cameron Engine Company and fire services from Milton and Mifflinburg were already present.

"The new owners had purchased the place less than a year ago and were doing a really good job," Purcell said. "I'd like to see them get back to the community as early as possible and create the good atmosphere once again."

The fire almost completely destroyed the café due to smoke build-up on the walls. The owners have started working on the rebuilding process from scratch. They have not decided on a particular date for re-opening the café, but are aiming for a brand new start in about one to two months.

Mya's Café, located on 428 Market Street between 4th and 5th Streets, is jointly owned by Scott Jones, Colin McNevin and Peter Sisson. The building is owned by Owen Mahon Jr., who lives in Lewisburg, Pa.

Mahon said that the owners had been doing a wonderful job and had built up an extremely strong and regular clientele. Jones visits the site every day to make sure the rebuilding process proceeds steadily. He mentioned how much he misses the customers, who are like family to him.

"When the fire broke out, so many people from the community, including our competitors and customers, came out and helped us," Jones said. "Everyone has been wonderful to us, and I would like to thank them all for their kind support throughout."

Lewisburg will miss Mya's Café, but it should be back soon - complete with a changed menu. While it is gone, people might consider alternatives such as Zelda's on 6th Street, Coffee House on 3rd Street and Brook Park Café, which is expected to open soon on Route 45.

TAYLOR From page A1

Professor of Economics Geoff Schneider, the Director of the teaching and learning center.

"I see this as an essential part of the strategic plan. If we want to be seen as a premier liberal arts college, we need a Center that can push the envelope in the areas of teaching and learning," Schneider said.

Schneider divides his time between teaching students and running the Center. He said that his busy schedule was crafted to allow him to stay current with teaching methods by having him work with students in a classroom setting.

To allocate space, the 24-hour lab in the Bertrand Library was converted into the Center.

"This location was chosen because teaching and learning are central to the mission of the University, and the Bertrand Library sits at the heart of the campus," said Gene Spencer, associate vice president of ISR. "Being in the library will allow the Teaching and Learning center to make extensive use of the resources and staff of ISR."

The library's original lab consisted of 15 computers, so 24 new machines have been added to the Ask/Research section where the map collection was previously held.

The map collection is now located on Lower Level One, along with four computers loaded with Geographical Information System software.

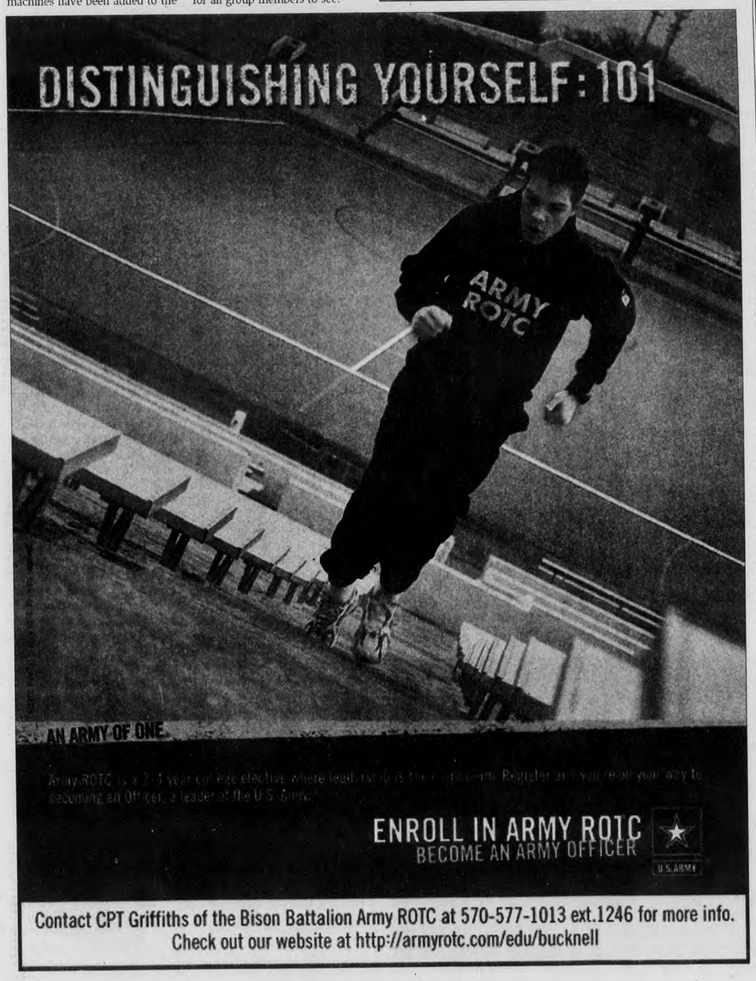
Some students were pleased with the additions. "The new computers at the library make it a lot easier to do work in between classes when you are uphill because there are more available," said Denise Peterson '08.

The new computers were installed "partly to compensate for the loss of the 24-hour lab. Another critical part of the overall plan is the campus-wide wireless system installed last year," Spencer said. "Over 70 percent of students own a laptop and can utilize the network anywhere, 24-hours a day."

Storage lockers have also been installed, allowing students to stow their books and computers when not studying.

New flat-panel displays will be added in the fall in the Collaborate section of the library, where students can connect their laptops and display information for all group members to see.

Villager GMAC Real Estate
521 N. Derr Dr. Lewisburg, PA 17837
570-523-3244
CALL US FOR THE LARGEST SELECTION OF RENTALS IN TOWN
1-5 Bedroom Units
Houses or Apartments for 2007/2008 and 2008/2009
A few choice units for 06/07 left!
Call Linda or Duska or e-mail us at linda-treese@villagerrealty.com for a complete list of our rentals.



Contact CPT Griffiths of the Bison Battalion Army ROTC at 570-577-1013 ext.1246 for more info.
Check out our website at http://armyrotc.com/edu/bucknell

News Briefs

Pilot gets locked out of cockpit

During a flight from Ottawa to Winnipeg, the pilot of a Canadian airliner returned from a bathroom break to learn he was locked out of the cockpit.

According to CNN.com, airline spokeswoman Manon Stewart said that "with 30 minutes to go, the pilot went to the washroom, leaving the first officer in charge." Upon his arrival, the door would not open. The crew had to remove the door from its hinges to let the pilot back in. The door had malfunctioned and the pilot was forced to communicate with his crew with an internal telephone. The decision to remove the door was in accordance with company policy. At no time were the passengers in any danger.

SAT scores show large decline

The average math and verbal scores on the updated SAT showed the largest decline in the last 31 years. In a report published by the College Board, scores for the critical reading portion, which was once the verbal section, fell on average by five points to a score of 503. Math scores dropped two points to 518. The expanded test now runs almost an hour longer then previous versions, lasting three hours and 45 minutes. The College Board has dismissed claims from high-school guidance counselors that the length of the test is to blame for the change.

"Fatigue is not a factor," said Wayne Camara, vice president for research and analysis at the College Board, at a news conference according to the New York Times.

Officials instead believe that less students re-took the exam this year than in years past. Typically, students score 14 points higher in each section when re-taking the exam, according to the College Board.

Polygamist leader to be prosecuted

Warren Jeffs, the polygamist leader of the Fundamentalist Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, will be prosecuted in Utah and Arizona on charges of arranging and forcing underage girls to marry older men.

According to the New York Times, one accuser said that "Jeffs performed a wedding over her repeated objections." He was caught in Las Vegas on late Monday during a traffic stop.

Jeffs is on the FBI's Ten Most Wanted List since May for a variety of crimes he allegedly committed. He is rumored to have at least 40 wives and 60 children.

Dream Higher™
Need More Space?
LOFT BEDS
FUTONS
HIGH RISE BEDS
CollegeBedLofts.com

Igniting Creative Ideas
On Fire Promotions
by trautman associates, inc.
promotional products · fundraising items
embroidered & screenprinted caps & apparel
awards · trophies · business gifts
800-538-8009
Lewisburg Showroom 434 Market 570-522-8009
www.tapromoproducts.com
www.onfirepromotions.com
Bring in this ad for one FREE SCREEN!!!
GOOD ON ANY APPAREL ORDER
(minimum 36 pieces)

COLDWELL BANKER
PENN ONE REAL ESTATE
Thank You, Bucknell!!
For thirty years of calling Bucknell and Lewisburg home.
Susan Warner-Mills, Sales Associate
Competence, Integrity, Service
524-7500; swm@coldwellbanker.com

The Bucknellian
Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue

Volume 138, Number 1
C-3952 Bucknell University
Lewisburg, Pa. 17837
(570) 577-1520
bucknellian@bucknell.edu
http://www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Editor-in-Chief
Catherine Heverling '07

Business Manager
Jared Napolitano '08

Associate Editor of Content
Jamie Jacobson '08

Associate Editor of Layout
Rina Van Orden '08

Senior Editor
Drew Larson '08

News Editors
Evan Unger '09
Nilanjana Saha '09
Michelle Laxer '09

Opinions Editors
Hallie Stebbins '08
Michael Dippery '08

Sports Editors
Matthew Saylor '08
Barbara Perlman '09
Brian Mulligan '08

Features Editors
Julia Fuchs '09

Arts & Entertainment Editors
Kimberly Kane '08
Lily Beauvilliers '09

Photography Editors
Ryan Winn '08
Ellyn Ercolano '09

Chief Copy Editors
Kathleen Conti '08
Greg Hamilton '08

Advertising Managers
Meredith Reighard '07
Kat Wallis '07
Katie Casteel '08
Emily Senko '08

Cartoonist
Juliana Su '09

Adviser
James F. Lee

Op-Ed Policy

The editorials of The Bucknellian reflect the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the editor-in-chief. All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

Letters to the editor must be received by noon on the Tuesday before publication. Letters may not be longer than 600 words and the Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny or edit any letter to the editor. Letters must contain the writer's name and phone number (used for verification purposes and not to be printed). Mail or e-mail letters using the addresses above.

Publishing Information

The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester entirely by Bucknell students. All published material is chosen by the paper's Editorial Board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its adviser, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

Subscription Information

Subscriptions are available for $45 per year or $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian Subscriptions, Bucknell University, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, Pa. 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

Members of the local community may pick up a complimentary issue each week, with the understanding of one free issue per person. If you would like more for a nominal fee, contact the print office.

Advertising Policy

The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements if deemed offensive, illegal or in bad taste. Advertisements reflect the opinion of the advertiser and not necessarily that of The Bucknellian. For advertising rates and information, please contact the advertising department at (570) 577-1085. Copyright © 2006 The Bucknellian

The Bucknellian
EDITORIAL

New face of Public Safety shows promise

"I was just walking a friend home." "I was in the wrong place at the wrong time."

Many students on campus who had negative encounters with Public Safety share the view that bad luck attracted the flashing lights that often lead to points and fines.

It seems as though many cases have occurred in which students have suffered from unfair jurisdiction on campus. For many reasons, students have come to think of Public Safety as primarily a means of prosecution rather than support.

When an officer wakes up a student at 3 a.m. for a PBT test, the outcome surely is not a positive relationship between students and those who enforce the rules.

For the last year, the department was without an official director. It was hardly a time for Public Safety to re-envision its goal.

However, with the recent acquisition of a director who is open to improving the strained student-officer relationship, students may soon find that Public Safety is here to do just what their title implies: keep them safe.

Director Jason Friedberg has already begun to reshape the face of Public Safety with this philosophy in mind. In an e-mail to the campus community, he stressed that the officers' main concern is to provide for the security of the campus, as a whole, rather than to address every minor incident that may occur.

This is a critical time. It is a time when the relationship between students and Public Safety has the chance to be redefined and improved.

Positive changes are already evident. Several officers took the initiative to attend orientation activities during the first-year students' initial days on campus.

When students receive citations from the local police for alcohol infractions, they no longer face additional sanctions imposed by the University. The "double jeopardy" aspect has been eliminated.

Students seem to be wedded to the idea that Public Safety can do little more than serve as the parking and alcohol police. This month's edition of The Counterweight addresses Public Safety: "... though we may never take you seriously, you do have a pretty sweet bicycle, which has to count for something."

With promising new leadership, students should be willing to give Public Safety a fresh chance.

In an interview with The Bucknellian, Friedberg said he is working to reform the department. He seems to understand college culture and to care about students. He wants campus to be safe, but not Draconian.

But unless students are open to changing their attitudes about Public Safety, it would be unfair to expect officers to change their behavior in return.

Increased airline security a necessary hindrance

Travelers should get used to the new security procedures in order to prevent another attack

By Lauren Berninger
Writer

Some people see it as a burden, a waste of time and energy that will only increase the economic distress of the airline business.

Others perceive it as infringing on their right to privacy and their ability to fly quickly and without hassle throughout the United States.

While much of the chaos that accompanied the latest airline security crisis has relaxed, many passengers are still angered by what they consider unnecessary security precautions.

Despite the dissatisfaction in customer service that has left many airline customers grumbling, the safety measures the Transportation Security Administration (TSA) has taken in recent weeks are largely justified and unworthy of criticism.

Inside a pressurized cabin 30,000 feet above the ground, the last thing anyone should have to worry about is whether or not their four hours of airtime will turn into an act of Jihad.

For those already wary about the thought of flying, these new security measures should serve as reassurance that the United States is merely making the skies safer for their benefit.

Experiencing the increased security measures firsthand as opposed to behind the scenes may give uneasy travelers more confidence in choosing flight as their mode of transportation in the future.

Critics of the increased security measures argue that they will only hurt the airline industry, as frequent business travelers will decrease the number of flights they take.

Some think that people may begin turning to privatization of aircraft as a preferred method of transport.

According to the Washington Post, there has been no evident decrease in ticket sales to date.

The move toward a trend in privatizing air travel is unlikely as well. With the costs of private aircraft averaging in the millions of dollars - in addition to the high costs of fuel, management and maintenance - it is unlikely that this trend will ever gain popularity.

According to the Brockville Recorder and Times in Ontario, Canada, "Just because you have to spend an extra three hours at the airport may not be enough of a push for you to take on private jet ownership."

It seems unlikely that these new security measures will critically damage the profits of the airline industry.

Challengers of the new policies should consider the grave effects on the airline industry should another attack take place.

There is no doubt that another terrorist strike involving planes would make a lot of people think twice about their choice of transportation.

This industry suffered enough in 2001; it does not need a repeat of Sept. 11 when it is still in the process of recovering.

The U.S. government is under enough stress as it is. Due to the uncertainty about events taking place throughout the world and intense debates over how the United States should act, it would be detrimental to society to receive another blow.

It is imperative that this security be sustained.

These new measures are meant to protect, not to aggravate. Irritation is just a byproduct of new methods of keeping U.S. citizens safe.

In time, these procedures will become routine for travelers and both TSA officials and airline security will seem normal once again. People need time to adjust to these new restrictions.

An airline catastrophe as horrific as the Sept. 11 attacks has not since taken place, and this is largely due to increased security.

Treating airport security as a trivial matter will only result in another event capable of adding to the injuries sustained by the United States on Sept. 11.

Wrapping up Recruitment Week

By Hallie Stebbins
Opinions Editor

With all the excitement surrounding Greek life on our campus, especially during this particular week, I feel it would be remiss to pass up an opportunity to put my two cents in.

I know there exists some kind of code of silence restricting sororities from talking about what goes on during rush events. That is most likely the extent of my concrete knowledge on the subject. I cannot say that I actually know anything more than that. As for fraternity policies, I feel I cannot even comment on something I know so little about. Therefore, I have to limit my comments to sororities and, rush in particular.

According to the 2007 edition of America's Best Colleges, 37 percent of males are in fraternities and 39 percent of females are in sororities. However, the University website (www.bucknell.edu) places 50 percent of sophomores, juniors and seniors in Greek life. Which seems more likely? To a non-Greek female walking around the University campus, the latter statistic seems more likely.

I apologize, but I'm about to restrict my field of comment yet again. Never having been in a sorority, I feel that I cannot comment fairly on the institutions themselves. They seem like a great idea; a group of girls that will always be there to 'get your back' is something I'm sure all girls wish they had had at one point or another.

The only thing that upsets me is some girls' reactions to being rejected by a sorority. I do not want to criticize the process by which girls are selected, because, again, I do not have enough experience to comment, nor do I have any better suggestion.

This commentary, therefore, is solely aimed at those who are feeling left out, disliked or severely unhappy about the results of rush.

Ladies, regardless of what sorority you did or did not get into, you are great people, and the fact that you were willing to rush in the first place and put yourselves out there is a sign of character.

I just wish that you would not measure your own self-worth by this system, because I know the likelihood that some of you do is very high. Fellow students involved with rush activities told me that many of you take this very seriously, and I am not in any way saying you should not.

I understand that being involved in the sorority of your choice is very important to a lot of you. This Friday when, if I'm not mistaken, sorority decisions and 'cuts' are released, please just remember that you cannot measure yourselves by the Greek system.

Do not place your self-esteem or body image in the hands of your fellow students, especially those who have met and conversed with so many women over the past week and been under just as much stress as you all have.

This is a sensitive time for everyone affiliated or rushing the Greek system. I wish that every woman who wants to could be in the sorority of her choice. Obviously, this can never happen. I hope no one who is disappointed with the results of rush will see this as a consolation article, because that is certainly not my aim. I would just like to extend a hand to all involved for going through the past week and putting so much into it.

More importantly, I simply would like to ask you all not to forget who you were before rush. This may seem like a melodramatic statement, but I believe that a lot of women may be feeling a little less than thrilled this week and, to all of you, I would beg you not to measure yourselves (your personalities OR your bodies) by this feeling.

Do you have an opinion?

Write for Ops

Email hstebbin@

Got something to say?

Send letters to the editor to bucknellian@bucknell.edu. See left for guidelines.

Astronomers say 'Sayonara' to Earth's ninth neighbor

Pluto will forever remain a planet in the hearts of space-loving people

By Daylin Oakes
Contributing Writer

Pluto IS a Planet. Period. I do not care what the International Astronomical Union (IAU) has to say about some new definition. To me, Pluto is, was and always will be the ninth planet in our solar system (except for that period every 240 years or so when it orbits inside Neptune and becomes the eighth, but if I can ignore the IAU then I can ignore that too).

Pluto's status as a planet has been disputed for a good while now, starting in about 1978 when its moon Charon was discovered. Charon is roughly the same size as Pluto. Over the years, other objects similar to Pluto in size and orbit, but rather obviously undeserving of being called planets, have been discovered and have stirred further controversy. In 2000, the Hayden Planetarium even had the nerve to remove Pluto from their solar system model.

Now we have the IAU's decision. At first, the IAU specifically made a definition with the purpose of leaving in Pluto. Unfortunately, they defined unwisely and let three other objects in (including Pluto's own moon Charon). This created a bit of a stir forcing the IAU committee to go back to the drawing board and as of August 24, 2006, their new definition officially demotes Pluto to idwarfi planet status. A sad day for Pluto lovers everywhere, which brings me back to my original point. I am a Pluto lover, and you should be too.

Here are my key reasons why Pluto IS a planet:

#1 Mnemonics. Like many young children, I was forced to memorize the order of the planets in elementary school. I did so with the use of a helpful mnemonic: "My Very Educated Mother Just Sold Us Nine Pizzas."

Not only do I not want to have to memorize the planets all over again, I shudder to think of what the new generation of school children might memorize instead. What if it is something like: "My Very Evil Mother Just Sold Us Nachos." Obviously, the educated mother sells pizzas but only an evil one would sell nachos. Just think of the potential disrespect to mothers everywhere!

#2 Mickey Mouse. Look, I get that Pluto was actually named after a Roman god. As a Classics major, I totally understand that, but to most people the name Pluto is much more likely to conjure up the image of Mickey's loveable yellow dog. What is Mickey supposed to do now that Pluto has morphed into a dwarf? Sure, Dopey is kind of cute, but I'm certain Mickey would not find him a suitable replacement.

#3 YOUR MONEY! When NASA launched the Pioneer and Voyager probes in the 1970's it included Pluto on diagrams intended to identify our solar system to any alien civilization that might discover them. (As an aside, there is something I find very enjoyable about the concept of sending "probes" with messages to alien life forms. Exactly what message are we trying to send here?) Now what is NASA supposed to do about all these erroneous messages flying around? I suppose it could always send replacements with the corrected diagrams up there, but beyond the technical complications I really hate to think how much money this will cost. Plus schools and museums all over the country will have to redo maps, models, diagrams, textbooks, etc. Just think how much your textbooks cost and imagine buying new ones for the entire public school system. Where is the money for this going to come from if not higher taxes on your hard earned cash?

My Favorite Mistake

A new column explores the life lessons—and hilarity—that stem from the making of mistakes

By Michael Dippery
Opinions Editor

Humans are alike in one simple way: we all make mistakes. Regarding our mistakes, the only things that differentiate us from one another are the frequency and severity of our mistakes.

In the summer, I was at dinner with a few members of our editorial staff when I surmised that I probably make at least one anecdote-worthy mistake per week. I gently reminded myself that The Bucknellian is published once a week, too. Coincidence? Undoubtedly so, but one I was not keen to pass up. When opportunity knocks, you answer.

Long story short, my fellow editors embraced the idea. Whether this was an acknowledgement of the number and hilarity of mistakes I make in a week, or a sincere nod to the brilliance of the idea, has not yet been determined. I had originally planned to call the column "My Biggest Mistake", but Catie Heverling, our esteemed Editor-in-Chief, suggested I call it "My Favorite Mistake". Evidently, this alludes to a Sheryl Crow song of the same name, so it may very well be that my first favorite mistake will be infringing on the copyrights of a wealthy artist and her cadre of lawyers, but I'm willing to take that risk in the name of journalistic integrity.

Most people try to hide their mistakes, but mistakes are nothing to hide behind. Learning from mistakes is how we all grow. On the same token, mistakes aren't necessarily things to be embraced in the most public way possible, but more and more people are living their lives in a public way (see The Real World); I guess you could think of this column as reality journalism.

Besides, old, wise men have always told me that it's okay to make a mistake, as long as you don't make it a second time. Ergo, if I follow that advice, each week should bring a whole new round of material, as well as help to minimize my repetition of mistakes. And that's a win for Bucknellian readers and me alike!

The Bucknellian
interest meeting

Signs you might belong on the Bucknellian staff:

You like talking to famous people.
You like having a title.
You know what's "in" and wouldn't be caught dead in what's "out."
You like checking out new restaurants. For free.
Your annoyed when people use the wrong "you're."
You are a Sojka Psycho.
ESPN is really channel the only channel you need.
You fix your red-eye issue before posting your photo on Facebook.
You conquered your summer reading list.
After watching a movie, you want to talk to somebody about it.
You know the quirks of Quark (or have conquered In Design).
You have a favorite font.
You get heated up about political issues.
You have the guts to ask the questions everyone wants to know the answer to.
You've got something to say and want someone to listen.

Thursday, Sept. 7 at 6 p.m.
The LC Forum.
Be there.

Society's demands lead to steroid use

By Christy Totten
Staff Writer

We live in a fast paced world, which consequently makes us a very impatient society. From fast food, to weight loss, to money, the popular perception is basically "the bigger the better; the more the better—as as long as I don't have to wait for it." Practically every supermarket has an express checkout option, as well as an ATM available for fast cash.

I typed "get rich quick" into google Google and received 82,500,000 possible hits. Everybody is looking for the quickest, fastest, most efficient way in for everything they do. Even the line at fast food restaurants can sometimes test our patience.

I used to think the professional world of sports, particularly the more individually focused ones like cycling, running, and swimming, was a place that was safe from the "get rich quick" mentality. But after this summer's Tour de France controversy with Floyd Landis, and likewise all of the problems with top-notch track and field athletes like Marion Jones and Justin Gatlin, I've been forced to reevaluate my naivety.

Floyd Landis is the an American who grew up in small town Lancaster, Pa., and was touted by many in the cycling world to be one of the top Americans riding in the tour. These predictions turned out to be correct as Landis rode himself to an overall Tour de France victory.

The controversy has come about because of a positive drug test due to high levels of testosterone from the day of his amazing stage seventeen win. Landis, who was suffering intense pain due to a degenerative hip condition that would require him to have an operation after the tour, put him back into the overall race with this stage win. It was also all the more impressive because he suffered a fall in the 16th stage, which that put him over 8:00 behind the leaders.

Without getting into whether or not Floyd Landis "cheated," let's consider the types of pressure this man was facing. Obviously that is not an excuse for what he either did or did not do, but it makes an interesting point. What if society, with our super-size-me, express lane, "I want it now" mentality, is what ultimately drove these athletes to cheat in a way they never could have imagined they would?

Marion Jones and Justin Gatlin are world-class, Olympic sprinters who have recently tested positive for performance enhancement drugs. Interestingly, none of them ever admit to it. (Assuming they have something to admit to, which they may not.)

Marion Jones simply asserts she has never taken performance enhancement drugs, and must be victim to some kind of conspiracy.

Justin Gatlin says his massage therapist applied some kind of testosterone cream that was the cause of his positive test.

Floyd Landis, on the other hand went the natural route in saying his body may simply produce higher than normal levels of testosterone all on its own.

Again, I'm not excusing these athletes; in fact, I'm not even sure whether I believe them to be guilty or innocent. I do know, though, that instead of name calling and judging these athletes, maybe we should first look at ourselves.

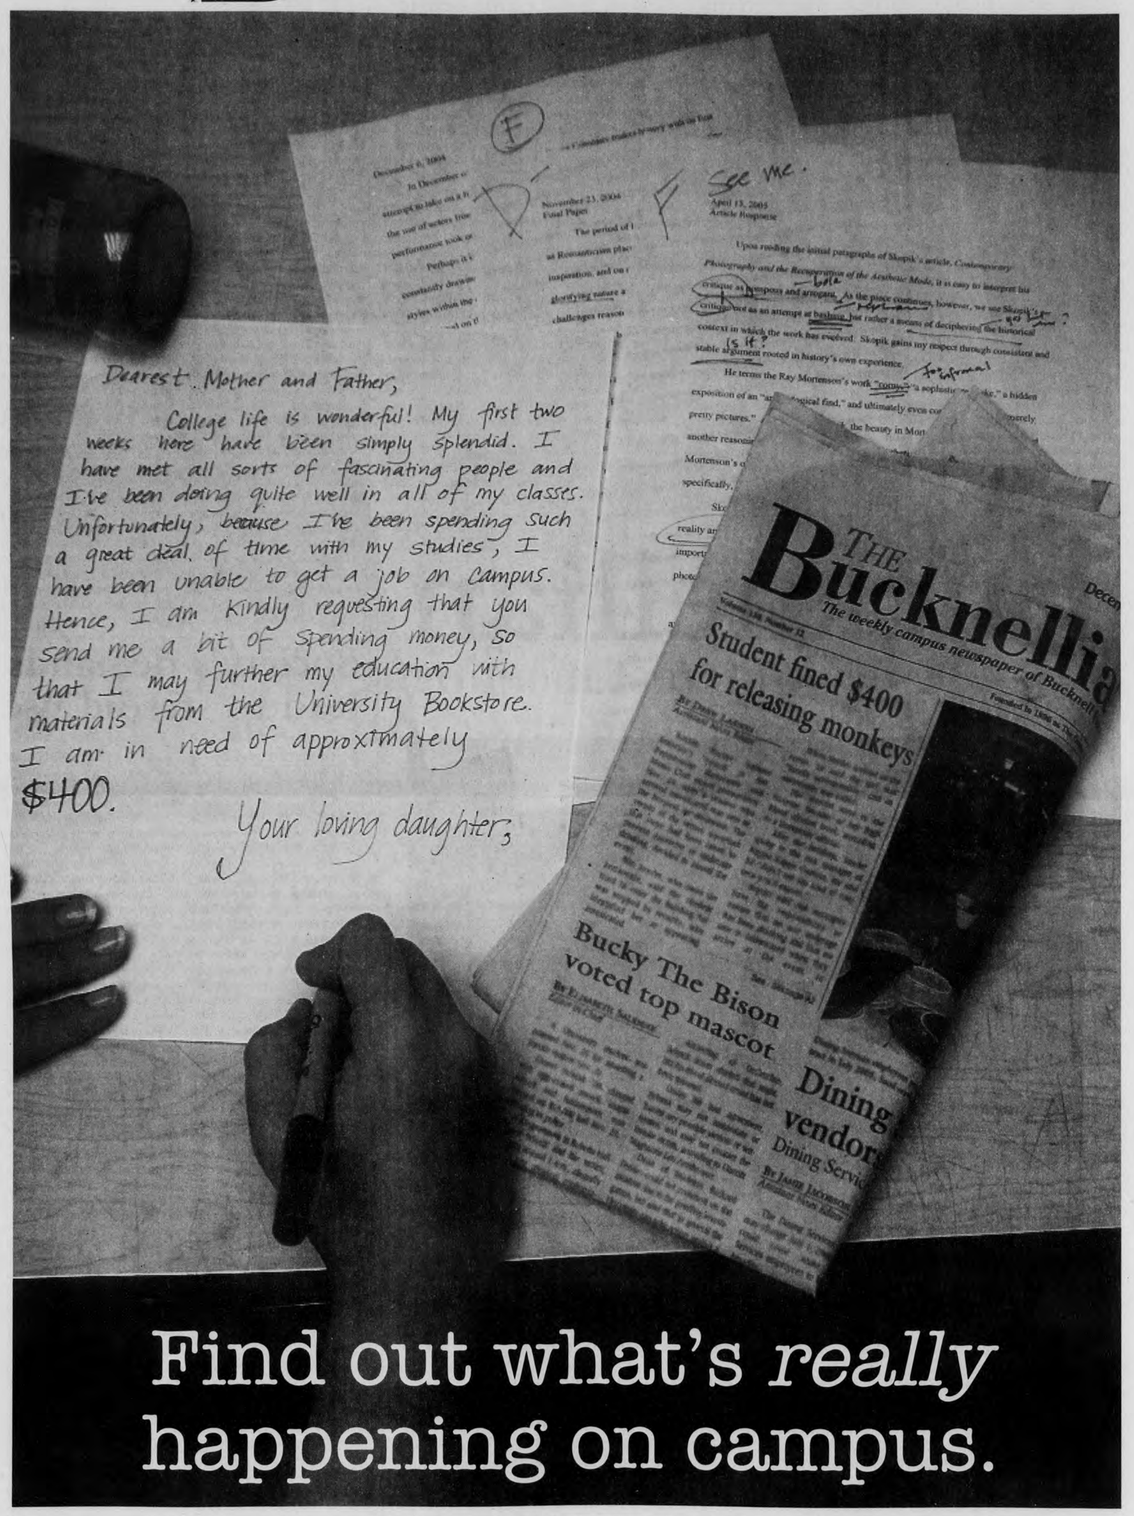
When is the last time any of us got impatient waiting in line, or frustrated for one reason or another. You sent an e-mail to your professor last night asking for an extension, but he/she did not get it and now expects you to have your paper to turn in your paper promptly.

As society advances more and more technologically, which happens on a regular basis, our expectations rise as well. Is it possible that these expectations don't stop with us, but carry over into entertainment and the professional world of sports?

We constantly expect athletes to break records, and box office hits to best the big ones before them. Athletes, actors, and producers all know that their livelihood, and that of their profession can depend on their performance.

The problem isn't just that athletes are taking performance enhancement drugs, but that they feel the need to take them to meet the demands of society.

The Bucknellian



Dearest Mother and Father,
College life is wonderful! My first two weeks here have been simply splendid. I have met all sorts of fascinating people and I've been doing quite well in all of my classes. Unfortunately, because I've been spending such a great deal of time with my studies, I have been unable to get a job on campus. Hence, I am kindly requesting that you send me a bit of spending money, so that I may further my education with materials from the University Bookstore. I am in need of approxtmately $400.
Your loving daughter,
See me.
THE Bucknellian
The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell
Student fined $400 for releasing monkeys
Bucky The Bison voted top mascot
Dining vendors

Find out what's really happening on campus.

Subscribing to The Bucknellian for the 2006-2007 academic year is easy!

Enclose this form and a check (made out to The Bucknellian) and mail it to:

The Bucknellian, Bucknell University C3952, 701 Moore Avenue, Lewisburg, PA 17837

Name _____

Address _____

_____

Phone _____

E-mail _____

__ ONE YEAR: receive 24 issues each week for the academic year for only $45, a $15 savings!

__ ONE SEMESTER: receive 12 issues during the fall or spring semester for $30. Please specify semester: _____

For more information contact The Bucknellian at 570-577-1520 or bucknellian@bucknell.edu

Summer lessons to last a lifetime

How to handle harrowing hotel hardships

By Sarah Novello
Writer

"Hi, housekeeping? This is room 291. My 2-year-old son was sick all night. Can you send someone over to clean up the floor and bring new towels as soon as possible?"

Oh, the call of a housekeeper. Needless to say, two minutes later I was knocking on the door of suite 291, holding my weight in towels and saying "housekeeping" in as cheerful a manner as I could muster.

"Good morning!" I greeted, as an exhausted woman opened the door to her rancid suite.

"I'm so sorry to hear about your son," I continued, before she could say a word. "I'll get this all cleaned up right away. Is there anything else you need? I can easily call room service and ask them to bring some ginger ale to help settle his stomach," I suggested, making sure the guest saw the huge smile plastered on my face. She probably thought I was insane, smiling like a kid on Christmas Day when we both knew it was my job to clean up her child's vomit.

I was vying for a tip. As a hardworking, low-wage housekeeper at Chatham Bars Inn (CBI), tips were the signs of appreciation we worked for.

CBI is a high-end resort in Chatham, Cape Cod. As a member of "The Leading Hotels of the World" organization, CBI must abide by a strict set of standards aiming to provide the best possible guest service. For example, phones must be answered after no more than three rings, and all rooms must contain a shoe horn. In the summer season, guests stay at CBI for anywhere between $360 and $1,650 per night. Although the rooms are gorgeous, they are not truly luxurious. It is the ocean-front location these high-class guests are paying for.

I was originally planning to get an internship for the summer, but as March turned to April and April to May, I realized this may not be the best option. Instead, I started thinking of a job that would contribute the most to my withering bank account. I knew from the previous summer it would be nearly impossible to find work at home and vacation spots need more employees in the summer. With this knowledge, and with what I knew about CBI from visiting my grandparents in Chatham as a child, I decided to apply to CBI for a job in recreation. When I got hired as a housekeeper, I was not disappointed; a job is a job, and it seemed like a good place to work.

At first it was. My co-workers were all fascinating people, many of them from eastern Europe, including Bulgaria, the Ukraine, Slovakia, Nepal and Jamaica. They were working on Cape Cod for the season to either pay for their tuition or send money home to their families. Many places requiring vast numbers of seasonal employees draw from foreign workers, and CBI is no different.

I became particularly good friends with a 20-year-old Bulgarian girl, Jenny, who was working three jobs and 20-hour days in order to earn the $5,000 for her tuition at American University in Bulgaria. Since it is realistic to earn an entire year's tuition in one summer, many eastern European students do what Jenny did and have very little time to themselves. But it is completely worth it for them; working hard all summer means they do not have to work during the school year.

Of course, the combination of these different cultures and languages gave the management some challenges, which they did not solve in the most professional or courteous ways. Many people's names were difficult for U.S. citizens to pronounce, so each employee with a foreign name was given a name that was easily pronounced. Nadeztha became Hope, Emine became Amy, and Oleksandra became Ole (although she insisted her nickname was Lesia).

This disrespect was extremely frustrating for my co-workers. Emine, for example, was the daughter of Turkish immigrants who, upon entry into Bulgaria, had their last name changed. After years of fighting with the Bulgarian government, Emine's family got its Turkish name back. Her family was, as many are, defined by its last name. When our boss told Emine that her name was now Amy, she broke down in tears, knowing she had no control over what she was called. CBI management could have easily fired her, thereby taking away her Visa and forcing her to return to Bulgaria.

In my opinion, the management of CBI was horrible; they did not seem to appreciate their employees and allowed upper-level management issues to affect staff morale. Employees were not given parking and were not allowed to say "hello" to the general manager unless he looked at them and smiled. Although housing was provided for those who needed it, it was unreasonably priced at $500 a month per person. Up to five people cramped into one room cost $2,500 a month; more than a four-bedroom apartment in Queens, N.Y.

During my time at CBI, the resort's ownership changed, and with it, much of the management. Frustration with the new owner forced the general manager to give his two week's notice, claiming that he was doing so because he had not had a day off "since 1988." The new owner created a policy stating employees cannot have access to keys if they make their unhappiness with the job clear to their superiors. His reasoning was that this shows they are likely to quit soon and perhaps take the keys and abuse them. Anyone who tries to give their two weeks notice must quit immediately or is fired. Security had to escort the general manager of CBI off the property in full sight of many guests and half of the housekeeping staff.

These ridiculous antics are what united the lower-level employees and made the summer bearable. Only my co-workers made CBI a wonderful place to be. Although the housekeeping staff spanned at least 30 years and nine cultures, we all supported each other and made the best of our situation. We were all there for different reasons, but the fact that we all ended up as housekeepers gave us all a sense of unity. We embraced challenges and smelly toilets and had a memorable time together. If it weren't for my co-workers, I would have never survived the summer.

Working with such a diverse group of people allowed for wonderful moments, like watching the World Cup together in a guest's room. As luck would have it, the guest came in while we were "cleaning" and we explained that we never watch television in the rooms, but since it was the World Cup and we were from such a range of countries, it was very important to us. He said "wonderful" and sat down to watch the tie breaker with us, tipping us all $5 at the end of the game for "being such wonderful fans."

The mood in Cape Cod during the summer is a strange one. Everyone who is there is either on vacation, retired, or catering to the vacationers. This makes class definition extremely clear. As a native English-speaking housekeeper, I was on the fence. Since I am a U.S. citizen, guests were more likely to ask me questions than they were Anunda, Kerrian or Jenny. Since I was only working one job, I was also able to experience the vacation aspect of Cape Cod with many trips to the beach. It was fascinating to see those around me in such a light, either being served or being a server, and I don't think that there is any other way I could have experienced what I did this summer. I will never go back to the housekeeping profession (I hope), but it was a truly unique experience and helped me appreciate the hardworking people who the "successful" depend on to clean up their child's vomit, which, by the way, I did not get tipped for doing.

Pictures courtesy of Sarah Novello

Top: The Chatham Bars Inn features a breathtaking view of the ocean from the front.
Bottom left: The view of a typical linen closet for the housekeepers.
Bottom right: Sarah Novello '08 (far right) spent much of her free time hanging out with her coworkers.

How to secure yourself a dream internship

Julia Fuchs—The Bucknellian

Puma's founder, Rudolf Dassler, and his brother, Adi Dassler, founder of Adidas, started their first shoe factory in the idyllic German town of Herzogenaurach over half a century ago. Today, both headquarters of Puma (above) and Adidas are still located in the same town.

By Julia Fuchs
Features Editor

This summer I had the opportunity to work in the human resources department of the PUMA headquarters in Germany. Besides catching my first glimpse of what corporate life is like, I learned how to keep cool when someone calls and asks how much his or her $400,000 job pays, how to calmly respond when applications arrive in Portuguese or Italian and how to keep over a thousand files organized and prevent them from getting lost. The single most valuable lesson I learned was the knowledge of how to succeed in an interview and secure a job. The following list is a guide that may help you acquire your next internship or employment position.

Do not wear a baseball cap unless applying for a job as an umpire.

The first thing an interviewer notices is the way you dress. First impressions definitely set the tone for the rest of the interview. Do yourself a favor and dress nicely. Showing up for your interview in black tie attire is a bit over-the-top, but a clean, buttoned-down shirt, khakis and business shoes are just fine. Put on a winning smile and you have cleared the first hurdle.

Confidence makes all the difference.

Just like animals can sense when you are nervous, so can interviewers. Going on a job interview is a nerve-wracking experience. Try to remember that it is just a conversation. It is your chance to talk about yourself. The more confident you are, the better the impression you leave with your interviewers.

To help you out, part of the interviewer's job is to make you feel more comfortable. Questions such as "did you have any trouble finding your way here?" and "have you ever been here before?" help calm you down. Focus on what you are answering and the interviewer may connect with one of your answers ("Oh really? I used to live 10 minutes from there"). Make yourself sound confident and at ease when you answer, and pretty soon, you will feel that way too. Remember, you may have a Harvard masters degree and an endless list of references, but if you shake and stutter throughout your interview, it will stick out in the interviewer's mind when he or she reviews the candidates.

The most successful interviews come from people who are relaxed and seem to enjoy talking about themselves. Laughing is good. Everyone likes to have a good time, and if you can form that connection with the interviewer (who will probably be the person you will work for), he or she will most likely want to work with you.

Talk, talk, talk.

Nothing is more painful than watching an interview in which the person answers a question in three words or less. You came here to sell yourself, so do it. When asked a question, even if a yes or no would suffice, elaborate. Share an example and relate it to the company to which you are applying. Do not be afraid to go into too much detail; interviewers prefer you talk too much than too little.

Just make sure you do not fall into a nervous babble. If there is a pause between questions, do not hesitate to share something extra you want to make known to your interviewer. Do not assume anything is meant to be personal. A question like "what is one thing you regret doing" is purely work-related, and has nothing to do with that affair you had with your best friend's significant other last year.

Always be positive.

A smile is a frown turned upside down, and your answers should have the same effect. Do not lie; an interviewer is very skilled at seeing right through you. Do not be afraid to talk about past job-related mistakes either. No one expects you to be perfect, especially as a college student or recent graduate. Do not forget to tell the interviewer what you learned from your mistake and how you are better as a result.

Do not insult any previous employers. Interviewers know that if you talk badly about your former employers, you might talk badly about them in the future. There is a reason you do not work at your former job anymore (or plan on leaving), so be honest about that. Even if you had a horrible time, turn it into a positive learning experience.

Show interest.

Before you arrive for your interview, do some research. Interviewers will be impressed if you know about the company, and it will show you are serious about the job. Go to the company's website, read current articles about the company and familiarize yourself with the basic premise of the company. If you act bored and uninterested, there is a high probability you will not get the job. You cannot smile enough, and if you seem genuinely interested in and excited about the position, the interviewers will remember you. This may give you a leg up if something about your résumé is lacking.

If you do not understand something an interviewer is explaining to you, maintain eye contact and do not yawn. Ask a question if you need clarification. If you do not know something a qualified applicant should know, assert that you are willing to learn. Make sure you express your interest in the position at several points throughout the interview, especially after you are told what your position entails and at the end of the interview.

Ask questions.

Questions work for both the interviewer and the person applying for the job. It gives you the opportunity to clarify anything you are not sure about (after all, you do not want to go into a job with false impressions). It also shows the interviewer you care about the position and want to know more. Questions may be interjected at any time, but it is a good idea to save some for the end. Questions that should never be asked go along the lines of how much money or vacation time you will get. If the interview went well in the eyes of the interviewer, he or she will probably bring up the topic. If you mention it, you will sound like that is all you care about. This will dampen the opinion of the interviewer.

There are so many ways to answer interview questions correctly; do not choose the wrong one. Though these tips may sound obvious, rest assured that I have seen worst-case scenarios for each of these. The tips are basic guidelines gathered from the countless interviews I attended during my internship. If you have been offered an interview, you already know you have made it past the initial cuts, so there has to be a reason they want to meet you. With a little research, a little confidence and a lot of enthusiasm, you can set yourself apart from all the other candidates and claim that job or internship for yourself. Good luck!

Features

How to get ahead fast

By Julia Fuchs
Features Editor

Whether it is your first year here at the University or your last, the issue of time management seems to be unrelenting.

When all your friends are going out or your favorite TV show is having a marathon, choosing between those appealing options and sitting in your room and doing your three-page report that is due tomorrow can be a challenging decision. You may look at your older friends and marvel at all they seem to accomplish, but if you have ever looked closer, you will see they are struggling with their time as well.

In order to get the most out of the meager 24 hours we get in a day, start by jotting down everything you plan to be involved in this semester, classes included. By now you should be receiving countless e-mails each day advertising a specific club or team you can be a part of.

If you are a first-year student, Activities Unlimited provided a golden opportunity to sign up for everything your heart desires. If you are like many eager first-year students, you probably scribbled your name for more activities than you will end up doing.

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

It is great there are so many interesting clubs out there—just remember it is better to devote a lot of time and energy to one or two things than only dropping by once in a while at a lot of clubs. Go through all the activities and narrow the list down to the ones for which you truly have a passion. If necessary go to the first meeting and then make your decision.

Once you have made your list of what exactly you plan to do this semester, use a program like Excel to create a weekly calendar. The advantages of using a calendar are endless. You can make copies to hang above your desk or put in your backpack. Using different colors, you can easily see when you have appointments or classes. With a calendar, a quick glance can tell you which days are great for getting homework done early for those busy days when you feel like you are just running from one building to the next.

Most people in high school would not have been caught dead doing homework on a Saturday afternoon, but if you are having trouble getting everything done during the week, this is a perfect time to catch up. Most of your friends will probably wait until night to do fun and exciting things, and even if you only get one or two things done, that feeling of accomplishment will put you in a good mood for the rest of the day.

During the week, there are times when students' stress levels skyrocket. Take a well-deserved break and do something for yourself. Going to the gym, though it might sound like it would make you more tired, is actually proven to help reduce stress.

"According to an interview on www.WebMD.com, Dr. Jim Annesi, an exercise health psychologist, says that even with a very minimal amount of exercise, a person's stress levels can be reduced.

"Immediately after a person completes exercise their anxiety goes down, and when a person exercises for several months or more, they simply become a less anxious person ... continued bouts of exercise over time make an individual less stressed overall and more resilient to stressors," Annesi said in the interview.

If going to the gym does not strike your fancy, lay on your bed and listen to some music. Getting your thoughts off your work and busy schedule, even for a short time, will let your mind calm down and collect itself again.

When you are ready to hit the books, there are numerous ways to get ahead so you can visit your friends on Wednesday night or join in on the impromptu Freez run. Find a spot that will not distract you.

The lounges in the dorms provide a quiet atmosphere while taking away the countless distractions your room offers and the computers in the library will be less tempting to go online or play a game. Taking away the distractions forces you to concentrate, absorb more material (you will have less to study later), and as a result, get your homework done more efficiently.

The Writing Center is another excellent tool to get ahead. With its main office in Roberts Hall and branches in both Vedder Hall and Ellen Clarke Bertrand Library, a staff of trained student tutors and professional writing and teaching consultants are on hand to help you at all stages of the writing process. By bringing in your paper to be looked over, not only are you getting ahead by writing it early, but you are also getting valuable feedback that, in a class where there are no rough drafts, can boost your grade.

Tutors are also available for introduction to biology, math, chemistry and physics courses. For opening times and appointments, call 7-3141.

Making the most of your time is easy to do by keeping your list of extracurricular activities limited (you can always add more if you have extra time), keeping a calendar and making use of all the help the University offers. There will always be cases when you will have to make a choice between your social life and your schoolwork, but if you take the initiative and time to get ahead and keep an eye on your priorities, having to make that choice will become easier and you will feel much less guilty doing so.

First-year must dos in Lewisburg

By Katie Steele
Contributing Writer

Although Lewisburg is a small town, it does have its share of unique restaurants and charming shops. There are a number of fun and relaxing things to do just a few blocks away from campus. Here are a few must-dos before the end of the semester.

Go to a movie at the Campus Theatre and dine on Market Street.

The Campus Theatre on Market Street plays a variety of different films throughout the semester. You'll feel like you're watching a movie in the comfort of your own home as you lounge on the comfortable chairs and couches.

Be sure to bring your student ID, as movies are only $5 for students. Movies usually play at 7 p.m. Sunday through Thursday and at 7 and 10 p.m. on Fridays and Saturdays. Don't miss "Little Miss Sunshine" (a comedy starring Abigail Breslin and Greg Kinnear), which starts playing at the theater today.

For some delicious post-show snacks, simply walk down Market Street where you can choose from some of the most popular restaurants in the area including the Bull Run Inn, Venarri's Pizza and the Bleu Plate Café.

Walk to the Freez.

If it were up to me, every University student would be required to go to the Freez at least once. The Freez has creamy milkshakes, incredible soft serve ice cream and all of the toppings you could ever want. Every week the Freez offers a special flavor for customers to try out. The best part is, all the ice cream is low-fat.

Lisa Rundlet '09 loves the Freez.

"I really enjoy the chocolate covered pretzels in the vanilla softserve. Heath bar is excellent too. I'm really looking forward to trying the maple soft serve," Rundlet says.

Go to Rita's Italian Ice.

Rita's has delicious and unexpected flavors of Italian ice. Just make sure when you get what will undoubtedly become your weekly Rita's fix, you either stick to lemon or only get one scoop of cherry since it's known to resemble red lipstick.

Go bowling.

There are two bowling alleys, each about 20 minutes from campus. Take a bus or get a friend to drive you to Mifflinburg Lanes or Lewisburg Lanes. The bowling alleys occasionally offer cosmic bowling or glow-in-the-dark bowling, so make sure to call ahead if you are interested.

Take a walk or run around Lewisburg with a friend.

It is relaxing and peaceful to walk down the streets surrounding the University's campus. You can walk to the river, all the shops and restaurants on Market Street and the Freez without crossing any major streets. There are beautiful churches on the intersection of 3rd street and St. Louis and the Susquehanna River offers breathtaking views.

"If you take a walk, you should try to walk along the Susquehanna River. It is absolutely gorgeous and an incredible way to escape the stress of classes," Justine Daggett '09 says.

Don't forget to stop by the playground on the way back to campus. It's the perfect way to get in touch with your inner child. Keep in mind that it's not a good idea to walk around Lewisburg alone, especially after dark.

Go shopping on Market Street.

There are a number of specialty shops on Market Street. The Magpie sells and displays jewelry, paintings, quilts and other pieces of fine art from local artists. The owner of the shop, who attended the University and founded the University's chapter of Kappa Alpha Theta, is always excited to help students find what they are looking for. There is also a yarn store, Mad About Ewes, which sells yarn and gives sewing classes; a sports shop, Donehower, W.L. Shoe and Sport; and a candy shop, Purity Candy, among others.

Go to the Country Cupboard.

The Country Cupboard and Inn has a large selection of food, a huge store with products from locals and clean comfortable rooms in case your parents need a place to stay. You will work up an appetite as you walk around the store, which carries a variety of merchandise including plants, wicker chairs, antiques, quilts, University gear and more. You can eat at the buffet or choose from the option-packed menu. The Country Cupboard has an incredible bakery, so don't forget to pick up a cake or a pie on the way out.

Go to Wing Night at Bull Run Inn.

Every Wednesday night is Wing Night at Bull Run Inn, which is at the intersection of 6th Street and Market Street. The doors close at 10 p.m. to students under 21 years of age, so make sure to get your wing fix early!

Study on a bench by the river.

Homework can quickly become tedious, especially if you work in the same place every day. There are benches and picnic tables by the river at Riverside Park, which is on your left just as you're about to go across the bridge at the end of Market Street. If you get tired or of working, you can just sit back and watch the river.

If you are still looking for more to do, visit www.lewisburgpa.com, which is a very helpful guide to Lewisburg. The Web site posts news about local events and provides lists of restaurants, stores, shopping centers and movie theaters. Keep an open mind because even though Lewisburg is not New York City, there still are some really great things to do.

Have fun exploring Lewisburg!

A warm international welcome

By Rajaa Qadri
Contributing Writer

International education can be one of the most rewarding and exciting events in a person's life. It opens doors for developing new perspectives, allows one to meet different types of people and enhances career skills. At the same time, this experience can be quite intimidating and overwhelming.

International student Fenna Wachter '10 came to the United States from Bonn, Germany on Aug. 13, 2006. Already tired from the nine-hour flight, she had to deal with a whole new place and interact with people she had never met.

"I felt confused and lost," said Wachter, whose first language is German. "During my first few days, I had a tough time interacting with domestic students."

Fifty other international students, who shared similar feelings, arrived at the University from countries such as France, Thailand, China, Peru, South Africa, Pakistan, England and Scotland.

The University's International Student Orientation Leaders (IOLs) and Assistants (IOAs) welcomed them warmly, helping the new arrivals breathe a sigh of relief. The International Student Orientation is sponsored by the department of International Students Services (ISS), which helps meet the needs of international students settling on campus.

"International Orientation is an important event through which international students get to come here early, feel comfortable and get their paperwork done," said Lori Benner, secretary of the multicultural student services. "Every year I look forward to meeting a wonderful bunch of students who blossom on our campus in no time."

Even though the students were scared in the beginning, the warm welcome and support offered by the IOLs and IOAs helped them feel better.

"I liked how they knew our names when we arrived on campus," said Wachter, who remains impressed by the compassionate IOLs and IOAs. "They looked at me and they knew who I was!"

Nadir Sharif, a sub-senior and returning IOL from Pakistan, shared his experience in the program.

"This will be my fourth year as part of the International Orientation, and I have loved it more and more every time. As I myself am an international student, and have been in these students' shoes, I love to help them and try to make their transition to University life as easy as possible," Sharif said.

To make the students' transition to campus life in the United States easier, the orientation staff arranged various activities for the students to participate in, following their arrival. The academic activities included a campus tour and sessions in which they learned about health services, the Writing Center and the University's course requirements. This information gave the international students a head start, and the small group size allowed them to interact more with the faculty and with each other.

Furthermore, their trips to the bowling alley, Knoebels Amusement Park and the Susquehanna Valley Mall helped the students learn to rely on each other while getting comfortable in the United States.

"We tried to make the orientation useful for the students academically as well as giving them a chance to explore the University and Lewisburg more through off-campus trips," said Tejal Raichura '09, an IOA from Tanzania.

The orientation came to an end with dinner on a river boat cruise, which was a memorable grand finale event for all participating students.

"I absolutely loved the cruise across the Susquehanna river," said Palwasha Siddiqi '10, a student from Afghanistan. "It relaxed us and gave us an opportunity to reflect upon our first few days in the United States and have fun at the same time."

The International Student Orientation program offers assistance to the international students arriving at the University, bringing individuals from many different backgrounds closer to one another. Through orientation, these students discover a support system of people who understand problems such as homesickness. Many international students agree the carefully planned and well-organized orientation program made a huge difference in their lives at the University.

"I never would have known the campus as much as I do now if I wasn't a part of the International Student Orientation," said Helen Huang '10, a student from China. "It gave me the confidence to get out and meet the domestic students who also surprised me by being so considerate of my needs. The orientation was so cool. I wish it could last forever!"

Orientation re-cap

Ellyn Ercolano—The Bucknellian

A student tries his luck at the mechanical bull at the Kick-off Carnival Monday. Students tested their tie-dyeing skills, raced each other on an inflatable obstacle course and had their caricatures created, all part of the new student orientation program.

Ellyn Ercolano—The Bucknellian

Kristen Cherego '10, Steph Evans '10 and Kalle James-Wintjen '10 get ready for the Western Roundup in the Bostwick Cafeteria Sunday. Orientation Assistants led students in a wild night of dancing while dressed up in cowboy or cowgirl outfits.

Ellyn Ercolano—The Bucknellian

A first-year student enjoys a trip down the slip 'n slide, one of the many stations at color games during orientation. Thoroughly drenched in paint, first-year students participated in various team and competition events.

The Bucknellian
September 1, 2006
Sports
Volume 138, Number 1 — Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue — www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Emmy Watch

Turn to A&E to read who was television's best of best at the Primetime Emmy Awards.

See page B7

Field Hockey begins with back-to-back wins

The Orange and Blue steamrolls over Robert Morris and St. Francis (Pa.) by a combined score of 15-2

By Barbara Perlman
Sports Editor

Bison field hockey started the year off with a bang, stampeding to two season opening victories, defeating Robert Morris 5-0, and St. Francis (Pa.) 10-2.

"It's great to get off to such a good start this year," says defender Katie Ruiz '09. "Now we're just looking to continue building on each victory."

The Orange and Blue suited up on Saturday for their highly anticipated first game of the season. After weeks of endless workouts and practices, the girls were fully prepared for the upcoming season.

Bucknell 5
Robert Morris 0

The Bison excelled from the start, as Katie Urosevich '07 scored before the game even reached the 14 minute mark off an assist from Anne Lutz '07. Alex Kyzmir '07 added another point on a penalty corner from last year's Patriot League co-rookie of the year Amanda Faust '09. The Bison would go on to increase their lead by two with goals from Callista Costopoulos '07 and Jacquie Kataneksza '09.

The Bison continued to dominate both offensively and defensively in the second half as Emily Hutchison '09 tallied another goal, and the defense continued to shut out the Roger Morris offense.

Bucknell 10
St. Francis (Pa.) 2

After their impressive 5-0 victory, the Bison had a lot to live up to in their second game against St. Francis (Pa.) on Tuesday. With two players raking in two goals a piece, the Orange and Blue certainly did not disappoint.

The game quickly got underway as St. Francis recorded their first goal with only 3:30 played. However, the Bison came right back with a string of goals started by a shot from Trina Boyer '09, followed by one from Faust, and two from Kelly Hoffman '08. With under six minutes to go in the half, Chyncia Smith '08 added a goal, making the score 5-1 at intermission.

The Bison continued to bring the heat in the second half as Urosevich added two goals of her own, followed by another from Costopoulos. The youth of the team sealed the Bison victory as Megan Krebs '10 and Austin Thomas '10 added consecutive goals, leading to a 10-2 victory.

"So many players have stepped on the field in these first two games. Everyone contributed...it's been a real team effort."
—Trina Boyer '09

While the sheer numbers that the Bison posted in the first two games are impressive enough, what is even more exciting is the amount of players who contributed.

"So many players have stepped on the field in these first two games," says Boyer. "Everyone contributed...it's been a real team effort."

With a lot of returning players, the Bison had a strong foundation to work with, and the first-year athletes have assimilated seamlessly.

"The first-years have adapted very quickly to our playing style and have meshed well with the team. They will definitely have a positive effect on our season" says Ruiz.

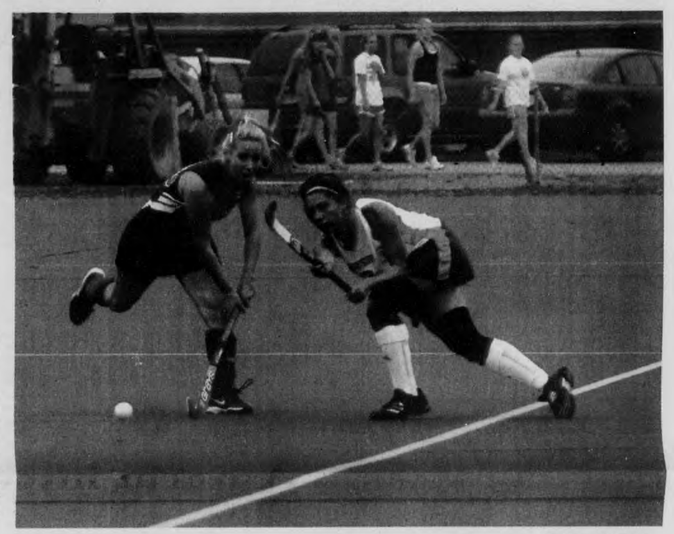
Encouraged and optimistic after their impressive start, the Bison hope that this is just the start of a great season.

"After last year's bid in the [Patriot League] tournament, the team is more determined than ever to finish on top," says Boyer.

But the Orange and Blue are not only looking to excel on the field.

"Last year we had the second highest GPA as a team in the entire nation," Boyer said. "This year we look to be number one, of course in competition, but in the classroom as well."

The Bison are hoping to continue in their quest towards the Patriot League Tournament, as the team will be going for its third straight win Saturday against Monmouth at 12 p.m.



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Sarah Ebright '10 hits the ball away from a Robert Morris forward in the team's first game of the season. Ebright was named Patriot League Rookie of the Week for her defensive role in the Bison's 5-0 shutout of the Colonials.

Football aims to return to winning ways

Bucknellian Archives

Matt DeMartino '07 kicks off in last season's home game against Lehigh. The team opens its season with three consecutive home contests, starting with Duquesne tomorrow night.

By Marcus Mateer
Staff Writer

The great thing about sports is no matter how bad a game, or for that matter a season, goes for a team, there is always another game to play or a next season to prepare for. After an injury-plagued 1-10 season, the Bison have the opportunity to start anew, and with a number of new faces and several key returning veterans there are high hopes for the squad. However, there are some questions that remain to be answered, starting with how do you replace Dante Ross '06?

The former quarterback accounted for nearly half of the Bison's total yardage and 13 of 22 touchdowns. He was the top punt returner in Patriot League history, as well as the team's top cover corner on defense. Dante's individual performances were shining moments in the disappointing 2005 campaign.

Can the team stay healthy? At one point last season, quarterbacks Terrance Wilson '08 and Ryan Ahern '08 were both out due to injury, opening the door for Ross's standout season. Wilson is expected to split time with newcomer Andrew Lair '10, a transfer student from Navy. Lair will most likely receive the start in the team's season opener.

"We want to come out and show immediate improvement," Head Coach Tim Landis said at Media Day. "I feel confident we can do that...a lot of the guys who were injured last year at some key positions are healthy and will be back with us, and we're really excited about that."

The defensive line also lost ends Brandon Bailey '06 and Sean Conover '06, as well as tackle Jacob Burney '06. The void down in the trenches will hopefully be filled by Stephen Edwards '09, Kurt Schneider '10 and Brandon Friday '08.

"Seasons like last year will happen and we've learned from it. I've had a chance to look at all the game film from last year, and the other guys have too. We're ready for this season."
—Stefan Niemczyk '07

As for the rest of the team, the Bison will be returning 18 starters. Headlining the returnees are captains Stefan Niemczyk '07 and Dorian Petersen '07. Niemczyk holds down an offensive line that returns all five starters. In a system as dependent upon the "big eaters" up front as the wishbone, experience is critical. A missed block can equal a big loss, a killed possession or a fumble. Much of the success of the seasons of running back Kadero Watson '09 and slotback Peter Kaufman '07 will lie with these unsung behemoths.

"I feel very confident." Niemczyk said. "Seasons like last year will happen and we've learned from it. I've had a chance to look at all the game film from last year, and the other guys have too. We're ready for this season."

Peterson leads a linebacker corps that is critical to the success of the defense. In the 4-4, linebackers will often have to cover wide receivers as well as guard against the run. Peterson has the athleticism to stay with the speedy backs and the experience and strength to power through opposing offensive lines to wrap up runners. He finished second on the team in tackles in 2005 with 78 and looks to continue his success.

A young secondary last year has had a year of seasoning and should be improved. Veteran returning starters Stephen Collage '08 and David Frisbey '07 will anchor the free safety and cornerback positions, respectively. The second cornerback spot will most likely go to Nolan Applegate '09. Depth is a concern since no other players on the roster have experience at the college level in any secondary position.

Bison football will open this year's campaign with a three-game home-stand, beginning Saturday with a difficult opponent. Duquesne comes to Christy Mathewson-Memorial Stadium as the third ranked preseason Division I-AA Mid-Major squad. Expect 2005 MAAC Offensive Rookie of the Year Scott Knapp to test the shallow Orange and Blue secondary from his quarterback position. Hopefully, Peterson and company can keep the Dukes under wrap and set the tone for a successful season.

2006 Football Schedule

09/02/06
vs. Duquesne (7 p.m.)

09/09/06
vs. Lafayette (7 p.m.)

09/16/06
vs. Cornell (7 p.m.)

09/23/06
at Richmond (1 p.m.)

09/30/06
at Marist (1 p.m.)

10/07/06
vs. Penn (1 p.m.)

10/14/06
at Georgetown (1 p.m.)

10/21/06
at Lehigh (1 p.m.)

10/28/06
vs. Fordham (1 p.m.)

11/04/06
at Holy Cross (12:30 p.m.)

11/18/06
vs. Colgate (1 p.m.)

Soccer teams come out kicking

Women bid to defend Patriot League Championship

By Jared Napolitano
Business Manager

In the early stages of defending the Patriot League Crown, the women's soccer team split its first two games of the 2006 campaign against opponents Temple and Central Arkansas in the Owl Eyes Classic in Ambler, Pa. The squad, which lost ten seniors but retained seven of its top eight scorers from last year's title run, lost a tough 1-0 battle with Temple and routed Central Arkansas 7-0 during the weekend tournament.

Temple 1
Bucknell 0

"We have a very strong core returning from last year's team, and I am extremely confident that we have the capability to achieve great things this year," Jennifer Dervarics '09 said.

Despite an offensive attack that produced 19 shots in the second half and 13 total shots on goal, the Bison could not post a score after

"We have a very strong core returning from last year's team, and I am extremely confident that we have the capability to achieve great things this year."
—Jennifer Dervarics '09

Temple's Wendy Halina's header in the 54th minute put the Owls ahead on their home field on Friday, Aug. 25.

The first half saw both teams unable to tickle the twine. Kelly Boswell '09 had the best opportunity of the 45-minute frame, clanking the post with one of her two shots of the match.

While the Bison dominated the shot column (21-12) and won the shots on goal battle (13-7), the Owls squeaked out the victory. The Bison committed 12 fouls to Temple's 9, but led in corners three to one.

The Owl goaltender, Liz Tarasevich, was easily the most valuable player of the match, denying the Bison 13 times and staying composed between the posts despite the 19 second - half chances by the 2005 Patriot League champions.

Shannon Curd '07 and Dervarics led the Bison in shots on goal, with five and three respectively.

The squad easily mustered a victory in the second match of the Classic on Sunday, Aug. 27, against Central Arkansas. The Bison blew out the Bears, notching six second-half goals.

Bucknell 7
Central Arkansas 0

Dervarics led the charge, scoring in both the 50th and 59th minute, as well as recording an assist to Boswell in the 36th. As a result, Dervarics garnered recognition as the Damon's Bison Athlete of the Week. The Patriot League also commended her efforts with an honorable mention for the week.

Additionally, Boswell, Jennifer Margolis '07, Lauren Bayne '07 and Jennifer Mrozek '07 tallied goals and first-year Molly Linhart '10 scored her first career goal in the 70th minute.

The Bison controlled virtually every aspect of the contest, including shots (19-7), shots on goal (15-4) and corner kicks (13-3), and brought their record for the year to 1-1 in the process.

The Bison will continue their pursuit of another championship season this weekend. Last season's Patriot League victory, despite a fourth-seed in the tournament, apparently did not leave a lasting impression in the Patriot League Preseason Poll, as the Bison were picked to finish fourth.

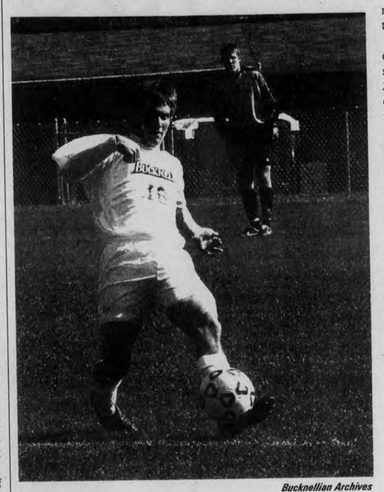
"We want to prove to everyone that last year's accomplishments weren't a fluke and that we really are a team to be reckoned with," Dervarics said. "I think we have a great shot to be a top competitor in league play this year."

The women's soccer team travels to Colorado to compete with Air Force tonight at 9 p.m. and Colorado College on Sunday at 3 p.m.

Bucknellian Archives

Jennifer Margolis '07 dribbles through the Navy defense in a game from the 2005 season. Margolis recently moved into a tie for fifth on the University's all-time career point list with 54.

Men tie talented Binghamton, fall to West Virginia



Bucknellian Archives

Dirk Swaneveld '09 clears the ball from the Bison's defensive zone during a game last season. Swaneveld is one of the key players of the Orange and Blue's vaunted defense.

By John Mlodzinski
Staff Writer

On Friday, August 25, the Bucknell men's soccer team opened up their regular season at Binghamton with a 1-1 tie. Binghamton struck first when Matt Narode scored in the 32nd minute off of an assist from Cody Germain. The Bison responded quickly and tied the game up just six minutes later when Chris Hennings '10 fed Kevin Holmes '08 for the goal. It was Holmes' second of his career. Joey Kuterbach '08 started his first game as goalie since his first year and notched six saves. Binghamton out shot the Orange and Blue, 15-8,; however, the Bison did win the corner kick battle, 7-6.

Head Coach Brendan Nash was very impressed with his team's performance, saying that they really showed its true character by coming back and tying the game, noting that his previous teams may not have been able to come back in an environment like that. He knew Binghamton would be a challenge.

Bucknell 1
Binghampton 1 (OT)

"With only one scrimmage we knew playing at Binghamton was going to be tough. It was their home opener and last year we knocked them out of the Top 25. So it was a good test early in the season. Coming back from the game we felt the tie was an OK result," said Nash said.

"Overall, this team has the best attitude and work rate since I have been at Bucknell. So hopefully that will turn into some victories down the road."
—Brendan Nash, head coach

The Bison continued their season-opening two- game road trip with a loss at West Virginia, 1-0. Nash knew this game was going to be a tough test as well, stating that West Virginia went to the second round of the NCAA tournament and was ranked in the top 25 last year.

West Virginia 1
Bucknell 0

The team struggled offensively, only managing 10 shots, against West Virginia's 23. West Virginia's lone goal came midway through the first half, when Dan Stratford fed Paul Cunningham with a corner kick, which Cunningham headed into the net. For the Bison, Mark Schmiegel '09 recorded the only shot on goal, while Kuterbach stopped six shots.

Kuterbach continues to impress the coaches with his abilities in net. When asked about the pressure of following one of Bucknell's the Bison's all-time great goalies, Adam Edwards '06.

, Kuterbach said, "There certainly is a lot of pressure on the starting goalkeeper for Bucknell, but when put into that situation I believe I will be able to perform at a high level and help win games...I believe that with my improvement through practices and spring games, as well as the confidence my teammates have shown in me and my abilities has given me a lot of confidence about this season.," Kuterbach said.

Kuterbach hopes to continue where Edwards left off.

"I would love to be able to match some of Edwards' season and career numbers, and while many of those are probably out of my reach, I think I may be able to have similar seasons to the ones he had while playing for Bucknell," he said.

The Bison have high expectations for the year despite losing four top players.

Says Nash, "We did graduate four important seniors, but we feel the underclassmen who have been waiting in the wings can get the job done." Overall, this team has the best attitude and work rate since I have been at Bucknell.

So hopefully that will turn into some victories down the road. Our expectations are the same every year— to compete for the PL championship and play the most competitive national schedule we can. Since we did not meet our PL goals last year, this team uses that as motivation to make sure it does not happen again."

The Bison, who currently stand at 0-1-1, open up their home schedule on Sunday, September 3 against St. Bonaventure at 1 p.m.

Saylor says, "Write for Sports."

contact Saylor at msaylor@

Domino's Pizza - A Proud Partner of Bucknell University
LEWISBURG • 524-9000
1722 Market St.

Study In English Abroad
The Swedish Program
STOCKHOLM UNIVERSITY

Public Policy
Literature
Economics
Film
Psychology
History
Sociology
Art History
Women's Studies
Politics
Environmental Studies

COME TO AN INFORMATIONAL MEETING
SEPTEMBER 14, 2006 4:00 P.M. TAYLOR LOUNGE

If you are unable to attend this meeting, please contact your Study Abroad Advisor or The Swedish Program, Hamilton College, 198 College Hill Road, Clinton, New York 13323
(315) 737-0123 www.swedishprogram.org

Little leaguers play for love of the game

Reuters Picture Archive

Dugout, the Little League World Series mascot, dances with players from Japan and Mexico prior to the start of the International Championship game. Japan won the game, but would lose to United States champion Columbus, Ga. in the World Championship game.

By Matthew Saylor
Sports Editor

A lot of arguments can be made as to what the best annual sporting event is. Certainly the Super Bowl is the most popular, as it is watched by more Americans than any other television event. March Madness is arguably the greatest tournament in sports, captivating college students, alumni and fans all over the nation for 19 magical days.

Baseball is the national pastime, so the World Series needs to be put at the top of the list. However, I do not speak of the Fall Classic played by multi-millionaires; rather it is the Little League World Series in Williamsport, Pa. that has captured my heart and mind as the best yearly example of the greatness of athletic competition.

Over 7,000 Little League all-star teams from all over the world compete in the Little League World Series and play over 16,000 games in less than two months to determine the champion. Somehow 16 teams manage to emerge from this, and those teams travel to Williamsport to determine who is the best in the world. Eight of those teams are from regions around the United States, and eight are composed from regions around the world, including places such as Latin America, Asia, Mexico, Canada and the Trans-Atlantic. For a little more than a week at the end of August, 32 games are played to determine the United States Champion, the International Champion and finally the World Champion.

The stars—the 11-, 12- and 13-year-olds who comprise these teams—all stay in one building adjacent to where the games are played. The living arrangements are similar to that of a college residence hall, and the youth get to spend time with others their own age from all parts of the world. They play video games, swap stories and trade pins from their home countries.

Adolescents from nine different nations and eight different parts of our nation, speaking all different languages and dialects, are all brought together because of their love of the game.

Attending a game at Williamsport is a very different experience than attending a professional game. Every person who works at the game—coaches, umpires, people operating the concession stands—is a volunteer. They help out because they love the players and the game. The crowd supports all the participants. Many fans will, of course, root for one team over another, but no boos can be heard if a player makes a mistake. Who wants to be caught jeering a child for a mistake made in a baseball game?

Another difference is that every player on the team must receive some playing time: at least three consecutive outs in the field and one plate appearance. While there are clearly standout players on each squad, this participation rule allows for everyone to contribute to the team's success, making it truly a team sport. Finally, the biggest difference is the price. All games are free to attend. Approximately 10,000 people can fit inside the main stadium and another 30,000 fans can sit outside the stadium on the large, sloping hill overlooking the field. Concession stands have amazing prices, charging only $1.25 for a hot dog. Baseball is intended to be enjoyed this way.

Every professional athlete should have to attend or watch a Little League game. They should have to watch the teams dance with the mascot, Dugout, prior to the game and shake hands at the end. They should have to watch how, after the U.S. Championship, the victorious team from Columbus, Ga. invited the team from Beaverton, Ore. to take a lap around the field with them at the conclusion of the game. They should have to see the joy on the kids' faces with every great play, and the tears that flow following the end of their dreams. These children clearly put everything they have into every second spent on the field, and these emotions show how much they care.

The Little League World Series should be a reminder to professional athletes of why they began to play the game in the first place. It is not for the large contracts, the endorsement deals, the glitz and glamour that can be associated with your name. They play the game because it is fun. Sometimes that message seems to be lost.

We must remember that we first play sports because they are games. Games are supposed to be fun, therefore, sports are supposed to be fun. No matter the outcome of the games at Williamsport, the players, fans and volunteers all had fun. That is why the Little League World Series is second to none.

Cross Country hopes to repeat with fast feet

By Andrew Neils
Staff Writer

The men's and women's cross country teams will put their summer training to the test as they split up their squad to host the Bison Open today and run at the Harry Lang Invitational Saturday at Colgate. The Bison Open is scheduled to start at 5:30 p.m. for the men and 6 p.m. for the women on the West Fields.

With the Patriot League Championship being held at Colgate, the experience of running on the Colgate course will be invaluable to their preparation. The season opener will mark the beginning of what is a highly anticipated season for both teams.

The women's team is returning nine of its top 10 runners and expects to defend its Patriot League title. By improving on last years success they hope to contend for an NCAA championship birth by being awarded an at-large bid or by placing at the Mid-Atlantic Regional in November.

A key race for the women's team will be the NCAA Pre-National Championship, which will be held in October in Terre Haute, Ind. The meet will provide them with the opportunity to tackle teams from outside the region in anticipation of getting an at-large bid to the NCAAs.

"The guys had a great summer of training; they are healthy and motivated to take their running to a new level."
—Kevin Donner, head coach

"The girls' team has the potential to be the best girls' team Bucknell has ever had," Jenny Stevens '07 said. "We look forward to defending our title as Patriot League Champions and are making all of the necessary efforts to qualify for the NCAA Championships. It is a difficult goal to attain, but if we perform at the level we are capable of we should be successful."

The women's team is led by captains Stevens, Leanna Nastase '07 and Mollie Harms '07. In contention for the other varsity positions on the women's roster are Christa Sawko '07, Erin Cranmer-Hart '08, Lauren Bricker '07, Jillian Nordquist '09, Molly Pritz '10 and Nicole Falcaro '09.

This weekend the team will showcase the hard work they did during the summer, with Bloomsburg, Susquehanna, Lock Haven and Scranton attending the Bison Open.

"Our team did a great job of getting together over the summer to run," Harms said."Training with other people consistently is a major advantage for runners. We l o o k e d great coming into preseason, with our team running faster across the board."

Head Coach Kevin Donner also anticipates a solid season for the men's cross country team. "We're returning a good nucleus from last year," Donner said. "The guys had a great summer of training; they are healthy and motivated to take their running to a new level."

The men's team has ambitions for a top-three placement in the Patriot League and for a top 10 finish in the Mid-Atlantic Regional Championships. Matt Forys '07 and Mark Caroleo '07 are the captains who will lead the way for the Bison this year as they hope to make their mark within the league. Rounding out the varsity team will be Wallace Campbell '08, Derrin Pierret '07, Andy Corral '08, Will Holleran '08, Sean Egan '07 and Mike Gibney '07.

Caroleo expects the team to run strong. "Clearly, a Patriot League Championship is the team's ultimate goal," Caroleo said. "This year, we've got the talent, the work ethic and the team cohesion to set ourselves up for some big-time success. Having spent the past few years in a semi-rebuilding phase, we are ready and prepared to establish ourselves as at least a top-three team in the very competitive Patriot League."

The season opener will help the team measure their fitness level after a very productive summer. The miles they logged will pay off come the championship races in the fall.

"The summer training went very well for the team as a whole," Forys said. "The guys came back in great shape and ready for the season. The workouts we did over the summer really helped us build a strong base and prepared for the long cross country season ahead of us."

DOES YOUR CAR NEED SERVICED?

Our Service Department has $25,000 in new upgrades, including a new alignment rack, brake lathe, tire machine, and hundreds of hours of training for the techs. We now offer shuttle service to and from work or home. We have become a complete service center that can perform any work on any model, from an oil change to engine replacement.

Lewisburg Ford
Oil Change w/Multi-Point Inspection
$19.95 Excludes Diesels. Must present coupon at time of service. Expires 12/31/06.

Lewisburg Ford
Oil Change/Tire Rotation w/Multi-Point Inspection
$34.95 Must present coupon at time of service. Expires 12/31/06.

Lewisburg Ford
2265 Old Turnpike Rd. (Route 45 West)
Across From Brookpark Farm
Call Today! (570) 524-7267
Visit us on the web at www.lewisburgford.com

Christ's Lutheran Church
100 So. 3rd St.
Lewisburg
(Only 3 Blocks From Campus)
570-524-0745
christchurch@dejazzd.com
http://home.dejazzd.com/christchurch

Sunday Schedule
8:00 AM Worship (Communion on the 1st & 3rd weeks)
9:15AM Education
10:30 AM Holy Communion - weekly
(4:00 PM) 1st Sunday of month - Quiet Communion
Our chapel is open 24/7 for meditation

Coming Fall 2006!
40 Days of Purpose
Find out – "What on earth am I here for?"
Bucknell Students Welcome!

Joseph Carroll Salon
Hair Care for the Entire Family

Stop in before September 30 to enter into a raffle to win a free instant hot lather machine or basket of hair care products!
No purchase or service necessary.

431 Market Street, Lewisburg
524-0790
Open Tuesday-Saturday
We accept Walk-Ins when time permits.

Nancy's Nu-Wave Salon
...look your best
10% Discount with Student ID
524-2315
www.nancysnuwave.com
Main Street (Rte 45) - Montandon

Water polo prepares for difficult schedule

The squad adds six new members and prepares for challenging schedule riddled with top ranked teams

By Brian Mulligan
Sports Editor

The men's water polo team is forging forward after the best season for the program since 2000. Although their 2005 record of 14-18 does not reflect the skill and depth of this incredibly talented group of athletes, the squad faced 17 ranked teams during the course of the season, reflecting the difficulty of their schedule. The team also finished fourth at the Eastern Championship losing against Princeton and Navy, both ranked teams.

Head Coach John Zeigler has faith that the team will top last year's performance and has ambitious goals for the Orange and Blue.

"(We want) a winning record with a tough schedule. Winning our conference championship and then making a run at NCAA qualification," Zeigler said. The Bison compete in one of the most competitive leagues in the country facing perennial powerhouses such as Ivy Leaguer Princeton and fellow Patriot Leaguer Navy.

The team's six incoming first-years from across the United States will have a significant impact on the team. Zeigler will be focusing on improving the overall speed of the team, and the addition of these six players will help with both depth and quickness in the pool.

"Each member of the new class serves a different role and it will be important that they work into our rotation quickly," Zeigler said. "The deeper our team is the quicker we will see success this season." Two members of the class of 2010 were teammates in high school, which will add another dynamic to this diverse incoming class.

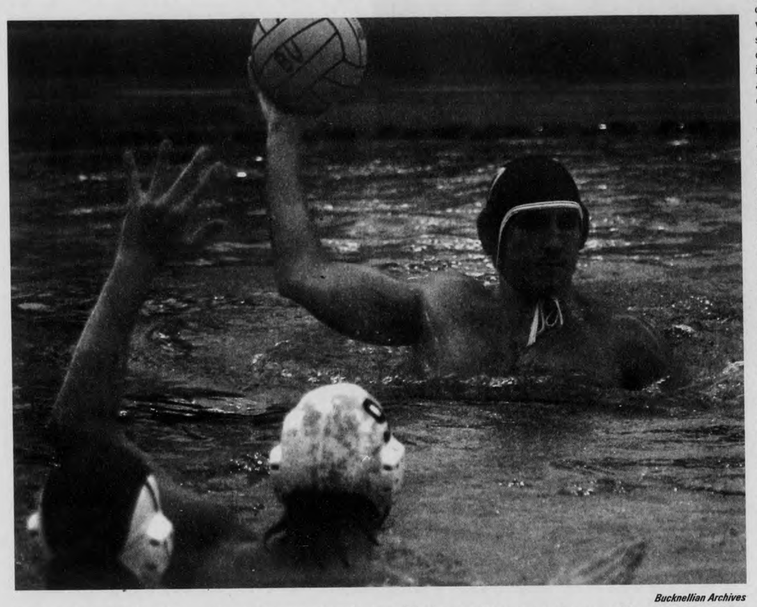
Mark Masterson '07 will be taking the reins as the lone captain for the 2006 campaign. A Hawaiian native, Masterson had a massive impact on the team after transferring from UC Irvine before the 2005 campaign. Last year, he had a standout season with a team-high 48 goals and 70 points.

Masterson is backed by a talented supporting cast on the offensive side. Kyle Roslyn '08 cleaned up last season, scoring 30 goals with his 30th coming against Princeton in the Eastern Conference Championship. Classmate Jason Rechel '08 will also be a key part of the offensive puzzle, tallying 52 points with 38 goals last season. Gabriel Heiber '09 will round out the key offensive players for the Bison, racking up a total of 21 points and 18 steals. Last year, Heiber was also named the Bison's Rookie of the Year and appeared in all 32 games, starting in 18 matches.

On the opposite end of the pool, Luke Belenky '08 will anchor the defense in the goal. Belenky will be replacing recent water polo graduate Trevor Mullins '06, who started every game last season, so Belenky has large shoes to fill. Josh Sunday '08 will be supporting Belenky in goal in the center forward position and will be an integral part of the Bison defensive unit.

The team has a very challenging schedule ahead of it against conference powerhouses Princeton, Navy and John's Hopkins. The team will travel to Annapolis, Md. Saturday to participate in their first tournament at the Naval Academy. There, they will face #2 Cal-Berkley and ranked Santa Clara squads. Another key tournament is the Claremont Convergence, held in Claremont, Calif., where the Bison will face off against top ten Pepperdine and a ranked UC Davis team. The rigorous schedule will be a true test for the Orange and Blue, and their hard work will be put to the test against some of the top teams in the nation.

"Each member of the new class serves a different role and it will be important that they work into our rotation quickly. The deeper our team is the quicker we will see success this season."
—John Zeigler, head coach

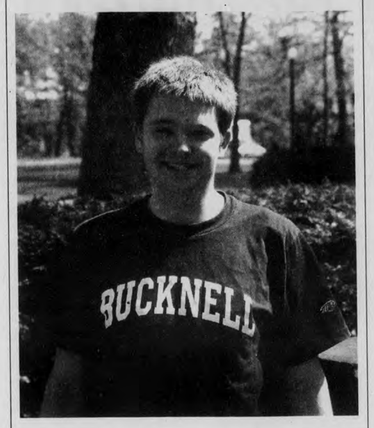


Bucknellian Archives

Graduate Aaron Platshon '06 scans the pool in a game from last year. The water polo team starts the season this weekend with the Navy Open at Annapolis, before hosting the Bucknell Invitational on September 9th and 10th.

Not too long ago, you chose a small college in the middle of cow country. And, wisely, it chose you, too.
Now go ahead and make another good choice.
For dinner.
The Inn at New Berlin is a short, 10-minute drive from the Bucknell campus, on scenic country roads. It's a perfect distraction from writing papers – or grading them.
Students and faculty love our relaxed atmosphere and our award-winning dining, while parents appreciate the luxurious lodging during parents' weekend and graduations. But don't wait till then to discover us!
The Inn at New Berlin
Dine. Shop. Stay.
570-966-0321 InnAtNewBerlin.com

Saylor Says



By Matthew Saylor
Sports Editor

1. Sean Conover '06 is days away from potentially making an NFL roster. The former All-American defensive end received a free agent contract from the Tennessee Titans following the NFL Draft, and final NFL rosters are due into the league office by Saturday evening. He has impressed his coaches with his improvement throughout training camp, and had three tackles in the Titans' first pre-season game of the year against the Saints.

2. Conover is not the only Bison athlete given the opportunity to demonstrate his talent on the professional level. Charles Lee '06 spent a portion of his summer competing for the San Antonio Spurs' summer league team. Lee appeared in three games, scoring 10 points and grabbing four steals in the summer league finale.

3. Same player. Same story. New place. Terrell Owens has been a source of difficulty wherever he has played and his first season in Dallas appears no different. The wide receiver who wore out his welcome in San Francisco and Philadelphia has been injured for virtually all of training camp and has been late (and subsequently fined $9,500) for at least one team meeting. Cowboys' Head Coach Bill Parcells has become increasingly agitated with the media for the repeated questioning regarding Owens and his status with the team.

4. The hottest division in all of baseball is the American League Central. The Detroit Tigers have the best record in baseball, and the Chicago White Sox and Minnesota Twins are not far behind. It is a shame that at least one of those teams will not make the playoffs, but it is likely that the wild card winner will come from the Central due to the collapse of the Boston Red Sox. Following the injury to catcher and team captain Jason Varitek, the Red Sox have struggled and fallen behind in both the wild card and its division.

5. Andre Agassi is drawing large crowds to his matches at the U.S. Open, his last Grand Slam tournament. Agassi has endeared himself to tennis fans all over the world, and here is hoping that he has one more prolonged run in him so the fans can give him the send off he deserves.

6. The United States' Men's World Championship basketball team is two wins away from claiming the gold medal that has eluded the team in past competitions, such as the 2004 Summer Olympics in Athens. This year's squad has shown improvement over the past few years, but the days of American teams dominating every opponent they face is over and does not appear likely to ever return.

7. Curt Schilling of the Boston Red Sox recently became the 14th pitcher in Major League history to record 3,000 career strikeouts. Only three other active pitchers have 3,000 strikeouts – Greg Maddux, Randy Johnson and Roger Clemens. Pedro Martinez is only 14 strikeouts away from joining the elite group.

8. The NFC East is hands down the most competitive division in the NFL. The Dallas Cowboys, New York Giants, Philadelphia Eagles and Washington Redskins all believe they have the talent to win the division and make the playoffs. At least one of those teams will not be so lucky come January.

9. The Bison football team will win at least five games this season.

10. Be sure to attend as many Bison home sporting events as possible. This does not just mean football and men's basketball. Field hockey, men's and women's soccer, men's water polo, cross country, and women's volleyball are all currently beginning their seasons and deserve as much support as some of the more prominent name sports. All of the student-athletes appreciate when their friends, classmates and teachers come to their games to show them support as they do their best to represent the University. A strong home field advantage begins with a strong crowd. Let's make sure the fans of the Herd are heard.

A) Want to try something new?

B) Do you watch a lot of ESPN?

If you answered yes to either, then writing for sports is your destiny

WRITE FOR SPORTS

Contact msaylor@

Bison hope to improve

By Ellis Hudes
Writer

The Bison lost a 3-1 decision to the New Hampshire Wildcats to finish round robin play Friday at the Fairfield Tournament. The team was pressured immediately by an aggressive New Hampshire squad that came out firing to an 18-4 lead and took the first game by a 30-12 margin. The Bison made the necessary adjustments and started stronger for the second game, leading 21-13 at one point. They withstood a late Wildcat run that cut the deficit to 28-27 and quickly regrouped following a much-needed time out to clinch the game 30-27.

New Hampshire 3
Bucknell 1

With the teams level at one game each, New Hampshire never trailed thereafter, taking the next two games 30-16 and 30-20 to seal the match. Despite a disappointing start to the season, Shannon Pitsch '09 represented the Bison on the all-tournament team, tallying 21 assists, 12 digs and four block assists in the New Hampshire match. Other notables for the Bison were Liz Hazuka '09 leading the team with 10 kills and Kristen Sydlowski '07 who contributed three aces and 18 digs.

In their first Saturday match the Bison were swept by St. John's Red Storm. It was a match of shifting fortunes for the Bison, with a close 30-24 first-game loss following a slow start. In game two, the Bison made a spirited start before the Red Storm reeled off several key points to win 30-18. In the third game, St. John's opened up an early lead on the way to completing the sweep 30-15. Sherri Liang '09 had a career high of 10 digs while Pitsch finished with 23 assists. Sydlowski posted eight kills and nine digs for the Bison.

St John's 3
Bucknell 0

The Orange and Blue faced an extremely tough Fairfield team to open their 2006 campaign with a challenge. Fairfield took control of game one from the beginning, hitting .528 overall including a five point stretch when they hit four kills and an ace en route to taking the game 30-20. The Bison gave Fairfield a much tougher battle in the second game but stumbled later, partially because of four costly service errors.

Fairfield 3
Bucknell 0

"We need our seniors to minimize mistakes, and we need more consistency on the service line," Head Coach Cynthia Opalski said.

Game three saw another run by Fairfield, this time seven straight unanswered points. They clinched the match 30-18. Pitsch and Sydlowski once again made big contributions to the squad. Pitsch had 29 assists, seven kills and nine digs and hit .375 while Sydlowski had seven kills and 11 digs for the Bison.

The Orange and Blue were ranked third in this year's preseason Patriot League poll. Opalski believes her team has the right ingredients to succeed.

"We have a deep talent pool, terrific leadership in the senior class and personnel with a great work ethic. I think we can challenge for the Patriot League title," Opalski said.

"Our team is returning our entire starting lineup from last season, with the exception of our defensive specialist," Jennie Smith '07 said. "Therefore, we have a lot of depth from our returning players and five new freshmen added to the mix who have a lot of natural ability and potential."

The team has its first home game at 7 p.m. Tuesday in Davis Gym against West Chester.

WEEKEND SCHEDULE

Friday

WOMEN'S SOCCER - Air Force, 9 p.m., USAFA, Colo.
MEN'S & WOMEN'S CROSS COUNTRY- Bison Open, 5:30 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
WOMEN'S VOLLEYBALL - UNC- Wilimington, 7 p.m., Philadelphia, Pa.; Maryland-Eastern Shore, 9 p.m., Philadelphia, Pa.

Saturday

FOOTBALL - Duquesne, 7 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
MEN'S WATER POLO - Queens NY, 9:50 a.m., Annapolis Md.; Santa Clara, 4:50 p.m., Annapolis, Md.
WOMEN'S CROSS COUNTRY - Harry Lang Invitational, 11 a.m.
FIELD HOCKEY - Holy Cross, 12 p.m., Lewisburg Pa.; Holy Cross, TBA, Lewisburg, Pa.
WOMEN'S VOLLEYBALL - Rider, 12 p.m., Philadelphia, Pa.; La Salle, 7 p.m., Philadelphia, Pa.
MEN'S CROSS COUNTRY - Harry Lang Invitational, 12 p.m., Hamilton, N.Y.

Sunday

MEN'S SOCCER - St. Bonaventure, 1 p.m., Lewisburg Pa.
WOMEN'S SOCCER - Colorado College, 3 p.m., Colorado Springs, Colo.
MEN'S WATER POLO - Cal, 8 a.m., Annapolis, Md.; MIT, 11:30 a.m., Annapolis, Md.

Bison award winners

Field Hockey
Patriot League Defensive Player of the Week: Steph Graf '09
Patriot League Goal Keeper of the Week: Emily Groendyke '07
Patriot League Rookie of the Week: Sarah Ebright '10
Patriot League Honorable Mention: Katie Urosevich '07

Women's Soccer
Owl Eyes Classic All-Tournament Team: Jennifer Dervarics '09, Nicole Marotta '09, Kelly Boswell '09
Patriot League Honorable Mention: Jennifer Dervarics '09, Nicole Marotta '09

Volleyball
Patriot League Honorable Mention and Fairfield Tournament All-Tournament Team: Shannon Pitsch '09

STSTRAVEL.COM
Join America's #1 Student Tour Operator

CANCUN, ACAPULCO, JAMAICA, BAHAMAS PUERTO VALLARTA, MAZATLAN, CABO, SOUTH PADRE FLORIDA, CRUISES
SPRING BREAK 2007!
Sell Trips, Earn Cash & Travel Free
STS STUDENT TRAVEL SERVICES
1-800-648-4849 / www.ststravel.com

Red Smoked BBQ!
Beef Brisket, Pork, Chicken, Ribs!
Sandwiches, Wraps, Salads, Platters!
No Reservations Needed!
Call in for TAKEOUT!
SKEETER'S PIT BBQ
On the Bluff
Overlooking the scenic Susquehanna River
At the intersection of Routes 11 & 15
Shamokin Dam
570.743.2727
Daily 11:00am - 10:00pm
Sundays till 8:00pm
www.SkeetersBBQ.com

'Choke'
By Chuck Palahniuk

By Kimberley Kane
Arts & Entertainment Editor

❖ Book Review

Chuck Palahniuk's novel "Choke" is the story of a sex addict named Victor Mancini. A former medical student, he makes his living at a historical colonial town during the day, where an employee can be fired or put in the stocks for wearing ChapStick or whistling a Beach Boys tune.

At night, Victor dines at restaurants and pretends to choke on his meal. Without fail, a customer will rush to his side and "save" his life—and inevitably send cards and checks, feeling responsible for Victor's life. He uses the money to keep his aging mother in St. Anthony's, an expensive nursing home.

Victor reasons that he is really helping people by allowing them to save him and form a bond.

"This person will be proud of you because you make them so proud of themselves," he says. "That's why I do all this…to showcase just one brave stranger. To save just one more person from boredom. It's not just for the money. It's not just for the adoration. But neither one hurts."

In between fake choking and his colonial lifestyle, Victor splits his time between visiting his mother and feeding his sexual addiction. The details of Victor's sexual interactions (with, mainly, other sexual addicts) are both hard to stomach and difficult to turn away from, as Palahniuk provides gritty, raw descriptions of sexual acts ranging from the taboo to the unthinkable.

The novel is dotted with flashbacks from Victor's childhood, detailing his time with his fugitive anti-establishment mother, Ida. She routinely kidnaps Victor from various foster parents after escaping punishment for her crimes. Ida's crimes, designed to shake up a world that has become too safe and complacent, include: feeding LSD to monkeys at the zoo, sending fake letters to people informing them their sexual partner has a sexually transmitted disease, and mailing fake coupons for free meals at restaurants. It is easy to see where Victor gets his inspiration for his schemes.

Victor compares being the child of a single mother to being her husband, as he can never escape his mother. Throughout his childhood, she sent both his life and the town police force into upheaval every time she swept him away in a stolen vehicle. Because his mother is slowly dying, Victor visits her weekly and tries to uncover more information about his life with the help of Paige Marshall, a doctor at the nursing home who has an intriguing secret. Although he regularly has sex with other women, especially other addicts, Victor becomes obsessed with Paige Marshall. His relationship with Paige grows more complex as she grows closer to his withering mother (who does not recognize her son). Paige is able to uncover the mystery of Victor's past, while unintentionally revealing her own secret.

Along with his sexual addiction, Victor suffers from hypochondria and projects his fears onto others. Every cough means emphysema, every headache means a disease you've never even heard of. While visiting a strip club with his best friend Denny (also a sex addict and colonial theme park employee), Victor tells a dancer that the mole on her thigh is probably cancerous. The dancer, Cherry Daiquiri (her real name is Beth), gets the mole removed and tints her hair brown—since Victor told her blondes are more susceptible to skin cancer.

St. Anthony's is full of senile old women, stuck in the past and unable to get over traumatic events. As he walks down the hall on a visit to his mother, Victor is accosted by women accusing him of molesting them, killing their dogs and ruining their gardens. Eventually, he goes along with whatever they say.

"Yeah, I tell them all, I did it. I burned down your house. I bombed your village. I deported your sister. I sold you a shitty blue Nash Rambler in 1968. Then yeah, I killed your dog. So get over it!"

In his own unsettling way, Victor is continuously helping people throughout the book. He is a constant source of support for Denny, tries his best for his mother, and believes he is making lives better by letting people save him. The residents of St. Anthony's unload their lifelong burdens on him—even though he really didn't bomb their villages or deport their sisters. Throughout the novel, Victor struggles with his simultaneous role of savior and victim, alongside his addiction and hypochondria.

Palahniuk's success as a writer comes from the ingenious, yet grotesque simplicity of his characters schemes. Victor preys on peoples' desires to be heroic; he simultaneously allows the hero to feel good about himself and cons him out of money. As a reader, it is almost impossible to avoid thinking about how easy it could be for someone to pull this off—if they could ignore the shamelessness and deceit involved. This sense of shame, of course, is what keeps us from ever becoming Victor, but what makes him so fascinating to us. As one of Palahniuk's most abrasive and shocking characters, he is also one of the most memorable.

Unconventional Kellogg thrills Uptown audience

By Lindsay Carter
Senior Writer

Students seeking an interactive concert with very talented musicians found that at Uptown Saturday night. Stephen Kellogg and the Sixers delivered an entertaining mix of quality singing and instrumentation with the low-key, comfortable dynamics of bands that play at the University's small venues.

The lyrics ranged from the sensitive and original "Maybe it's love, how would I know? Every time I get close to it, I let it go," to the slightly less meaningful "I know I'm not that great, but I'm not that bad." The band sang "Afternoon Delight" and "Piano Man" with some personalized lyrics. They also performed "Baby Got Back," as well as a medley combining lines from songs including "Gin and Juice," "Jesse's Girl," "Pieces of Me," "Hollaback Girl" and "In 'Da Club."

The band members, including Kellogg, Keith "Kit" Karlson (bass and keyboard) and Brian "Boots" Factor (drums) made pop culture references in their speech, as they continuously interrupted their songs to shout lines from famous movies such as "Office Space," "The Shawshank Redemption," "Dirty Dancing" and "Snakes on a Plane."

The band created music that was sweet and sincere while also being fun and amusing. This was especially apparent when they interrupted the performance for about eight minutes to talk about Kellogg's 16-year-old brother's love life and call his brother onstage.

While the band managed to entertain the crowd between sets, the music itself was most impressive.

"They didn't need as many gimmicks as they had because they were really talented musicians," Denise Peterson '08 said.

The crowd danced and sang along as best they could, and even called for an encore. The encore summarized the performance well, as they came back out and performed their original, "Such a Way," singing, "She moves in such a way that people fall in love with her every single day."

They played one more song: "(I've Had) The Time of My Life" from the "Dirty Dancing" soundtrack, which showcased the band's talents well. Factor took over much of the vocals and impressed the crowd as he was able to reach the high notes with style and end the show on such an energetic note.

Summarizing their music as well as their antics, Karlson said, "If you wanna make headlines, you gotta be unconventional." And unconventional is a good word to describe this performance.

While many students were only slightly familiar with the band, some have been fans for years and were excited to hear that Stephen Kellogg and the Sixers were performing at the University.

Katie Ford '09 has been a fan of Stephen Kellogg and the Sixers for three years and was even wearing a shirt promoting the band. She first went to a performance of theirs in 2003 and went to another one this past summer in Buffalo, N.Y. Her favorite part of the performances is the band's energy.

"I listen to their CDs all the time, but nothing compares to the energy they have in concert," Ford said.

Stephen Kellogg and the Sixers released a self-titled album in 2005 and have just finished producing another that will be released in early 2007. The band is not currently touring, with the exception of this one performance. They will be headlining their upcoming tour, sharing some performances with their friends OAR.

The band performed at the University on Halloween of 2003, when they dressed up as Guns 'N Roses and performed for another small crowd. Kellogg addressed the tradeoff that occurs when playing at a small school - one that is especially small when compared to the University of Massachusetts, which the band members attended in the 1990s.

"On one hand, the college scene tends to be smaller, but on the other hand, the smaller scene is fun because it allows us to be more original," Kellogg said.

The band, after coming together full-time three years ago, is beginning to perform in larger clubs and venues, but Kellogg maintained that there is an appealing "laid-back-ness" when playing at small colleges and universities.

Factor enjoys coming back to the colleges where the band had its first shows because it reminds him of the early days. Also, a large venue would not have allowed the band members to unplug their instruments and play two acoustic songs from inside a circle of audience members, which the crowd really enjoyed.

Another reason this performance was unusual for the band was because the guitarist Chris Soucy had to miss it. Each of the four band members live in different states and Soucy, from Denver, Colo., was unable to make a connecting flight to arrive in time for the show in Lewisburg, Pa.

Kellogg acknowledged that in any profession, the ability to adapt to various circumstances is imperative, and the music business is no different.

He said that there were times when he and Karlson would look at each other during the show when Soucy was supposed to have a solo and figure out right then who would do his part.

The band was able to fill Soucy's place very well. Stephen Kellogg and the Sixers demonstrated one more reason why Uptown is the place to be for weekend entertainment.

Ryan Wynn—The Bucknellian

Stephen Kellogg and the Sixers make music and banter at Uptown. Good music and even better showmanship marked their Saturday performance.

A Bucknell Tradition Since 1968
bull run inn
Open 7 days a week:
Mon. – Sat. 11:30 a.m.—2 a.m.
and Sunday 11:30 a.m. – midnight
605 Market St., downtown Lewisburg
ph: (570) 524-2572
www.bullruninn.com
(check for current features and events)
Now serving SUNDAY BRUNCH
11:30 a.m.—2 p.m.
Live Bands /Karaoke (no cover/21 & over) these Thursday's 11 p.m.—2 a.m.
Aug 31—My Shady Uncle Thomas
Sept 7— Starr Karaoke
Sept 14—Given
Beach Party
Wed., Sept 20—10 p.m.—2 a.m.
featuring the live band:
Blue Suede Goo
POP QUIZ—Tuesday's—9—11 p.m.

Nancy's Nu-Wave Salon
Look your best
* Hair
* Facials
* Massage
* Nails
* Tanning
* Tuxedoes
* Waxing
Main Street (Rte 45) Mifflinburg
524-2315
www.nancysnuwave.com

CatmanDo
Handyman Services
Specializing in small home repair jobs:
Custom Carpentry
Painting
Light construction
Greg H Mathias
570-524-4724
Free Estimates Fully insured

Summer Breeze Stables
Est. 1973
10 minutes from Campus
Riding Lessons for all levels
Certified Professional Trainer
Large indoor and Outdoor Arenas
Boarding, Training and Showing
Call 570-412-0771 for an appointment

Fall 2006 – First Wednesday Series
Everyone is invited to enjoy
JAZZ at Bucknell

Don Byron
Ivey-Divey Trio
Don Byron, clarinet, bass clarinet, & tenor saxophone
George Colligan, piano
Mark Ferber, drums
8:30 p.m., Wednesday
September 6, 2006
Bucknell Hall
Free Admission
Bucknell Hall is located on Loomis Street between the President's House and Hunt Hall
Bucknell

Primetime Emmys: Highs and lows

By Matt Saylor
Sports Editor

Reuters Picture Archive

Conan O'Brien gestures emphatically while hosting the 58th annual Primetime Emmy Awards. The Awards, held in Los Angeles, used a new system to select nominees and winners of awards.

There sure was a lot of criticism for an event that champions excellence. No, this was not the Oscars or the Winter Olympics – it was the 58th Primetime Emmy Awards held Sunday in Los Angeles.

The controversy surrounding this year's honoring of the supposed best in television started as a whisper before the names of the nominees were even announced; it became a Sojka Pavilion-sized roar once the nominees were revealed.

This year the Academy of Television Arts & Sciences instituted some new rules for how the nominees would be chosen. Nominees for categories such as Outstanding Comedy Series, Outstanding Drama Series and the Outstanding Lead Actors and Actresses for Comedy and Drama were chosen by a Blue Ribbon panel of Academy members.

For the series categories, the top 10 shows from a previously held popular vote each received the opportunity to submit an episode to be viewed by the panel. For the acting categories, 15 actors and actresses had the chance to submit their best work. The judges would then rate the submissions to choose the nominees based upon one episode of work.

The idea behind the change was to give previously viewed shows and actors, such as Lauren Graham of the "Gilmore Girls," a better opportunity to score a nomination. In fact, the change in the nominating procedure is referred to on the street (or in this case Rodeo Drive) as "The Lauren Graham Rule."

There were some new nominees, but ironically enough, they did not include Lauren Graham (or anyone from the now combined WB and UPN networks).

The Academy should have been careful what it asked for - it ended up with more bad press than Charlie Sheen, who became a beneficiary of the new system and received his first nomination for his leading role in "Two and a Half Men." Go figure. Here are some of the controversial nominees' storylines:

- The 2005 winner for Outstanding Drama Series, "Lost," did not even receive a nomination this year.

Patricia Arquette of "Medium" and James Spader of "Boston Legal" both received wins in the lead drama acting categories last year. No nominations for them either.

- Last year's smash hit "Desperate Housewives" did not receive a nomination for any of its leading ladies — Marcia Cross, Teri Hatcher, Felicity Huffman (last year's winner), Eva Longoria and Nicolette Sheridan. It did receive one in the supporting category for Alfre Woodard, the most underused cast member with a weak plot in the last season.

- Edie Falco and James Gandolfini of "The Sopranos" and Hugh Laurie of "House" all failed to receive nominations. They are the winds beneath the sails of their respective shows, both of which received Outstanding Drama Series nominations. So why are they overlooked?

- Finally, Ellen Burstyn received a nomination for her supporting role in the made-for-television movie "Mrs. Harris." Burstyn's total amount of screen time was 14 seconds. Dead bodies on "Law & Order" have received more screentime than her. It should be noted that the nominees for her category are chosen strictly by popular vote. In other words, members of the Academy probably saw her name on the ballot, recognized it and checked it. It is nice to know that critics considered to be at the top of the television industry are paying close attention to its medium.

Alas, the show must go on, and it did. Here are the highs, lows, and everything in between from Emmy night.

Highs

- Conan O'Brien did a superb job hosting the event. His performance rivals the jobs that Billy Crystal has done as host of the Oscars. Did you know the 78th Annual Academy Awards show actually won four Emmys? Does this mean the 58th Primetime Emmy Awards could be eligible to win an Oscar? Anyway, O'Brien opened the show by making appearances on the shows "Lost," "The Office," "24," "House," "South Park" and "Dateline: How to Catch a Predator." He invited Hugo (Jorge Garcia) from "Lost" to join him on his quest to make it to the Emmys. Hugo's response: "We weren't exactly invited."

Throughout his quest to make it to the Emmys, Conan flirted with Pam (Jenna Fischer) on "The Office," distracted Jack Bauer (Kiefer Sutherland) from saving the world on "24," literally came out of the closet on "South Park" and received a physical from House (Hugh Laurie). Upon making it to the Emmys, Conan sang the song "Trouble at NBC" to the tune of "Trouble in River City" from "The Music Man." That certainly is job security.

- In order to keep the show moving, television legend Bob Newhart was kept in a glass container with only three hours worth of oxygen in it. If the show did not end by 11 p.m. EST, bye-bye Bob. Fortunately, 52 percent of callers into the network wanted to see Bob live, so he was let out in time to present the Outstanding Comedy Series award to "The Office."

- The show "24" won Outstanding Drama Series, making it, along with "The Office," the most deserving winner of the night. The miniseries "Elizabeth I" received nine Emmy awards – more than any other show.

- The tribute to Dick Clark was done well. It was great to see the living legend on-stage, but sad to see him in his current state. Unable to walk onto the stage, Clark gave his speech from a table on the side, slurring almost every word. Yet a slurred word from Dick Clark is better than any words from almost anyone else.

- Stephen Colbert complained to Jon Stewart on-stage about his loss to Barry Manilow in the Outstanding Performance in a Variety or Music Program category. It is safe to say that Colbert was not the only one in shock.

- With two more wins this year, "The West Wing" tied the Emmy record for most wins by a drama series, 26, held by "Hill Street Blues." Alan Alda's win for his supporting role in the White House drama made him the sixth cast member to win an Emmy for his or her role on the show, joining four-time winner Allison Janney, Stockard Channing, Richard Schiff, Bradley Whitford and the late John Spencer.

- Spencer, along with Don Knotts and Richard Pryor, received the loudest applause during the always moving "In Memorium" segment.

Lows

- When the recipients of awards question why they won the award, there could be a problem. Blythe Danner for "Huff," Tony Shalhoub for "Monk" and Jon Stewart speaking for "The Daily Show" all felt that others in their categories were more worthy of the award than themselves. The fact that these people had previously won Emmys could have made that easier to admit.

- There were very few clips shown highlighting the past year in television. They could have at least shown some clips from the competitors in the outstanding series categories.

- While the tribute to Aaron Spelling appeared to be heartfelt, the drama surrounding it outweighed the tribute itself. The reunion of the original (feuding) cast of "Charlie's Angels," along with the fighting between Spelling's wife and daughter Tori made it difficult to truly appreciate Spelling's legacy and contributions to television.

- ABC's decision to air the film "Pirates of the Caribbean: Curse of the Black Pearl" opposite the Emmy broadcast was done because of the network's unhappiness over a lack of nominations for its hit shows "Lost" and "Desperate Housewives." This petty gesture must have made the cast and crew of "Grey's Anatomy" feel great. Where is its support for the hottest show on television, a show that has surpassed both "Lost" and "Desperate Housewives" in total viewers?

- There were very few standout speeches this year. The rush to see the show finish on time pressured award recipients to talk faster. Even when it became clear that the show could finish early as there was only one award left to present, the music started to play, cuing the cast and crew of "The Office" to clear the stage. Executive Producer Greg Daniels even had to halt his speech upon receiving the award for Outstanding Comedy Series.

- O'Brien's opening skit featured a plane crash reminiscent of the one on the TV show "Lost." This aired the same day that a plane crashed in Kentucky killing 49 of the 50 people on board. NBC issued an apology for airing the segment, not meaning to offend those affected by the crash. It should be said that the opening segment was filmed in advance of that day's crash.

Everything in Between (aka Fashion)

- Katherine Heigl, Evangeline Lilly, Heidi Klum, Mariska Hargitay, Debra Messing and Julia Louis-Dreyfu were among the best dressed. Sandra Oh, Jeremy Piven, Morgan Fairchild and Cheryl Hines were at the opposite end of the spectrum.

Now, the Academy must decide if it wants to change the voting procedures for next year - a decision that will hopefully find more agreement. Until the next time Lauren Graham does not receive an Emmy nomination, this is Matthew Saylor.

Zanos opens Late Night Music series

By Kelly Malloy
Contributing Writer

It was 11 p.m. on Friday and 7th Street Café was alive with energy—so alive that no one seemed to notice Byron Zanos quietly tuning his guitar.

This one-man-band was selected to kick-off the University's Late Night Music series.

"He has a unique sound," said Mandy Hart '07, president of Activities and Campus Events (ACE). "[We] felt that he was a good choice to show first-years."

Hart said although many musicians in the Late Night Music series are traditionally acoustic, ACE plans to "break the mold" for future weekends.

The grind of the café's blender was eventually replaced by hoots of "Byron, woo!" as he started his set. Zanos' captivating vocal range, accompanied by crisp plucking of the guitar strings, ushered in a wave of clapping for the first song. After only a moment's pause, he dove into the first cover of the night, his version of Ray Lamontagne's "Trouble."

The third song of the set was an open-hearted tale of a relationship, titled "Down for You." By this point, however, the lively 7th Streeters had begun to chatter, producing a low buzz that Zanos quickly quieted with an acoustic version of Daniel Bedingfield's pop hit "Gotta Get Thru This." Like all of Zanos' work, this song was imbued with his own quirky spin.

Fifth on Zanos' set list was the kind of song musicians write when they are completely wasted, Zanos said, "but it's honest, and maybe a little funny." It came complete with lyrical hilarity and a bit of dirty honesty.

Still alternating between covers and original works, Zanos then played "Sleeping Sally"—a tender-voiced song that deserves to be on the radio—and the warmly received "She Talks To Angels" by The Black Crowes.

After relating to students across campus with the "Daily Grind," Zanos led into his break with the mellow "Blind Today."

At the end of this short intermission, Zanos seemed completely regenerated. He stopped midway through a cover of John Mayer's "Your Body is a Wonderland" to comment on the fact that girls always halt their conversations to sing along with the line, "I'll never let your head hit the bed without my hand behind it." "Funny," Zanos said.

As the evening progressed and Zanos whipped out wildly different songs (from a social commentary called "I Wanna be Like Paris" to the relationship-based "Stubborn"), it became clear that this musician was truly capable of versatility.

"His style is somewhere in between John Mayer and the lead singer from Dispatch," Stephen Parker '08 said.

Still managing to make every song his own, the twelfth song in the set was a virtually unrecognizable rendition of The Fray's "How to Save a Life." Zanos followed with original songs "Still in a Fight" and "Pieces Missing" and ended with a superb Radiohead cover, "No Surprises."

Nearly two hours after his arrival, Zanos finished his fifteen-piece set. His acoustic guitar playing was explorative yet familiar - a pleasing combination. Most importantly, Zanos connected with the students.

"I was personally impressed by how outgoing he was," Kate Lahner '09 said. "He sent me a message on MySpace telling me about this show, and that's why I'm here."

Ellyn Ercolano—The Bucknellian

Byron Zanos plays acoustic guitar at Seventh Street. His set included originals and covers.

Summer shines on the big screen

Although lazy vacation days are over, these summer flicks still offer up plenty of rainy-day entertainment

The Devil Wears Prada & SCOOP

By Sarah Novello
Writer

The Devil Wears Prada

One movie released this summer, "The Devil Wears Prada," was simply satisfactory. Aline Brosh McKenna's screenplay held the tone of Lauren Weisberger's novel but also offered some changes - the characters' actions were more justifiable and Meryl Streep's domineering character was greatly humanized.

"The Devil Wears Prada" is the story of a young woman, Andy Sachs (Anne Hathaway) who gets a job as a second assistant to the editor of a fashion magazine, Miranda Priestly (Meryl Streep). Andy wishes to use this job as a stepping stone to another journalism profession. On the job, she is expected to do ridiculous things, such as track down a copy of an unpublished "Harry Potter" book.

Only after receiving a fashion makeover from one of the editors (Stanley Tucci) does she start to do what Miranda views as a half-decent job. At the same time, Andy begins to lose her family, friends, and boyfriend. Her "stepping stone" may not be worth these sacrifices, so she must decide between success through Miranda's connections or success through her own hard work. "The Devil Wears Prada" is essentially a down-to-earth story about Andy growing up.

The one thing that stood out above all else in this film was Streep's performance. Her acting is always brilliant and she truly transforms herself for each role she selects. By choosing to work on "The Devil Wears Prada," Streep continued to strengthen her relationship with young Hollywood and become more recognizable to a younger audience.

Missing "The Devil Wears Prada" this summer is not a big deal. It is worth seeing when you have to baby-sit your younger sister – it is a good film which generally entertains.

Scoop

This summer's under-the-radar flick "Scoop" was a perfect example of a Woody Allen film. His witty scripts, full of one-line zingers, attract stars and fans to his work. Starring Scarlet Johansson, Hugh Jackman, Ian McShane, and Allen himself, "Scoop" is the story of a U.S. journalism student (Johansson) in London.

Through an odd string of events, Johansson comes into contact with a recently deceased British journalist (McShane) who discovers what he describes as "the scoop of a lifetime" from one of his companions across the River Styx. With help from Allen's character, Johansson sets out on McShane's scoop, which leads her to Jackman's character – a British aristocrat who Johansson now believes is a serial killer. Johansson cannot help but become romantically involved with Jackson.

The acting and writing for "Scoop" is brilliant, but the high point of the film is its freshness. Although each Allen film contains similar themes (aristocracy, adultery, jazz, nostalgia), none of his films are boring or predictable. The audience can see reality in Allen's work because he makes it easy for viewers to identify with characters and themes. His work is so compelling that audiences even justify the immoral actions of his protagonists.

"Scoop" is a wonderful addition to Allen's growing ensemble of films and one that Allen fans should love. For those less accustomed to Allen's work, "Scoop" is a good starting point. Although it may be a challenge to find "Scoop" in a cinema near Lewisburg, it is well worth the search.

The Breakup & The Omen

By Kimberly Kane
Arts & Entertainment Editor

The Break-up

One of the most anticipated romantic comedies in recent memory, "The Break Up" was supposed to be a high point for celebrity couple Vince Vaughn and Jennifer Aniston. Instead, the plot was predictable and lacking warmth, despite the best efforts of the stars.

Sunny and beautiful, Aniston plays Brooke Meyers, a sophisticated and mature art gallery employee. She meets Gary Grabowski (Vaughn), a loud mouthed, fast talking tour guide. Like Aniston, Vaughn has a natural likability and charm, but he wasn't able to infuse life into his character.

"The Break Up" centers on the aftermath of Brooke and Gary's relationship. They break up, basically, because he is selfish and lazy and she doesn't have the time (or desire) to listen to his pleas to play video games and wash the dishes "later." Brooke finally ends the relationship but both refuse to move out of their apartment. What follows is a series of goofy, but poignantly sad, encounters between the two. Brooke walks around the apartment naked to show off her bikini wax and Gary has an over the top poker night, complete with strippers.

Where the movie aimed to be funny, it was uncomfortable. Gary and Brooke are pathetically competitive and fight constantly in front of their friends. It's impossible not to cringe when Brooke throws Gary off the "couples only" bowling team. The funniest moment in the movie comes at the beginning, over when a family dinner that turns into an a capella concert thanks to Brooke's brother, Richard (John Michael Higgins).

The end of the movie is unconventional, but also as unsatisfying as the rest of the movie. Brooke and Gary are flawed, but we still want them to work it out, and it's especially painful to watch their bitter, childish pranks. After being apart for a year, we finally catch up with them bumping into each other on the street. There is an obvious spark between them, but as they continue down the street, it's not clear if they will ever be together again—or if we even want them to be.

The Omen

This summer's remake of the 1976 classic horror movie was deliciously entertaining, albeit not entirely necessary. Seamus Davey-Fitzpatrick stars as Damien, born on June 6, 2006—the release date of the movie and 06/06/06, or 666, the number of the devil.

The plot follows closely to the original version, which begs the question, why bother? There is no good answer, but the movie is slick and entertaining nonetheless. Fitzpatrick is positively frightening as silent, freckled Damien. In an act of genius, the producers casting Mia Farrow, the queen of 70's Satanic horror, plays to play Damien's second nanny, Mrs. Baylock. The first nanny hangs herself at Damien's birthday party, proclaiming in front of the partygoers "It's all for you, Damien!"

Julia Stiles plays Damien's mother, Katherine, and Live Schreiber plays Robert, Damien's father and political wunderkind. There is a lot of chemistry between the pair, and they are believable as young parents who cannot quite face the fact that there might be something "wrong" with their son. Mrs. Baylock kills Katherine, presumably at Damien's order, because she is aware that her son is not right. Robert is clued in by a creepy Catholic priest named Father Brennan, who works with Robert to help him destroy Damien. Father Brennan meets his untimely end before he gets to see whether Robert can kill his own son.

The movie is not particularly shocking, but there is an assortment of gruesome deaths and a few scenes guaranteed to make you jump. Perhaps the most frightening scene is the one in which is when a council of priests predict the Armageddon—based on footage of Hurricane Katrina, September 11th, and last year's tsunami in Asia. Using this footage in a film as a sign of the end of the world is effectively horrifying. This remake may not have been necessary, or particularly innovative, but it is well made with a talented cast and worth the price of a rental.

All photographs courtesy of imdb.com

Accepted

By Catherine Heverling
Editor-in-Chief

The believability of the plot of the movie "Accepted" is comparable to that of a classic episode of "Saved by the Bell." When Zach Morris came up with one of his kooky schemes (like the time he hired a waiter to pose as the principal, Mr. Belding, when his parents were called in for a conference), you just had to roll with it.

"Accepted" follows the life of Bartleby Gaines (Justin Long), a student who, like Zach Morris, funnels his creative energy into things like granting students fake IDs rather than getting A's on his science projects. As a result, Bartleby is denied admittance to eight accredited institutions. Rather than admitting these rejections to his parents, he decides to open his own university: the South Harmon Institute of Technology (which produces an interesting acronym).

The project starts out as an easy one. Bartleby asks one of his friend's uncles (comedian Lewis Black) to pose as the dean, while his nerdy friend Sherman (the Screech of the bunch) creates a website and Bartleby and a few friends fix up a dilapidated mental hospital to serve as the residence hall.

But on the day of enrollment, parents other than Bartleby's drop their kids off for their first day at the institute. Because the institute's website is a little too functional, hundreds of students are admitted with a click of the mouse. Fueled by his empathy for the students, who have been rejected by other colleges (and who hand in tuition checks upon their arrival), Bartleby decides to make South Harmon more than just a backdrop.

While "Accepted" may seem like a teeny-bopper flick that will eventually be paired with "Old School" or "Mean Girls" in a bargain bin, this movie has something to say. It speaks of the value of education and strips the college experience down to its bare essentials, questioning what students learn at a university and whether it is what they should be learning and want to learn.

Like an education at South Harmon, "Accepted" is not a film from which you would expect to learn anything. But it definitely gets you thinking.

Pirates: Dead Man's Chest

By Rina Van Orden
Associate Editor of Layout

As one who spent nearly a year anticipating the release of "the Pirates of the Caribbean: Dead Man's Chest," I was ecstatic when July 7 rolled around and I would finally be able to get lost in a whole new adventure with the Captain Jack Sparrow. Little did I know how sorely disappointed I would be.

The tale starts off shortly after the first movie ended. It is a foreboding beginning with rain and tears. The wedding between Will Turner (Orlando Bloom) and Elizabeth Swann (Kiera Knightly) has been unexpectedly called off at the last minute because Will is arrested for helping Jack escape. Shortly afterward, viewers discover that Jack has been marked by the dreaded Black Spot, a sign that means his soul belongs to Davy Jones (Bill Nighy). Davy Jones, along with his crew and his ship, the flying Flying Dutchmen, are searching for Jack to settle an agreement that Jack made with Jones 13 years before. Jack must find the Dead Man's Chest that holds Jones' heart in order to gain control of his fate. Or, as Jack's cunning allows, get someone else to find it for him.

The plot rambles on with different storylines, adding a few twists here and there, including the appearance of Will's father, "Bootstrap" Bill Turner (Stellan Skarsgard). Action sequences dominate the movie, and after a while, the seemingly unending swordplay begins to bore viewers. The disgusting tentacled octopus-like sea monster does not help matters either.

Johnny Depp performs excellently, however, re-bringing his over-the-top, eyeliner wearing, strangely charming character to life. It is hard to find a better match between actor and character.

The conclusion of the movie leaves the avid Pirates fan with an uneasy and unfulfilled feeling. Much of the story is left up in the air and not very happily. With so many questions left unanswered, only the third movie will tell if the supposed trilogy will live up to the exemplary first movie.

September 8, 2006

The Bucknellian

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

Volume 138, Number 2 | Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue | www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Fall Fest '06

Jack's Mannequin is set to headline Sept. 16's outdoor music festival.

See page A10

Commerford replaces Ferraro as acting dean of students

As a special advisor to the provost until December, Ferraro's new role at University remains unclear

By Alexandra Campbell-Ferrari & Evan Unger
Staff Writer & News Editor

The University has reorganized its administration in order to fulfill the changes that the Strategic Plan dictates.

"The Strategic Plan is the guiding focus of the administration this year and for years to come," Chief Communications Officer Pete Mackey said.

Changes began during the summer months. In July, Provost Mary DeCredico announced in a campus-wide e-mail that Gerald Commerford, previously the associate dean of students, had "agreed to serve as acting dean of students until further notice."

The e-mail made no mention of the whereabouts of Richard Ferraro, the Dean of Students of the 2005-2006 academic year.

According to The Tartan, Carnegie Mellon's student newspaper, Ferraro was a candidate for a position as Dean for Student Affairs at Carnegie Mellon in early March.

Robert Midkiff, associate dean of academic affairs, said he did not know much about Ferraro's application for Dean of Student Affairs at Carnegie Mellon, but was aware of Ferraro's new position as special advisor to the provost until December.

> "His house is vacant. They offered it to me about two or three weeks ago, but I did not take them up on the offer."
> —Jason Friedberg, Public Safety Director

Mackey confirmed Midkiff's statement.

"As we have begun the merger of academic and student affairs, we have made a resulting transition in the position of dean of students, and Mr. Ferraro has graciously accepted the position of special advisor to the provost," said Mackey, in an email.

However, in an attempt to reach Ferraro for comment, a secretary in the Provost's office said that Ferraro didn't work there.

In addition, Ferraro has been removed from the University's online directory.

Bucknellian editors also called Ferraro's home phone number as listed in last academic year's directory and found that the line had been disconnected.

Jason Friedberg, Director of Public Safety, said that the University offered Ferraro's former 545 Smoketown Rd. home to him for rent.

"His house is vacant. They offered it to me about two or three weeks ago, but I did not take them up on the offer," said Friedberg.

Read more about the new administration on page A3

MIT professor speaks about global warming

By Nilanjana Saha
News Editor

Richard Lindzen, professor of meteorology at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, said Tuesday that the threat posed by global warming is highly exaggerated.

The lecture, sponsored by Bucknell Conservatives Club, was a response to Al Gore's recent documentary "An Inconvenient Truth," which insists that global warming is a crisis and pleads for immediate action to reduce pollution.

Observed data is too small to be called record breaking, Lindzen said, referring to temperature changes over the past century. He said that there is no data indicating a drastic change in the earth's atmosphere because the planet goes through natural cycles and the global mean temperature is always shifting.

Lindzen used graphs to indicate that there was a decrease in the global mean temperature from the 1900s to the 1970s, and although there was a sharp increase until the 90s, the temperature has been pretty consistent since then.

Lindzen said that the greenhouse effect does not depend on levels of carbon dioxide alone since there are other anthropogenic gases such as methane involved. Lindzen also said that the relationship between the carbon dioxide levels and climate forcing, a measure of how much the climate is "forced" to change, is nonlinear. He said that only three-quarters of the climate forcing has been experienced from the doubling of carbon dioxide that was expected.

Lindzen also pointed out that clouds and water vapor amplify the effects of carbon dioxide on the atmosphere. Models used in the documentary fail to replicate observed distributions of cloud cover because there is no accurate method of recording it.

Lindzen refuted claims that melting ice caps are having deleterious effects on the environment. He said that although ice was melting off the coast of Greenland, the water level was not rising. The ice caps are being restored through water

See GREEK page A3

Greeks greet new members on Welcome Weekend

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

Sisters of Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority hold up signs to welcome new members during recruitment events.

By Emilie Linsenmeyer
Contributing Writer

Greek Life on campus is now in full swing, as both the fraternities and sororities gave out bids to new members Friday, ending the week long recruitment period.

Potential new sorority members waited anxiously in their rooms hoping not to receive a phone call from 4-6 p.m. Friday. A call would signify they did not receive a bid to any of the sororities.

After this stressful period, all the women who did not receive a call waited in the Elaine Langone Center, while the sisters decorated their doors with signs of their respective sororities. When the decorating was complete, there was an exodus from the Langone Center as they all sprinted to their rooms.

Minutes later, Smith quad erupted with screams and glitter as the new sorority members rushed to meet their fellow sisters. Each sorority proudly proclaimed their cheer and gave out Bid Day T-shirts to new members.

The fraternity bid distribution was much more subtle. Potential new members waited in their rooms for brothers to come hand out the bids in person. They may not have such an outward display, but the fraternity brothers are just as excited to be part of Greek life.

"I'm looking forward to all the social events and getting to know the brothers," said Dave Reiter '09, a Tau Kappa Epsilon pledge. "I have two parties this weekend, which is more than I had my entire freshman year!"

Each fraternity and sorority held activities for the new member classes to get to know each other Friday night. Some sororities made shirts to wear Saturday night, while others went bowling.

"There was so much excitement in running to see the decorations on my door," said Nicole Kennedy '09, a new Delta Gamma. "Then it was amazing how after only two days, how close I feel to my sis-

See GREEK page A3

University expands crisis management plan

New emergency procedures created for a possible avian flu pandemic

Reuters Picture Archive

Thousands of wild and domestic birds have been culled to stop an avian flu outbreak. The University has in place procedures to deal with a possible pandemic.

By Evan Unger
News Editor

The University is currently finishing a crisis management plan that focuses on preparation for an avian flu outbreak.

"The University has in place thorough crisis plans that have been comprehensively adapted to any situation that might arise due to avian flu," Chief Communications Officer Pete Mackey said.

Since fall of 2005, a multidisciplinary team known as the Core Planning Group has been working on updating its previous emergency preparedness plans to include preparations for an infectious pandemic, using information from the American College Health Association.

The group consists of staff and faculty from all areas of campus life, including Student Health Services, Public Safety, Dining Services, Residential Life and many others.

"When you run an institution, everyone is important," said Don Stechschulte, director of student health services.

In July, members of the Core Planning Group took part in Incident Command Training, a standardized management tool that institutions use to teach staff members the best practices in planning for both human and natural disasters.

The tool recommends specific actions for University members to take after a disaster occurs, such as forming a task force to respond to an

See FLU page A4

Professor participates in French art program

By Wes Kinter
Contributing Writer

Tulu Bayar, assistant professor of art and art history, participated in an Artists Residency Program at the CAMAC Centre d'Art in Marnay-sur-Seine, France during March and April.

Bayar applied to several grant programs while on sabbatical leave and was invited to CAMAC for a stay of two months. Bayar has attended Residency Programs in the United States before, but CAMAC was her first international program.

"It was an extremely valuable experience for me as an artist," Bayar said. "I was able to work with and learn from other talented artists from all over the world – from the U.K., Australia, France and even Kazakhstan."

The CAMAC Artists Residency Program looks to "bring together artists in mid or advanced career stages from all countries and all disciplines," according to www.camac.org. "The program aims to support residents in their creative explorations, investigations and professional growth within an environment of communication and exchange."

Bayar found this interaction and support to be an integral part of her residence in the program. She utilized the new perspectives around her to learn and shape her own ideas, allowing her to observe European culture and art first hand.

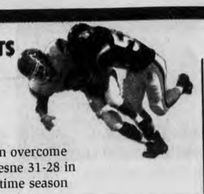
"The experience allowed me the opportunity to explore and to travel," Bayar said. "I was able to see Berlin and Brussels, meeting with many international curators and sharing my work."

Bayar's work with photography is not the typical kind of artwork one might expect. Working in a medium of Multimedia Design, Bayar combines sound,

See BAYAR page A2

INSIDE THIS ISSUE

SPORTS



Bison overcome Duquesne 31-28 in overtime season opener.

B1

NEWS

The Highland's Pub files for Chapter 13 bankruptcy in an attempt to stay open.

A2

OPINIONS

The Bucknellian editorial asks why students weren't better informed about Dean Ferraro's replacement.

A6

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

The University's Musical Theatre Club gears up for its November review, "Broadway Beats."

A9

Public Safety Log

Friday, September 1

INFORMATION RECEIVED—Snyder County: CLOSED: Snyder County Police looking for person who was involved in a strong armed robbery.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Galloway House: CLOSED: Unknown person(s) knocked over the mail box.

FIRE CODE VIOLATION—Kappa Delta Rho: CLOSED: Unknown person(s) discharged a fire extinguisher.

THEFT—Coleman Hall: OPEN: Employee reports a new table is missing from the 2nd floor.

PROPERTY—Christy Mathewson-Memorial Stadium: OPEN: Lewisburg resident turned in an iPod that was found at the stadium.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Newman House: CLOSED: Unknown person(s) damaged a spotlight and removed caution tape in front of the house.

LOST PROPERTY—Elaine Langone Center: OPEN: University Student lost wallet.

Saturday, September 2

FIRE ALARM—Chi Phi Fraternity: CLOSED: Fire alarm caused by burnt popcorn.

FIRE ALARM—The Mods: CLOSED: Fire alarm caused by burnt peppers.

THEFT—Coleman Hall: OPEN: Cell phone taken from 1st floor restroom.

VEHICLE ACCIDENT—7th Street Parking Lot: CLOSED: Shuttle bus driver damaged car. Officer obtained pertinent information.

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—Harris Hall: OPEN: Public Safety assisted with an underage student who became ill and was turned over to an RA.

Sunday, September 3

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—Sigma Chi Fraternity: OPEN: Student cited for public drunkenness

INFORMATION—Phi Psi Fraternity: OPEN: Individual threatened to damage vehicles after denied entrance into Phi Psi. Person was located and identified.

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION— Elaine Langone Center: OPEN: Two intoxicated individuals were loitering outside the Langone Center.

FIRE ALARM—The Mods: CLOSED: Fire alarm caused by burnt bacon. No one was in residence. Food was removed from stove and residence secured.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Langone Center: CLOSED: Unknown person(s) damaged a marquee sign outside of the Bison Snack Bar.

FIRE ALARM—The Mods: CLOSED: Fire Alarm caused by cooking.

Tuesday, September 5

THEFT— Chi Phi Fraternity: OPEN: Student reports his iPod is missing from his room.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Vedder Hall: OPEN: RA reports a foosball table was damaged in the basement lounge area.

Highlands Pub files for bankruptcy

By Michelle Laxer
News Editor

The owner of the Highlands Pub, located on 101 Market St., filed for Chapter 13 bankruptcy on Tuesday. The pub was scheduled to be sold the next day, but owner Mike Bishop cancelled the sheriff's sale in an attempt to keep his business.

"I'll do anything to keep the door open," Bishop said. "It's the only piece of real estate I still own."

He has owned the pub for six and a half years.

Bishop's financial troubles began three years ago when he and his business partner split. He began to owe money to numerous organizations, including the IRS. Bishop had to sell all the rental property he owned in Lewisburg to pay for the upkeep of the pub.

In addition to monetary problems, business itself began to suffer when Bishop's reputation was damaged when he was accused of indecent assault. He pleaded no contest to the charge, according to The Daily Item

On Aug. 15, Bishop was convicted on charges of hitting a pedestrian while driving on a suspended license, according to The Daily Item. The victim was Professor of English Michael Payne, who suffered from a broken finger, bruises and abrasions.

"Subsequent legal action against Mr. Bishop was taken by the local District Attorney, not by me," Payne said.

Bishop was sentenced to six months to one year in jail, fines and probation. Work release has enabled Bishop to keep the pub open during his jail sentence.

"The accident hurt business," Bishop said. The entire process cost him the $10,000 the pub made from graduation business that was supposed to help keep the pub running through the summer, he said.

"It was the first time I had money since the [partnership] split," Bishop said. He had plans to improve the bar and resolve financial issues.

"I went to zero at the worst time," Bishop said.

Chapter 13 bankruptcy will give Bishop three to five years to pay off his debts while still allowing him to keep all his business assets. In the meantime, Bishop is trying to draw in as much business as he can. He has a license to operate the pub as a hotel, and will try to rent out the three rooms above the bar.

Bishop has to rely on business from his clientele, residents of Lewisburg and University students, if he hopes to keep the bar.

"If they want the pub open, they have to support it," Bishop said.

In light of the recent events, the pub's regulars have been trying their best to help Bishop. "People are coming in wanting to make donations to save the pub," said Todd Brouse, who has been bartending at the pub for three years. "Regulars [were] concerned that [the pub] would change with a new owner."

Drawing business could be difficult, however, with Bishop's shaky past with the law and the town.

"People are upset from the past and they want me out," Bishop said. "It's small town politics."

Bishop hopes that advertising his quality sushi for lunch and wing nights two times a week will help draw in more revenue.

"The more people support the pub, the better it gets," Bishop said.

ACE serves up entertainment

By Chris Petersen
Contributing Writer

Whether you have been a member of the University community for a week or the past thee years, chances are you have encountered Activities and Campus Events (ACE) at least once.

ACE is responsible for selecting and planning activities on campus.

The ACE office is located on the third floor of the Elaine Langone Center in the Campus Activities & Programs (CAP) Center.

ACE is a student-run programming organization comprised of nine committees and an executive board, with each committee specializing in a different area of student life. The committees include S.C.o.R.E. (Sports, Competition or Recreation Entertainment), Films, Comedy, Uptown, Late Night, Trips, Special Events, Traditions and Bucknell University Generated stuff (BUGs).

"We plan on average seven events a weekend," said Caroline Patten '09, chair of the BUGs Committee. "We have a very big budget, and we are definitely not afraid to use it."

Whether it is a movie night, Bingo, Valentine's Day Dinner, trips to various cities, concerts, comedians or even Chrysalis, ACE is determined to give students plenty of options when it comes to weekend fun.

"ACE is everywhere," Laura Schilling '09 said. "They make it very hard for you not to be able to find something to do."

ACE has several regular events such as weekly movie nights, events at Uptown and performers at Late Night in the 7th Street Café.

They also plan larger events such as BU After Dark and Fall Fest. This year's theme for Fall Fest is "Bison Mania," and it will offer various carnival games, a survivor challenge and a concert performance from Jack's Mannequin. Fall Fest will take place at 2 p.m. Sept. 16 on the Sojka Lawn.

Chrysalis, the University's version of a high school senior prom, usually features a popular band or musician for entertainment. Last year, Chrysalis featured Kool and the Gang, the band responsible for the funk classics "Ladies Night" and "Jungle Boogie."

Any student, regardless of age or experience, can be involved in ACE in some way or another.

"ACE is a great student group to get involved with because you can be super involved in several committees or just involved a little bit," said Sara LaPorte, assistant director of CAP. "Plus, by being involved in ACE, students have a say in what performers and events come to their campus."

LaPorte is a co-adviser of ACE along with Carrie Ingoldsby.

ACE has a Colossal Meeting every other Tuesday at noon in Arches Lounge. Interested students are invited to come and see if ACE is something in which they may want to participate. The committees then meet once a week to plan the upcoming events and activities.

"Last week's meeting had over 250 people in attendance," Patten said. "Any student can come and how much you participate is entirely up to you."

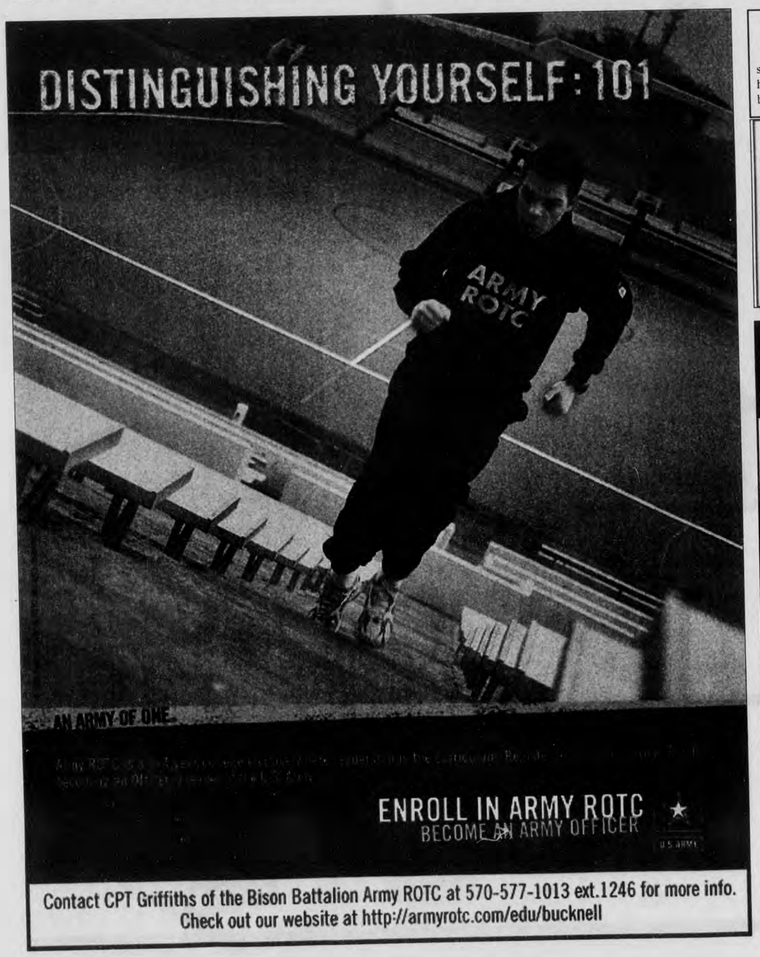
"You can be involved in one committee or all nine," said Christy Kobus '07, vice president of advertising for ACE. "It is great for students who are interested in advertising or students who want to meet and work with artists and performers."

The best way to find out what ACE is planning for the upcoming weekend is to look at the table tents set up in the Bison and the Bostwick Marketplace. Also, students can find "Bucknell Weekends" posters hung throughout campus which will inform them of weekend events.

So when the weekend rolls around, do not forget about ACE. They definitely never forget about the students.

Bucknelliian Correction

In the Sept. 1 issue, The Bucknellian's editorial incorrectly stated that students receiving citations from local police for alcohol infractions would on longer face additional sanctions imposed by the University.



DISTINGUISHING YOURSELF: 101
ARMY ROTC
AN ARMY OF ONE
ENROLL IN ARMY ROTC
BECOME AN ARMY OFFICER
U.S. ARMY
Contact CPT Griffiths of the Bison Battalion Army ROTC at 570-577-1013 ext.1246 for more info.
Check out our website at http://armyrotc.com/edu/bucknell

Need More Space?
LOFT BEDS
FUTONS
HIGH RISE BEDS
CollegeBedLofts.com

DOES YOUR CAR NEED SERVICED?
Our Service Department has $25,000 in new upgrades, including a new alignment rack, brake lathe, tire machine, and hundreds of hours of training for the techs. We now offer shuttle service to and from work or home. We have become a complete service center that can perform any work on any model, from an oil change to engine replacement.
Lewisburg Ford — Oil Change w/Multi-Point Inspection — $19.95 Exclude Diesels. Must present coupon at time of service. Expires 12/31/06
Lewisburg Ford — Oil Change/Tire Rotation w/Multi-Point Inspection — $34.95 Must present coupon at time of service. Expires 12/31/06
Lewisburg Ford
2265 Old Turnpike Rd. (Route 45 West)
Across From Brookpark Farm
Call Today! (570) 524-7267
Visit us on the web at www.lewisburgford.com

A creative residency

BAYAR From page A1

video, and photography into one piece.

"I started as a traditional photographer," Bayar said, "but my work evolved beyond that into performance based photography, using everything from digital imaging to ambience."

Bayar's pieces reflect the connection between everyday observations and social truths and consequences. Rather than stating an opinion or making a statement through her works, Bayar opens the door for the audience, allowing them to look at connections in a more meaningful way.

"I strive to explore the imaginative possibilities activated by chance encounters that carry contemporaneous issues specific to the human condition," Bayar said. "I intend to initiate a connection between my invented world and the viewer's actual world, embodying opposing truths."

Bayar's work was submitted as her portfolio to a multinational panel of artists that examined her pieces for the CAMAC Centre d'Art. While in residence there, Bayar worked on her newest project, "Addicted," a performance-based installation. She feels the European response to her work has been very encouraging.

"At the end of June, I went to England to attend conferences and met with more curators," Bayar said. "The response was still very positive and I am very glad; I look forward to new horizons."

The idea of artists and those interested in the arts communicating outside of the classroom is an idea not far removed from the University. The Arts Residential College houses first-year students with various interests in different areas of the arts.

"The Arts program is an excellent way of contributing to each other's strengths in different backgrounds," Aaron Meyers '10 said. "Regardless of what interest we have in the arts, there is always something to learn and explore from students with different perspectives than you."

Bayar looks forward to applying her experiences with CAMAC to her time at the University by encouraging students to see more international works.

"I have begun to integrate much of what I learned and observed into my lectures here at Bucknell," Bayar said. "I hope to inspire students to reflect on art's importance for both the individual and international audience."

All of Bayar's works can be found on her Web site, www.tulubayar.com.

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian
Amanda Sidman '08 celebrates during Welcome Weekend.

Students celebrate Greek life

GREEK From page A1

ters - even the ones I just met."

The different fraternities also spent Friday night bonding with new brothers.

Each fraternity took turns hosting the sororities during the tradition of Welcome Night Saturday. The sorority sisters visited each fraternity house in small groups.

The new members of the Greek system gave excellent reviews of the night.

"I loved spending time with my sisters on Welcome Night," said Jess Carney '09, a new member of Alpha Chi Omega sorority.

Lauren Perez '09 of Chi Omega sorority explained how wonderful the experience was.

"Welcome Night was a great way to hang out with and meet upperclassmen and to see who joined the other sororities," Perez said.

The weekend of bonding and celebration was preceded by a week of recruitment during which both potential members and current members worked diligently to help everyone find the correct place within the Greek system.

"We hope that in the end, everybody is happy and finds the fit they were looking for," said Karen Landis, assistant director of fraternity and sorority affairs.

Lindzen responds to Al Gore's documentary vapor that essentially expands the ice vertically, counteracting the horizontal loss.

GLOBAL From page A1

Referring to the recent controversies surrounding Hurricane Katrina, Lindzen said that there is no direct correlation between global warming and hurricanes.

"Somewhere in the world there is always an extreme event occurring," Lindzen said.

According to Lindzen, the reason why global warming has become such a partisan issue is because many organizations depend on climate hysteria to obtain both financial and popular support. Lindzen also suspects that words used by organizations such as the Intergovernmental Panel of Climate Change to describe probability are being manipulated to overstress the effects of global warming.

"Always worry when politicians and scientists say 'indisputable,'" Lindzen said.

BUCC President Dominic Rupprecht '07 said he hoped that inviting Lindzen to speak on campus would provide students with a balanced view of global warming.

"Global warming has become such a hot topic issue and [Lindzen] is one of the foremost experts in his field. We wanted someone with authority, a scientist, to speak about it in a thoughtful way and not just be dismissed as some right wing reactionary. The reason three hundred people showed up is because the issue is very much in the forefront of our culture. Our goal was to at least have the students come out of the lecture discussing the issue," Rupprecht said.

Many students who attended the lecture said they thought Lindzen's speech required more evidence.

"The speaker made a few good points and at least it wasn't the typical call to action. For that reason alone, I am glad that the BUCC invited him. I do wish though that he had framed his arguments more in relation to his own work and less as a criticism of Al Gore and those like him. A less antagonistic presentation would likely have lent his opinions more force and provided for the sort of debate which I was hoping for," Daylin Oakes '09 said.

Administration reworked to fit strategic plan

By Alexandra Campbell-Ferrari
Staff Writer

Many administrators have seen changes and expansions of their job descriptions, as the administration seeks to achieve the goals and initiatives outlined in the plan.

Mary DeCredico, as of July 2005, is the University's Provost, oversees academic and student programs, including tenure review and promotion recommendations to the president, faculty recruitment and hiring, the university curriculum and student affairs.

Dave Surgala, as vice president for finance and administration, oversees the management of the budget, endowment, and campus operations, such as facilities, human resources and public safety.

Kurt Thiede, the vice president for enrollment management and dean of admissions, oversees all of the University's student recruitment, enrollment selection and financial aid activities nationwide.

The position of vice president for development and alumni relations was filled by Sam Lundquist on September 1, 2006. His position is to oversee all university fundraising and work closely with the University's 47,000 living alumni as well as student's parents.

Charlie Pollock has become the vice president for external relations. The position was introduced this year in response to the expanding role the University can play in the local community and its increased opportunities to build strong relations with state and federal offices that can assist the University.

The Chief Communications Officer position, held by Pete Mackey, is a consolidation of a variety of positions previously held by several people. This consolidation is in response to the competitive nature of higher education that can be best handled when the University's communication efforts are clear and consistent. Lastly, the chief student affairs position has been changed to a non-VP position to compliment the recent merge of academic and student affairs. Such a move was to assist in the coordination of University student's education in and out of the classroom.

Eugenia Gerdes, dean emerita of the college of arts & sciences, is currently on sabbatical. She intends to return as a professor fall semester 2007. Chris Zappe is serving as the interim dean of arts and sciences. In addition, the search for a new Dean of Arts and Sciences has already been initiated.

Robert Midkiff, served last year as the associate dean of the college of arts and sciences and is currently the associate dean of academic affairs. Midkiff oversees curriculum, scheduling, space and the International Education department until the selection of a new International Education director. Midkiff is pursuing two large initiatives this year. The first is the search for an International Education director. He is chairing this search and hopes to hire someone by January 2007.

"It is crucial to have a Director of International Education. I want to get the best person we can, someone who will work well with me, students and faculty," said Midkiff.

Along with this search, Midkiff is looking to review and critique the department with the goals of the Strategic Plan in mind. The Strategic Plan seeks to increase the number of study abroad opportunities available to University students. There are currently 140 approved programs. Midkiff hopes to make modifications by asking questions such as, are these programs serving the needs of the students and are they academically challenging.

"We want to provide high quality academic experiences abroad," Midkiff said.

Midkiff wants to expand program opportunities to Africa, Japan and China.

"These are new areas of interest. We need to make sure we offer the best programs in these areas," Midkiff said.

His second initiative is to review the Common Learning Agenda (CLA).

"Curriculum review allows us to step back and talk amongst ourselves and with the students, faculty and staff to determine what is working well and what needs to be looked at and adjusted accordingly," Midkiff said.

The CLA was last reviewed during the 2001-2002 school year. There were 25 recommendations and Midkiff has spent the past five years putting these recommendations into effect.

"It's fun, but a lot of work," Midkiff said.

He emphasized that there will be numerous opportunities for student input.

Mackey also has several goals to achieve the vision of the Strategic Plan.

One is to "build a communications plan that strategically coordinates the University's key forms of communications to get across the great story of Bucknell as clearly and helpfully as possible to Bucknell's many audiences," Mackey said.

Another is "to hire a new director of media relations to serve as the liaison between the University and the media, including local and national outlets, to bring more of the expertise of the University to the attention of the media and further the reputation of our academic core," said Mackey.

Also, new to the staff is Director of Public Safety Jason Friedberg. The Department of Public Safety is, as of this year, no longer reporting to Student Affairs, but is rather under the direct control of the Vice President of Finance and Administration.

"This is a positive change for the Department. The Department now has a venue for which we can air our concerns on important issues," Friedberg said.

Friedberg plays four important roles. The first is as Director of Public Safety, he coordinates and deploys law enforcement officers appropriately to where students live. Second, he is involved in crisis management planning. Third, he manages life and fire safety. One example is the pre-party checks at the fraternity houses to ensure that no one will be hurt. Lastly, he is working with the integration of technology on campus. For example, he is currently looking into how to control access to buildings.

His main goal is to reinvest Public Safety in every part of student life.

"I want the officers to be recognized as both community members and enforcers of the law and in so doing put a different face on Public Safety. I want to break down the barrier between the students and Public Safety officers," Friedberg said.

Tom Cassidy will serve this year as the Associate Dean of Faculty. Elaine Garrett, Associate Dean of Arts and Sciences, Margaret Kastner, Assistant Dean of Arts and Sciences, and Karen Marosi, Associate Dean of Engineering, will continue to serve in these positions.

Behind many of these changes is the fact that the Strategic Plan went into action this year. The Strategic Plan was unanimously passed by the Board of Trustees in May 2006.

News Briefs

Irwin dies from a stingray wound

The popular Australian television show host and naturalist Steve Irwin, or "the Crocodile Hunter" as he is more commonly known, was killed on Monday by a stingray.

Irwin was filming for a children's show off the Great Barrier Reef when the stingray pierced his heart with its 20 cm venom-coated barb.

Irwin died almost instantaneously after being pulled out of the water by his camera and crewman. Doctors aboard his research vessel, Croc One, were unable to resuscitate him.

Irwin's first television series, "The Crocodile Hunter," debuted on Australian TV in 1992 and was broadcast in 122 countries by 1999. Irwin's enthusiastic and hyperactive personality, along with his audacious stunts, captivated over 200 million people worldwide.

Irwin is survived by his wife, Terri, and two children.

Director of NIMH killed by patient

Vitali A. Davydov, 19, was charged with first degree murder on Monday for the killing of Wayne S. Fenton, a Bethesda, Md. psychiatrist who served as associate director of the National Institute of Mental Health (NIMH).

Davydov told Montgomery County detectives that he killed Fenton with his fists during an appointment Sunday in which they were discussing his treatment for schizophrenia.

According to The Washington Post, the 4 p.m. appointment was arranged in haste. Davydov told his father he needed to speak with Fenton regarding his medications. "According to the suspect's father, discussions with the suspect about his need to take his medications caused an angry reaction from the suspect," Montgomery County Detective Patrick J. McNerney said.

"[Davydov had] a volatile temper that worsened during his last couple years in high school," said Feddy Garcia, a former schoolmate of Davydov, according to The Washington Post.

Davydov was not a regular patient of Fenton's. Fenton had a private practice in Bethesda where he treated severely mentally ill patients on weekends. He was also responsible for developing research programs at NIMH that helped schizophrenics with day-to-day life.

Giant Panda gives birth in Atlanta

The Zoo Atlanta in Atlanta, Ga. announced the birth of a giant panda cub to their resident mother panda, Lun Lun. She gave birth to the cub on Wednesday. According to the zoo, this is only the fifth giant panda cub born in the United States since 1990. There are approximately only 1600 giant pandas living in the wild and another 185 in captivity, reports CNN.com. Zoo Atlanta hopes that the "new cub would increase the genetic variability in the captive population," and allow for more research concerning giant panda maternal behavior. Lun Lun came to Zoo Atlanta in November 1999.

Blair to resign within a year

Prime Minister Tony Blair has decided to resign his post within the next 12 months, reported the Washington Post. Blair, the second-longest serving British leader since the 19th century, struggled with intense pressure and a political rebellion that included the resignation of eight of his junior members. "They and other former loyalists demanded that Blair set a date for his departure or step down now," reports the Post. Blair's popularity declined due to his involvement with the war in Iraq and his close alliance with President George Bush. Approximately 40 British Muslims left the Labor Party to protest Blair's support of Israel in its military campaign against Lebanon. Speculations have been made about Blair's exact departure, ranging anywhere from Sept. 2007 to next summer. His successor most likely will be Chancellor Gordon Brown, reports the Post.

NASA delays launch of Atlantis

NASA had to postpone the launch of shuttle Atlantis again due to an electrical short in a motor that is 30 years old. According to the Washington Post, the launch could take place today if the agency determines the cause of the short is not serious. If NASA does not go through with a launch today, they will have to wait until late October or choose to relax rules regarding daylight launches which were instated after the Colombia disaster. "Shuttles have to be launched in daylight so that the big external fuel tank can be photographed for evidence of any broken-off pieces of foam of the sort that doomed Columbia," said a NASA official. This is the third delay for Atlantis. Last month the launch was postponed due to a lightning strike to the launch pad and the approach of Tropical Storm Ernesto.

Christ's Lutheran Church
100 So. 3rd St.
Lewisburg

(Only 3 Blocks From Campus)
570-524-0745
christchurch@dejazzd.com
http://home.dejazzd.com/christchurch
Sunday Schedule
8:00 AM Worship (Communion on the 1st & 3rd weeks)
9:15AM Education
10:30 AM Holy Communion - weekly
(4:00 PM) 1st Sunday of month - Quiet Communion
Our chapel is open 24/7 for meditation
Coming Fall 2006!
40 Days of Purpose

Find out – "What on earth am I here for?"
Bucknell Students Welcome!

All about the Avian flu

Bird Flu Q & A

What is a pandemic?

A pandemic is a global outbreak of a disease or illness. Most people have little immunity to the sickness, causing it to spread quickly throughout the world. Currently, the global community is worried by avian flu.

What is the avian flu?

The avian flu is a strand of the influenza virus, also known in the media and scientific community as H5N1, which is carried in the intestines of both wild and domestic birds. Chickens are the most common carrier of H5N1 and have been known to transfer the virus to humans who have had contact with chicken feces.

Though rare, there are documented cases of human-to-human infection. Scientists are concerned that the flu virus will mutate and then spread quickly throughout the world. People will not have built up immunity to the new mutation and will be very susceptible to the avian flu.

Where are the outbreaks of avian flu?

Most of the countries that have discovered diseased poultry are in Asia. These countries include Japan, Vietnam, Thailand, Cambodia, the Republic of Korea, Laos People's Republic, China, Malaysia, Kazakhstan, Mongolia and Indonesia. There have also been cases in Russia, Turkey and Romania.

Where have humans contracted the avian flu?

There have been four countries with confirmed human cases: Cambodia, Thailand, Vietnam and Indonesia. The avian flu thus far has a 57% mortality rate, compared to 10% for SARS.

Has there ever been a pandemic before?

In the last century there were three pandemics: one in 1918, one in 1957 and one in 1968. The most deadly pandemic was in 1918, when over 50 million people were killed by what is known as the Spanish Flu. The other two pandemics were not as deadly, killing 2 million and 1 million, respectively. Pandemics are events that most likely will happen again in the future.

What should I do to protect myself from illness?

The best way to stay healthy is to practice "good hygiene that your grandmother taught you," Stechschulte said. He recommends that students wash their hands often and avoid touching their eyes and nose with unclean hands since illnesses like the avian flu are spread through the mucus linings of the body. A small bottle of hand sanitizer is a great investment. Cover your mouth with your arm if you need to cough so you do not contaminate your hands. Good hygiene practices will help minimize the risk of infection.

Where can I find more information on pandemics, the avian flu and good hygiene practice?

The World Health Organization
www.who.org
The U.S. Department of Health and Services' Pandemic information page www.pandemicflu.gov
The University Avian Flu Preparedness Web site
www.bucknell.edu/Campus_Life/Health_and_Safety/Avian_Flu.html

The avian flu is extremely contagious among domestic birds, such as chickens and ducks. Reuters Photo Archive

Fast Flu Facts

Names:
H5N1, Bird Influenza, Avian Influenza

Symptoms:
Cough
Fever
Sore Throat
Muscle Aches
Eye Infections
Pneumonia
Severe respiratory diseases

Human cases: 241
Deaths due to bird flu: 141

FLU From page A1

incident. The Core Planning Group then ran a practice drill to test the emergency system.

According to Stechschulte the University has always had basic emergency plans for situations like a bomb threat or a flood, but now they have been expanded to include the avian flu.

Stechschulte is optimistic about the results of the Core Planning Group.

"The [Incident Command Training] was a real eye opener...there is a real sense of spirite du corp," Stechschulte said. "This is something people are genuinely interested and preparing for.

Even though a pandemic may never occur, the University is still taking precautions."

Charles Pollock '70, vice president of external affairs, also commented on the plan.

"The Katrina experience of Gulf Coast colleges and universities illustrates how catastrophes can interrupt students' educations, as well as faculty and staff lives," Pollock said. "By having a good response plan and being prepared, Bucknell maximizes its prospects of making good and timely decisions should a crisis impact us, and thereby minimizes the impact on campus life and students, faculty and staff."

One of the precautions that the University is taking is to inform the campus community about avian flu. A Web site has been created that lists details about pandemics, possible symptoms of the flu and good hygiene practices that are useful in preventing the spread of illnesses. The University will also circulate information via e-mail.

"We will shortly begin providing information about avian flu to the campus community and beyond, so that we can help educate Bucknell students, faculty, staff, parents and others about what avian flu is and, should it emerge, steps they can take to protect themselves, prevent or limit its spread and help one another," Pollock said.

The University is one of many institutions that is preparing for a possible pandemic.

"Many [universities] are concerned about foreign exchange students who go home at the holidays and then return to the campus," said Karen Avery of Marsh Risk Consulting. "They are worried about their ability to identify those who are infected and to contain the problem. Another concern is the student population. Most do not know from a hygiene perspective what to do to protect themselves."

Student Health Services is beginning to stockpile "a little bit of a lot of supplies," Stechschulte said. The University will also invest in a negative pressure room - an examination room in which air moves germs out of the building away from the infected person - for the Student Health Services building.

A long-term closure of the University could spell disaster for the future of the institution.

"Most universities, particularly private institutions, cannot survive a long term closure (two or more semesters) so they are investing in technology to aid in remote learning," Avery said. "Online classes or video teleconferencing will be used to bring people together in virtual classrooms."

The administration is aware of the possibility of a long-term closure.

"What would happen to the University?" Stechschulte said.

Mackey seems confident in the University's precautions.

"The University takes very seriously its responsibility to manage any situation that could impact its educational mission or the well being of students, faculty and staff," Mackey said.

Joseph Carroll Salon
Hair Care for the Entire Family

Stop in before September 30 to enter into a raffle to win a free instant hot lather machine or basket of hair care products!
No purchase or service necessary.

431 Market Street, Lewisburg
524-0790
Open Tuesday-Saturday
We accept Walk-Ins when time permits.

Red Smoked BBQ!
Beef Brisket, Pork, Chicken, Ribs!
Sandwiches, Wraps, Salads, Platters!
NO RESERVATIONS NEEDED!
Call in for TAKEOUT!
SKEETER'S PIT BBQ
ON THE BLUFF
OVERLOOKING THE SCENIC SUSQUEHANNA RIVER
AT THE INTERSECTION OF ROUTES 11 & 15
SHAMOKIN DAM
570.743.2727
Daily 11:00am - 10:00pm
Sundays till 9:00pm
www.SkeetersBBQ.com

Igniting Creative Ideas
On Fire Promotions
by trautman associates, inc.
promotional products · fundraising items
embroidered & screenprinted caps & apparel
awards · trophies · business gifts
800-538-8009
Lewisburg Showroom 434 Market 570-522-8009
www.tapromoproducts.com

www.onfirepromotions.com
Bring in this ad for one FREE SCREEN!!!
GOOD ON ANY APPAREL ORDER
(minimum 36 pieces)

Summer Breeze Stables
Est. 1973

10 minutes from Campus
Riding Lessons for all levels
Certified Professional Trainer
Large indoor and Outdoor Arenas
Boarding, Training and Showing
Call 570-412-0771 for an appointment

THE Bucknellian

A subscription is just the prescription you need.

Enclose this form and a check (made out to The Bucknellian) and mail it to:

The Bucknellian, Bucknell University C3952, 701 Moore Avenue, Lewisburg, PA 17837

Name _____
Address _____
_____
Phone _____
E-mail _____

__ ONE YEAR: receive 24 issues each week for the academic year for only $45, a $15 savings!

__ ONE SEMESTER: receive 12 issues during the fall or spring semester for $30. Please specify semester: _____

For more information contact The Bucknellian at 570-577-1520 or bucknellian@bucknell.edu

The Bucknellian
Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue

Volume 138, Number 2
C-3952 Bucknell University
Lewisburg, Pa. 17837
(570) 577-1520
bucknellian@bucknell.edu
http://www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Editor-in-Chief
Catherine Heverling '07

Associate Editor of Content
Jamie Jacobson '08

Associate Editor of Layout
Rina Van Orden '08

Senior Editor
Drew Larson '08

News Editors
Evan Unger '09
Nilanjana Saha '09
Michelle Laxer '09

Opinions Editors
Hallie Stebbins '08
Michael Dippery '08

Sports Editors
Matthew Saylor '08
Barbara Perlman '09
Brian Mulligan '08

Features Editors
Julia Fuchs '09

Arts & Entertainment Editors
Kimberly Kane '08
Lily Beauvilliers '09

Photography Editors
Ryan Winn '08
Ellyn Ercolano '09

Chief Copy Editors
Kathleen Conti '08
Greg Hamilton '08

Business Manager
Jared Napolitano '08

Advertising Managers
Meredith Reighard '07
Kat Wallis '07
Katie Casteel '08
Emily Senko '08

Cartoonist
Juliana Su '09

Adviser
James F. Lee

Op-Ed Policy

The editorials of The Bucknellian reflect the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the editor-in-chief. All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

Letters to the editor must be received by noon on the Tuesday before publication. Letters may not be longer than 600 words and the Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny or edit any letter to the editor. Letters must contain the writer's name and phone number (used for verification purposes and not to be printed). Mail or e-mail letters using the addresses above.

Publishing Information

The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester entirely by Bucknell students. All published material is chosen by the paper's Editorial Board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its adviser, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

Subscription Information

Subscriptions are available for $45 per year or $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian Subscriptions, Bucknell University, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, Pa. 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

Members of the local community may pick up a complimentary issue each week, with the understanding of one free issue per person. If you would like more for a nominal fee, contact the print office.

Advertising Policy

The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements if deemed offensive, illegal or in bad taste. Advertisements reflect the opinion of the advertiser and not necessarily that of The Bucknellian. For advertising rates and information, please contact the advertising department at (570) 577- 1085. Copyright © 2006 The Bucknellian

The Bucknellian Editorial

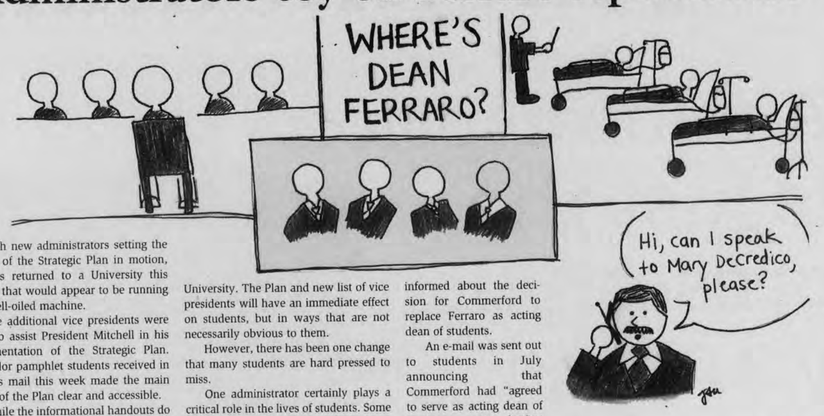
Administrators coy on Ferraro replacement



With new administrators setting the wheels of the Strategic Plan in motion, students returned to a University this August that would appear to be running as a well-oiled machine.

The additional vice presidents were hired to assist President Mitchell in his implementation of the Strategic Plan. The color pamphlet students received in campus mail this week made the main points of the Plan clear and accessible.

While the informational handouts do outline what is likely to be the University's future, students were not hesitant to slip their pamphlets into the blue slots of the mail room's recycling bins.

It is not that students simply don't care about the future of the University, but rather the simple fact that if something doesn't directly apply to them, little concern is shown.

What students are concerned with is the current state of affairs at the University. The Plan and new list of vice presidents will have an immediate effect on students, but in ways that are not necessarily obvious to them.

However, there has been one change that many students are hard pressed to miss.

One administrator certainly plays a critical role in the lives of students. Some of you may know him as the dean of students or others simply as Dean Ferraro. Now, Dean Gerald Commerford fills this crucial position.

When students left campus in the spring, long-time advocate to students Richard Ferraro had been holding the position. Ferraro is a man who on many occasions sat at the bedside of hospitalized students or attended events to which students invited him. The campus community should have been better informed about the decision for Commerford to replace Ferraro as acting dean of students.

An e-mail was sent out to students in July announcing that Commerford had "agreed to serve as acting dean of students until further notice," although little else is known. The decision to replace Ferraro is one that will have a great impact on students' daily lives, yet no details have been shared, no explanations have been given and no glossy pamphlets have been printed as of yet.

It is not unreasonable for students to raise eyebrows when they are told that Ferraro is still an employee of the University yet is no longer listed in the directory and cannot be otherwise reached.

While we realize the importance of improving the University's image, we do not think that students should be left behind as the Strategic Plan pushes forward.

As the administration looks forward to a richer future, we ask that they do not forget that students deserve to be sufficiently informed about the present.

Library falls short in its role as a place of quiet contemplation

Students need to remember the library's place as a center of learning at the University

By Michael Dippery
Opinions Editor

Sunday afternoon I realized I was a bit behind on my homework, so being a good, studious intellectual, I decided to go to the library to do some work. Some might be inclined to ask "Why?" since I live in a split double and thus have my own space.

The answer is simple: I live in a college guy's dorm room, meaning I have a computer, an Xbox, a PlayStation, a TV, a bass guitar, a skateboard and numerous other electronic and mechanical gizmos that could, if need be, keep me occupied for hours on end. None of the them are study paraphernalia.

I had a wide array of homework to do: chemistry and computer science reading, along with calculus and linear algebra problems, which meant that I needed both a hard writing surface and a comfortable chair. Naturally I chose to do my work in my favorite spot at the rear of lower level one of the library. Luckily the place was empty and I found exactly what I needed: a firm but padded chair coupled with a low, hard cube. Thus I had a surface for writing, which doubled as a handy footstool when I wanted to read. I settled in comfortably and cracked open my computer architecture textbook.

I got about three paragraphs into my reading when I heard some girl chattering away on lower level two. Those familiar with the library know that the rear of the lower levels is a fascinating example of architecture: a glass-enclosed area that opens all the way to the lowest level. It's beautiful, but has one drawback: because lower level one opens into two, sound travels easily between the levels.

Too easily, I quickly realized. The girl was speaking loudly enough to be heard from my perch, as though she were on the same level. The pauses in her conversation were frequent enough that I thought I could get back to my reading, but short enough (and irregular enough) that I could never concentrate for more than a few seconds at a time.

At first I thought she simply had not gotten into Pi Phi or Chi O, but her crisis seemed to be much more important: she wasn't fitting in well at school.

> Why does a library need quiet study areas? Maybe I am mistaken, but I thought the entire place was supposed to be quiet.

It was a really sad story, and in retrospect maybe she just needed a big hug, but at the time I just wanted her to shut up. After about fifteen minutes of this, I finally peered over the edge of the railing. She was on her cell phone, for God's sake. On lower level two. In the library.

This situation highlights an important problem with the University library: except at the wee hours of the morning, it is not an acceptable place for quiet study.

I am told there are quiet study areas in the library, but I'll be damned if I can find them anywhere. And besides, why does a library need quiet study areas? Maybe I am mistaken, but I thought the entire place was supposed to be quiet.

As I stalked angrily back to my room, I thought of a few key areas in which the library resources could be improved for students who are paying $42,000 a year to come here and actually learn:

Make the entire library a quiet study area.

The whole library should be designed a quiet area, save for perhaps the main level (although I would be content with making that quiet, too). I am pretty sure this "fact" is advertised by the University's tour guides, but like a lot of information given in the tours, it is a bald-faced lie. Silence, even in the alleged quiet areas, is not enforced.

If you are there with a group, use the group study areas—but keep it down. There is no need to shout even if you are in a supposedly soundproof room.

If all of the group study areas are gone, go to the 7th Street Café or your dormitory lounge. The library is not a common area. It is a library, not a café, which brings me to my next point:

Get the café out of the library.

Once upon a time, students could not get coffee at the library. So no one went there to have coffee and chat. People went there to read textbooks. And that is how it should be. Need a "coffee fix"? We have places called The Bison and the 7th Street Café. Their atmospheres are much better geared for coffee drinking and pseudo-intellectual conversation.

Better yet, stop drinking caffeine. Your body will thank you. I'm an insomniac who sleeps at most six hours a night, and I survive just fine without caffeine.

Restrict cell phone use.

When I go the library, I turn my cell phone off, or on vibrate, and I do not answer it if it rings. Everyone using the library should do the same thing, and the rules should be enforced.

Maybe even post a bunch of signs so instead of asking people to hang up, I can just point to a sign on the wall. Everywhere in the library should be cell phone-free, even the main level.

Here is a piece of trivia: Every cell phone plan I know of comes with a voicemail option. Voicemail is used so people can leave you a message if you cannot use your phone at the moment. Learn to use the voicemail.

If you have an "important phone call," then go outside, or go back to your dorm room. I do not want to hear about your one-night stand or how Mark doesn't return any of your phone calls anymore. I do want to hear how an instruction set is implemented on 32-bit MIPS processors.

Enforce the rules.

It is no good in making a rule if it is not enforced. I know it should not be the job of the librarians to tell people to shut up, but unfortunately, it is often necessary. No need to be the old spinster librarian: a friendly "Please keep it down" or "Please do not use your cell phone" would suffice.

If all else fails, I propose that the Bertrand Library be renamed the Bertrand Monastery. Under this system, every student would be assigned a cubicle in which to work, and no one would be allowed to talk to anyone. Then maybe those of us who are here to study and learn could actually find a quiet place to work.

"Too often we enjoy the comfort of opinion without the discomfort of thought." – John F. Kennedy

Write for Ops.

Email hstebbin@

New Facebook features put the stalker back in 'Stalkernet'

News feeds keep finger on the pulse of your friends' every moves

By Hallie Stebbins
Opinions Editor

I am absolutely thrilled with the new Facebook! Who would have thought I would have a new tool with which to stalk absolutely everyone I have ever met?

Who could have guessed that I would care when my best buddy from elementary school "friended" my middle school best buddy's dog?

This lovely new aspect of a once borderline psychotic Web site has now entered a completely new realm of creepiness.

For the present poor, deprived seniors who pre-date the emergence of Facebook.com, can you even recollect a time when you had to actually call people to get in touch with them?

Now, not only can you stay in touch with those acquaintances not important enough to call, but you will be the first to know when their hearts are broken. The icon that pairs the statement "Jack is no longer in a relationship" is a cute little broken heart.

Well, that is all well and good, but what if Jack's heart is not broken at all? What if he ended his "it's complicated" relationship while singing a happy tune? I have just been mislead by my premier stalking tool.

> Now, not only can you say in touch with those acquaintances not important enough to call, but you will be the first to know when their hearts are broken.

The very useful birthday reminders have morphed into minute-by-minute updates on who is showering, who is hungry and who has just joined the Facebook group "I hate the new Facebook! Change it back!" (There are quite a few members in this one, by the way; I think the count is north of 6,000).

Wait. A few seconds ago, Lauren Luchsinger '08 and Jason Bush '07 got engaged. When's the big day, you two? And congratulations, by the way.

Aha! I see that at 8:45 a.m. my co-editor, Michael Dippery '08, added Rage Against the Machine to his favorite music. Excellent choice, Michael.

Stalking is great; I think most of us admit to using Facebook as a means of procrastination, albeit very creepy procrastination. It is enjoyable for us. With the single click of a mouse I can find out what my "friends" have been doing for the past few hours.

However, now I cannot choose who to stalk and who to ignore. I am forced, upon the initiation of the Web site, to see what 149 of my closest classmates have been eating, what they have been watching, their present blood-alcohol content level and with whom they are mistakenly hooking up at this exact moment. Oh, wait, those last couple of features have not been added—as of today, anyway.

There is another problem with the new Facebook: many students agree that their favorite pastime, stalking, is no longer as fun. Now, there is not as much to do. All the information they used to relish digging up is now readily available.

What does that leave students with? A whole lot of time and nothing but schoolwork with which to fill it.

Do yourselves a favor. Join one of the many Facebook groups opposing this obnoxious waste of technology, or just stop using it all together.

NO ONE needs to know that much about another human being, and no one needs to know that much about YOU, either. Trust me: we do not care.

Assassination of president in new British film grossly inappropriate

In their abuse of the freedom of speech, filmmakers step over the line

By Christy Totten
Staff Writer

The liberties afforded to the citizens of this country are part of what makes it great. One cannot help but wonder at what point freedom of speech stops being a facilitator of democracy and turns into a sign of disrespect.

The best, most recent example of this is a new British film set to air soon called "Death of a President."

In this film, written and directed by filmmaker Gabriel Range, and set in October 2007, U.S. President George W. Bush is assassinated after giving a talk in Chicago.

"It's a striking premise which may be seen as highly controversial," Range said, according to www.cnn.com. "But it is a serious film which I hope will open up the debate on where current United States foreign and domestic policies are taking us."

The film indeed offers a striking premise and a serious one at that, but also one that flirts with being inappropriate in subject matter.

U.S. citizens have seen four presidents assassinated while in office (Lincoln, Garfield, McKinley and Kennedy), and for this reason Range's new film "Death of a President" is insensitive.

I understand that he wants people to think about the effects of the War on Terror, but there are other ways to go about it.

During the assassination scene, Range uses digital wizardry to project the face of Bush onto an actor.

Range knows that in using the current U.S. president as the target, it will produce a greater sensational effect.

The idea, as articulated by a spokesman for the movie, is to use the aftermath of the assassination as a lens for better understanding how the United States has been affected by the War on Terror.

This is obviously essential for U.S. citizens to think about, but there are plenty of other ways for film directors such as Gabriel Range to facilitate this type of thinking.

This is not Range's first controversial movie. One other in particular titled "The Day Britain Stopped" (2003) is a realistic film about a major transportation disaster set in future Great Britain.

It is considered realistic because Britain does indeed have problems with overcrowding on public streets. Transportation workers often strike on the premise of safety.

This is another example of a film written by Range to play with the minds and fears of those who view it.

Obviously, this is part of what those who work in the arts strive to do.

We are supposed to leave the cinema, art gallery or theatre with new thoughts and questions to consider.

I cannot help but think that Gabriel Range has gone too far with his new drama "Death of a President."

There comes a point when freedoms afforded in this country compromise our feeling of safety.

California takes lead in state regulation of carbon dioxide emissions

Federal government takes backseat to California in emission regulation

By Michael Gibney
Staff Writer

It is a widely known fact that the United States holds the highest rate of carbon dioxide emissions in the world; in fact, if California was its own country, it would rank in the top dozen emitters in the world.

One cause of this environmental travesty is the reluctance of the federal government to impose strong regulations concerning the greenhouse gas. In the past few weeks, global warming has finally become a genuine and widespread alarm.

California, increasing its role as a leader with regards to the response to environmental concerns, has flexed its green muscles with the passing of a new bill that calls for the reduction of carbon dioxide emissions by 25 percent before 2020.

This is a lofty goal and one of the greatest strides taken by a state government regarding concerns over global climate change. It is a substantial milestone that marks the country's realization of its role as a world-leading polluter and of its responsibility to clean up its act.

President George W. Bush and his administration have made it clear that they do not believe these environmental issues to be a cause for concern at this time.

Business is doing well and further regulations would (according to the administration) hinder progress, sending the president's approval rating even lower.

The "bottom-up" control exhibited by California has already caught on with states in the northeast and has the potential to force a nationwide recognition by setting the standard for emission management.

> The effects of global climate change are not as noticeable as the deaths from missing seat belts. Yet a decrease in the emissions of carbon dioxide is becoming more and more crucial as we realize the growing potential for environmental degradation.

One argument against the new regulations is that they will cause industries to leave California in search for laws more suitable to their waste-generating practices.

California will not be alone in battling against apathy for long. With some states already drafting their own emissions control mechanisms, it will not be long before the remaining state governments will find they have no option but to keep up with the changing political attitude.

Industries not willing to comply with California's more stringent laws will soon find themselves with nowhere to run.

Among the industries upset over the new law is, with little surprise, the automobile industry. As with their battles in the past against seatbelts, airbags and unleaded gas, automobile companies have shown their concern for safety and environmental issues is quite limited.

In short, these regulations are costly for the polluting industries, which are willing to fight against them despite public concerns.

Imagine if automobile companies won the war against seatbelts in order to lower the cost of installing them in your car.

The effects of global climate change are not as noticeable as the deaths from missing seat belts. Yet a decrease in the emissions of carbon dioxide is becoming more and more crucial as we realize the growing potential for environmental degradation.

While these state regulations have the potential to inspire a nationwide movement toward a healthier environment, some action must be taken by the federal government to make these ideas a reality.

Economically, a state that applies more rigorous control of emissions is at a temporary loss—an effect quickly remedied by federal action.

With California taking the first step, progress toward national emissions regulations are sure to follow.

My Favorite Mistake

Stop and smell the roses before the juggernaut crushes them

By Michael Dippery
Opinions Editor

Like most students, I'm up to my neck in work, and it's only the first week of classes. I've made a resolution to be more studious this year, so last night I decided that I'd buckle down and complete—and maybe even get ahead on— my work. First priority: calculus. I packed up my materials and headed to the library.

Naturally I got sidetracked on the way there. My friend PJ's door was open, so I stepped inside to say "hi."

What started as a simple "hello" turned into a long rant. It basically started with Sir Isaac Newton. I'm a big fan of Newton. It has occurred to me that Newton was probably so brilliant because he had plenty of time to just think.

Newton didn't have to worry about getting up at 7:30 a.m. in time for class at 8. He didn't have to worry about résumé building. His life didn't revolve around an inflexible schedule.

Most importantly, he did not have to worry about arbitrary quantitative figures that "measured" his success. Newton learned by doing. His "professors" were more mentors than instructors. This is similar to how Socrates taught his students, too.

A more immediate example might be Yoda. Yoda did not grade Luke Skywalker or give him tests. He just taught him and helped Luke discover the Force on his own. And when he felt Luke was ready, he told him to go confront Vader. He did not even tell Luke how exactly to do it; Luke had to find out on his own. The method must work: Luke did become one of the galaxy's greatest Jedi Masters.

> Yoda did not grade Luke Skywalker or give him tests. He just taught him and helped Luke discover the Force on his own.

Furthermore, Luke was free to pursue his own goals, such as trying to save his friends from Vader's ambush on Cloud City. I can only imagine all the paperwork I would have to fill out if I needed to leave the University to thaw my best friend from a block of carbonite.

But we cannot teach like that anymore. Society is simply too complex. There are over 3000 undergraduates on campus—and ours is a small school. The University simply has no time to qualitatively determine a student's success.

A mentor cannot work personally with each student to determine whether he is ready for the big, bad world. So the University assigns numbers instead, and applies a checkbox to each graduate.

Did the student complete the required number of credits? Did the student complete a Natural and Fabricated Worlds course? Did the student meet his writing requirements? Sure, the system works, but not very well.

Much of this is driven by the requirements of our culture. Going to college is almost a requirement now. Unfortunately, a real passion for learning is not a necessity for entry into college. Oh, sure, the admissions people undoubtedly look for applicants with a real zest for knowledge, but how many students at the University really have a true burning passion for what they study?

I used to have more of a passion. In middle school and high school, I was driven to learn. But it seems the higher you climb on the educational ladder, the less fun it becomes.

Learning is so wrapped around deadlines and grades (two more numerical calculations of a student's "success") that the pursuit of knowledge is more of a stressor than a fun time. It seems a better system would encourage students to learn in a semi-autonomous manner, like in the old days.

And what happens when I graduate? I enter society so I can end up working at some company, turning out products for people to buy. In turn, I make money. I use that money to buy more things.

That fuels the economy. I don't really think about it, because at the end of the day, I'm too tired to think; I just want to watch TV. I want to absorb mass media—which seems to be part of the problem.

We live in a society driven by mass media. The instructions for the operation of society have become informational viruses of sorts. These viruses spread from person to person, host to host, and infect all of us—and we don't even have time to stop and think about it.

Society seemed a lot simpler before the combination of mass media and capitalism took a stranglehold on the United States. I suppose this happened with the advent of the radio, the first true form of mass media.

Sure, capitalism was around before that—Marx had a problem with it way back in the late 19th century. And newspapers were around before radio. But not everyone could get their hands on a newspaper, and not everyone could read them anyway. So capitalism and mass media were not yet integrated until radio became popular.

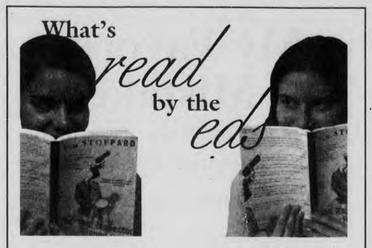
I cannot help but feel like another cog in the machine of society. When adults ask me what I'm studying at the University, and I respond that I am a computer science student. The inquirer invariably remarks, "Oh, someday you should make a lot of money doing that." But I'm not here to make a lot of money.

Sure, I would like to live comfortably, but I am not concerned with immense wealth. I study computer science because I enjoy it. And that passion is the key to stopping the seemingly unstoppable juggernaut of our capitalist, mass media-driven culture. That passion is the key to giving meaning to what sometimes seems to be a meaningless existence.

So some might say my "mistake" was not doing my calculus homework, and thus getting a bit behind on my work. But if it made me consider my position in the world, maybe it was not such a mistake at all.

We should all do ourselves a favor by stepping back from our studies and considering what is really important in life. I hope we are not all here just to "make a lot of money"—to be a part of the vehicle of society. Life's too short for that.

The goodness of life is not entirely quantitative, and we should not forget the qualitative elements. We should not lose our passion, because when we lose our passion, we lose the key to the meaning of our existence.

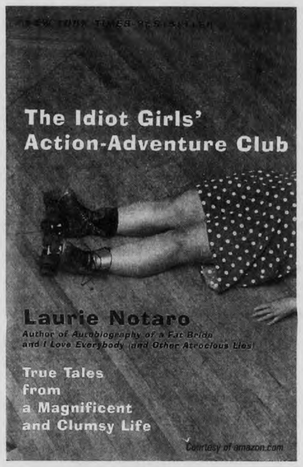


'The Idiot Girls' Action-Adventure Club'
By Laurie Notaro

By Lily Beauvilliers
Arts & Entertainment Editor

❖ Book Review

When "The Idiot Girls' Action-Adventure Club" came out in July 2002, Laurie Notaro had been attempting to publish her collection of humorous non-fiction anecdotes for nearly 10 years. Although neither "Idiot Girls'" nor Notaro's two subsequent books "Autobiography of a Fat Bride" and "I Love Everybody (and Other Atrocious Lies)" have been smash hits, Notaro's accounts of awkward dates, college parties, crazy family encounters and the pangs of growing up are both hilarious and familiar to idiot girls (and boys) everywhere.



Courtesy of amazon.com

"Idiot Girls'" opens with a tale about Notaro's friend, Nikki, who undergoes that quotidian worry – losing her keys. In three pages, we are given no resolution to the Nikki-key dilemma, but plenty of insight into proper "feminine hygiene product" disposal. A lackluster beginning, but the book picks up speed later.

Each of Notaro's anecdotes tend to connect to each other in some way. The same characters or plotlines keep reappearing, like when Nikki loses another set of keys. A general theme links them all together as well; they all involve Notaro herself doing something ridiculously dumb. As the president of the club that gives the novel its name, one could expect nothing less from her.

Notaro's style is very off-the-cuff. "Okay, this is what happened," she begins one tale, entitled "The Night They Drove Ole Laurie Down." In it, Notaro details her attempt to solicit alcohol from male bar patrons at a birthday party. Her ceaseless flirting with a friend, John, elicits the response, "You must be drunk. You're trying to be a girl."

Despite an evening of sobriety, Notaro gets pulled over by the police and is issued a field sobriety test, which she fails, although she gets out with a warning.

"I realized then that I was lucky that I had absolutely no sex appeal whatsoever," Notaro says. "If I had, I, without a doubt, would have been drunk, cuffed, and on my way to a new life and new job in the prison laundry."

Although much of Notaro's witticism stems from drunken parties and scuzzy boyfriends, she has a few more general pearls of wisdom to share with the world. Bathrooms, a theme often addressed in comedy, (think: the urinal game on flasharcade.com) are given extensive treatment in "This is a Public Service Announcement." Notaro outlines several public restroom user personality types, which include "the Trespasser," who fails to respect the "'One-Stall Cushion' rule," and "the Primper," who spends so much time doing her makeup that another type, "the Waiter," may just be forced to pee in front of others. Notaro concludes with a threat for all those unpleasant bathroom personalities: "I know your shoes."

Another familiar story involves Notaro's first experience at a gym. She is mystified to discover that in public changing rooms, women lose all modesty.

Although many of Notaro's stories had me laughing out loud, some fell a little flat. "Bridget Jones's Diary," published in 1999, set the precedent for amusing short novels about the lives of awkward girls. "Idiot Girls'" is somewhat like "Bridget Jones," but without the coherent love story to pull everything together. Occasionally, I caught myself wondering what the point really was. Then Notaro would throw in another punch line that kept me turning the pages until I had polished off the whole book in one sitting.

For those who take themselves too seriously; this book is not for you. Because every time Notaro tries to take on her cigarette addiction, clean her house, make a trip to the doctors or just get home from the bar, we laugh, not only at her, but also at the reflection of ourselves.

'Stupid and Contagious' a clever, amusing read

By Kimberly Kane
Arts & Entertainment Editor

❖ Book Review

Caprice Crane's novel "Stupid and Contagious" has a loaded title. The novel is a little fluffy but smart and appealing enough to escape the "beach read" label. A predictable love story with unpredictable characters, "Stupid and Contagious" is easy to get lost in, and difficult to forget.

The book begins: "My name is Heaven Albright and my husband of two years is cheating on me. I'm only twenty-five…she's probably a couple years younger than me. She's like me two years ago, but in a twinset. He's recreating me even before I've had the chance to become the tired, old, sexually reluctant 'ball and chain.' I resent that. I'm not old."

Heaven is not telling the truth. She admits the entire scenario was fabricated. Heaven likes to imagine terrible situations, so if they ever come to pass she will not be completely surprised. Instead of flaky or seriously crazy, Heaven appears quirky and endearing.

She meets her match in Brady Gilbert, a fledgling record label owner with the same quick, observant sense of humor, love of music (i.e. Nick Drake, Bright Eyes and Franz Ferdinand) and fondness for self-depreciation. While traveling to a music conference, he notices the plane is full of men who look just like him.

"The entire plane is filled with twenty-eight to thirty-something guys who undoubtedly fancy themselves the lead characters in a Nick Hornby novel…I get a vision of this entire plane full of geeks re-enacting the scene from Say Anything, except instead of boom boxes they're holding iPods over their heads."

Brady, a self-described casualty of "dating disorder" (serially participating in medium- to long-term relationships that turn sour), moves in next door to Heaven's apartment after a nasty breakup with his girlfriend Sarah.

Heaven welcomes Brady to the neighborhood by returning his mail after she opens it and "borrows" the ten dollars his grandmom sent. They become fast friends after Heaven pretends to be his new girlfriend around the psychotic ex, Sarah. Like the reader, Brady alternates between being amused and frustrated by Heaven's eccentric behavior.

They are both refreshingly clever and self-aware. Brady and Heaven's inner dialogue is just as funny as their conversations with each other.

"Right now I hate Sarah more than Billy Joel hates sobriety," says Brady, after she spreads rumors that he is impotent.

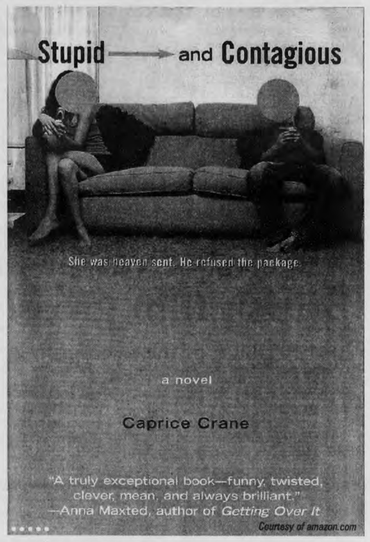
"I'm not a list-maker. I'm not overly organized. I'm not what some people call 'anal retentive.' And I'm definitely not the kind of person who makes air quotes when she says 'anal retentive,'" says Heaven.

The attraction between Heaven and Brady is immediate, no matter how much they deny it. After getting fired from her public relations job and a waitressing gig, Heaven accompanies Brady to California to scope a band, Superhero, whom they hope will be the next Nirvana and save not only Brady's record label but the current music scene. They then head to Seattle to find the Starbucks headquarters and pitch Brady's "invention," Cinnamilk (milk with cinnamon in it, akin to chocolate or strawberry milk), to the president of the company.

Predictably, they end up together, but only after the course of true love is offset by jealous exes and misunderstandings. They return home from the business trip changed; they have both finally realized their feelings, but it takes them a long time to admit them to one another.

Full of pop culture references, "Stupid and Contagious" isn't for everyone. If you do not know who Mannfred Mann is, you would not find it funny when Heaven meets someone who claims to be him (and asks him to clear up that pesky, misheard lyric in "Blinded by the Light.")

It is also a little too rosy at times. Heaven cannot keep a job, and Brady is about one failed band away from poverty, but the book glosses over these details. It is forgivable though, because "Stupid and Contagious" is ultimately uplifting and worth the read.



Stupid and Contagious
She was heaven sent. He refused the package.
a novel
Caprice Crane
"A truly exceptional book—funny, twisted, clever, mean, and always brilliant."
—Anna Maxted, author of Getting Over It
Courtesy of amazon.com

Christopher Jak kicks off September at Seventh Street Cafe

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

The sweet sounds of Christopher Jak ushered in September at Seventh Street Café Friday. The New Jersey native entertained coffee drinkers with his catchy tunes. Jak's acoustic style follows the tradition of singer-songwriters from the 1970s.

Villager GMAC Real Estate
521 N. Derr Dr. Lewisburg, PA 17837
570-523-3244
CALL US FOR THE LARGEST SELECTION OF RENTALS IN TOWN
1-5 Bedroom Units
Houses or Apartments for 2007/2008 and 2008/2009
A few choice units for 06/07 left!
Call Linda or Duska
or e-mail us at
linda-treese@villagerrealty.com for a complete list of our rentals.

A Bucknell Tradition Since 1968
bull run inn
Open 7 days a week:
Mon. – Sat. 11:30 a.m.—2 a.m. and Sunday 11:30 a.m. – midnight
605 Market St., downtown Lewisburg
ph: (570) 524-2572
www.bullruninn.com
(check for current features and events)
Now serving SUNDAY BRUNCH 11:30 a.m.—2 p.m.
Live Bands /Karaoke (no cover/21 & over) these Thursday's 11 p.m.—2 a.m. Sept 14—Given
Beach Party
Wed., Sept 20 10 p.m.—2 a.m. featuring the live band:
Blue Suede Goo
POP QUIZ—Tuesday's—9—11 p.m.

'Broadway Beats' a musical treat

By Sarah Novello
Writer

Amanda Fernandez '08 is directing this November's Review, "Broadway Beats." Fernandez is a member of the Musical Theatre Club, which aims to perform once a semester.

In past years, the group of thespians did not have enough funding for a full length musical, but they will put on the musical "Urinetown" in the spring.

Fernandez hopes to build campus wide excitement for the spring production of "Urinetown" with this autumn's review. She plans to highlight numbers from Broadway shows such as "Hairspray," "RENT," "Wicked," "West Side Story," "A Chorus Line," "Grease" and "Gypsy," along with others.

Courtesy of amazon.com

"We are still in the works with the song choices," Fernandez said.

Emily Penick '08, a member of the Musical Theatre Club, has performed in, directed and choreographed numerous shows on campus.

"There's a real reason why so much of the student body loves musical theatre," Penick said. "It's physical, it's fast-paced, it's touching, and it's often quite funny. The Musical Theatre Club is the best opportunity for students of many talents to be showcased in front of their peers, as well as an invaluable opportunity to meet a lot of dedicated student performers."

Auditions for "Broadway Beats" will be held today and Saturday. Students must e-mail Amanda Fernandez (afernand@bucknell.edu) to schedule an audition time between 4 P.M. and 7 P.M. today or between 2 P.M. and 6 P.M. on Saturday.

The Musical Theatre Club aims to involve as many people as possible and Fernandez plans to cast everyone who auditions. The auditions are necessary for Fernandez to understand the abilities of the cast and help her decide which songs to include in the review.

"One reason for the auditions is to brainstorm and find songs that will fit almost every voice," Fernandez said. "That is going to be one of the challenges, but what I believe makes a show entertaining is to have the songs performed well."

Nicole Brancucci '09 is involved with musical theater and encourages others to try it. "People should audition because it's a great way to get to meet people, especially those who aren't in your graduating class, and also because any type of theatre is such a fun time," Brancucci said. "Taking a break for rehearsal also is a way to relieve some stress from studying."

Brancucci and Penick have been performing for many years, but prior experience is not necessary. Students are only expected to be interested in devoting time to rehearsals and performances.

"It's really rewarding to be able to share what you love with the audience," Brancucci said. "I just love to sing, dance, and act. To be able to share it with a great cast of people is always an amazing experience."

Courtesy of amazon.com

People in musical theater call themselves "triple threats" because they can sing, dance, and act.

So if you are looking for an amazing experience this semester, audition for "Broadway Beats" and join the most threatening group on campus!

'Little Miss Sunshine' mixes sun and shadow

By Catherine Heverling
Editor-in-Chief

❖ Movie Review

"Little Miss Sunshine" had potential for disaster.

With a plot line following the mission of a bespectacled 7-year-old girl to win a California state beauty contest, viewers might initially worry that they are just in for an extended episode of "Full House."

But, really, it is more likely that the cast of "American Beauty" has wandered onto the set of "R.V."

The off-beat characters in "Little Miss Sunshine" neutralize the saccharine components of the film to create moments that are somehow simultaneous tragedies and happily-ever-afters.

Viewers might worry during the first few minutes that it is one of those movies that tries so hard to be real that it becomes too much like reality, even in the passing of time. Things start off slowly as the camera introduces each character individually, but viewers soon realize that these characters are what make the film so brilliant.

The family's patriarch, Richard (well-played by Greg Kinnear), works as an overzealous motivational speaker at local schools and is a walking inspirational calendar to his unaccepting family. His straggly-haired son, Dwayne (Paul Dano), has taken a vow of silence and spends his time jumping rope and doing sit-ups in his room, in preparation for the day he will join flight school.

Richard's father (Alan Arkin) moved in with the family after residential authorities caught him using heroin in his high rise. Richard's wife, Sheryl (Toni Collette), is realistic – nearly to the point of pessimism – and has little faith that Richard's original nine-step program will ever land him a book deal. Sheryl's brother, Frank (an impressive performance by Steve Carell), has just attempted suicide after an unrequited love ran off with one of his professional nemeses.

Every member of the family, even Richard (although he doesn't admit it), realizes his or her disadvantages in life; all of them except for Richard and Cheryl's daughter, Olive (Abigail Breslin), an aspiring pageant winner who spends her time in front of the television imitating Miss America in attempt to perfect her wrist-turning wave.

Olive's drive to be crowned Little Miss Sunshine fuels her family's optimism (and beat-up bus), leading them to embark on a time-pressed journey from Albuquerque, N.M. to Ronondo Beach, Calif. to attend the competition.

While on the road, the family runs into a number of obstacles. They manage to avoid getting lost or running out of gas, but the bus's clutch breaks leaving the family to push the car and then jump in it as it is driving away every time they stop.

While this was one of the most hilarious crises dealt with en route, each character found themselves not running from their problems, but sometimes quite literally running right into them.

Ultimately, these problems challenge Richard's golden mantra that as long as you have the confidence and determination to succeed, you inevitably will.

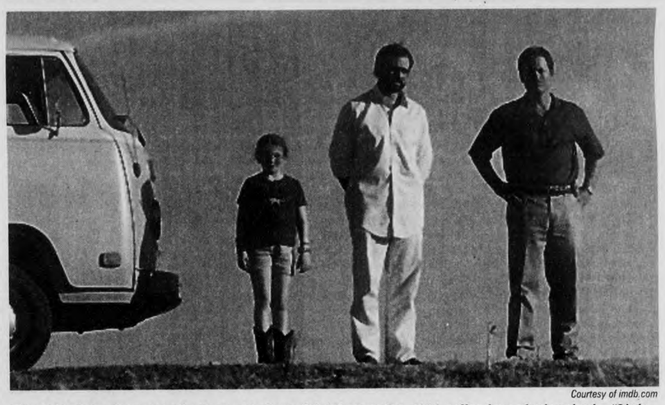
The film culminates during the talent portion of the Little Miss Sunshine pageant, when Olive performs the never-before-seen dance routine her grandfather has taught her. The scene itself is both hilarious and heartfelt, and just about as memorable as Napoleon's awkwardly awesome stage number in "Napoleon Dynamite."

The competition ends in a moment of complete self-awareness, leaving the characters to realize and accept the hodgepodge of personalities that the audience has known them to be from the start.

I guess in good old Danny Tanner terms, the moral of the story is that being true to yourself is more important than success. And while "Little Miss Sunshine" might not win any awards (although it most certainly should), the efforts of the cast and crew made it a film hard to compare to any other.

The Campus Theatre will be airing "Little Miss Sunshine" tonight through Thursday (see www.campustheatre.org for show times). I suggest you pencil it into your planner.

Much like the Scooby van look-a-like the family road trips in, you might think the film needs a kick start before everyone is aboard. But once you are, you will be happy you bought the ticket.



Courtesy of imdb.com

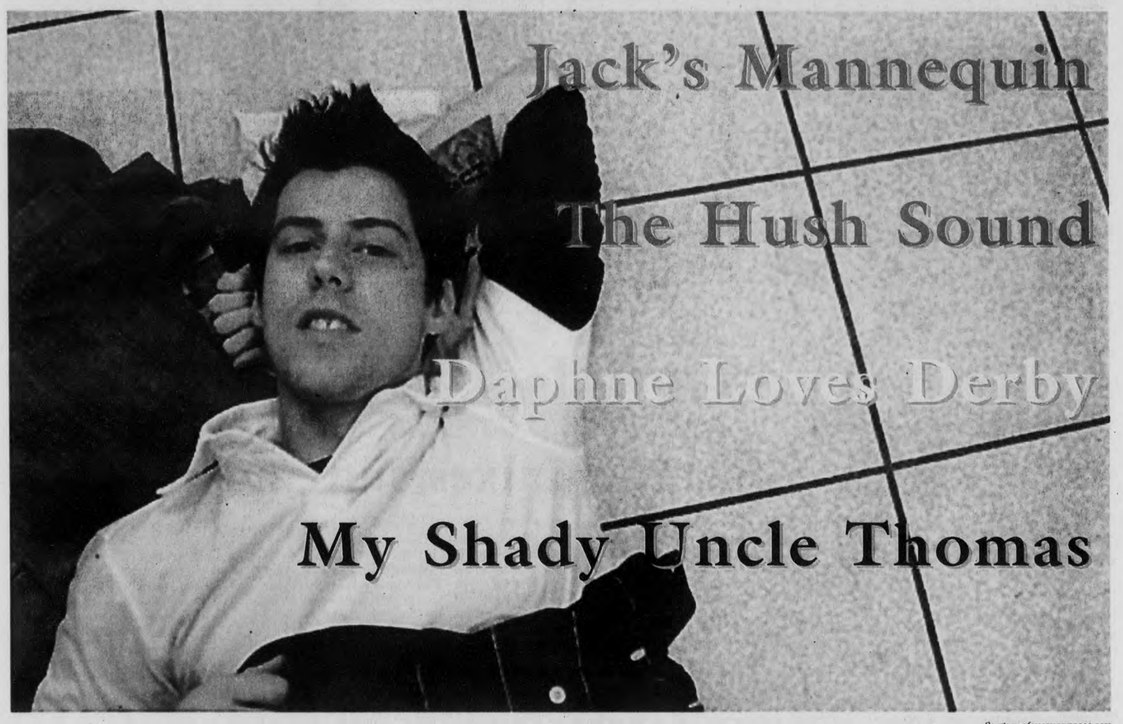
Olive (Abigail Breslin) and her family stand in front of their beat-up bus, which suffers from a broken clutch. "Little Miss Sunshine" focuses on the family's roadtrip to a beauty pageant in California.

Domino's Pizza - A Proud Partner of Bucknell University
LEWISBURG • 524-9000
1722 Market St.
MANIC MONDAY $7.99 LARGE 1-TOPPING PIZZA – DELIVERED!
2xTUESDAY BUY ANY LARGE PIZZA AT REGULAR MENU PRICE & RECEIVE A 2ND OF EQUAL VALUE FOR FREE
WACKY WEDNESDAY BUY ANY LARGE PIZZA AT REGULAR MENU PRICE AND GET ANY SIDE ITEM FOR FREE
TERRIFIC THURSDAYS $4.99 LARGE CHEESE PIZZA
HOT BROWNIES FREE
DOUBLE DEAL $11.99 2 MEDIUMS $13.99 2 LARGES
CHICKEN SPECIAL $17.99
CARRY-OUT DEAL BUY ANY PIZZA AT REGULAR MENU PRICE & RECEIVE A 2ND OF EQUAL VALUE FOR FREE
CALL TODAY! 1.800.DOMINOS
(1.800.366.4467)

Study In English Abroad
The Swedish Program
STOCKHOLM UNIVERSITY
Public Policy
Literature
Economics
Film
Psychology
History
Sociology
Art History
Women's Studies
Politics
Environmental Studies
COME TO AN INFORMATIONAL MEETING
SEPTEMBER 14, 2006 4:00 P.M. TAYLOR LOUNGE
If you are unable to attend this meeting, please contact your Study Abroad Advisor or The Swedish Program, Hamilton College, 198 College Hill Road, Clinton, New York 13323
(315) 737-0123 www.swedishprogram.org

Fall Fest: Music and more

Four bands, free food and plenty of fun activities coming to the Sojka Pavilion lawn Friday, Sept. 16



Courtesy of www.myspace.com

Andrew McMahon, front man for both Something Corporate, doubles as the lead singer of Jack's Mannequin. Jack's Mannequin, a band formed by McMahon to showcase music that did not seem to fit Something Corporate's sound, is headlining this year's Fall Fest concert Friday, Sept. 16.

By Angela Tchou
Contributing Writer

The University's annual Fall Fest will take place at 2 p.m. on Sept. 16 on the lawn in front of Sojka Pavilion. A free dinner will be offered at 4 p.m., following a "Survivor" challenge at noon.

Along with activities such as dunking booths, live music will be performed throughout the evening. Four bands are scheduled to play: Jack's Mannequin, The Hush Sound, Daphne Loves Derby and the University's own My Shady Uncle Thomas.

Jack's Mannequin is an additional project for Andrew McMahon, front man for the band Something Corporate. Mixing an alternatively mellow sound with spots of punk rock and a bit of emo, Mannequin may be the perfect sound for a chilly autumn afternoon.

The band started in December 2003 after McMahon wrote tracks for Something Corporate that he felt did not fit in with the band's sound. After forming a band and conducting some studio work, Jack's Mannequin released its first album "Everything in Transit" on Aug. 3, 2005. It debuted at number 37 on "The Billboard 200".

The band's newest single, "The Mixed Tape," is a popular song praising mixed tapes. McMahon's falsetto perfectly matches lyrics such as, "I swear to God this mix could sink the sun / But it was you I was thinking of."

The song may seem saccharine, but honestly, people make mixed CDs all the time with songs they feel were written specifically for them.

If these lyrics do not excite you, perhaps the general content of Jack's Mannequin's new material will. In a blog entry posted earlier this year, McMahon writes about an experience he had while playing a song for an 80-year-old woman on an airplane.

"When she finished listening she looked at me a little confused and asked, 'did you just sing 'what gets you off?'' to which I nodded and apologized for my fairly racy track selection. Still, I wasn't that shocked when she followed up with 'thank God, somebody should be talking about sex these days,'" McMahon said.

In addition to playing music, the band has other intentions for its current tour. According to the Jack's Mannequin site, McMahon was diagnosed with Acute Lymphatic Leukemia in June 2005.

As a result, he received a bone marrow transplant from his sister and formed the Dear Jack Foundation in order to aid Leukemia research and funding programs. Appropriately, the band's "Tour for the Cure" is taking place in September, which is also Leukemia Awareness Month.

The majority of the profit from ticket sales (including money used to bring the tour to the University) will be contributed to the foundation.

Playing with Jack's Mannequin is My Shady Uncle Thomas, a band comprised of University students. The band includes Dro Zanelli '07 (vocals and saxophone), Peter Kelly '07 (bass), Jon Ginn '07 (guitar and vocals), Tommy Wechsler '09 (guitar and back-up vocals) and Joe Jalbert '08 (drums).

The band formed in December 2003 and has consistently played on campus and at local bars in the Susquehanna Valley. In addition to steady gigs, the band has played at Williams College in Williamstown, Mass.

My Shady Uncle Thomas has also been the opening act for an impressive list of artists including Gavin DeGraw, State Radio, Michael Tolcher, Filomath, Tristan Prettyman and Josh Kelley.

The band's music encompasses several genres including alternative rock, funk and general jam-band music. On a track titled "Trainscontinental," a combination of jazzy keyboard, deep bass and Zanelli's smooth vocals create an ambience that is just as conducive to relaxing as it is to dancing with friends.

Smart solos on "Creamsicle" make it the perfect song to jam out to.

Check out www.myspace.com/myshady unclethomas to sample music, and keep a eye out for the band's demo album.

Fall Fest promises to be a day of great music and fun.

Next week:

Watch out for a closer look at the Hush Sound and Daphne Loves Derby.

Courtesy of myspace.com

The Hush Sound (left) and Daphne Loves Derby (right), rock bands touring with Jack's Mannequin, are both playing Fall Fest on the "Tour for the Cure." Funds from this tour will be donated to cancer research. Andrew McMahon of Jack's Mannequin is a cancer survivor himself and started the tour.

The Bucknellian
Sports
September 8, 2006
Volume 138, Number 2 Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

A secret no more...

Features invites students to share their secrets in the style of the Post Secret Web site.

See page B10

Bison fly out of the gate over Dukes

Orange and Blue prevail in overtime and prepare to face defending Patriot League Champion Lafayette

By Matthew Saylor
Sports Editor

In 2005 the Bison opened its football season hosting Georgetown in a night matchup that the Orange and Blue lost in overtime. During the game quarterback Terrance Wilson '08 fractured his jaw and was lost for the remainder of the season.

It was almost déjà vu as the Bison opened its 2006 campaign with a night game Saturday, only this time it was against Duquesne University, defending champion of the MAAC conference. Instead of Wilson going down with an injury, it was quarterback Andrew Lair '10 who suffered an injured hip that sent him to the sideline late in the first half.

Instead of an overtime loss, the squad emerged victorious in the extra session, winning the game 31-28 thanks to a 27-yard field goal by Will Carney '09.

Bucknell 31(OT)
Duquesne 28

The Bison received significant contributions from multiple players, including many appearing in their first collegiate game. Rashod Bumpers '10, Paul Forcellini '10 and Lair were standouts on offense. Sam Nana-Sinkam '10 was all over the field on defense, making a game-high 15 tackles, including a sack.

"I've never been on a team that relied so much on young guys," Head Coach Tim Landis said. "It would have been a shame if we didn't pull this out because of the effort we had. It is amazing how many young guys are helping us out and how amazing we can be."

There was a mind-numbing 961 yards of total offense produced between the Bison and the Dukes. The Orange and Blue led all Division I-AA teams with its 386 rushing yards in the first week of college play across the nation.

Bumpers led the Bison rushing for 126 yards, including a 51-yard touchdown run to tie the game at 7 at the 9 minutes 46 seconds mark of the first quarter. Forcellini ran for 71 yards and a touchdown just prior to halftime, Roosevelt Davis '08 juked and jived for 63 yards on just six carries and Josh DeStefano '08 rumbled for 39 yards.

Prior to Lair's injury, the transfer from Navy ran for 40 yards, including a 38-yard touchdown run. He completed both of his passes for an additional 48 yards.

"I've become close with Andrew, and you never want to see a player come out of the game with an injury," Wilson said. "I understand that."

The Bison offense struggled a bit in the second half, failing to score in the third quarter and facing a 28-21 loss if it could not score as time ran down in the fourth.

The Dukes accumulated 527 yards of total offense, including 348 passing yards from quarterback Scott Knapp. Duquesne's receivers had both the size and speed needed to get to balls some of the Bison's shorter defensive backs could not handle.

The defense made a stand and with 2:13 left; the Orange and Blue started their final drive from their own 31-yard line.

Doubt crept into the crowd as the first play of the drive ended with Wilson down on his back, sacked by the Dukes for a 13-yard loss. Runs by DeStefano and Davis and a costly personal foul on Duquesne gave the Bison new life near mid-field.

Bumpers capped off his great day with a 26-yard run, taking the team into Duquesne territory. A 14-yard run by Wilson placed the Orange and Blue inside the red zone. That is where the drive appeared to stall; it lead to a fourth-and-11 play with only eight seconds left on the clock.

With time for only one more play, Wilson dropped back to pass.

"The play was a curl right and the receivers had to be sure to get deep enough since the ball had to be thrown into the end zone," Wilson said.

No one was open, as everyone on the field appeared to funnel to the right side. Wilson took off for the left side of the end zone, stretching across the goal line to score the touchdown with no time left on the clock.

"I did something coach tells me not to do all the time," Wilson said. "He can't get mad at me this time though."

Carney kicked the extra point to tie the game at 28, sending the game into overtime and the small but pumped up crowd into a frenzy.

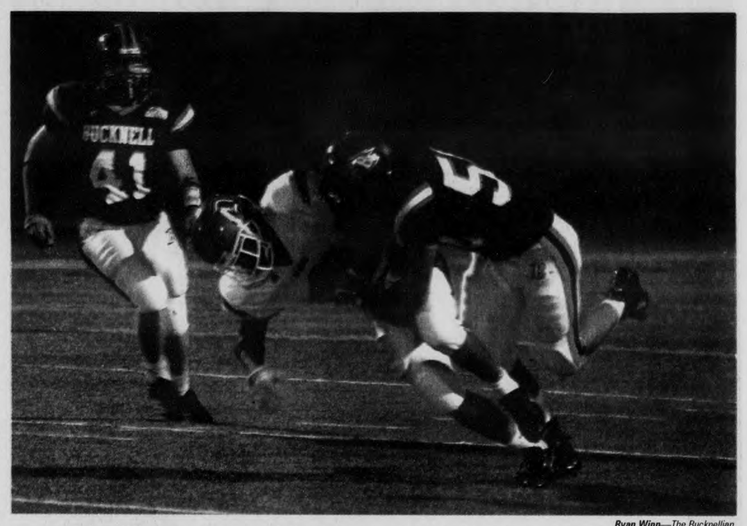
The Bison defense forced the Dukes to attempt a 38-yard field goal, and the special teams pressure forced that kick wide right.

Two runs by DeStefano for 15 yards set up the game-winning kick from Carney.

So did Wilson ever doubt that he would score that touchdown?

"You can't have doubt," Wilson said.

There should also be no doubt that this year's Bison have the toughness and the heart to succeed throughout the season.



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Sam Nana-Sinkam '10 demolishes the Duquesne ball carrier for one of his of 15 tackles in the showdown Saturday. Nana-Sinkam is one of several key rookies who contributed to the overtime win.

Cross country dominates Bison Open

Both squads snatch the top six spots to elevate the program to a new level this season

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Jenny Stevens '07, Erin Cranmer-Hart '08 and Leanna Nastase '07 lead the pack at the Bison Open this past weekend. Both the women's and men's teams swept the top six positions.

By Brian Mulligan
Sports Editor

The men's and women's cross country team began the season with an impressive showing at the Bison Open held on Friday at the West Field. In the cool rainy weather, both squads managed to take the top six spots from the competition, which included Lock Haven University, Bloomsburg University and Susquehanna University. The men's team also competed against the University of Scranton. The meet served as a great way to find out where the teams stood compared to last year.

The women's team is the defending Patriot League champion. Head Coach Kevin Donner is very optimistic about this year's group.

"The times were extremely fast compared to previous years," Donner said. "The weather may have had an effect, but on the women's side, the team is competing at a much higher level than last year."

The women's team had a well-rounded finish with two seniors, two juniors and two sophomores placing in the top six (in that order).

Captains Jenny Stevens '07 and Leanna Nastase '07 led the team on Saturday on the three-mile course, respectively placing first with a time of 17 minutes and 19 seconds and second with a time of 17:20. Classmates Erin Cranmer-Hart '08 and Christine Totten '08 took the next two spots. Cranmer-Hart finished the race with a time of 17:34, while Totten crossed the finish line in 17:48. Nicole Falcaro '09 and Gillian Nordquist '09 rounded out the top six with times of 17:56 and 18:07 respectively.

"The first meet of the season went extremely well," Stevens said. "The conditions were excellent and nearly everybody improved their time significantly from last year. It was a low-key meet and a good way to ease into the season."

The men actually took the top seven spots in the meet. Wallace Campbell '08 was the first Bison to cross the finish line for the men with a time of 14:41. Captain Mark Caroleo '07 finished just eight seconds behind Campbell to secure second place honors. Andrew Corral '08 and Will Holleran '08 finished within two seconds of each other to finish third and fourth respectively. Derrin Pierret '07, Sean Egan '07 and Donnie Sanner '09 rounded out the top seven for the Orange and Blue, finishing fifth through seventh, in that order.

"I was extremely pleased with our men," Donner said. "They worked together and all of them are quite a bit quicker this weekend than a year ago."

The team has the weekend off, but the Orange and Blue will kick back into action at the Lock Haven University Invitational on Sept. 15 and 16. The squad will be up against regional competition including Pennsylvania State University, La Salle University and the University of Pennsylvania.

"The first meet of the season went extremely well. The conditions were excellent and nearly everybody improved their time significantly from last year."
—Jenny Stevens '07

"[The] Lock Haven [University Invitational] is going to be a bit more competitive than the Bison Open and will be more than twice the distance," Pierret said. "However, we are more than prepared for the 10k and many of us actually perform at a higher level as the distance increases."

The team will also get a preview of the Mid-Atlantic Regional Championship site, so the Bison will get a feel for the course and distance prior to the actual meet.

Men's water polo enjoys strong start

By Ty Clark
Staff Writer

Men's Water Polo notched three wins this weekend at the Navy Open, defeating 18th ranked Santa Clara while losing only to California, the team ranked first nationally.

"It went about as we expected, competitively," Head Coach John Zeigler said. "We had a couple games where we handled our opponents well, and we knew the others would be hard."

Captain Mark Masterson '07 agreed.

"We have a young team who responded well to their first big minutes in Division 1 water polo," Masterson said.

In the first game of the tournament, the Bison dominated Queens, winning by a score of 17-4. Ten different players found the net for the Bison, led by Masterson and Johnny Stupp '10 with three apiece.

Bucknell 17
Queens 4

The Bison's defense accumulated 18 steals throughout the game, one shy of the school record set in 2004.

Bucknell 9
Santa Clara 8

Later that day, the 17th ranked Bison took on 18th ranked Santa Clara, defeating them in a tight 9-8 win.

See POLO page B3

Bison golfer drives with the best

Amy Loughney '08 participates in U.S. Women's Amateur in Oregon

Courtesy of Amy Loughney

Amy Loughney '08 poses with U.S. Women's Amateur welcome sign. After qualifying for the tournament during her past season as a Bison, Loughney shot 82-76 and placed 106th out of 156 golfers.

By Barbara Perlman
Sports Editor

Summer: a time for lounging by the pool and having fun with friends. Such was not the case for Amy Loughney '08 who spent part of her summer golfing at the U.S. Women's Amateur.

"This was an amazing summer for my golf, and I never really imagined myself qualifying for the Amateur…it really was a dream to compete in," Loughney said.

Loughney said she did not even consider competing in the qualifier before a teammate suggested that she participate.

"I figured, why not….I am sure glad that I did," Loughney said.

Making it to the Women's Amateur was no easy feat. It is the premiere amateur tournament for women in the country and only 156 girls made it through the qualifying rounds to earn the opportunity to play in Oregon.

"I truly felt like a celebrity while I was at Pumpkin Ridge, and it was almost like I got to peek into the world of professional golf," Loughney said. "I had never competed with girls of this caliber. I got to play on an amazing golf course with great golfers that taught me a lot about the game."

The caliber of competition added a new dimension to Loughney's game that she had yet to experience as a Bison.

"I was both nervous and excited about playing because I wanted to represent myself well at the tournament, but I was worried about how I would handle the pressure," Loughney said. "I got even more nervous when I found out I was going to be playing with the U.S. Women's Public Links champion … Tiffany Joh."

Loughney started the first day with pre-competition jitters, shooting an 82, which put her in a tie for 134th place.

"I was more nervous the first day because I got the ball into thick rough a couple of times and it was hard to get out of," Loughney said. "[However] because my 82 from the first round wouldn't allow me to have a chance at qualifying for match play (top 64 out of 156 players) I just went out the second day to have fun. It showed because I shot 76 on an extremely difficult course and moved up to 106th."

Loughney felt she handled the pressure well and is pleased with her performance at the Women's Amateur, especially her second day play.

"I far exceeded my expectations. I was overwhelmed with happiness when I qualified because I felt like my hard work had finally paid off," Loughney said. "The girls who qualified for match play on average shot 75-76, so if I could play both days like the second I would be there."

> "This was an amazing summer for my golf, and I never really imagined myself qualifying for the Amateur…it really was a dream to compete in."
> —Amy Loughney '08

What set Loughney apart from the competition was not her skill but her pride in being a student-athlete at the University.

"As a Bucknellian, it makes me feel proud that I compete for this school and not a 'golf' school," Loughney said. "I was probably the only girl at the tournament that went to an academic school rather than a sports school….They were all surprised that I can have 26 hours of class a week, study biomedical engineering and still have time to practice and compete well."

Loughney looks forward to sharing her knowledge with her teammates, hoping that everyone can benefit from her experience playing at the U.S. Women's Amateur.

"As a player, the Amateur has given me a lot more confidence in my game, knowing that I can compete well against the best in the country," Loughney said. "As a team member, it has given me the confidence to share my experiences with my teammates so we can all benefit and finally win a tournament, either individually or as a team."

Saylor Says

By Matthew Saylor
Sports Editor

1. September is a great month for Major League Baseball as teams jockey for a chance to play past the first few days of October. Many of the races are still wide open with only the two teams from New York seemingly assured of post-season play. The Detroit Tigers still have the best record in baseball, but the Minnesota Twins and the Chicago White Sox are so close behind it is possible for both of them to pass the Tigers before the year is done.

The Oakland Athletics and the Los Angeles Angels of Anaheim are still fighting for supremacy in the A.L. West, and the Boston Red Sox still harbor hopes of making a playoff push (do not count on it though) in the A.L. East.

In the National League, the Cincinnati Reds are attempting to challenge the St. Louis Cardinals in the Central, while the Dodgers, Padres and Giants, led by suddenly hot Barry Bonds, are making things too close to call out in the wild, wild West.

The Wild Card also has innumerable contenders with the Padres, Phillies, Reds, Marlins, Braves and Astros seemingly all still alive. As of right now my playoff teams are the Yankees, Tigers, White Sox and Athletics from the American League, with the Mets, Cardinals, Padres and (my fingers and every other body part is crossed) Phillies coming out of the National League. Look for updated playoff predictions each week in "Saylor Says."

2. Notre Dame versus Penn State and Ohio State versus Texas are two of the most eagerly anticipated games of the college football season. Fortunately, you will not have to wait long to see them – they are both Saturday.

3. Is Phillies' first baseman Ryan Howard using steroids? N-O spells a big, capitalized no. The 6 feet 4 inches, 252-pound slugger has 53 home runs already this season, and fans around the country question whether or not the big man is juicing anything more than oranges. Howard has always been big and was a prestigious home run hitter in the minor leagues, so this is not something entirely out of the blue. Plus, Howard has two brothers, including a twin, who are both bigger than him, so do not let what Barry Bonds, Mark McGwire and Sammy Sosa did to their bodies ruin what Howard is doing right now. This kid is for real.

4. Fantasy football will now take over the lives of many males. The NFL kicked off its season Thursday night and has its first full slate of games this Sunday. I wonder what percentage of men who start the season with a girlfriend find themselves single at the end of the year. Of course, winning the leagues in which they play can certainly ease the pain.

5. Five consecutive PGA Tour wins for Tiger Woods, including the British Open and the PGA Championship, have allowed him to statistically clinch his eighth PGA Player of the Year award, and there are still nine events left in the season. It has been quite a roller coaster year for Tiger. Following the death of his father, Woods took some time off from the tour and, upon his return, missed the cut at the U.S. Open. However, starting with a win at the British Open, no one can touch him. Do you think Phil Mickelson regrets the decisions he made during the final round of the U.S. Open? This could have been his year, as he would have won the first two legs of golf's Grand Slam. His falter at the U.S. Open quelled whatever momentum he may have had.

6. You – yes, you – should make it a point to attend at least one women's volleyball game this year. The atmosphere at Davis Gym was tremendous for the Bison's match against West Chester due to the excitement the team shows each time it plays. It is a very enjoyable way to spend an evening and support the school all at the same time.

7. Benjamin "Don't Confuse Me with Boris" Becker will be the answer to the trivia question "who was the final opponent for Andre Agassi." Agassi's stellar career came to a close in the third round of the U.S. Open against Becker. Agassi did not leave Flushing Meadows empty handed though. He took the hearts of the tennis world with him.

8. Even though the United States only took the Bronze Medal in the men's basketball World Championships, they will, in all likelihood, still be the favored team to win the gold at the 2008 Olympics in Beijing. Every coach says that defense wins championships, so of course the United States played a run-and-gun style that focuses on out-scoring opponents. Unfortunately, this style hurts the team's defense and does not work if the team cannot make shots. Back to the drawing board.

9. ESPN professional football announcer Joe Theismann sure does like to talk about himself during broadcasts. He tends to think his opinions, while often times experience-based, are the only ones that matter. Tony Kornheiser has already started to question some of Theismann's comments in the booth, and it will be interesting to see how their working relationship will develop.

10. Patriot League play begins Saturday for the Bison football team as Lafayette comes to Lewisburg. The Leopards are ranked 25th in the Division I-AA football poll and are the defending co-league champions with Colgate. During halftime of Saturday evening's contest, the University will honor the 1996 squad which won the school's only Patriot League title.

BUCKNELL UNIVERSITY
Department of Public Safety

The department of Public Safety is currently hiring Student Security Aides for the Fall 2006 semester. Responsibilities include securing academic and residential buildings, including classrooms and office areas. Duties include assisting individuals in room or classroom lock-outs and assisting Public Safety Officers with additional duties as needed. There will also be additional shifts on the weekends. No previous experience required. A criminal background check will be conducted. The applicant must be able to work some evening and limited overnight hours.

The applicant will be needed for a total of 15-20 hours per week.

Contact Lt. James R. Middleton at 577-3333 or by email at middlton@bucknell.edu.

BRYNWOOD 535 Inc.
Rentals
In Lewisburg Since 1969
Your search begins..... and ends here.
Professional 24/7 Maintenance Staff
Apartments (furnished & unfurnished)
Houses for professionals students families
Rental Garages Also Available
Office & Retail Space
300—3,000 sq ft
brynwoodrentals.com
611 Market Street, Lewisburg
ph: 570.524.2121 x 3

Women's volleyball wins home opener

Squad posts a clean sweep of West Chester, 3-0, and looks ahead to the St. Francis Invitational

By Ellis Hudes
Writer

The women's volleyball team looked impressive in its home opener as they posted a 3-0 sweep of West Chester on Tuesday. A day earlier Head Coach Cindy Opalski was inducted into the Francis T. Maloney High School Hall of Fame for her outstanding contributions to its volleyball program. A healthy crowd in Davis Gym, which included President Brian C. Mitchell and his wife Mary Jane, cheered on the team's stellar all-around performance. The Bison blocked 16.5 shots, sending numerous West Chester spikes back over the net, much to the excitement of the bench. Opalski is pleased that her squad is translating lessons learned in practice to its volleyball matches.

Bucknell 3
West Chester 0

"When we are all on the same page, you see it reflected in our style of play on both offensive and defensive ends," Opalski said.

Contributions from both ends propelled the Bison to victory. Emilie Hardinge '09 helped stifle West Chester's offense with a career high eight blocks in addition to her 11 kills. Shannon Pitsch '09 added 31 assists, three blocks and eight digs for the Bison. On the defensive end Kristen Sydlowski '07 led the team with 10 digs and was key in keeping some of the longer rallies in the Bison's favor.

Both teams were on even terms until the latter stages of the first game when the Bison finally broke through at 20-19 with a 10-4 run to clinch it, though it was in game two that the women's team really executed their game plan to perfection. With the narrow lead of 14-12 the Bison reeled off 14 consecutive points with some spectacular serving by Jennie Smith '07, forcing West Chester to call two timeouts during that streak.

UNC-Wil. 3
Bucknell 1

"Jennie's serving really was key during that particular stretch and helped us sustain the momentum," Opalski said.

They finally lost serve at 29-12 but quickly ended the game with a final kill. In the third game, West Chester regrouped from the rout and edged ahead late for a 24-22 lead when the Bison called a timeout. Upon returning to the court, the Bison went on an 8-1 run to end the game and sweep the match from West Chester.

> "When we are all on the same page, you see it reflected in our style of play on both offensive and defensive ends."
> —Cindy Opalski, head coach

The Bison had previously split a pair of matches in the La Salle Invitational on both Friday and Saturday. On Friday the Orange and Blue lost to UNC-Wilmington 3-1, but defeated Maryland-Eastern Shore to achieve its first win of the season. Between the two games Pitsch tallied 80 assists, while Jenna Henderson '08 had 22 kills and 24 digs. Sydlowski contributed 28 digs and five aces, including a career-high tying four in the match against Maryland-Eastern Shore.

Bucknell 3
UMES 1

Saturday found the Bison rebounding after a tough 3-1 loss to Rider before edging past the host La Salle 3-2. Even though the team lost its first match, Sydlowski posted a career best and single-match record with 40 digs, and Pitsch set a new career best with 58 assists, while Hardinge and Henderson contributed 20 kills each. The Bison lost an extremely tight opening game 32-30 but rebounded by taking the second game 30-22. Rider snatched key points and took the last two games by narrow margins, 30-26 and another 32-30 score.

Ryder 3
Bucknell 1

Consistency and execution are the words Opalski emphasizes most, and they showed in the volleyball team's final match of the Invitational. In what is becoming a deadly pair for the Orange and Blue, Pitsch had another excellent night recording 43 assists for the Bison while Syndlowski had 29 digs. This match eventually went to a fifth game decider in which the Bison capitalized on some sloppy La Salle play and took the game 15-12 to win the match.

Bucknell 3
La Salle 2

The women's team will participate in the St. Francis Invitational starting tonight against Niagra at 8 p.m.

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian*

Sarah Groman '07 spikes the ball against West Chester in a 3-0 victory for the Bison in the home opener. The team is preparing to participate in the St. Francis Invitational.

Men's water polo wins three matches and drops one

POLO From page B1

"Santa Clara was a really big win," goalkeeper Luke Belenky '08 said. "We've had some trouble in the past with ranked teams and close games, we've lost a lot by one goal, so it was great to be able to win one of those."

The win was the Bison's first against a ranked opponent in their last seven attempts. Masterson continued his fine play, again recording three goals for the second straight game in addition to five steals. Belenky made 11 saves, including a huge save on the final possession to preserve a win.

"[Belenky] really played well, especially in the second half," Zeigler said. "He really settled down and made a number of key saves late in the game."

The next day, the Orange and Blue fell to California, 14-5. Again, Masterson tallied three goals to lead the Bison. This marked the second straight year that the top-ranked national team has defeated the Bison in a match.

Cal 14
Bucknell 5

The squad finished the open well, winning 14-4 over Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT). The team effort, which included goals from nine players, was led by Masterson, who scored three goals for the fourth consecutive game. The Bison quickly jumped out to a 8-1 lead at halftime and extended that lead to a comfortable 11-1 after three quarters.

Bucknell 14
MIT 4

> "This is a good test for us. These are the kind of games that really help you to see what you're made of."
> —Luke Belenky '08

Both Zeigler and Belenky noted the balance of scoring.

"Of course, Mark [Masterson] is going to get his points," Zeigler said. "But we have a very balanced attack which includes players such as Gabriel Heiber ['09] and Kyle Roslyn ['08]."

For his performance this weekend, Masterson was named the Damon's Bison Athlete of the Week and the Collegiate Water Polo Association (CWPA) Southern Division Co-Player of the Week.

Looking ahead, the team will host the Bucknell Invitational Saturday and Sunday, featuring teams from Johns Hopkins, Gannon and St. Francis (NY).

The team will then take some time to prepare for East Coast Athletic Conference championships.

The upcoming ones are critical. Johns Hopkins is 20th nationally and is a league foe who the Bison will see later in the year.

"We really need to establish ourselves in this game, while they're here, before we see them later in the year," Belenky said.

St. Francis, the defending champions of the league, might be even tougher as they currently sit second in the league and 14th nationally.

"This is a good test for us," Belenky said. "These are the kind of games that really help you to see what you're made of."

"This should give us a first hand look at the team before we hopefully see them again later this year in a championship," Masterson said.

With sights set high, the Bison take to the pool Saturday and Sunday for an important test early in the season.

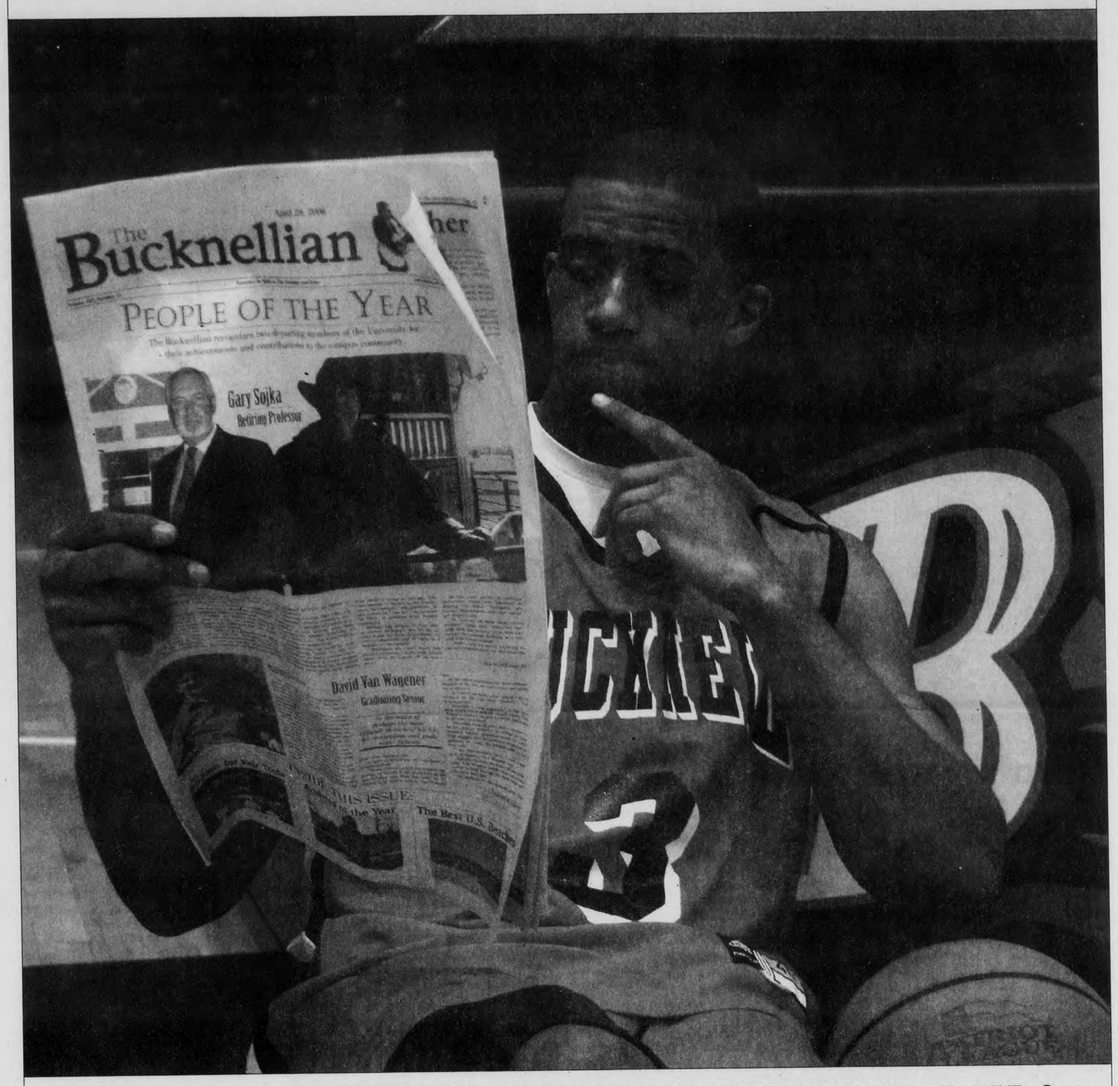
"I'm gonna make him an offer he can't refuse." -Vito Corleone, "The Godfather"

The offer was to write for sports...

Write for Sports

Contact msaylor@

A MATCH MADE IN HEAVEN
THIS MVP IS NEVER WITHOUT HIS MVP.



PATRIOT LEAGUE MOST VALUABLE PLAYER CHARLES LEE &
BUCKNELL'S MOST VALUABLE PAPER, THE BUCKNELLIAN

Take a time out once a week and go one-on-one with The Bucknellian to stay up to date with all of the action happening on campus.

Enclose this form and a check (made out to The Bucknellian) and mail it to:

The Bucknellian, Bucknell University C3952, 701 Moore Avenue, Lewisburg, PA 17837

Name _____ __ ONE YEAR: receive 24 issues each week for the academic year for only $45, a $15 savings!

Address _____

_____

Phone _____ __ ONE SEMESTER: receive 12 issues during the fall or spring semester for $30. Please specify semester: _____

E-mail _____

For more information, contact The Bucknellian at 570-577-1520 or 570-577-1085 or e-mail bucknellian@bucknell.edu.

Courtesy of Julia Fuchs

GOOOOOAAAALLL!!!!

Features Editor Julia Fuchs reflects on her experience at the 2006 World Cup in Germany this past summer

By Julia Fuchs
Features Editor

As the voices became louder, I found myself surrounded by a sea of yellow, red, blue and white monsters, a joker and a Spanish cowboy riding his horse in a giant sombrero.

Was it a nightmare come true?

Not really. It was game 53 of the 2006 FIFA World Cup, and on this June day I was smack-dab in the middle of it.

This summer, I had the opportunity of a lifetime when I received a VIP ticket to the France vs. Spain round of 16 World Cup game in Hannover, Germany.

The World Cup may seem inconsequential to most people in a country dominated by football, baseball and basketball, but to the rest of the world it is an event eagerly anticipated from the moment the last goal has been scored for the previous cup.

Think the Super Bowl spread over one month. Think the World Series with 32 countries competing. Think March Madness on a global level. These examples essentially capture all that surrounds the World Cup.

Tickets had been sold out already for two years. When I received an offer from Puma (the company I was working for this summer) two weeks prior to the June 27 game, I simply could not say no.

Forty-three thousand fans were packed into the stadium that had been completely renovated for 64 million euros the previous year. As the clock ticked closer to the 9 p.m. kick-off, thousands of people streamed in from all over the country and all over the world, attempting to score black-market tickets at the last minute.

Many people decided to experience the game "live" from the fan park set up next to the stadium, complete with giant screen TVs and complimentary fan sounds from inside the stadium.

As the holder of a VIP ticket, I was permitted to enter the special tent set up a small walk from the stadium. There I was greeted by a six-person band welcoming all the "very important people" such as myself.

Doors were held open, wait staff smiled warmly in greeting and a row of identically dressed waiters stood in line holding trays of complimentary beverages (alcohol included – in Germany, the legal drinking age is 16).

Tables were elaborately decorated, though that was not what caught my attention. Hanging on the back of every seat was a black bag that contained an official FIFA World Cup cap, an engraved money clip and a watch complete with a map of Europe on the sterling silver dial and FIFA World Cup engravings on the leather armbands.

The purpose of such gifts was probably to help justify the thousands of dollars most people spent to enjoy this luxury experience.

Another bonus of the experience was when Franz Beckenbauer, German soccer legend, arrived in his helicopter and made his way to the extra-VIP section (yes, we poor souls were mere dirt compared to the treatment celebrities received).

An extensive buffet filled the fans' stomachs before they headed to their seats in the stadium.

My seat in row 14 was an unbeatable location. Besides having a near front-row view, I was just a few feet to the right of the middle line, so I had a clear view of all the intense action.

What happened on the field was unlike anything the fans could have predicted.

When French defender Lilian Thuram fouled Spain in the penalty box in the 28th minute of play, David Villa took the penalty shot and secured Spain its first goal of the match with a clear shot to the lower-left corner of the net.

What seemed a good omen to the overwhelming number of Spain fans was short-lived. The boisterous fans were quieted in the 41st minute when French forward Franck Ribery secured the 1-1 tie that ended the first half.

The Spain fans kept the spirit in the stadium high as the second half began. The second half showed much potential for Spain to score another goal, but as the time wound down and Spain failed again at a tie-breaking shot, thoughts of going into overtime seemed inevitable. Based on how France played in previous games in the cup, Spain just could not lose.

Yet lose is exactly what Spain did. With seven minutes left in the game, French forward Patrick Vieira delivered a fatal header into the corner of the Spanish goal, allowing France fans to sound out Spain fans for the first time in the game.

Spain, not to be outdone, picked up the game right away with attempts to secure themselves a tie and lead into overtime. As Spain made several shots on the French goal, each miss earned a more audible sound of disbelief in the Spain sections.

Spain had almost given up hope when France dealt the final blow. In the second minute of added-on time, Zinedine Zidane showed Spain that this would not be his last game by strategically dodging a Spanish defender and cleanly sending the ball into the net.

Not 15 seconds later the referee blew his whistle to deliver the final message: underdog France would go onto the quarter finals with a 3-1 win over favorite Spain.

The stadium, composed of a vast majority of Spain fans, suddenly seemed void of spirit as the dull cheers of the one corner of France fans attempted to congratulate their team.

As Spain fans, myself included, drifted outside in utter disbelief and confusion over what just happened, the France fans in the streets already started to party.

I let myself be led in the masses to the VIP tent. After receiving sorrowful looks from the staff who saw my face-painted Spanish flag, I enjoyed a late meal before heading home on my four-hour car ride.

My experience at the World Cup is one I will not forget. The excitement of seeing people travel from all over the world to enjoy the action of a common sport was enough to make it worthwhile. Though it was disappointing to see France beat Spain, I am grateful to have experienced it firsthand.

The next World Cup will be held in 2010 in South Africa. Though it is probable I will not be there to witness the craziness, you can bet I will be in Germany watching every game. And this time, Spain will beat France.

WEEKEND SCHEDULE

Friday

MEN'S SOCCER - Campbell, 7 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
WOMEN'S VOLLEYBALL - Niagara, 5 p.m., Brooklyn, N.Y.

Saturday

FOOTBALL - Lafayette, 7 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
MEN'S SOCCER - Rider, 8 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
WOMEN'S VOLLEYBALL - Morgan State, 9 a.m., Brooklyn, N.Y.; St. Francis NY, 1:30 p.m., Brooklyn, N.Y.
MEN'S WATER POLO - Johns Hopkins, 10 a.m., Lewisburg, Pa.; Gannon, 3 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
FIELD HOCKEY - Siena, 3 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
WOMEN'S TENNIS - Bloomsburg Invitational, All Day, Bloomsburg, Pa.
MEN'S GOLF - Colgate Invitational, All Day, Hamilton, N.Y.
WOMEN'S GOLF - Cardinal Classic, All Day, Muncie, Ind.

Sunday

WOMEN'S SOCCER - Penn State, 7 p.m., University Park, Pa.
MEN'S WATER POLO - St. Francis NY, 9 a.m., Lewisburg, Pa
FIELD HOCKEY - Longwood, 1 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
WOMEN'S TENNIS - Bloomsburg Invitational, All Day, Bloomsburg, Pa.
MEN'S GOLF - Colgate Invitational, All Day, Hamilton, N.Y.
WOMEN'S GOLF - Cardinal Classic, All Day, Muncie, Ind.
MEN'S TENNIS - Bloomsburg Invitational, All Day, Bloomsburg, Pa.

This just in...

-MEN'S SOCCER-

The men's soccer team defeated St. Francis (Pa.) 1-0 on Wednesday, thanks to a goal in the last five minutes of regulation by Alex Russo '09. Russo received a pass on a free kick from Joe Mellott '08. Joey Kuterbach '08 stopped six shots to record the shutout, as the team improved its record to 2-1-1.

-FIELD HOCKEY-

The field hockey team lost its first game of the season 2-1 to Towson University Wednesday. Katie Urosevich '07 scored the Bison's lone goal, tipping a shot by Callista Costopoulos '07 past the Tigers' goaltender. Emily Groendyke '07 established a new career high with 13 saves in the loss. The loss dropped the team's record to 2-1.

Women's soccer ties Air Force

By Connie Barko
Staff Writer

The women's soccer team was held scoreless Friday by the Air Force Academy after two overtime periods. The match ended in a 0-0 draw.

One of the highlights of the evening was the Bison defense. Goalkeeper Katie Dry '07 blocked nine shots, with six saves coming in the first period. Although the Falcons had 21 attempts during the game, Air Force was held scoreless for 110 minutes.

Bucknell 0
Air Force 0

"Our team was pleased with our performance on Friday," Dry said. "We struggled to keep the ball out of our own net last year and posting the double overtime shutout against a pretty good offensive team is huge for us."

Although the defensive game was strong, the Bison seemed to struggle on offense. In the second half, they were limited to two shots by Chelsea McGorry '10 and Nicole Marotta '09.

The squad traveled to Colorado Springs, Colo. for a contest against Colorado College Sunday. The Orange and Blue were held scoreless again, recording a 5-0 loss to the Tigers. They are now 1-2-1 on the season.

Colo. College 5
Bucknell 0

"Colorado College was a solid team, they were fit and fast," Marotta said. "Unfortunately, we did not play well against them. We just weren't connecting and couldn't seem to string passes together. We as a team need to learn to work through those times of adversity."

During the contest, Colorado took nine shots on goal compared to the Bison's one. The Tigers also led in corner kicks 6-1, but committed more fouls by a margin of 12-7.

The first goal of the game came at the 11 minutes 12 seconds mark when Lisa Balsma of Colorado received a pass from Amara Wilson.

At 19:54 Emily Beans scored during a one-on-one opportunity to put the Tigers up 2-0.

In the 45th minute, Kelly Lavoie added another goal from the top of the box.

The final two scoring plays were made in the second half by Balsma. She was assisted by Lavioie at 48:01 and by Kaitlin Okamoto almost three minutes later.

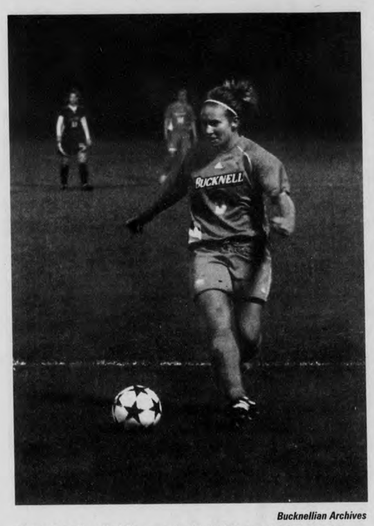
Although she relinquished three goals, Dry also had three saves. In the second half, Kathryn Sutton '10 recorded a single save while allowing two goals.

This was her first time playing in a collegiate contest. Lindsey Appenzoller '08 was the only player to take a shot on goal for the Bison.

The Orange and Blue will hit the road against Penn State at University Park, Pa. Sunday. It will be a rematch of their 2005 NCAA tournament first round game.

"It will be a challenge," Dry said. "But I think our team will be ready. Especially coming off of our 5-0 loss to Colorado, we'll be looking for a little redemption."

"We struggled to keep the ball out of our own net last year and posting the double overtime shutout against a pretty good offensive team is huge for us."
-Katie Dry '07



Bucknellian Archives

Krista Lee Gentile '08 controls the ball in a game last season. The women are coming off a championship season and hope to repeat again.

Men's soccer drowns St. Bonaventure

By John Mlodzinski
Staff Writer

In just the third game of his career, Nathan LaGrave '10 scored two goals, propelling the Bison to a 3-1 victory against St. Bonaventure Sunday.

LaGrave scored his first goal just under four minutes into the game, when he received a pass from Matt Hittson '09 and deposited it over the head of Bonnie goalkeeper, Massimo Collu-Marchese.

Bucknell 3
St. Bonaventure 0

St. Bonaventure had two great chances to tie the game, but Joey Kuterbach '08 made two amazing plays and turned away both shots, one of which was on a breakaway.

Twenty-two minutes into the half LaGrave headed a free kick from Joe Mellot '08 past Collu-Marchese for his second goal. The 2-0 lead would not last, as Josh Henderson of St. Bonaventure scored in the 25th minute.

With less than five minutes to go in the game, Alex Russo '09 provided the Bison with an insurance goal. Hittson found Russo streaking past the Bonnies' defense and hit him with a pass that Russo put into the back of the net.

For his outstanding two-goal performance Sunday, LaGrave was named Patriot League Player of the Week. It was the first time this year that a Bison player was given the award. LaGrave was asked about how it felt to score the first two goals on his collegiate career.

"I hadn't thought about them being 'the first of my career' until after the match when [Head] Coach [Brendan] Nash mentioned something about it," LaGrave said. "I was just excited to play and win at home. The whole team got up for the victory and that was something great."

LaGrave's teammates and Nash only expect him to improve.

"We have high expectations for Nathan, but he has lots of room for improvement," Nash said. "So even though he had two goals, he can still improve. That being said, we were very happy to see a two-goal performance. Nathan was recruited to do just that – score goals. So hopefully this will give him some confidence, as well as his teammates gaining some confidence in him."

LaGrave hopes his team benefits from his performance and continues to put up big offensive numbers.

"Hopefully, we'll score a lot more goals!" LaGrave said.

The last time the Bison scored three goals in a game was September 2004, when the team won consecutive games against the New Jersey Institute of Technology (NJIT) (3-2) and Army (3-1).

The NJIT game was also the last time a Bison player scored twice in one game, when Scott Visnic '06 tallied two goals. Nash was happy with his team's performance, but was quick to note that they were not perfect.

"Even though that was our best offensive performance the last two years, I think everyone realizes we have room for improvement," Nash said. "The team has high expectations for this season and they know we need to play better to meet those expectations. However, whenever you get a win, it can be a sign of good things to come."

The Bison will return home for the Geisinger Hospital/Days Inn Bucknell Invitational, which takes place today and Saturday.

"The team has high expectations for this season and they know we need to play better to meet those expectations. However, whenever you get a win, it can be a sign of good things to come."
—Brendan Nash, head coach*

Ryan Shovlin—The Bucknellian

Nathan LaGrave '10 battles for possession in their game against St. Bonaventure. LaGrave scored two goals in the match.

Bison Award Winners

Field Hockey
Patriot League Defensive Player of the Week: Steph Graf '09
Patriot League Goal Keeper of the Week: Emily Groendyke '07
Patriot League Rookie of the Week: Sarah Ebright '10
Patriot League Honorable Mention: Katie Urosevich '07

Women's Soccer
Owl Eyes Classic All-Tournament Team: Jennifer Dervarics '09, Nicole Marotta '09, Kelly Boswell '09
Patriot League Honorable Mention: Jennifer Dervarics '09, Nicole Marotta '09

Volleyball
Patriot League Honorable Mention and Fairfield Tournament All-Tournament Team: Shannon Pitsch '09

Not too long ago, you chose a small college in the middle of cow country. And, wisely, it chose you, too.

Now go ahead and make another good choice.

For dinner.

The Inn at New Berlin is a short, 10-minute drive from the Bucknell campus, on scenic country roads. It's a perfect distraction from writing papers – or grading them.

Students and faculty love our relaxed atmosphere and our award-winning dining, while parents appreciate the luxurious lodging during parents' weekend and graduations. But don't wait till then to discover us!

Dine. Shop. Stay.

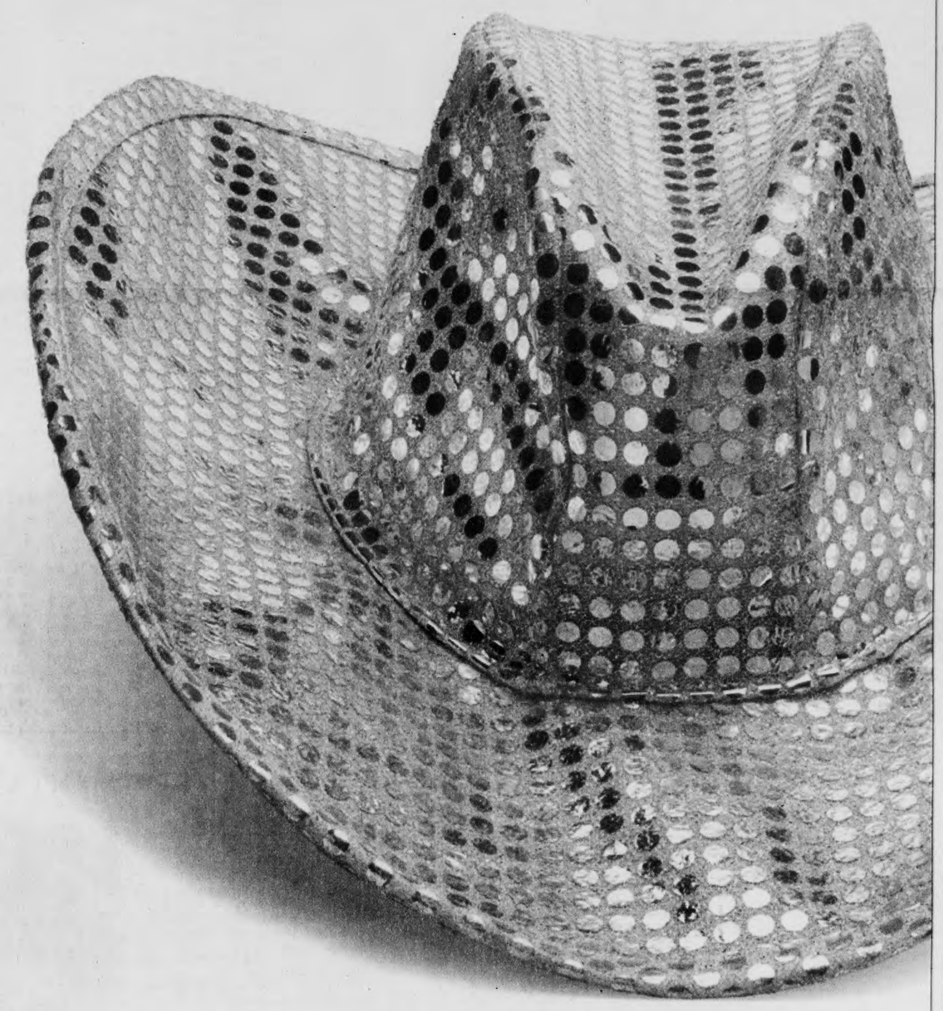
570-966-0321 InnAtNewBerlin.com

Nancy's Nu-Wave Salon
..look your best
10% Discount with Student ID
524-2315
www.nancysnuwave.com
Main Street (Rte 45) - Montandon

Marimba soloist
Dog walker
Urban cowgirl*

Learn more about Erin Towery and tell us more about you. Visit pwc.com/bringit.

Your life. You can bring it with you.



*connectedthinking

PricewaterhouseCoopers

© 2006 PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP. All rights reserved. "PricewaterhouseCoopers" refers to PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP a Delaware limited liability partnership) or, as the context requires, the PricewaterhouseCoopers global network or other member firms of the network, each of which is a separate and independent legal entity. "connectedthinking is a trademark of PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (US). We are proud to be an Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity Employer

An American at the U.N.

A student learns what it means to be a global citizen

By Janna Shapiro
Writer

Courtesy of Janna Shapiro

Janna Shapiro '08 sits at her desk at the Global Policy Forum (GPF) in New York City. Shapiro spent her summer writing articles and meeting Security Council ambassadors as an intern at the United Nations.

Like many University students, I returned from winter break with massive anxiety about finding the "perfect" summer internship.

The application process was harsh, but eight essays and three brutal interviews later, I received a confirmation letter.

"You can't change the world in three months," my mother said, playfully mocking me. I was off to have my silly little ideals shattered at The Global Policy Forum (GPF) at the United Nations (U.N.) in New York City.

I arrived on the first day at U.N. headquarters in my stepmother's black pantsuit, which was about two sizes too big.

I still maintain the shoes were killer, but the doorman, Neil, must have disagreed; he took one look at me and said, "First day?" He continued without pause, "Breathe, sweetie."

So I was a deer caught in the headlights, which was nothing new for me. I spent that morning on the subway memorizing the pictures and names of the ambassadors on the U.N. Security Council. Stick an "I love Kofi Annan" sticker on my forehead and I was the perfect nerd.

As it turned out, my little panic attack was fully justified.

After being thoroughly searched and put through the metal detector a humiliating four times, I hobbled up to the third floor GPF office.

The manic-looking interns were buzzing around, printing, typing and yelling curse words in foreign languages across the sterile, white office.

I squeaked a timid "I don't know if this is where I'm supposed to be."

An irritated yet sympathetic French woman responded, "You must be the American."

You guessed it: U.S. citizens are not exactly the most loved at the U.N. You have to prove yourself.

I later learned that I was the youngest of an intern staff consisting of Philippa (Australia), Nolizwe (Zimbabwe), Toby (Germany), Terry (Ireland) and bosses Celine (Switzerland) and Katarina (Sweden). You better believe I was glad I memorized those pictures earlier.

The international staff made sure I quickly learned my place as a global citizen.

My work was comprised of many afternoon meetings with Security Council ambassadors and non-governmental organization (NGO) representatives.

Writing articles concerning the possibility that the United States oversteps its bounds and acts in a manner consistent with imperialism consumed my mornings.

The first few weeks consisted of articles sent back to me with more red marks than printer ink and many lost debates highlighting my own intolerance. It turns out that even a certain unnamed liberal saw the world revolving around the United States. I had been "out-liberaled."

As members of the U.N. team, we were invited to panel discussions, Security Council meetings, awards ceremonies, book signings, benefits, dinners and even special World Cup screenings at the U.N. missions.

True to my nerdy origins, I flashed my U.N. badge with pride and eventually bought a few suits that fit.

The four other interns and I became an inseparable family.

Philippa showed me a relaxed and vulgar Australian sense of humor, Toby taught me about the dissolution of German nationalism, Nolizwe explained life as an "African under the will of western powers" and Terry taught me to cheer for soccer like the dual British-U.S. citizen I am.

I showed them how New Yorkers celebrate on the town.

My experiences this summer made me more realistic about achieving the global peace that my idealistic side craves. They also changed my view about the world.

Before you think I came out of the internship in full "Legally Blonde" fashion as the confident veteran intern, know that I got stuck in the revolving door on the way out.

Learning about health this summer

Courtesy of www.nih.gov

The National Institute of Health in Maryland provides paid internships to select high school, college and graduate students each year. Meredith Chambers '09 spent her summer working in the Developmental Genetics Laboratory.

By Meredith Chambers
Contributing Writer

If someone told me last year at this time that I would be spending my summer with top-notch scientists at one of the leading national science institutes in the world and get paid for it, I would not have believed it. This summer, I had the amazing opportunity to secure a paid internship with the National Institutes of Health (NIH) and work in the National Institute of Neurological Disorders and Stroke (NINDS) in the Developmental Genetics Laboratory.

My parents, now lawyers, used to work at the NIH and had interns work for them during the summer, which was how I first heard about the program. I grew up around science and am majoring in biology. I hope to attend medical school to become a pediatrician.

The summer internship program at the NIH gives high school, college and graduate students "an opportunity to spend a summer working side-by-side with some of the leading scientists in the world in an environment devoted exclusively to biomedical research," according to www.nih.gov. "NIH consists of the new 240-bed Mark O. Hatfield Clinical Research Center and more than 1,200 laboratories located on the main campus in Bethesda, MD as well as in Baltimore and Frederick, MD; Research Triangle Park, NC; Phoenix, AZ; Hamilton, MT; and Detroit, MI."

The NIH hosted activities throughout the summer so students did not have to work in laboratories all day. The NIH encourages their employees to get to know the interns and help them become part of the scientific community. This helped us learn more and get to know the NIH better.

The NIH Office of Intramural Training and Education sponsored a wide range of events including a lecture series featuring distinguished NIH investigators and visiting speakers, informal talks about training for research careers and a Trainee Poster Day at the end of the session.

Poster Day allowed students from different labs to present the work they did during the summer. Interns had the chance to discuss their projects informally with peers and with other members of the NIH scientific community.

In addition to participating in the annual Poster Day, students could qualify for the Exceptional Summer Student Awards. The awards were given to students who produced an outstanding poster and accompanied it with a knowledgeable presentation to the NIH investigators. I was fortunate enough to be presented with one of these prestigious awards, and I hope to carry on the tradition next summer.

The interns also met informally to hang out and get to know each other. I enjoyed learning about their different scientific backgrounds. College students from across the United States came to work at the Bethesda and Rockville campus in Maryland.

For those of you who are interested in applying, this biomedical research program is only for students 16 years old and older who are currently enrolled at least half-time in high school or an accredited U.S. college or university. To be eligible for the internship, candidates must be U.S. citizens or permanent residents of the United States.

While some interns arrive early in the summer and some stay late into October, students must remain for a minimum of eight weeks. Many students begin working at the NIH in May or June. A student's individual stipend depends on the level of education received.

Students submit their applications and are selected by individual laboratories at the NIH on a rolling admission basis from November to May. The applications are then reviewed and selections are made by scientists in the Institutes and Centers of the NIH.

Each student is assigned to a different laboratory or branch of the NIH (except in the case of the Clinical Center where the labs are much larger) according to the student's preference. I love genetics and was put into the Developmental Genetics Lab. I worked alongside my mentor, Dr. Joe Nielsen, and learned from other scientists working in the lab as well.

I began work in May, soon after classes ended for my first year. I worked on the main campus in my hometown of Bethesda, Md., so it was very easy to commute to work every day. I worked from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., and I worked overtime depending on what activities I had each day. While many interns lived in the Maryland area, out-of-towners had to find housing in the Washington, D.C., and metropolitan area.

I took on the task of helping my mentor with experiments he was currently conducting. I learned a number of different laboratory techniques in the process. When I presented my data at the poster session to my friends, they were in disbelief at all the work I had done. I would not have understood all of it at the beginning of the summer, but now I can happily say I am skilled at gel electrophoresis and dissecting mouse brains.

I had a valuable experience at the NIH that I will treasure forever, especially because of the things I learned and the people I met. I never dreamt I would spend my summer doing research and dissecting rat and mouse brains for fun. It was very rewarding for me. I want to do more research in the future as I learn more about science and eventually apply for medical school. I hope to be invited back for the summer of 2007 so I can observe new techniques and gain additional tips in the field of science.

For anyone who plans to study science or for those interested in anything I mentioned, I encourage you to participate in an internship similar to my research opportunity. It really exemplifies science in the real world. Such an experience could help you decide what you want to do with a career in science.

This job experience, in addition to a trip to Cancún in June, made this summer one to remember.

WANTED

Talented Individuals Interested in Pursuing an M.B.A.

Enter the Simon School 2nd Annual Online Business Simulation Competition for the chance to win a full-tuition scholarship and other scholarships!

On September 25; 2006, the Simon School will launch an online scholarship competition that uses a business simulation program as a unique method of identifying superior M.B.A. candidates. The winner will receive a full-tuition scholarship to the Simon School to be used within two years of the initial award.

For more information, rules and regulations, call (585) 275-3736 or visit www.simon.rochester.edu/scholarships/competition.aspx
Participants must register and remit the $35 entrance fee by September 25, 2006. No late entrance will be permitted.

SIMON GRADUATE SCHOOL OF BUSINESS University of Rochester Where Thinkers Become Leaders

CUSTOMIZED SKINCARE
FOR THE TREATMENT OF ACNE

Each of these product lines allow us to meet the individual needs of our patients.

OBAGI La Roche Posay SkinCeuticals

- Vitamin Supplements — Healthy Skin provides internal skin care by enhancing the body's natural ability to provide nutrients.
- Blue Light Treatments — This special blue light simply and painlessly kills bacteria in your skin.
- Intense Pulsed Light — This treatment offers improvement in pore size and acne scars.
- Chemical Peels — Refines skins' texture and simulates skins natural renewal process.
- Microdermabrasion — Gently exfoliates the skin and leaves a smoother texture, promoting the growth of healthy new skin cells.

CENTER FOR SKIN HEALTH
Ernest Normington, M.D., FACS
210 IPM Road in Lewisburg • (570) 524-7777 • www.drnormington.com

An easy CHOICE to make

The University's residential program gets a completely new design

By Marlee Sayen
Senior Writer

There are a few misconceptions regarding the University's CHOICE (Choosing Healthy Options In Community Environments) residential program that should be cleared up.

1. It is not a club, such as CALVIN & HOBBES; it is a residential option open to all undergraduate students at the University.

2. Unlike the residential colleges on campus, which focus on first-year students, students are allowed in CHOICE housing for all four years.

3. Just because they do not drink alcohol does not mean CHOICE students do not go out. In fact, almost every member of CHOICE interviewed clarified that, stating again and again, "CHOICE kids are not anti-social."

Why do members of CHOICE feel this is the label they are given? If they are right, what can be done to change such a generalization?

Members of the program do not worry too much regarding the CHOICE "stereotype"; after all, they are thrilled with the "choice" they made to live where they do.

"Just because we live in a substance-free dorm doesn't mean we don't like to have fun and party too," said Lauren Hall '10, a member of CHOICE.

Other members agree.

"[CHOICE residents] are fun-loving students who are involved in tons of activities, organizations, sports and Greek Life," said Amanda Allen '08, a CHOICE resident assistant (RA).

Justine Daggett '09 verifies this point.

"We hate homework and classes just like the rest of campus. We do not spend all of our time studying," Daggett said.

The idea for CHOICE arose when a group of students decided to take a proactive role in providing and improving substance-free living options at the University. The program stresses that it was designed for students, by students (although administrators gave initial approval and assistance).

According to the CHOICE page on the University Web site, the program provides "an interactive living-learning environment centered on a theme of personal and community health and well-being."

Melanie Caughey '07 has been a member of CHOICE since her sophomore year.

"I was in the Arts Residential College my first year, but I made some friends in the CHOICE program, and I had a lot of fun," Caughey said. "When I applied to be an RA, I had working with CHOICE first-year students as a top priority. The next year I became a member of the program and an RA."

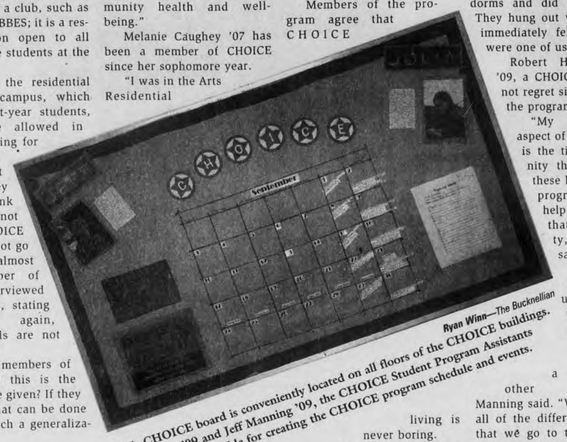
In previous years, CHOICE housing had a "CHOICE fellow" representative on each hall who was responsible for organizing events.

Since the program began in 2000, it has doubled from 150 members each year to over 300 in 2005-6. As a result of the growth, the CHOICE program was restructured during the summer.

The updated version of CHOICE housing is led by two Student Program Assistants (SPAs), Julia Fuchs '09 and Jeff Manning '09, who are responsible for organizing all CHOICE activities. While Fuchs lives in Harris Hall, working primarily with first-year students, Manning resides in Kress Hall, interacting mostly with sophomores, juniors and seniors.

Fuchs and Manning work under the supervision of Liz Yates, the Residential Life Coordinator (RLC), who refers to CHOICE as the University's "hidden treasure."

Members of the program agree that CHOICE living is never boring.



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

This CHOICE board is conveniently located on all floors of the CHOICE buildings. Julia Fuchs '09 and Jeff Manning '09, the CHOICE Student Program Assistants (SPAs) are responsible for creating the CHOICE program schedule and events.

"The residents have a lot of fun," Caughey said. "There are students with a wide range of interests, majors and backgrounds. It is like any other residence hall on campus."

Fuchs and Manning have filled the CHOICE program's calendar with events until the end of the semester.

"CHOICE has so many events it's ridiculous," Daggett said. "Julia and Jeff have booked nearly every weekend from now until the end of the semester with activities."

Some activities include nighttime scavenger hunts, ice cream socials, canoeing, snow tubing, volleyball tournaments, annual trips to the corn maze and a holiday semi-formal dance.

"Jeff and I have so much fun in our jobs. We both had amazing experiences in CHOICE as first-year students, and we want to make sure that current and future CHOICE residents do as well. I wouldn't trade my job for the world," Fuchs said.

The rumor that CHOICE students live in their own "bubble" is discredited immediately.

"Students on campus who don't live in CHOICE but don't want to drink are welcome to hang out with us," Daggett said. "Last year my hall 'adopted' a few students who were stuck in party dorms and did not like it. They hung out with us and immediately felt like they were one of us."

Robert Hallinan Jr. '09, a CHOICE RA, does not regret signing up for the program.

"My favorite aspect of the program is the tight community that forms in these halls and the programs that help to facilitate that community," Hallinan said.

Manning stresses the uniqueness of the CHOICE program.

"We are closer than a lot of the other programs," Manning said. "We bond over all of the different programs that we go to together. You will find CHOICE halls all going to a movie together or out to dinner, not because an RA made us, but because we want to."

The bond students create are friendships for life.

"You can still find my first-year hall eating lunch or dinner together in the cafeteria," Fuchs said. "Even though we each found and formed our own circle of friends, the people I met in CHOICE have become some of my best friends, and I know I will still be telling stories to my grandchildren one day of all the fun we had."

"Each year I've been involved, things only get better," Caughey said. "I hope that in the future other universities will create similar living environments. CHOICE has been a huge part of my Bucknell experience and I am really going to miss it when I graduate."

For more information on the CHOICE program or how to get involved, contact Fuchs at jjf018@bucknell.edu or Manning at jpm051@bucknell.edu.

Mer Cares

By Meredith Chambers
Contributing Writer

This column is yours, readers, and is for your benefit. A sanctuary if you will. A column for anything and everything from schoolwork to alcohol and drugs. If you want someone to talk to about friends or family issues, I am your go-to girl.

My name is Meredith Chambers and whenever one of my friends asks me for advice, I always help them see both sides of the issue. I give it to them straight so then they can make an informed decision.

I know the types of problems many students run into during their first year at college. In fact I dealt with many of them and made many mistakes, even regrettable ones. I wish I had someone then to help me along the way.

This column will give me the opportunity to help advise you BEFORE you make the same mistakes I did, if at all possible.

Maybe it is too late to help, but then why not share your story so that others can learn from you?

Sounds corny, I know, but I love helping people and I am truly a people person. I figured this would be a good outlet for me to practice my writing and to help those of you who are going back and forth on a problem, i.e. those folks who cannot make decisions.

I want to be your "Dear Abby" or whoever the new person of the week is in local papers. Those small sections in the newspaper are the ones we all like to read. We love reading about other people's problems so we can be part of the growing up process that we all live through and learn from.

So, readers, let me in on all of your deepest secrets and problems. Be brutally honest. There is nothing I have not seen, heard or experienced throughout my first year of college. Your questions will be printed anonymously.

Feel free to ask me anything, from what you should tell your best friend when he/she comes back excessively drunk again to what you should do about your roommate's boyfriend who keeps sleeping over in your double. Maybe you are an RA whose underage friends put you into a tough situation when they drink in your presence.

In addition to answering your questions, I will let you in on some first-year student do's and don'ts, great places for first dates in Lewisburg and how to get involved on campus if homesickness is weighing you down.

Please send your questions to marc001@bucknell.edu, with subject line reading "advice" or you may send a letter via campus mail to box number C1099.

I look forward to hearing from you!

SASA to create cricket team

By Raaja Qadri
Contributing Writer

Like football in the United States, people are usually crazy about cricket in most parts of the world, especially Pakistan, India, Sri Lanka, Australia and England. Cricket lovers make it a point not to miss a single ball of the matches.

During the cricket season everything can be missed but the matches. Even here at the University, one out of four times that I poke my head into an Indian or Pakistani person's room, I find him or her glued to the computer watching a match clip or listening to the commentary of a match.

For those of you who are beginners or who have no idea what cricket is, let me give you a brief introduction of how the game is played.

Cricket is similar to baseball in many ways. It is played between two teams of 11 players each. The oval field used for matches has a pitch in the center with wickets on both sides (which is where most of the action takes place!). The teams take turns batting and fielding. Two members of the batting side, called "batsmen," take the field at a time, while members of the fielding side take turns bowling the ball to them.

Each batsman's aim is to prevent the ball from hitting his wicket and, when possible, hit the ball far enough from the fielders to allow him to score runs.

The goal of the fielding side is to prevent the batsmen from scoring runs, and to get them out by hitting the wickets with the ball, catching the ball before it hits the ground or preventing the batsmen to score. When all batsmen are out, the teams switch sides. The team that scores the most by the end of the match wins.

At the University, there is a cricket interest group that exists under the South Asian Students Association (SASA). It has not been given the status of an official club sport as of yet. People usually play cricket on the weekends and have a lot of fun. Nadir Sharif, a sub-senior and representative of the group, encourages students to come and join the matches.

> "I would like the students to give cricket a try—to immerse themselves in the sport, put aside the stereotypes for some time and discover the spirit of cricket that fans across the world possess."
> —Nadir Sharif, member of SASA

"I would like the students to give cricket a try—to immerse themselves in the sport, put aside the stereotypes for some time and discover the spirit of cricket that fans across the world possess," Sharif said.

Sharif also commented on the effort it takes to learn an unfamiliar sport.

"Learning a new sport is always difficult, but if a person is really interested then it does not take long before the 'it's so boring' feeling goes away," Sharif said. "Who would want to sit and watch a round of golf if one did not have the slightest idea of how to hold a club? I appreciate golf and football and I don't think it is very difficult to give cricket a chance."

This sport can bring people of different backgrounds together and give them a chance to learn and experience something that they may not off-campus.

"Since the age of six, I have been playing cricket for clubs back in India, where the sport is more like a religion," Abhay Agarwal '09 said. "I think starting a club of this order will only enhance the diversity of the University, which is one of the components of the Plan for Bucknell. It would also give me a chance to stay in touch with this passion of billions of people and help educate some more."

The next cricket World Cup will be held in the Caribbean for the first time in the sport's history, and fans from all corners of the world will come to watch the matches. This could increase the sport's popularity in North America.

"Cricket is such a popular game outside of America," Rishav Chakravarti '10 said. "When you talk about the World Cup, people automatically think about soccer or cricket. We want to educate people in America as well. If you come to our practices, I guarantee you will not regret it!"

If you would like to play cricket or learn more about it, please contact Nadir Sharif at nsharif@bucknell.edu.

Do you like to eat at restaurants?

For free?

Write for Feats!

E-mail jjf018@

Nancy's Nu-Wave Salon
look your best
Sept/Oct Special
One Hour Massage $35
Main Street (Rte 45) Mantandon
524-2315
www.nancysnuwave.com

CatmanDo
Handyman Services
Specializing in small home repair jobs:
Custom Carpentry
Painting
Light construction
Greg H Mathias
570-524-4724
Free Estimates Fully insured

COLDWELL BANKER
PENN ONE REAL ESTATE

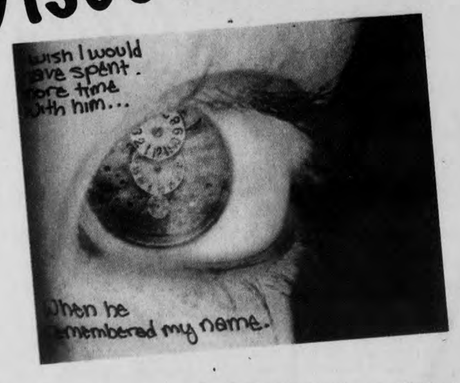
Thank You, Bucknell!!

For thirty years of calling Bucknell and Lewisburg home.

Susan Warner-Mills, Sales Associate
Competence, Integrity, Service

524-7500; swm@coldwellbanker.com

Discovering PostSecret.com



By Lily Beauvilliers
Arts & Entertainment Editor

I had 30 minutes between classes and not a lot to do, so I started up my computer and opened a web browser. After checking my inbox (miraculously empty), I was at a loss. How to entertain myself before heading off to calculus class. Then I remembered a web site a few people in the Bucknellian newsroom had been raving about—PostSecret. A Google search quickly led me to the official PostSecret website: http://postsecret.blogspot.com, and an obsession was born.

If you have never been to PostSecret, here is the lowdown. PostSecret is a self-proclaimed "ongoing community art project," according to the web site. Individuals are encouraged to send postcards that express true, unrevealed personal secrets to a Maryland address. A portion of these postcards are then uploaded onto the PostSecret blog. For those who do not know, a "blog" is simply a "web log" — basically a web-based journal.

At first glance, PostSecret's inner workings are quite a mystery. The founder of the Web site identifies himself as "Frank," the process for selecting postcards is not explained and visitors will not find information about the place to which they mail their postcards. (A home? A business? A strange hippie commune?)

Lucky for us, PostSecret is rapidly becoming a cultural phenomenon, with plenty of coverage all over the internet. According to USA Today, 13345 Copper Ridge Road is the home of PostSecret's creator, a "typical suburban husband" (by his own account), Frank Warren.

Warren originally started the site as a place to display postcards he recieved after handing out blank ones at a Washington, D.C., metro station. Although he stopped handing out the postcards about a year ago, as many as 30,000 have entered his mailbox, according to USA Today.

Why is PostSecret so popular?

"It fills a much-needed hole in society," said Ben Sirolly '07, a long-time PostSecret fan. "Our society has come to a point where we are so surrounded by people and information that we fail to connect on a personal level. [PostSecret] allows for a very intimate, yet anonymous connection that so many people are missing and longing for."

Warren does not just encourage people to reveal secrets—he tries to make the Web site therapeutic and allows it to impact people's lives. The site is covered in links to another site, www.hopeline.com. According to USA Today, Warren has volunteered for this suicide hotline in the past.

> "You can tell the postcards are not just secrets ... they're art."
> —Mandy Hart '07

The PostSecret site includes an e-mail from a girl who thanks Warren for pointing her to the hotline number (1.800.SUICIDE).

"I talked with someone [from the hotline] for two hours," she said, "and I truly feel that they saved my life."

PostSecret has become more than just a fascinating Web site. One PostSecret book is already available and two more are slated to be released, one in November and the other in January. Along with images of the postcards Warren uploads onto the Web site weekly, the book contains e-mails people send him in response to particular cards. These e-mails, posted on the site directly below their corresponding cards, are often as touching as the secrets themselves.

"I can certainly assure you that after reading your postcard, I am inspired to lead a more peaceful life. And maybe in doing so, I'll be able to save or spark hope in someone else," one e-mail from last week said.

The Reading Public Museum in Reading, Pa. has been sponsoring a PostSecret exhibit, which will be open through Oct. 8. Mandy Hart '07 visited the exhibit.

"The PostSecret exhibit was an amazing experience," Hart said. "The amount of secrets was ideal, you can read them all in about an hour. One part of the exhibit had a sheet of plexiglass with the postcards inside suspended at eye level, so that the viewers could see both sides of the card."

A postcard may seem to be a rather awkward medium with which to bare one's soul. Slava Yastremski, associate professor of Russian, shared his thoughts on this concept.

"The postcard is an open letter," Yastremski said. "The words and the pictures come together to compose an open text which anyone can read."

He explained that it is impossible for a reader to know exactly what a specific postcard is meant to convey.

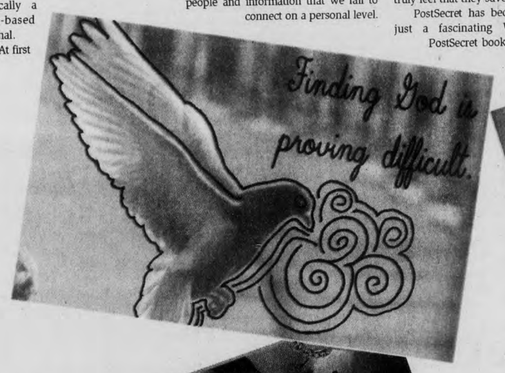
"The postcard is open for interpretation," Yastremski said. "It will be an individual secret of every reader of this text."

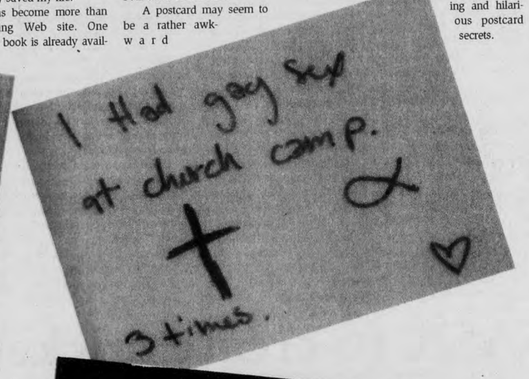
There is also some question as to whether every postcard on PostSecret reveals a real, untold truth.

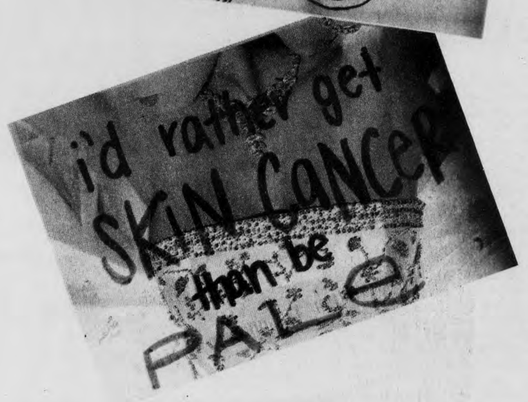
"You can't help but think that a number are practical jokes or people just seeing if they can get something on the internet," Sirolly said. "But the ones that are sincere shine through."

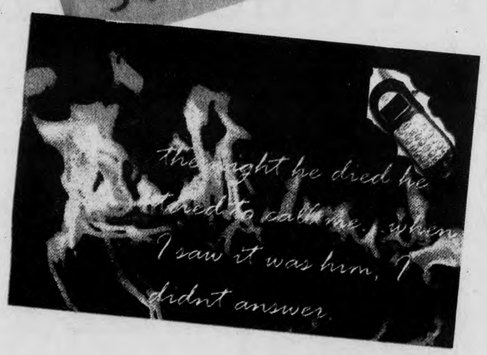
"You can tell the postcards are not just secrets ... they're art," Hart said.

In any case, I plan to check back every Monday for the latest batch of racy, touching and hilarious postcard secrets.









All postcards were printed in the 2005 book PostSecret.

Tell us your darkest secrets.

Tell us anything. Funny, bitter, sexy, depressing. Secrets from childhood, secrets from yesterday.
This is your chance to get it all off your chest.
Design your own postcard, write a secret on it and send it in anonymously to
The Bucknellian, C-3952, through campus mail.
Entries will be published toward the end of the semester.

September 15, 2006

The Bucknellian

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

Volume 138, Number 3 | Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue | www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Giving peace a chance with dance

Read about the University Dance Company performances in China over the summer.

See page A10

'Elephant in the Room' promotes diversity dialogue

By Ahmed Kodouda
Contributing Writer

In an attempt to promote inter-group dialogue, "The Elephant in the Room" seeks to facilitate discussion about "hard to talk about" issues at the University.

"The Elephant in the Room" is a student-initiated program that holds sessions throughout the semester. Each session is a facilitated discussion with 8 to 12 students taking part, representing two or more social, racial or cultural identity groups.

Every week the students come together to explore the issues that exist between members taking part in the discussion.

"Complaining about it doesn't do anything," Heather Riebeling '07 said. "It is important for us to make people who are from different minority groups become comfortable on campus. Exposing people to different types of diversity promotes open-mindedness."

The groups hold 90-minute sessions over the course of 10 weeks each semester. The sessions start next week.

Each dialogue is aimed at discussing an issue that is faced by a small or large part of the University community. These sessions include race, LGBT/straight, socioeconomic class, International/United States, interfaith/inter-religious and gender discussions.

"After a process of defining and identifying the issues

See ELEPHANT page A2

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

2,997 flags were planted outside the Elaine Langone Center in memory of those who died on 9/11.

University commemorates 9/11

Vigil goes 'beyond unison'

By Jeremy O'Sullivan
Contributing Writer

On September the 11th, students and faculty came together to remember the victims of the 9/11 terrorists attacks in a unifying candlelight vigil held outside of the Elaine Langone Center.

The event was planned and organized by Bucknell Student Government President Adam Weinberg '07 and the University Chaplin Reverend Ian Oliver.

"Weinberg did a great job of organizing the event. I'm quite impressed," said Ben Sirolly '07, president of the campus democrats.

Dominic Rupprecht '07, president of the bucknell university conservatives club, speculated that the vigil's crowd doubled in size from the preceding year.

The event was supported by the Bucknell Student Government, the

See VIGIL page A2

Ahmed speaks about Islam

By Ashley Elizabeth Hook
Contributing Writer

American University Professor Akbar Ahmed, a leading authority on contemporary Islam, spoke on improving interfaith dialogue at the September 11 ceremony Monday evening.

Ahmed, a former ambassador, was introduced by Provost Mary DeCredico and President Brian C. Mitchell, who reminded the audience that the University lost four alumni in the attacks on the Twin Towers.

In his lecture, named "Islam Under Siege," Ahmed focused on the negative media attention brought to the Muslim community in the aftermath of the terrorist attacks. He said the most popular names for God in Islam are translations of the words "compassion" and "mercy," which embody the rudimental con-

See AHMED page A5

University strives to diversify

By Emilie Linsenmeyer
Contributing Writer

The popular college search tool the Princeton Review recently ranked the University #14 on their list of homogeneous colleges in the country, leaving some to wonder what this means in terms of actual diversity on campus.

There are approximately 570 students at the University that self-identify as African American, Asian, Hispanic, Native American or multi-racial and just over 100 international students. Admissions is diligently working to increase these numbers, but the task can be harrowing at times.

Admissions is looking for students with a lot of potential across all racial, ethnic and socioeconomic borders. The goal is to create an environment that fosters discussion and an accurate representation of the real world in accordance with the Strategic Plan for Bucknell.

Strategy Three of the Plan for Bucknell states: "Bucknell will adopt an unwavering commitment to diversity in all its forms. This commitment will be carried out within a civil, supportive and nurturing environment of open exchange."

Admissions strives to find the most talented, diverse group of students they can.

See DIVERSITY page A2

Grandstands to be completed this fall

By Michelle Laxer
News Editor

Improvements to the West Fields Complex continue with the construction of a new spectator facility between Graham Field and the Varsity Soccer Field. The 4.4 million dollar project started in May and it is scheduled to be completed in November.

The state-of-the-art facility will consist of a double-sided grandstand building to be used by both fields, seating approximately 600 spectators for each field.

There will be a concession stand, a storage room to house home team equipment, a filming platform on the third story, a changing room for game officials, two game time team rooms, a first aid room, and an elevated glass structure which will be home to a press box and an alumni relations area. A visitor's stand for the soccer field is being constructed. There will be a new scoreboard.

Funding for the project came from an anonymous donor, who provided the entire $4.4 million to the University earlier this year.

"There has always been an interest in improving the [West Fields] facility," Chief Communications Officer Pete Mackey said. With the money available, the improvements were able to begin.

The University hired Zartman Construction, Inc. to work on the grandstand building this summer.

Zartman, a regional construction company, has worked with the University in the past and has done work on the Kenneth Langone Athletics and Recreation Center (KLARC). H2L2, an architectural company from Philadelphia, was hired by the University to help in the construction. H2L2 has worked with the University in the past.

The grandstand building is Phase III in the University's plan to improve its athletic facilities. The West Fields project began after the KLARC

See FIELDS page A4

Tulane students make University their home

By Nilanjana Saha
News Editor

After Katrina ravaged New Orleans last fall, the University temporarily admitted 20 displaced students from Tulane. A year later, eight of them still call the University their home.

It was first-year move-in day when the president of Tulane University called for an immediate evacuation. They had two choices: go back home with their parents, or take a bus to Jackson State University (JSU) in Jackson, Miss. with other students who had already moved in.

"We just thought it was a routine procedure. We really did not know the gravity of the hurricane and assumed it was all temporary," said Lauren Kushner '09.

Stephanie Joong '10 and Michael Tonetti '09 both decided to take the bus to JSU. They spent the next few days in the JSU gym, sharing the floor with at least 500 other evacuees. Blackouts were a frequent problem and running water became a luxury.

"Falling asleep was always hard with so many people," Joong said.

"[It was] smelly and hot," Tonetti said. "Originally, I thought [the evacuation] was going to be for three days. All along, I was ready to go back and get started."

During evacuation, students left most of their belongings at Tulane. They were told to take a change of clothing and valuable items with them.

"[It was] devastating. All my stuff was down there. When I went back home, I seriously had nothing to my name," Kushner said.

When students found out that Tulane had closed for the semester, they frantically tried to catch flights back home.

"It was hard trying to find a flight back home. Everybody was trying to get out. I was one of the last ones left at JSU," Joong said. After five days, Joong finally managed to fly out to Dallas and later return home.

Upon returning home,

See TULANE page A4

ROTC regimen

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

John Hoy Matthews '09 and Matthew David McKeehan '09 practice field stripping their M-16's under two minutes as part of their ROTC training.

INSIDE THIS ISSUE

OPINIONS — Admissions officers are not the only people who should be working to improve diversity on campus. A6

NEWS — Meet Scott Teargarden '10 and the other newly elected representatives of the Class of 2010. A5

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT — Singer-songwriter Tim Blane entertained listeners on guitar and piano Friday at Seventh Street Cafe. A10

SPORTS — Former Bison Sean Conover '06 earns a spot with the Tennessee Titans. A7

Public Safety Log

Wednesday, September 6

MISSING PROPERTY—Roberts Hall: OPEN: Custodian Supervisor reports that a Savoy two-seater couch is missing form the lobby of Roberts Hall.

FIRE NON STRUCTURE—Gateway Lot: CLOSED: Electrical fire inside a student's vehicle extinguished by Public Safety.

Thursday, September 7

ALARM FIRE—The Mods: CLOSED: The cause was cooking on the left side of the Mod.

ALCOHOL VIOLATION—Hulley House: OPEN: Female student transported by ambulance to Evangelical ER.

HARRASSMENT—McDonnell Hall: OPEN: Student reported to Public Safety that she had received a harassing message on her personal computer.

Friday, September 8

MOTOR VEHICLE-ACCIDENT—Moore Avenue Lot: OPEN: Hit and run accident to parked vehicle.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Christy Mathewson Stadium: CLOSED: Female visitor experiencing chest pain transported by ambulance to Evangelical Community Hospital.

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—Sigma Alpha Epsilon Fraternity: CLOSED: Public Safety requested to assist Lewisburg Police Department with an intoxicated male. Citation issued for underage consumption.

Saturday, September 9

FIRE ALARM—The Mods: CLOSED: False alarm: unknown cause.

FIRE ALARM—The Gateways: CLOSED: False alarm: cooking.

THEFT—Theta Chi: OPEN: Under investigation.

ANIMAL COMPLAINT—The Gateways: CLOSED: Ill Raccoon in area. Game Commission contacted and handled the incident.

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—Sigma Phi Epsilon: CLOSED: Warning issued for an unregistered party.

Sunday, September 10

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—Sigma Alpha Epsilon Fraternity: CLOSED: Unregistered party.

PROPERTY/FOUND—Alumni House: OPEN: Bicycle found laying by the house.

SUSPICIOUS PERSON—Lower Taylor Lot: CLOSED: Employee reported seeing a suspicious male near the parking lot. Public Safety found that the male was waiting for an employee to get off work.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—The Gateways: CLOSED: BU student experiencing seizures transported by ambulance to Evangelical Community Hospital.

Monday, September 11

MOTOR VEHICLE ACCIDENT—Golf Course: CLOSED: Vehicle struck a tree at the Golf Course.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Elaine Langone Center: CLOSED: Female student passed out in the art gallery and was transported by ambulance to the hospital.

ALARM FIRE—The Mods: CLOSED: Fire alarm caused by cooking on the left side of the Mod.

Students still mourn five years later

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

Beyond Unison performs at the 9/11 commemoration ceremony. Various political clubs, BSG and administration came together to remember those killed five years ago.

VIGIL From page A1

Conservatives Club, the College Democrats and the a cappella group Beyond Unison.

The evening featured speeches from Weinberg, President Brian C. Mitchell and Sirolly. An inspirational prayer was led by Rupprecht. The evening concluded with a captivating musical performance of Beyond Unison's rendition of "Hear You Me" as well as the candle lighting observance.

In the speech made by Sirolly, the analogy was made that the 9/11 terrorist attacks were as defining to our generation as the shooting of President John F. Kennedy was to our parents' generation. Sirolly also mentioned that people in our generation will always remember exactly where they were when they received the news that the World Trade Center and the Pentagon were attacked by terrorists, just as people from our parents' generation still remember exactly where they were when they received the heartbreaking news about President John F. Kennedy.

"These are the times that unify us as Americans," Sirolly said.

Sirolly and Rupprecht, whose jobs as presidents of political clubs lead them to regularly oppose one another over political issues, came together and felt that on 9/11's fifth anniversary the issue of partisanship does not hold a candle to the importance of unity.

"We're all American," Rupprecht said. "Party labels don't matter."

"I want to emphasize the nonpartisanship of the issue," Sirolly said.

Beyond Unison's President Laura Householder '08 and group member of Beyond Unison Kerry Flanigan '09 both described the vigil as a "powerful event."

Whether it was the picture of a diverse body of students and faculty united by one flame surrounding 2,997 miniature American flags representing the victims of 9/11 or simply witnessing the rare anomaly of the President of the College Democrats and the President of the Conservatives Club preaching the same message, the event was inspiring and deeply unifying.

Meditation program offers relaxation outlet

By Deidre Carlin
Writer

Some students, faculty and staff participate in the unique practice of meditation, each Monday 4 p.m. to 5:30 p.m. in Rooke Meditation Chapel.

Meditation is not something in which many people currently participate on campus. Those who partake in the activity say it is beneficial and something which greatly reduces stress in their lives.

Richard Weida, visiting associate professor of mathematics, said he began practicing meditation about two years ago when researching "new age" healing techniques.

"The first time I went to meditation was out of curiosity. [I] knew some people found meditation very helpful and wondered if [I] would like it too," Weida said. "[I like] how meditation slows down a hectic day....During meditation there is no rush, no urgency. [I] treasure that calm peacefulness." Weida thinks the readings read during meditation help him become a more spiritual person.

If one is meditating for the first time, it may be quite a different experience as it is non-Western in nature. One session began by sitting in silence on a zafu (a meditation cushion) in the lotus position for 15 minutes.

Participants are instructed to look at a point in front of them and focus on it, trying very hard not to let outside thoughts weigh them down.

While it may be disconcerting at first, it is comforting to many to have 15 minutes of uninterrupted silence within the bustle of a University day.

The remainder of the session consists of many other meditation techniques including walking meditation and even reflection on a reading.

A recent article entitled "The Science of Meditation" on the Web site psychology today.com said those in the Eastern world have been practicing meditation for years. It said the sense of calm they experience is uncanny considering the physically demanding lives they lead.

The type of inner peace they achieve is much desired by many University students who are notoriously stressed out and overbooked.

The University is lucky enough to have Nancy White , associate professor of economics as an instructor of meditation. White instructs students in the Zen tradition of meditation. She was led into participating in meditation after practicing yoga.

"[There were] many difficult experiences that made me realize that I needed some way of dealing with but not escaping from my own life," White said. "Meditation isn't about escaping, but coping with our life."

Students such as Angela Remeika '09 who have already participated in meditation recommend others try it as well.

"Awareness and even practice of other religious traditions can lead to a more opened mind, and many interesting points of view to ponder," Remeika said.

University ranked 14th for homogeneous student population

DIVERSITY From page A1

This can be extremely difficult to accomplish, but in recent years each new incoming class has been more diverse. Fifteen percent of the Class of 2010 self-identifies as a underrepresented racial minority.

"I graduated with a degree in Religion with a minor in African American Studies, but more importantly I had the opportunity to learn outside the classroom," said Tim Johnson, assistant director of admissions, about why diversity is so essential to a liberal arts education. "Living and learning, that's Bucknell," Johnson said.

In an effort to recruit talented minority students, the admissions department has turned to college access programs such as Posse and Prep for Prep. Posse recruits and selects exceptional young leaders from public high schools and sends them in groups to prestigious colleges such as the University.

Before coming to campus they meet weekly for a precollegiate training program. Once on campus the group provides ongoing support and career counseling services. Prep for Prep identifies highly talented students in public middle schools and places them into private high schools in order to cultivate their academic growth.

"Lack of diversity is definitely a problem at Bucknell, but I've seen a definite effort to attract a more diverse student population," said Odi Anyanwu '09, a member of Posse. "Oftentimes when people think of diversity they only think of race and ignore such differences such as location, political preferences and religion. All those in conjunction with racial diversity are important for a rich cultural experience."

To promote the appreciation of diversity on campus students are actively involved in over 40 cultural awareness groups.

Annual programs such as Hispanic Heritage, Native American Heritage, Black History and Asian Pacific Islander Awareness months along with World Aids Day and Diversity Week require much student participation and dedication. The Interfraternity Council recently approached Multicultural Student Services to increase its involvement.

Jessica Hess, director of multicultural student services, is optimistic despite the University's ranking.

"How Bucknell embraces and supports diversity speaks volumes more than numbers and I think the University is doing a good job," Hess said.

She also urges more students to utilize Multicultural Student Services.

"My office is for the whole campus; I want to see all students in here with ideas. I would love to see an Irish American Awareness Club," Hess said.

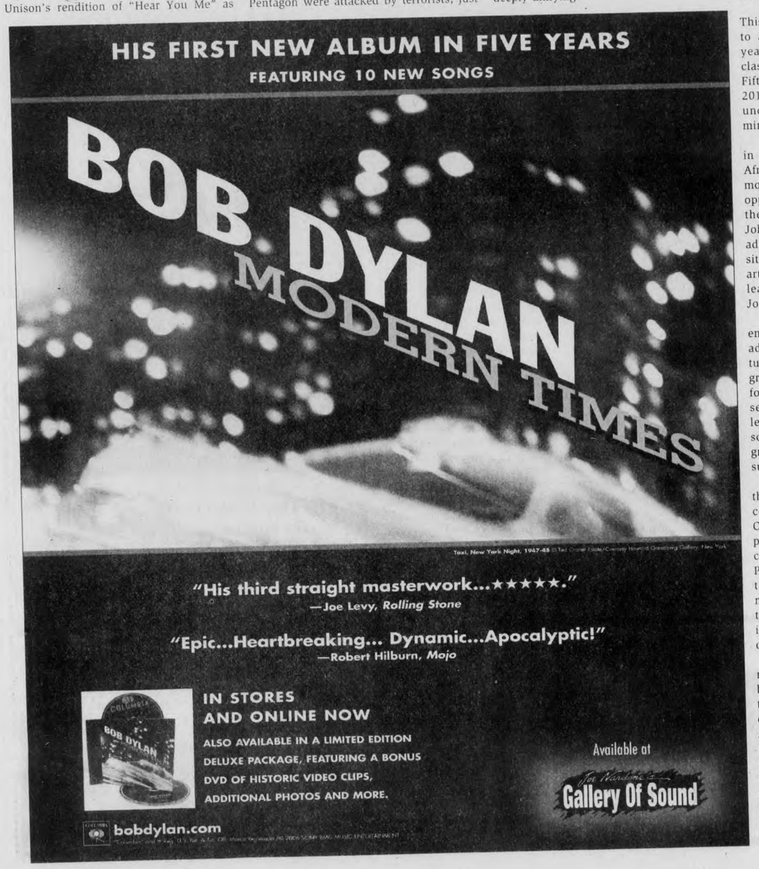
Students' individual backgrounds often affect how they see diversity on campus.

Rachel Freeman '10 of San Mateo, Calif. notices the lack of diversity on campus.

"Compared to my high school, which was extremely diverse, I do recognize that diversity is not as prevalent," Freeman said.

Julia Canestraro '10, of Sudbury, Mass. holds a different view.

"Compared to home, I feel like I have gotten to know lots of people from different backgrounds," Canestraro said.



Bleu Plate sold to new owners

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Bleu Plate Café is being sold to new owners. The new restaurant opening in October will serve food with an Austrian flair.

By Katy Lynch
Staff Writer

Bleu Plate Café, home of the turkey and brie sandwich, served its last lunch Thursday. The family-owned business will be turned over to new owners.

The café has been located at 406 Market Street for almost four years. Co-owner Phoebe Faden moved to Lewisburg in 2000, working at various restaurants and the University's catering service before she opened Bleu Plate with her parents.

"We looked at what Lewisburg had to offer," Faden said. "We were filling what we felt to be a void at the time."

According to Faden the café's initial concept was "good homemade food but reasonably priced and quick."

But as Faden's parents reach retirement age, she feels differently about the business.

"It seemed like it wouldn't be the same," Faden said.

Compounded with a new baby due in February and an offer from another family to buy the business, Faden decided it was time to move on.

The restaurant will not keep its name but will still focus on all homemade foods and local purchasing, which was of utmost importance to the current owners. The new restaurant will have an Austrian flair and is slated to open in October.

When asked if she intended to start a new business venture in the near future, Faden said, "My husband would probably divorce me if I did."

Faden and her husband will be staying in Lewisburg.

"Down the road we may do other things," Faden said.

Other businesses in Lewisburg have turned over in the past year, but Faden does not see this as something of concern.

"This is a pretty good time for Lewisburg," Faden said. "There are more shops and restaurants downtown than there ever have been."

Many University students hate to see Bleu Plate leave town.

"I've been going to Bleu Plate since my freshman year and now I'm a senior," Adam Cohen '07 said. "It has been the restaurant that I have always most associated with the feel of Market Street Lewisburg. With both food that was consistently excellent and an authentic European café feel, it was really something unique. I know that it is going to be sorely missed by everyone in the area and will always be a place I associate with my Bucknell and Lewisburg experience."

Erik Diemer '08 offered a similar sentiment.

"While I haven't eaten at Bleu Plate too often, I do think that its closing is a huge disappointment," Diemer said. "Bleu Plate was one of the more refined establishments in Lewisburg, and its closing is tragic for anyone searching for cuisine that places like Hoss's and Long John Silver cannot offer."

To many University students, Bleu Plate is a place that defines the charm of Lewisburg and is a place of fond memories.

"My favorite memory of Bleu Plate is also my first memory of it," Amanda Forsburg '07 said. "Early in my freshman year, a group of four of us decided to head there for dinner...Not only was I at college and on my own for the first time, but there I was in an adorable little restaurant fostering friendships that are still very much a part of my life three years later."

Forsburg said Bleu Plate was a special place for students at the University.

"You had to have a reason to go, or of it was a random excursion there, everyone was really excited to do it," Forsburg said. "When I think of Bleu Plate, I think of beginnings. And, of course, raving over the cheese plate."

Discussion group aims to improve communication to be discussed," said Jitu Patel '07, the co-founder of "The Elephant in the Room."

ELEPHANT From page A1

"We are striving to create our own public spaces to change and improve our campus culture and community," Patel said.

The weekly sessions are facilitated by students who have participated in the program last year. The purpose of the dialogue is not to debate or prove a position; it is to gain greater cross-group communication and understanding.

"It is important to recognize that most college students are working on issues of identity," said Renée Cardone, staff clinical social worker at Psychological Services. "It can be helpful in terms of being able to articulate where am I right now and hear what other people think, and consider one position."

In order to promote acceptance of racial, religious, gender and other deep-rooted differences, "The Elephant in the Room" seeks to further understanding.

"It is concerning that some in our community don't feel that it is important to have diversity. That is while I did my part by joining the race dialogue," said Kate Lincoln '05, who now works for the Service Learning Office.

"I'm grateful that I participated in this program because, had I not done so, I would never have met so many interesting people, those who have differing experiences than mine," Lincoln said.

"Journalists must seek and speak the truth, for we are the voice of the voiceless millions."
— RAZIA BHATTI
Pakistani journalist

Write for news!

E-mail etu001@

News Briefs

Harvard ends Early Admissions

Harvard University announced Wednesday it will be ending its early admission program beginning next year, according to the New York Times. Some university officials argued that "such programs put low-income and minority applicants at a disadvantage in the competition to get into selective universities."

Numerous critics claim early admission programs force students to commit themselves to a school before they even know how much financial aid they are offered.

"I think there are lots of very talented students out there from poor and moderate-income backgrounds who have been discouraged by this whole hocus pocus of early admissions by many of the nation's top colleges," said William R. Fitzsimmons, Harvard's dean of admissions and financial aid, in an interview with the Times.

The removal of the early admissions program might also "improve the climate in high schools so that students don't start getting preoccupied in their junior year," said Derek Bok, interim president of Harvard. Harvard became the first of the nation's prestigious universities to do away with its early admission program.

While this move may put pressure on other schools, they are reluctant to follow Harvard's decision for fear of gaining a disadvantage in attracting possible applicants. Critics said while it would be commendable if other institutions followed Harvard's lead, most of those schools would not risk loosing their competitive edge.

Terrorist attack on the Damascus U.S. Embassy avoided

Syrian security forces thwarted a terrorist attack on the U.S. Embassy in Damascus Tuesday. Before trying to storm the embassy, four attackers detonated a car bomb outside the building. According to CNN.com, the Syrians killed three of the attackers and apprehended one suspect after the car exploded. Syrian authorities found and dismantled another car bomb outside the embassy's walls.

"Syrian authorities successfully defused other explosive devices found around the embassy," said Tom Casey, a U.S. state department spokesman, according to CNN.com. One embassy guard was killed while battling the four attackers. Fourteen people were wounded: the suspect, an embassy policeman, a security worker and 11 civilians. No one from the embassy staff was injured.

Imad Moustapha, Syria's ambassador to the United States, and Syrian officials believe that an Al Qaeda offshoot group may be responsible, as such groups are usually behind other terrorist attacks in Syria.

73-year old woman killed neighbor with a claw hammer

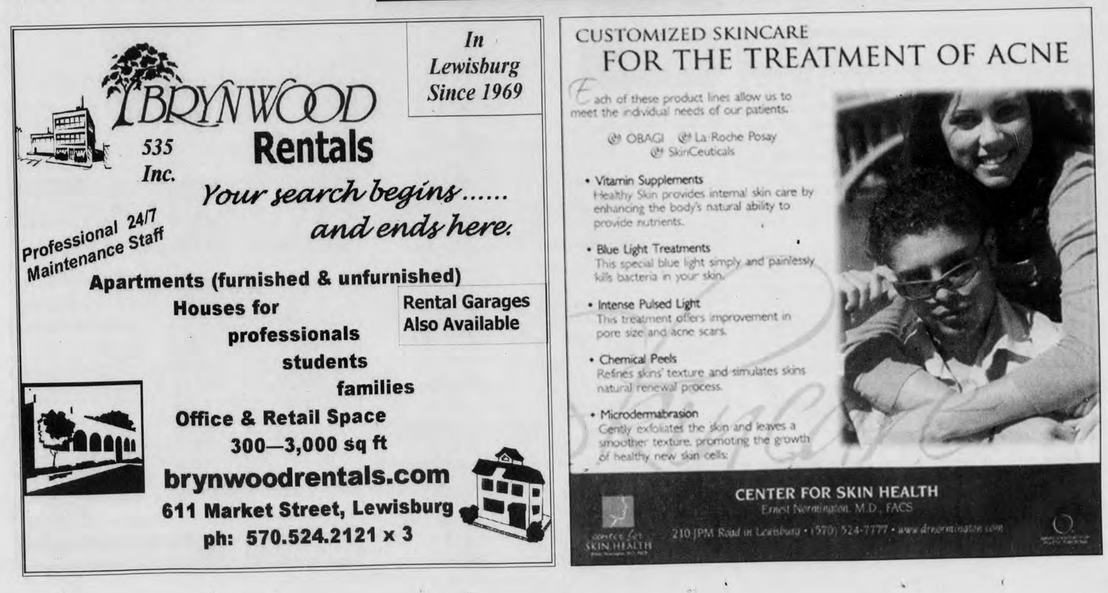
A 73-year-old woman was convicted of first-degree murder and sentenced to life in prison for killing a neighbor with 37 hammer blows to the head. Kathy MacClellan attacked her neighbor, 84-year-old Marguerite "Tuddy" Eyer, on Feb. 7, 2005 with a hammer in a mobile home community in Bethlehem, Pa. No motive was discussed in the trial.

"Your conduct cannot be discounted because of your age," Judge Emil Giordano told MacClellan, according to the Associated Press.

Gunman kills one, wounds 19 at Montreal college

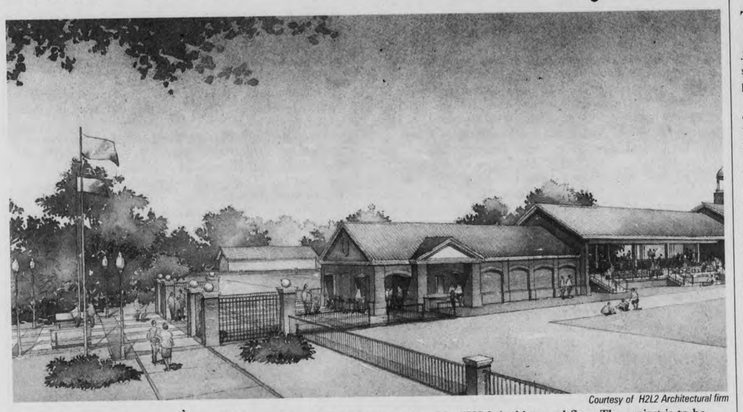
A gunman opened fire on Dawson College in Montreal, Quebec killing one female student and wounding 19 others. The killer did not survive the shooting, but officials are not sure whether or not police killed him or if he killed himself. According to The Washington Post, the killer was a young man with a long trench coat and mohawk haircut.

"He pulled something out from under his coat, and it was a rifle," one Dawson student said. Nine of the wounded students were in critical condition and six of those will require surgery. The female student died of gunshot wounds. Students say the gunman said nothing before he opened fire. "I saw his face and he had no emotion in his face whatsoever," student Daniel Mightley told CNN.com. "He was walking very slowly toward us, just shooting."



CUSTOMIZED SKINCARE
FOR THE TREATMENT OF ACNE
Each of these product lines allow us to meet the individual needs of our patients.
OBAGI La Roche Posay
SkinCeuticals
• Vitamin Supplements
Healthy Skin provides internal skin care by enhancing the body's natural ability to provide nutrients.
• Blue Light Treatments
This special blue light simply and painlessly kills bacteria in your skin.
• Intense Pulsed Light
This treatment offers improvement in pore size and acne scars.
• Chemical Peels
Refines skins' texture and simulates skins natural renewal process.
• Microdermabrasion
Gently exfoliates the skin and leaves a smoother texture, promoting the growth of healthy new skin cells.
CENTER FOR SKIN HEALTH
Ernest Normington, M.D., FACS
210 JPM Road in Lewisburg • (570) 524-7777 • www.drnormington.com

$4.4 million donated for new West Fields facility



Courtesy of H2L2 Architectural firm

This architechtural rendering of West Fields grandstand building was produced by H2L2 Architectural firm. The project is to be completed in November.

FIELDS From page A1

and the Kinney Natatorium were completed, since the soccer fields were originally located where the KLARC and the Natatorium currently stand.

The soccer fields were temporarily moved to Practice Field C during the initial stages of the West Fields project. Upon completion of Phase II, the soccer fields were removed from the practice field, which returned to serving its original purpose.

"The department of athletics worked with the leadership of the University's Physical Plant and the architects from H2L2 to design the University's long-range development plan for the West Fields," said John Hardt, director of athletics and recreation.

The first phase was the astroturf Graham Field, "an all-weather artificial playing surface for field hockey, women's lacrosse and intramural/recreational activities," according to the West Fields Project summary. Graham Field was completed and dedicated in September 2003. Phase II construction included the "construction of a state-of-the-art, sand-based natural grass playing surface for men's and women's varsity soccer programs," said the summary.

A paved parking lot with enough room to provide overflow from baseball and softball fields was also constructed.

The soccer fields were completed and dedicated in September 2005.

Both phases included the addition of any necessary equipment, such as goals, temporary bleachers, team benches and field lighting to meet any required standards.

Despite the high price of Phase III, there has been no opposition to the construction.

"This is one of those construction projects where there was a need at the University and there was a donor willing to step forward and help. It's proceeding very well," Mackey said.

Currently, there is no name for the new grandstand building.

"These issues are not yet determined," Hardt said.

Construction for the new grandstand building is currently on schedule, but its completion falls at the end of the varsity soccer season.

The facility will most likely be used for the first time in the spring with the start of the women's lacrosse season.

"This is one of those construction projects where there was a need at the University and there was a donor willing to step forward and help."

— Pete Mackey,
Chief Communications Officer

Students displaced by Katrina choose to stay at the University

TULANE From page A1

Joong began to look at universities that were accepting displaced students.

Since the semester had already begun, very few universities had on- campus housing available.

"Bucknell was the only one I found that was still offering on campus housing," Kushner said.

In the beginning, many of them found it difficult to adjust to the University.

"The hardest part was catching up in my classes," Tonetti said.

"I didn't think I would be here for more than a semester. I had already missed freshman orientation and I had so much work to catch up to," Joong said.

The University arranged tours and meetings for the displaced students to help them adjust to college life. Since most of them had very few belongings left, the Interfraternity Council provided them with gift certificates.

After spending a semester at the University, many decided to apply to stay for the next three years. According to Joong, going back to Tulane meant changing majors because the university has discontinued its engineering program.

"I love Bucknell, but I would love it even more if it was in [New Orleans]. I always saw myself going to school in a city," Kushner said.

Many thought going back to a devastated New Orleans would not provide them with the same experience for which they had originally hoped.

"Even if I went back for my sophomore year, the city and even Tulane would not be the same. The city itself has not recovered yet," Tonetti said.

Joong is happy that she stayed at the University.

"When we got here, I didn't want people to feel bad for me. I only had to sleep in a gym and come to a different school. What I went through was not even close to what others from New Orleans went through," Joong said. "It actually turned out to be better even because I ended up liking the size, location and the students of Bucknell."

"Even if I went back for my sophomore year, the city and even Tulane would not be the same."

— Michael Tonetti '09

Need More Space?
Dream Higher™
LOFT BEDS
FUTONS
HIGH RISE BEDS
CollegeBedLofts.com

Summer Breeze Stables
Est. 1973
10 minutes from Campus
Riding Lessons for all levels
Certified Professional Trainer
Large indoor and Outdoor Arenas
Boarding, Training and Showing
Call 570-412-0771 for an appointment

Igniting Creative Ideas
On Fire Promotions
by trautman associates, inc.
promotional products · fundraising items
embroidered & screenprinted caps & apparel
awards · trophies · business gifts
800-538-8009
Lewisburg Showroom 434 Market 570-522-8009
www.onfirepromotions.com
Bring in this ad for one FREE SCREEN!!!
GOOD ON ANY APPAREL ORDER
(minimum 36 pieces)

DOES YOUR CAR NEED SERVICED?
Our Service Department has $25,000 in new upgrades, including a new alignment rack, brake lathe, tire machine, and hundreds of hours of training for the techs. We now offer shuttle service to and from work or home. We have become a complete service center that can perform any work on any model, from an oil change to engine replacement.
Lewisburg Ford Oil Change w/Multi-Point Inspection $19.95 Excludes Diesels. Must present coupon at time of service. Expires 12/31/06.
Lewisburg Ford Oil Change/Tire Rotation w/Multi-Point Inspection $34.95 Must present coupon at time of service. Expires 12/31/06.
Lewisburg Ford
2265 Old Turnpike Rd. (Route 45 West) Across From Brookpark Farm
Call Today! (570) 524-7267
Visit us on the web at www.lewisburgford.com

COLDWELL BANKER
PENN ONE REAL ESTATE
Thank You, Bucknell!!
For thirty years of calling Bucknell and Lewisburg home.
Susan Warner-Mills, Sales Associate
Competence, Integrity, Service
524-7500; swm@coldwellbanker.com

Nancy's Nu-Wave Salon
...look your best
Sept/Oct Special
One Hour Massage $35
Main Street (Rte 45) Montandon
524-2315
www.nancysnuwave.com

CatmanDo
Handyman Services
Specializing in small home repair jobs:
Custom Carpentry
Painting
Light construction
Greg H Mathias
570-524-4724
Free Estimates Fully insured

STSTRAVEL.COM
Join America's #1 Student Tour Operator
CANCUN, ACAPULCO, JAMAICA, BAHAMAS
PUERTO VALLARTA, MAZATLAN, CABO,
SOUTH PADRE
FLORIDA, CRUISES
SPRING BREAK 2007
Sell Trips, Earn Cash & Travel Free
STS STUDENT TRAVEL SERVICES
1-800-648-4849 / www.ststravel.com

Class of 2010 Congress elected

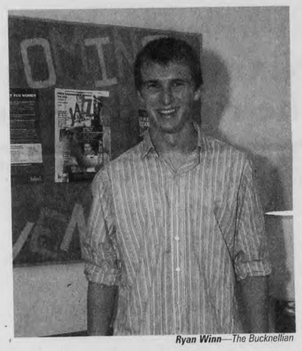
Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Members of the Bucknell Student Government Class of 2010 congress beam after winning student elections.

(From left) Representatives: Justin Alsop, Heather Brake, Alex Costa, James DePaoli, Zak Elmanakhly, Randy Gowat, Nhu-Y Le, Christina Sacco

Alternates: Renee Signore, Ahmed Kodouda

Note: Due to a tie, a coin tossed between Kodouda and Peter Lansinger was used to determine the position of an alternate. Lansinger received the same number of votes as Kodouda but lost the toss. Similarly, Signore and Sacco had a coin toss tiebreaker to determine the final representative position and the first alternate position. Sacco won the toss.



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

"Let's do it."
President Scott Teargarden

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

"I'm crazy excited about being VP for this awesome class."
Vice-President Natasha Vedage

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

"I am super pumped about being the secretary."
Secretary & Treasurer Stephen Wakulchik

Professor of Islamic studies speaks at 9/11 commemoration

Courtesy of photoline.org

Akbar Ahmed, professor of Islamic studies from American University, speaks about Islam and media in Rooke Chapel. As part of the ceremony commemorating 9/11, Akbar's speech emphasized the importance of meaningful dialogue.

AHMED From page A1

cepts of the religion.

One of the night's most prevalent themes was the importance of meaningful dialogue and a genuine effort to understand and befriend other cultures.

"The tragedy of the Middle East is even when there is dialogue, these are not friends talking," Ahmed said. "It is enemies negotiating, and at the end of the day we're back to square one."

On multiple occasions Ahmed referred to the concepts of honor and degradation. He feels "we are living in a post-honor age" and expressed hope that today's youth will be able to break down the current barriers that have previously blocked healthy communication.

"The challenge to you is this: think in terms of understanding and friendship," Ahmed said.

Much of Ahmed's premise related to the notion that Islam, Christianity and Judaism are closely connected, due to the fact they are all what he termed "Abrahamic" religions.

Since these faiths share similar origins through the Biblical figure Abraham, he is optimistic about the possibility that cultures of different belief systems will unite one day.

Ahmed noted he belongs to a "September 11th family," as he lost his cousin in the collapse of the second tower.

Nadir Sharif, a sub-senior and member of the Muslim Student Association, had mixed feelings on Ahmed's outlook. [The talk will] "promote better understanding and better relations among the communities that are on campus" Sharif said.

Sharif expressed concern for Ahmed's approach.

"He is very idealistic," Sharif said. "Facing truth is hard and that requires facing up to the problems that exist."

Fazil Habibullah '08 commented on the lecture.

"There are many students at Bucknell who are curious, even if not well informed, about the religion of Islam," Habibullah said. "And since it's almost impossible to live in today's world without hearing the word 'Islam' associated with a negative word like 'terrorist' or 'threat,' I think Professor Ahmed's speech should be a good opportunity to find out about what Islam really is."

As the United States progresses after the fifth anniversary of the attacks, Ahmed warned against the dangerous consequences of prejudice. He reminded the audience that September 11 was a tragedy for all U.S. citizens, regardless of their faith.

"The challenge to you is this: think in terms of understanding and friendship."

— Akbar Ahmed,
Professor of Islamic Studies

The Bucknellian
Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue
Volume 138, Number 3
C-3952 Bucknell University
Lewisburg, Pa. 17837
(570) 577-1520
bucknellian@bucknell.edu
http://www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Editor-in-Chief
Catherine Heverling '07

Associate Editor of Content
Jamie Jacobson '08

Associate Editor of Layout
Rina Van Orden '08

Senior Editor
Drew Larson '08

News Editors
Evan Unger '09
Nilanjana Saha '09
Michelle Laxer '09

Opinions Editors
Hallie Stebbins '08
Michael Dippery '08

Sports Editors
Matthew Saylor '08
Barbara Perlman '09
Brian Mulligan '08

Features Editors
Julia Fuchs '09

Arts & Entertainment Editors
Kimberly Kane '08
Lily Beauvilliers '09

Photography Editors
Ryan Winn '08
Ellyn Ercolano '09

Chief Copy Editors
Kathleen Conti '08
Greg Hamilton '08

Business Manager
Jared Napolitano '08

Advertising Managers
Meredith Reighard '07
Kat Wallis '07
Katie Casteel '08
Emily Senko '08

Office Manager
Kate Wood '07

Cartoonist
Juliana Su '09

Adviser
James F. Lee

Op-Ed Policy
The editorials of The Bucknellian reflect the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the editor-in-chief. All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

Letters to the editor must be received by noon on the Tuesday before publication. Letters may not be longer than 600 words and the Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny or edit any letter to the editor. Letters must contain the writer's name and phone number (used for verification purposes and not to be printed). Mail or e-mail letters using the addresses above.

Publishing Information
The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester entirely by Bucknell students. All published material is chosen by the paper's Editorial Board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its adviser, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

Subscription Information
Subscriptions are available for $45 per year or $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian Subscriptions, Bucknell University, Box C- 3952, Lewisburg, Pa. 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

Members of the local community may pick up a complimentary issue each week, with the understanding of one free issue per person. If you would like more for a nominal fee, contact the print office.

Advertising Policy
The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements if deemed offensive, illegal or in bad taste. Advertisements reflect the opinion of the advertiser and not necessarily that of The Bucknellian. For advertising rates and information, please contact the advertising department at (570) 577-1085. Copyright © 2006 The Bucknellian

The Bucknellian
Editorial
Diversity statistics misleading

The Princeton Review recently ranked the University #14 on its list of most homogeneous colleges in the country.

Some might look at statistics that compare the University to peer institutions and easily become pessimistic regarding the range of diversity on campus.

While the ranking tells of the University's current statistical state, it fails to explain the measures that are currently being taken to improve the campus' future diversity.

The importance of diversity is inherently built into President Brian C. Mitchell's Strategic Plan.

The Admissions Office has worked closely with access groups like Posse and Prep for Prep to recruit exceptional minority students.

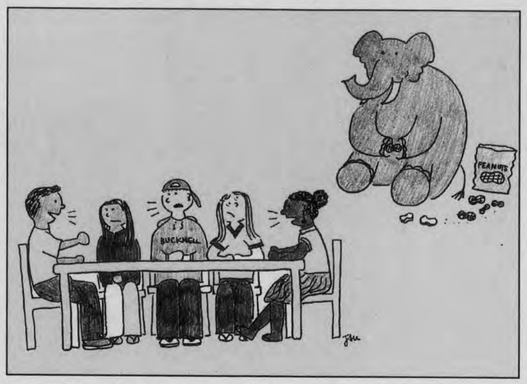
Rome was not built in a day.

On that same note, a diverse campus cannot blossom overnight.

There are improvements happening internally that suggest the University is on the right path to decreasing homogeneousness and improving that pesky little statistic.

As much as diversity involves race for admissions officers in the recruitment process, it is also about individuality when it comes to students.

If we start stepping out of the pages of the J. Crew catalog and perhaps into a category of our own making, it is likely that all different types of students will be more attracted to the University and subsequently improve diversity.



There is nothing wrong with being in the Bucknell "bubble," but at the same time, there is nothing wrong with stepping outside of it.

Sure, it is quite comfortable in here considering the free-flowing Starbucks, low crime rate and close-knit campus community.

You have to wonder though—is there really life on the outside?

It is entirely impossible that every student enrolled at this University comes from the same blueprint.

All 3,450 students here were not fathered by the same man, did not attend the same high school and certainly do not share a collective taste in music.

So why then not let our differences show?

By taking the initiative to interact with students from different backgrounds, like those participating in the inter-group dialogue "The Elephant in the Room," we will be cultivating the diversity that is continuing to grow on campus.

Sometimes it is OK to not blend in. Sometimes it is OK to be yourself. Sometimes it is hard to remember these things at a school where diversity has only just begun to really improve.

Perhaps when our statistic reaches an ideal number, collars will un-pop, the "bubble" will burst and a melting pot of race, sexual orientation, religion, opinions and differing backgrounds will form.

But until then, we can only do our best to keep on improving.

Letters to the Editor

Global warming lecturer lacked professional poise

To the Editor:

Recently we granted the Conservatives Club permission to use the name of the Bucknell University Environmental Center (BUEC) as a co-sponsor of the lecture "The Truth About Global Warming" by Richard Lindzen, professor of meteorology at MIT. We were dismayed and quite saddened by the nature of his lecture. Lindzen brought a great deal of credentials as a scientist, but his talk was an insult to science and the ethics a scientist is expected to use when discussing science.

We lent our sponsorship believing there would be a valid discussion of the science of global warming, realizing that he would likely take the side of skepticism and caution, because we strongly believe the University community should hear all sides of a scientific argument. One of us (Professor of Geology Craig Kochel) who is a scientist in a related field commonly encourages erring on the side of caution in this regard. In fact, Kochel brought another major skeptic to campus several years ago (Environmental Sciences Professor Patrick Michaels of UVA) to present that very side of the debate. Discussion of multiple perspectives grounded in the interpretation of scientific data is quite valuable.

Unlike Lindzen, Michaels presented data and discussed the science of the global warming issue. Unfortunately, Lindzen chose to devote 90 percent of his talk to showing us quotes and making light of the semantics in writings by scientists, journalists and politicians about the issue. Lindzen's only departures into data were a couple of slides dealing with his view of error bar statistics and his discussion of the failure of the very complex global climate models by over-predicting the magnitude of the warming. He clearly chose not to discuss much of the science but to focus his presentation on attacking the writing and rhetoric of writers (popular and scientific) dealing with this issue.

Lindzen's credentials are impressive, but his presentation tact was not. During the question session that followed, Lindzen glibly interrupted students and faculty alike trying to ask valid questions.

We realize there are many issues related to global warming, some of them purely opinion and political. He is a scientist and should be discussing objective scientific data. We were led to believe this would be a scientific address by a distinguished scientist representing the minority view on the issue of global warming and human impact.

What was presented Sept. 5 had little to do with science and was an embarrassment. It was presented in the light of an opinion show in the media rather than as an alternative interpretation of the scientific data related to global warming. We encouraged students to attend... and they did. We, and many of the students and faculty, were sadly disappointed by the lack of science and the blatant focus on semantics, politics and making light of this important global issue. As Co-Directors of the BUEC, we regret having lent our sponsorship to the Conservatives Club to promote this event.

Sincerely,

R. Craig Kochel, Professor of Geology
Peter R Wilshusen, Assistant Professor of Environmental Studies

Co-Directors, BUEC

Nixing Pluto was the right decision

Ninth planet didn't play nice with the other celestial bodies

To the Editor:

This is a letter in response to the article written by Daylin Oakes '09 ("Astronomers Say 'Sayonara' to Earth's Ninth Neighbor," Sept. 1).

The Pluto debate is not just about Pluto. Our nine-planet solar system is gone. Kaput. Goodbye. It is time for us to let it go. The fact is Pluto is no longer a planet. All fields of science constantly revise previous "laws" and "universal rules" to fit new information into the picture. Why, then, is there so much debate when astronomy tries to do the same?

When Pluto was discovered in 1930 it made perfect sense to include it in the list of planets. It orbits the sun, has an atmosphere and has its own moon (even though Pluto itself is smaller than our moon). In order to include Pluto in the recently-created definition of a planet, astronomers also had to include its moon, Charon, and a recently-discovered object known as 2003 UB313.

According to Mike Brown, the discoverer of this proposed 12th planet, the definition that allows Pluto to be a planet also allows 53 other discovered objects to be planets (www.space.com). How would you like to memorize over 60 planets? I would rather lose cute little Pluto and memorize eight.

But why was it so hard for the International Astronomical Union to find a definition that included Pluto? Pluto just does not fit for several reasons:

1. It is much smaller than any planet and even smaller than many moons.

2. The other eight planets orbit the sun on the same plane. Pluto's orbit is slanted.

3. Pluto's path crosses Neptune's path. So sometimes it is the ninth planet and sometimes the eighth. No other planets do this.

4. When at its furthest point, Pluto is really, really, really far away.

5. It has more in common with recently discovered Kuiper Belt objects than planets.

Over the years, Pluto has become a favorite. We are emotionally attached to the little bugger. I think perhaps we all see a little of ourselves in the oddball planet. But when it comes to this decision we need to put our emotions aside. So I say, let Pluto go. He is just a crow wearing peacock's feathers.

Sincerely,

Megan McShea '09

"Freedom of the press, if it means anything at all, means the freedom to criticize and oppose."

— Eric Arthur Blair

Write for Ops.
Email hstebbin@

Fraternity party serves up a symbol of powerlessness

Dancing cage a symbol of female degradation and oppression

By Lily Beauvilliers
Arts & Entertainment Editor

University women, I have a revelation for all of us—we have self-image problems.

This was never clearer to me than it was over the weekend when I attended a party where I saw University girls dancing in a cage.

The first thought that entered my head was a scene from "Requiem for a Dream" when the intelligent female lead, Marion, becomes a prostitute for drugs.

Extreme? Of course. But I believe there is a real problem on campus when a symbol of powerlessness and degradation becomes a plaything at a party.

Women, when you saw the cage, what did you think? Did you think, "Here's an empowering sign of my value as an individual," or "Here's a chance for me to gain admiration based on my merits"?

Of course not. What I saw was a chance for girls to put themselves on display in pursuit of attention from a group of men they hardly even know.

What is a cage used for, really? It is for gaining power, for taking away an individual's control. What message are you sending when you willingly rescind control of your own body?

I do not want to point fingers at any individuals in this article. What the cage expressed to me was a problem larger than individual women or men. Gender roles on campus are the real issue.

So often you hear girls talking about how they hooked up with some guy on the dance floor or how some other guy tried to dance with them all night. I have no problem with these sorts of encounters; meeting people at parties is fun and it is quite flattering when a guy pays particular attention to you.

When a girl bases her self-worth entirely on how guys at parties treat her, the party is no longer just fun—it can become damaging and demeaning.

How do you measure your own value?

When a girl bases her self-worth entirely on how guys at parties treat her, the party is no longer fun—it can become damaging and demeaning.

The University is famous for its beautiful student body but it is also an academic institution. If you go to school here you are no idiot. Though she may dress like she is in a J. Crew catalogue she has intelligence and depth that go beyond outward appearances. There is more to her than just her body and her sexuality.

Seeing girls dancing in a cage made me incredibly uncomfortable. All the associations I have with cages—weakness, poverty, desperation—run directly counter to the words I associate with University students.

Some people will inevitably argue that the cage was there solely to match the theme of the party and intended none of the meanings I ascribe to it. I am left wondering where we draw the line. At what point does role-playing end and reality begin?

I believe this line is mostly an internal one. The point when the party is no longer fun, when you are no longer laughing—that is where the line is drawn. When a woman is encouraged to measure herself based entirely on sex appeal and not even remotely on personality—that is where the line is drawn.

When you can no longer feel comfortable just being you but feel you have to abuse your sexuality to gain the admiration of men and some measure of power—that is where the line is drawn.

What can we do about it? How do we change the values of "Generation Facebook" and convince ourselves that academics, values and personality should play a pivotal role in our personal worth?

I would say the most important thing is respect. Women on campus, I implore you never to lose respect for yourselves. We are at this University because we are capable of remarkable things in academics, in extracurricular activities and in our personal lives.

Do not forget the strength that helped you get here and do not let any of society's ridiculous standards take that strength away.

My Favorite Mistake

By Michael Dippery
Opinions Editor

The oft-quoted maxim "If it isn't broken, don't fix it" is easy to understand, but all too easy to ignore. Such is the case when I began my daily (or, more accurately, weekly) shaving ritual a few days ago.

I am a diehard Mach 3 user, but a few months ago, I came into possession of a Schick Quattro. As the name suggests, the Quattro has 33 percent more blades than the Mach 3. Seeing how I was out of Mach 3 blades, I decided to see if that translated to 33 percent better performance.

Oh, how wrong that hypothesis was. The Quattro, as it turned out, probably clogged 33 percent more than the Mach 3, and was much more difficult to clean. I quickly became frustrated the dirty blade, clogged with my bristly beard hairs, was not giving me a clean cut, so I decided to take the most expeditious route and use my thumb to clean out the hairs.

Let me pause here and reflect on a few things. In retrospect, cleaning a razor blade with my thumb was clearly a bad plan. Yes, I knew it was dangerous at the time, but I told myself I would be very careful. Unfortunately, when it comes to blades and fingers, I have learned you can never be too careful.

Long story short, my thumb slipped, and I cut my thumb wide open on a set of four crisp blades. Imagine blood dripping into a porcelain sink and you have a good picture of the aftermath. Luckily I have my own bathroom, so the spread of any disease was likely limited to my roommate.

Friday morning, I thought it would be a good idea to put on a fresh dressing. It was then that I noticed that the wound was still oozing a bit, so I took my very first trip to Student Health Services, where I explained that I had cut my thumb on a razor blade.

"Oh, were you doing an art project?" the nurse said.

No, there was no art project. I am just an idiot—and I will thank you not to point and stare.

But I am a U.S. citizen, and I cannot take full responsibility for my actions—when bad things happen in the United States, someone else is always to blame, so I cannot help but throw some of this back on Schick. If they had only designed a blade that could easily be cleaned under running water—like the Mach 3—I would not be in this predicament in the first place. Safety razor? Yeah, right.

The conclusion: I switched back to the Mach 3. What did I learn? Do not be fooled by the lure of free things, or four blades. The trauma of switching might be more readily apparent than you think.

Diversity a major factor in shaping educational program

Student discussion groups represent all opinions of all races on campus

By Ben Sirolly
Contributing Writer

Every year when the leaves turn orange and red, high school seniors begin to look for the colleges that fit them. Many of those students will turn to the Princeton Review's "The Best 361 Colleges" rankings in search of a quick first impression. This year, when students look at the University's profile, they will learn we are ranked #14 for "Most Homogeneous Student Population."

Am I surprised to see this statistic on the Princeton Review's Web site? Not really. One quick look around campus will tell you something is odd about us: We are overwhelmingly white.

Princeton Review confirms that 83 percent of us are of Caucasian origin. This statistic is a far cry from the 75 percent national average according to the 2000 census. Worse, our African-American student population is represented at a meager three percent, compared to the national average of 12.3 percent.

The University boasts that our class of 2009 is 15 percent "of color." The United States as a whole is 25 percent "of color;" 15 percent is nothing to boast about.

Do I believe the University should use a quota system, or some form of affirmative action to match the national numbers? Not at all. I think these numbers should force us to ask some very deep questions about the environment here on campus.

During the spring semester, the College Democrats, Conservatives Club and the Political Science Department hosted an event called "Pizza and Politics" on the topic of affirmative action in university admissions. The idea behind the event was to invite the campus for free food and an open discussion on affirmative action.

For the first 45 minutes or so, we talked about quota systems, admissions policies and other various topics concerning affirmative action. Somewhere during a high point of conversation, a black student (whom I choose not to name in order to maintain his right to privacy) stood and wrote five words on the blackboard: "Bucknell has a race problem."

At any college, it is understandable if one or two students feel uncomfortable, but it is unacceptable if entire segments of our student body feel out of place, especially if it is due to the color of their skin.

The room was silent. After the tension broke, we entered into one of the most amazing discussions of which I have ever been a part. No matter what our political or philosophical convictions were, independent of our skin color, we all agreed; the University does have a race problem.

To me, this idea was completely new. Of course, I noticed how pale our campus was, but I never realized how much of a detriment that homogeneity was to students of color, both those applying and those attending.

I believe that the vast majority of us have little or no conscious racial prejudice, and many of us would be astonished to learn students of color feel uncomfortable here. After "Pizza and Politics," my curiosity drove me to ask many of my friends of color about their experiences on campus.

What I learned astonished me. Each and every one of them had considered transferring. No matter how socially adept they were, each had countless stories of their struggle to fit in as a person of color here.

At any college, it is understandable if one or two students feel uncomfortable, but it is unacceptable if entire segments of our student body feel out of place, especially if it is due to the color of their skin.

I believe that a diversity of perspectives should lie at the heart of the student body for any liberal arts university. College is a time for broadening perspectives and challenging ourselves.

A liberal arts college is designed to bring thousands of young men and women together in the formative years of their lives to grow and learn together with the hope that, with help from professors, we will find our collective way into a successful and satisfying life in the real world.

Our college experience is not shaped just by the classes we take, but by our conversations and experiences throughout the four years. Within the classroom, students contribute by sharing their wisdom from their respective backgrounds. Without a diverse student body, much that is precious and essential to a liberal arts education is lost.

So what can we do? How can we change the University to improve both the relations between students, as well as the overall quality of our college experience?

In the administration, some positive steps are being taken. The University has partnered with the Posse Foundation, which targets young leaders from urban public high schools who tend to get overlooked by the traditional college selection process.

Some of our fellow classmates are also taking the first steps towards change. "The Elephant in the Room" is a dialogue group that sets out to specifically address these issues of diversity and social conflict. Change cannot only come from the actions of a few students and administrators; it must come from our community as a whole.

I believe for change to occur each one of us must reevaluate our own actions and words, reach out to those outside of our normal, comfortable groups and break down our conscious and subconscious stereotypes. Most of all, we have to do what college students do best: talk.

We must foster a discussion on campus, one that flows from the lecture halls to our dorm rooms and that reaches every corner of our campus. Only such a discussion can fuel the change that is needed. Only then, once the change has swept through our halls and into our hearts will the campus be a place all can comfortably call home.

Facebook feed gets thumbs up

By Zak Marsh
Writer

I have been harboring a deep dark secret. If my friends knew, they would shun me. If my parents knew? Oh, they would not know what to think. But this secret is too much for me to keep bottled up inside, so I am going to come out and say it in print: I like the new Facebook News Feed.

But why would you not? The Feed is wonderful! I love being able to log in and instantly know who is doing what. Does that make me a stalker? Not in the least (If anything, it proves I am a journalist).

Thanks to the Feed, I was informed that my dear friend was sick and I knew to comfort her with well-wishing. She was very appreciative, It also alerted me to several groups my friends had joined which I proceeded to join as well. Even the many Anti-Feed groups grew in size far faster than they ever could have without the Feed.

The Feed makes it so easy to get a great deal of information—the original principle of the internet itself. Without the Feed it would take you so much more time and effort to find all your friends' new albums, new interests, new friends and new changes. If there is one thing I never seem to have enough of at college, it is time. Any new innovation that saves me time is very welcomed.

The ironic thing is the Feed is not a new concept, it is merely new to Facebook. It brings you real-time updates on all your friends. There are other such devices employed by other online communities, but the Feed is better than the rest of its competition: It is more informative than a Xanga digest, more convenient than a LiveJournal friends page, has better privacy features than a MySpace profile (and is far less obnoxious than bulletins threatening my family and love life) and more user-friendly than deviantART settings.

In order for Facebook to stay competitive in the online community sector, it had to include something to enhance convenience of information and accessibility of updates, something such as the Feed. This should not come as a surprise to anyone, and should not have garnered such a reaction.

But it did. Since its implementation Labor Day weekend, the Feed and the new Facebook altogether has drawn more criticism and backlash than the OJ Simpson verdict. Nay-sayers whine about being forced to stalk people they hardly know, or about being presented with updates about which they could not care less.

To you Negative Nancies, I ask why there are people on your friends list whom you hardly know? And if you do not care for the Feed, just turn it off and stop whining. You have that option.

Welcome to the information age. If you have something online, it will be found. Stalkers do not need the Feed to find your cell if you post it. The reason for posting something on Facebook is so other people see it.

Not happy with the idea of people you hardly know seeing so much about you? THEN DO NOT PUT YOUR INFORMATION ONLINE! It really is a simple concept, folks.

True, initially there were bugs in the Feed. In an open letter on Friday, Mark Zuckerberg, Facebook's creator, said "We did a bad job of explaining what the new features were and an even worse job of giving you control of them... we didn't build in the proper privacy controls right away." These bugs have since been fixed, and elaborate privacy options are now available.

The Feed is based on the founding principles of Facebook and the internet. It is helpful, effective, customizable and here to stay. If you do not like it, you can go back to MySpace.

You might belong on The Bucknellian if ...

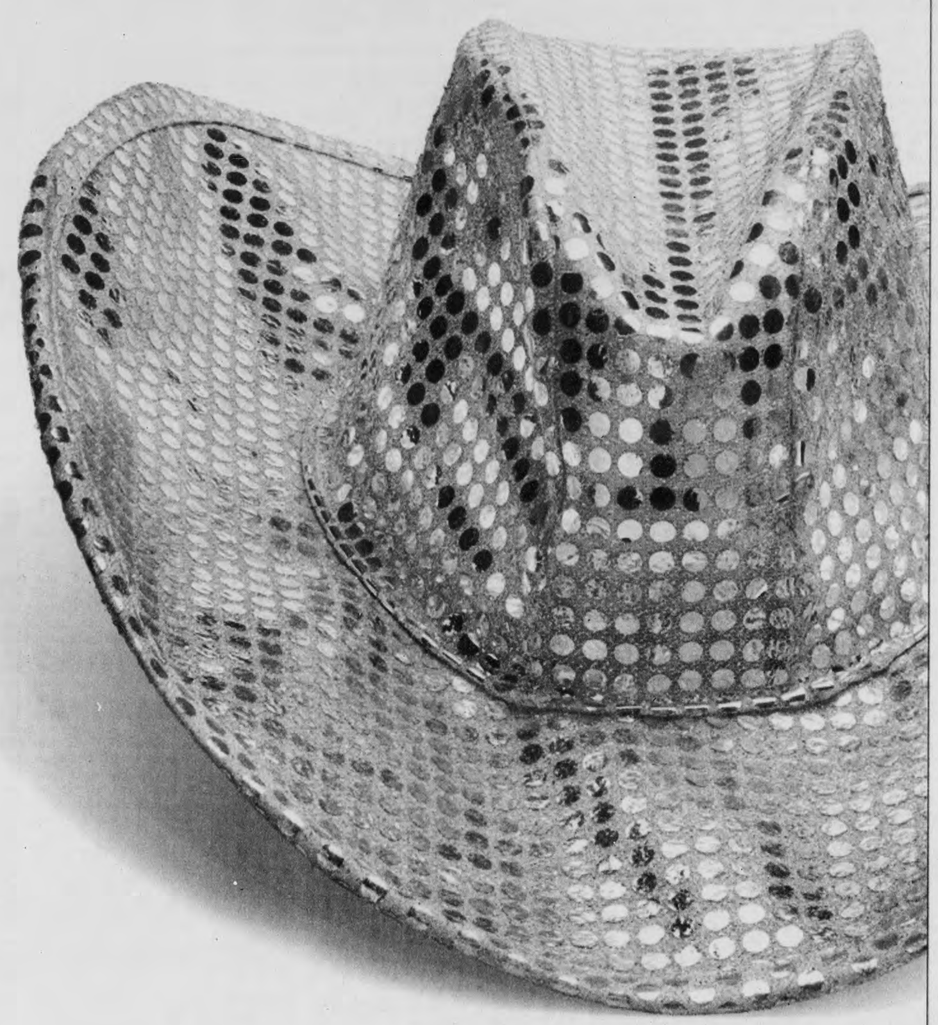
... you have the guts to ask the questions to which everyone wants to know the answers.

Interested in writing for The Bucknellian? Email bucknellian@bucknell.edu.

Marimba soloist
Dog walker
Urban cowgirl*

Learn more about Erin Towery and tell us more about you. Visit pwc.com/bringit.

Your life. You can bring it with you.

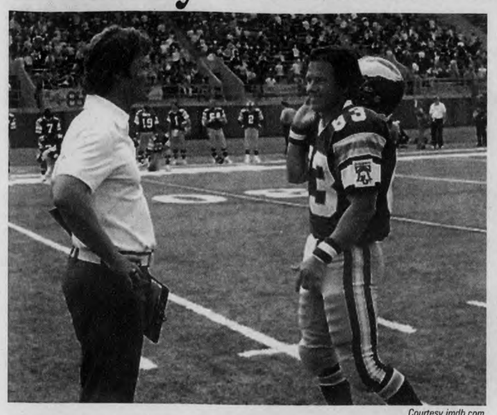


*connectedthinking

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

© 2006 PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP. All rights reserved. "PricewaterhouseCoopers" refers to PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP a Delaware limited liability partnership) or, as the context requires, the PricewaterhouseCoopers global network or other member firms of the network, each of which is a separate and independent legal entity. "connectedthinking" is a trademark of PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (US). We are proud to be an Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity Employer.

'Invincible' a watchable Disney football film



Courtesy imdb.com

Coach Dick Vermeil encourages unlikely sports star Vince Papale, a 30-year-old bartender. After losing his job and his wife, Vince gets a second chance when Vermeil is forced to hold open tryouts for the failing Eagles football team.

By Kimberly Kane
Arts & Entertainment Editor

❖ Movie Review

"Invincible" is not just a movie for Philadelphia Eagles fans; it will appeal to anyone who has ever lived and died with any team.

"Invincible" tells the story of Vince Papale (Mark Wahlberg), a 30-year-old bartender and substitute teacher turned hometown hero. It is set in 1976 when rookie NFL coach Dick Vermeil (Greg Kinnear) held open tryouts for a floundering Eagles football team.

The film has no trouble blurring the reality of Papale's life and career; it bears the undeniable stamp of a Disney film in its details. The picture lovingly creates the South Philly of the 1970s.

The mood is tense as Eagles fans grow desperate (in 1975 the Eagles went 4-10) and the economy is not much better, with unions threatening to strike every day.

At first Vince struggles alongside everyone else. He loses his job as a substitute teacher and his wife abandons him in the first few minutes of the film. He makes ends meet by working nights in the local bar. Every night he serves his friends who all have names like Johnny, Tommy and Pete, as well as fairly-convincing South Philly accents.

Max, the bar owner, hires his cousin Janet (Elizabeth Banks) as a bartender. Janet is every male's fantasy. She is a stunningly beautiful, sassy sports nut who knows how to pour a beer. An obsessive Giants fan, she easily keeps up with the boys when they test her knowledge of football.

Janet is Vince's love interest, though their romance is not central to the plot. She is nonetheless a fun character. Eagles fans will be delighted when she says "Iggles": a common South Philly pronunciation of "Eagles."

Vince is brooding and silent. He expresses emotions vicariously through the individuals around him. From the beginning his family and friends encourage him to try out for the Eagles and then dismiss him.

He represents hope for the other characters. If they cannot straighten out their own lives, they can at least root for Vince. After much convincing, he finally tries out.

Vince endures a tough training camp under Coach Vermeil. The practices are tough and the veterans are even tougher. Vince struggles in front of his friends and neighbors, who come out to watch the practices. He is knocked down enough times to make Vermeil question his talent.

Every round of cuts grows more stressful as Vince's future rides on Vermeil's shoulders. But this is a Disney movie, so we know he will make the team. He does so with help from teammate Denny Franks (hilariously depicted by Stink Fisher) and Vermeil's wife Carol (Paige Turco), who urges Vermeil to keep Vince on the team.

Carol is the voice of Philadelphia fans who love Vince for his character and the hope he represents. Carol's advice pays off for Vermeil when Vince helps lead the team to victory—Vermeil's first in the NFL.

The football scenes are done well. They are fast-paced, gritty and shaky, giving the viewer an idea of what it feels like to be an inexperienced rookie playing in your first NFL game.

There is plenty of football footage. There are game sequences, practices, mud football and even a shot of kids playing football, one with Vince's number 83 taped to his T-shirt.

Another entertaining scene is Vermeil's first speech at training camp. The camera whirls around the group of football players at a dizzying speed, again letting the audience see the action from Vince's perspective. It is a bit nauseating, but effective.

"Invincible," like its Disney predecessors, reminds us why we love sports. It is impossible not to cheer for Vince as the underdog. The film embodies just how much a team can mean to fans, especially when they are struggling with the realities of life.

Fall Fest preview: CD reviews

By Kelly Malloy
Contributing Writer

❖ Cd Reviews

The Hush Sound

The Hush Sound is made up of Bob Morris (vocals, guitar), Greta Salpeter (vocals, piano, guitar), Darren Wilson (drums, vocals) and Chris Faller (bass, vocals).

This indie-pop group has only been seriously involved in the big-time music scene since 2004 and they have already put out two singles and two full-length records, "So Sudden" (2005) and "Like Vines" (2006). In this latest album, the band continues to improve on the meshing of its radically varied background.

According to wikipedia.com, "Bob comes from a rock background and Greta is a classically trained pianist." The two rarely combine vocals on the same song, preferring instead to go their own way on independent tracks. The one thing they do seem to agree on is melancholy.

For the most part "Like Vines" is crafted for the broken-hearted cynics. The bittersweet taste of this album (as obvious by title tracks like "Sweet Tangerine") is bound to bring any listener to a sad lethargy, and the thick musical accompaniment can be a bit repetitive.

The hidden gems on this album are the leading track "We Intertwined" and "Wine Red." The latter is featured, strangely enough, on the "Snakes on a Plane" soundtrack.

There is no doubt that The Hush Sound, though still in need of finding its own musical personality, has risen from the depths of obscurity for good reason. They have talent. Greta's voice is breathy and slow—like a more youthful Mirah or Leslie Feist, and Bob Morris sounds like a cross between Mike Doughty and Brendon Urie of Panic! At The Disco.

They also have a great poetic component to all their lyrics: "Our breath rose in the cold like a hundred souls" (from the track "A Dark Congregation"), and "Eyes like sea-glass, so weathered and worn from all they've seen of adolescence torn" ("Magnolia").

The Hush Sound will be coming to campus for Fall Fest Saturday along with Jack's Mannequin, Daphne Loves Derby and My Shady Uncle Thomas. Their first headlining tour, according to www.thehush-sound.com, will be in November/December with This Providence, This is Me Smiling and Murder by Death.

Courtesy of amazon.com

Courtesy of amazon.com

Daphne Loves Derby

There is nothing common about Daphne Loves Derby, the up-and-coming band straight out of Kent, Wash. The success of their recent album "On the Strength of All Convinced" (2005) is due mostly to the internet—a medium other musical performers are reluctant to utilize.

"I love the internet," bassist and vocalist Jason Call said, according to starpulse.com. "Without it, we probably wouldn't be here. Our band met through the internet—I instant messaged [vocalist/guitarist] Kenny after seeing his band, and we decided to jam. That's how we formed."

Soon after the band's creation, members Call, Kenny Choi (main vocals/guitar), Stu Clay (drums) and Spencer Abbott (lead guitar) built up a fan base through MySpace.com and PureVolume.com.

All this attention earned them a spot with Outlook Music, "an indie label owned by Baltimore Ravens defensive end Trevor Pryce," according to Rhapsody.com.

Besides their emphasis on internet-based promotion, Daphne Loves Derby has a unique sound that is hard to place into one genre. They are steadily progressing from a bare, acoustic/emo sound ("Hopeless Love" is a good example) to an instrumentally fleshed-out, indie rock feel ("You Versus the Sea").

"Too many bands focus on extremes, either being happy or especially being depressed," said Call, according to VH1.com. "We wanted our fans to hear everything."

Daphne Loves Derby's self-assessed influences, according to their site on MySpace.com, are The Moment, Slick Rick and Biz Markie, among others.

Their contemporaries are said to be Death Cab for Cutie, The Academy Is… and Jimmy Eat World. Songs like "Hopeless Love," "Sundays," "Hammers and Hearts" and "Pollen and Salt" are getting the most play on the Web.

"If You're Lucky No One Will Get Hurt" and "Debussie" are definitely worth a listen.

Check them out at Fall Fest Saturday.

'Epsilon Zeta'
By Jock Young

By Kimberly Kane
Arts & Entertainment Editor

❖ Book Review

Jock Young's novel "Epsilon Zeta" is a realistic look at fraternity life. Set at the fictional campus of Northwestern Florida University, the novel attempts to shine light on "the darker side of fraternities."

The fraternity struggles to remain on campus after a "purge" by Nationals two years ago. Dozens of brothers are suspended from the fraternity for drug use and many more resign. Two years later Damon Joyce, one of the suspended brothers, returns to the house. Martin Pierce, the new president, is fighting to keep the fraternity on campus and revamp its image.

Courtesy of amazon.com

While "Epsilon Zeta" is realistic it is also very dull. Young dedicates most of the book to describing the pledge period and initiation process, which are marred by hazing—a very real part of Greek life. Pledges are forced to live in the fraternity house for two weeks. They are deprived of sleep and the brothers control who they talk to, what they eat and what they wear. They are humiliated and degraded until they finally become brothers.

During a ritual, several pledges are urged to jump into a lake. The brothers never imagine the pledges will actually jump in, but they take off – in the presence of a representative from Nationals.

"Do you guys have any idea what could have happened? If one kid, just one, couldn't swim and had to be dragged out, or God forbid, would have drowned, we're not just talking about the end of this chapter. The entire fraternity would have been exposed," says Dave, the National representative.

It is troubling that Dave watches the entire event and makes no attempt to stop it. He is more worried about the fraternity's reputation than the safety of the new members.

Fraternity life is not necessarily shocking anymore. It has been many years since hazing was exposed and most schools have made a conscious effort to crack down on it. Without a doubt hazing still happens on college campuses but it is no longer alarming when revealed. The detailed account of the pledging process becomes tired very quickly.

The book is also confusing. Young introduces too many characters and there are two separate pledge classes in the fraternity. It is nearly impossible to keep track of who is class president, pledge trainer or pledge master.

The main characters are introduced quickly but there is a never-ending parade of brothers. Like many critics of Greek life Young seems to be making a hypocritical mistake. The fraternity men do not seem to care about one another. They freely label each other and judge one another. Young never gives his readers the chance to get to know any of his characters. Instead he forces the audience to settle for stereotypes and caricatures.

Even the "good" characters are barely likeable. Many of the men honestly believe they have the fraternity's best interests at heart. They are willing to do whatever it takes to save the house, even if it includes turning on each other, lying and rejecting their brothers.

The characters also embrace the stereotypical misogyny of fraternity life. A pledge approaches one of the more likeable brothers, Cal, for advice on women:

"There are some universal truths you need to learn about women before you can progress in this life. The first one is that every woman is a whore and your mother is questionable," Cal says.

Young's attempt at realism is one-sided. There are plenty of men who talk like this, both Greek and non-Greek. There are also plenty of Greek men who would never utter such a thing. None of the characters ever question this treatment of women, including Cal and the others with serious girlfriends. They also never question the rampant homophobia or racism.

In the end, Epsilon Zeta is kicked off campus and no one really seems to care—even the most dedicated brothers. After a particularly rough night of pledging the brothers talk to the new members about how much the fraternity means to them. They break down and tell sentimental stories. The next day the fraternity leaders mock the process.

"I'm just going to teach my pledges how to backstab," says Zack, the pledge trainer for the next class.

Young gets a lot of things right in "Epsilon Zeta." The language, the rituals and the social norms are all there. They are disturbing but completely true. Young totally leaves out any likability or hope for these characters. Despite his own fraternity membership, Young does not realize that Greek life can, in fact, mean a lot to some people.

Giving peace a chance with dance

This summer the Bucknell Dance Company performed in China to celebrate international peace relations

By Melissa Duffy
Contributing Writer

The Bucknell Dance Company (BDC) attended the "Ode to Peace" International Youngsters Art and Culture festival in Shandong, China in August. The 20 members of the BDC were the only representatives from the United States honored with the invitation to attend the event sponsored by the United Nations, UNESCO and the Chinese Government.

The major international arts festival was created in celebration and support of culture, science and education. In addition to Chinese and American presence, representatives from Indonesia, Japan, Korea and Thailand attended the event in support of international peace relations.

The BDC performed nine pieces specifically made for the festival, once at the grand opening night ceremony in Shandong and subsequently in the cities of Beijing, Peng Lai and Yen Tai from Aug. 20-24.

Opening night also featured many performing celebrities of China and was televised on national Chinese Central Television. Other performances showcased the BDC's well rounded talents in the styles of ballet, jazz, classical tap, Chinese and modern dance.

The BDC was invited through the professional connections of Er-dong Hu, associate professor of dance. Hu received his B.A. in dance from the prestigious Beijing Dance Academy and his M.F.A. at the University of Iowa. He then performed as a Principal Dancer with the famous Dayton Ballet.

Since joining the University staff in 1994, Hu choreographed dances performed by companies in Georgia, Ohio and Taiwan. His excellence in dance at the Beijing Dance Academy won him the honor of a faculty position at the esteemed school for eight years.

According to Hu, the BDC experience in China was valuable to the girls from both dancing and personal perspectives.

Hu said they gained experience "working together to achieve the most beautiful dance forms possible" and seeing "how the world came together to celebrate world peace—to dance against the violence."

For the future, Hu sees the experience as one that will bring the BDC to "strive to be a more sensitive and disciplined group of dancers.... They will appreciate that life experience of seeing the world and learning about a culture different from their own."

The entire company was not able to attend, according to BDC member Rachel Kerchman '08, but the trip will still have an impact on the rest of the Dance Company.

"The girls that did make the trip all got very close, and the fact that we have grown so much closer will eventually affect the company as a whole," Kerchman said. "It was an amazing experience that we are so lucky to have had."

According to Kerchman the BDC was "here for a month over the summer too... we lived together in the Gateways, eating every meal together and basically knowing each others' moves for weeks!"

The BDC, sponsored by the department of theatre and dance and funded by the Bucknell Student Government, seeks to produce high-caliber, pre-professional, original and exciting performances for the University and local community.

This trip to China was jointly funded by the Association for the Arts, the Office of the President and the Office of the Provost.

"BDC is a lot of work, but it has great rewards," said Laura Muli '09, a new member of the BDC. "Not only do we improve as dancers, we also have the opportunity to broaden our horizons with things like trips for classes and shows, and of course, amazing cultural experiences like the BDC's recent trip to China. It really was a once in a lifetime opportunity for the girls fortunate enough to go."

Each season the BDC performs two main-stage concerts. In the fall they present their dance styles in the Harvey M. Powers Theatre, and in the spring they perform in the Weis Center for the Performing Arts. The campus community can expect great things from the BDC this year.

The BDC learned much from the University's dance program and their recent trip to China. "BDC saw the enjoyment in dance and will continually strive to bring this joy to our audiences," Hu said.

Blane casts a spell on Seventh Street

By Catherine Heverling
Editor-in-Chief

When hearing his name, many confuse Friday's late night music performer Tim Blane with the modern-day Houdini that shares his last name.

Well, he is not the David many mistake him for, but Tim Blane's act proved that he certainly is a jack-of-all-trades.

Blane picked up his guitar to kick off his performance with one of the catchier songs off his latest album "In the Meantime." The song, titled "That Way," gave the audience a taste of the musical chemistry they would come to witness between Blane and his bassist. The song's upbeat tempo and contagious beat provided an unexpected counterpart to its heartbreaking lyrics: "You will find me in the same broken place, that you left me in—half a smile on my face."

> In between songs and during his break about halfway through the performance, Blane mingled with audiences, taking sides on café-goers' Scrabble games and inviting listeners to "friend" him on MySpace and Facebook.

Later, Blane performed "Bad Beer and Chips," which he wrote after graduating from college. The song included some lines the audience could relate to and some they could even chuckle at: "Even the sound of the ding of the microwave can make me feel right again...Living this way cause we all think we're never gonna have to grow up."

Blane gave his guitar a rest for the next song. After taking a seat the piano, he demonstrated some impressive fingerwork during "What do we do now?" a bluesy ballad with some Southern flavor. Ornamenting the basic melody with trills and seemingly impromptu piano solos, Blane accompanied his innovative music with original lyrics: "There's a little puddle smiling at our feet, she thinks I'll lay my coat on top, but Baby, that ain't my way."

Blane also managed to put unexpected spins on the covers he performed.

He picked up the guitar again to perform Marc Cohn's "Walking in Memphis," during which Blane and his bassist captured the audience and silently encouraged them to bob their heads and tap their feet.

"I thought he sounded a lot like John Mayer. He also did a good job of making the covers his own," said Ashley Shamansky '07.

Blane also caught the attention of listeners when he began playing, without announcement, a cover of Kelly Clarkson's hit "Since U Been Gone." The cover sounded so different from the original it took listeners several seconds to even recognize the song. This might have also been caused by the song's extremely slow tempo, which was moving at about half the pace of Clarkson's pop hit.

While Blane's cover was certainly a version of the song many were surprised with, its disparity from the original was really the only impressive thing about it.

Blane picked up the pace when he got to his "favorite song," the album's title track. "In the Meantime" has a chorus that could in itself carry the song to a successful single release.

"Baby, in the meantime/ I'll be living seaside/ thinking that the high tide/ will wash you way," Blaine sang. Blane's music fits the lyrics well, punctuating the end of each line, only further emphasizing the rhyming and inherently catchy chorus.

In between songs and during his break about halfway through the performance, Blane mingled with audiences, taking sides on café-goers' Scrabble games and inviting listeners to "friend" him on MySpace and Facebook.

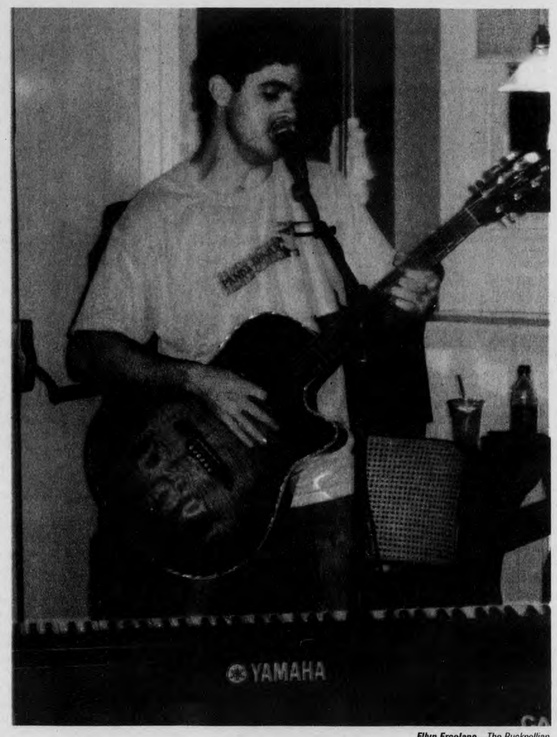
"He really engaged the audience by talking to us between sets," said Jacqui Magee '07. "He even announced the winner of our Scrabble into the mike."

Blane also tried to interact with the audience by telling anecdotes about his days on the road.

One memorable story involved a time when Blane was staying in Zambia, where a hotel attendant told him to beware of the monkeys, who were known for breaking into rooms to "steal shiny things." The punchline involved Blane finding a one-eyed monkey in his bed.

Odds are the story was a product of Blane's imagination.

But, like most of the things the audience heard that night, Blane pulled it off with the grace of a natural showman and, whether it was original or not, captured the ears of an attentive audience.



Ellyn Ercolano—The Bucknellian

Singer-songwriter Tim Blane entertains a full house at Seventh Street Café during Friday's installation of the Late Night music series. Blane demonstrated his talent on both the guitar and piano, playing selections from his latest album, "In the Meantime," and covers.

The Bucknellian
September 15, 2006
Sports
Volume 138, Number 3 | Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue | www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

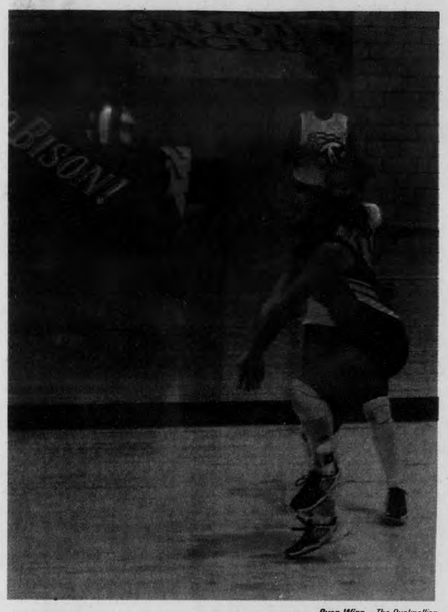
Ms. Love and the 'Bubble'

Turn to Features to witness the return of the love and sex column that ended its first run in 2004.

See page B9

Volleyball sweeps St. Francis Invitational

Squad extends its winning streak to five at New York competition and breaks .500 mark on the season



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Kristen Sydlowski '07 digs in a match against West Chester earlier this season. The team will host the Bucknell Invitational tonight and Saturday.

By Ellis Hudes
Staff Writer

The volleyball team won all its matches in the St. Francis Invitational over the weekend and is now on a five match winning streak. They passed the .500 mark this season and now stand at 6-5 overall.

"This weekend was a really good opportunity to prove that we could play our game against any level of competition," Shannon Pitsch '09 said. "It's really easy to play against teams that are significantly better, but we needed to learn to make other teams rise to our level."

The Bison played one of its cleanest matches against St. Francis (N.Y.), committing only 11 unforced errors as well as hitting .361 as a team. The team overwhelmed an undermanned St. Francis squad, which only had eight players on the roster that night. Lindsay Smith '10 stood out with her great consistency as she hit .600 along with recording nine kills. Liz Hazuka '09 contributed with a .435 percentage plus 12 kills.

Preceding this high percentage encounter, the women's team took care of business against Morgan State 3-1. Jenna Henderson '08 posted a team high 20 kills to pace the Bison's attack and Pitsch tallied 47 assists for the match and is currently averaging double figures in that category. Henderson and Emilie Hardinge '09 were impressive as each produced a double-double in kills and digs in the winning effort.

Bucknell 3
Morgan State 1

"We have all oars in the water...we're seeing some fine performances and leadership from our upperclassmen," Head Coach Cindy Opalski said.

Kristen Sydlowski '07 spearheaded the defensive effort with 26 digs while Jennie Smith and Sarah Groman '07 each added five block assists.

The team played well from the start of the tournament by defeating the Niagara Purple Eagles 3-0. It was an impressive sweep as the Bison won all games by at least a ten point margin.

> "This weekend was a really good opportunity to prove that we could play our game against any level of competition."
> —Shannon Pitsch '09*

Bucknell 3
Niagara 0

The usual suspects were efficient in dictating play in a contest that saw numerous low-percentage plays from their opponents. To its credit the team maintained a high level of play and patiently imposed a solid game plan to get the win.

Ever the playmaker, Pitsch chipped in 32 assists to keep the Bison offense running smoothly and defensive specialist Sydlowski added 19 digs, a team high. Groman put an exclamation point on the victory with her 11 kills and .526 percentage.

"During this past weekend, we had contributions from everyone on the team," Sydlowski said. "We have begun to pick up pace and gel well as a team, as well as showed great enthusiasm and attitude on and off the court."

Four players received Patriot League Player of the Week honorable mentions: Hardinge hit..370 against Niagara, had a career-high eight blocks against West Chester and had her first career double-double. Amanda Grossman '07 averaged 2.6 kills/game and hit .375. Henderson averaged 3.64 kills and 2.27 digs in addition to posting her third career double-double versus Morgan State. Sydlowski led the Bison in digs and aces with 3.64 and .6, respectively.

The Bison will now play host to La Salle, Princeton, and Wagner in the Bucknell Invitational tonight and Saturday in what is sure to be a crucial homestand.

They head into their home tournament as a tight-knit squad brimming with new confidence.

"We're all really excited about this past weekend," Henderson said. "We've had some tough competition so far this year, so it was great to go out and win a tournament. We can't wait to play in our own gym this weekend and hopefully win another!"

Field hockey continues to roll

By Shannon Pitsch
Staff Writer

The women's field hockey team stands at first place in the Patriot League with an overall record of 4-1 after defeating Siena College and Longwood University over the weekend.

The Bison started the weekend off strong with a goal just three minutes into their game against Siena Saturday afternoon, when Emily Hutchison '09 earned her second goal of the season on a penalty stroke. After a shot from Megan Krebs '10 was blocked, Chyncia Smith '08 completed the play with just 10 minutes left in the half.

Bucknell 4
Siena 1

Before the completion of that half the Orange and Blue extended their lead to 3-0 with a goal from Alex Kyzmir '07 assisted by Callista Costopoulos '07.

Offensive success was integral in the first game, according to Head Coach Heather Lewis; in the first half alone, the Bison managed to outscore Siena 11-3.

"We are having a bit of success due to our commitment on defense and our ability to finish goal-scoring opportunities," Lewis said. "Against Siena we were able to get quality attacking penetration in our attacking third of the field which resulted in a lot of pressure on their goalkeeper. Ultimately, we had some players step up and finish those scoring opportunities."

At the start of the second half, Amanda Faust '09 scored on a penalty corner assisted by Anne Lutz '07, but it was the defense that was responsible for the inevitable 4-1 victory.

After goalie Emily Groendyke '07 collected three saves, she narrowly averted disaster when Rider's Kevin Holmes '08 got the rebound off a shot from LaGrave and scored to give the Bison the game winning goal.

Bucknell 3
Rider 1

The Orange and Blue came out with more intensity in the second half and it paid off when Wolf found LaGrave in the 58th minute and LaGrave's left-footed shot found the back of the net. Rider attempted to regain their lead but knocked a shot off the post soon after.

With just over 20 minutes remaining Kevin Holmes '08 got the rebound off a shot from LaGrave and scored to give the Bison the game winning goal. The game was put out of reach for Rider with eight minutes remaining when Russo headed a cross from Sean King '10 over the keeper and into the goal.

Head Coach Brendan Nash was "pleased with the two wins" citing the team's "attitude and work" as keys. He was also pleased with LaGrave who has four goals and a total of nine points so far in his first year with the team.

Loia, the team's captain, complemented the offense.

"It feels great to have our offense finishing the ball," Loia said. "Five goals in two games takes some of the pressure off of the defense, and it also frustrates the other teams."

While the Bison offense is putting goals up on the board, the defense is doing a solid job limiting their opponents' chances.

"We are off to a good start of the season," Loia said. "Hopefully it is a sign of good things to come, especially when league play begins this Saturday."

Nash admits the team is young and "haven't been in pressure games," but the team is ready to see how they stack up in the Patriot League.

LaGrave said the team is ready for league play to begin.

"Everyone is excited to be tested," LaGrave said.

He added if the team "plays like we know we can play" then good things are in the team's future.

"We believe that we are the best team in the Patriot League, and now it is time for us to prove it," midfielder Conor O'Brien '10 said.

LaGrave received MVP honors for the tournament and joining him on the all-tournament team were Russo, Wolf, Kuterbach and Matt Hittson '09.

The Bison traveled to LaSalle Wednesday and opens league play against Holy Cross Saturday in Worcester, Mass.

See HOCKEY page B5

Men's soccer takes two over weekend

Team downs both Campbell and Rider to increase winning streak to four games

By Joseph Debraggio
Contributing Writer

Five goals in two games powered a dominant men's soccer team to consecutive wins in the Geisinger Hospital/Days Inn Bucknell Invitational over the weekend. The Bison (4-1-1) beat Campbell 2-1 Friday and defeated Rider 3-1 Saturday to increase their winning streak to four games.

The game against Campbell started late, yet the Orange and Blue came out flying. Early intensity forced Campbell mistakes and after five minutes Nathan LaGrave '10 buried a cross from Alex Russo '09 off the crossbar and into the net.

Bucknell 2
Campbell 1

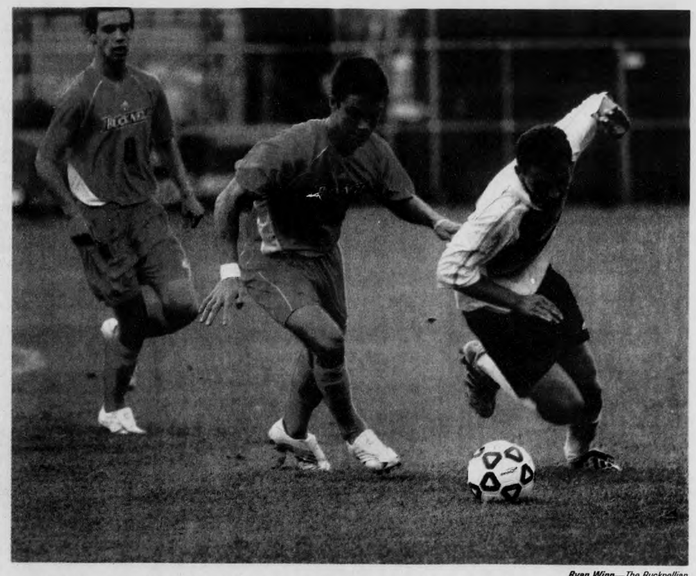
Toward the end of the half the Camels applied pressure to the Bison goal, but Joey Kuterbach '08 made some fine saves to deny their efforts.

The second half was evenly matched until with just over seven minutes remaining Justin Wolf '08 scored a header off an assist from Russo. The 2-0 lead did not last very long as Will Guadarrama, the leading scorer in the country among all Division I players last season, scored for Campbell with three minutes remaining.

The defense held firm after that with Wolf heading a ball away from the net right at the mouth of the goal to preserve the win.

In the second game, Dylan Matlack scored in the first three minutes for Rider. The Bison's stingy defense, led by Andrew Loia '07, shut out Rider from that point on, limiting its shots on goal.

Bucknell 3
Rider 1



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Joe Mellott '08 challenges for control of the ball in a recent game as Conor O'Brien '10 looks on. Mellott and O'Brien have been big contributors to the Orange and Blue, starting all seven games this season.

Women's soccer drops close game to Penn

By Liza Banhalmi
Contributing Writer

The women's soccer team came close against Penn State, who is ranked seventh nationally. The Lions slipped by with one goal by Aubrey Aden-Buie at the 12 minute and 46 second mark to win 1-0.

Bison goalie Katie Dry '07 saved an outstanding eight shots.

"[She] played a superb game and managed the match extremely well," Head Coach Ben Landis '96 said. "She has been solid for us this year and gives us the confidence that once we start scoring goals, we'll end up on the positive side of our upcoming matches."

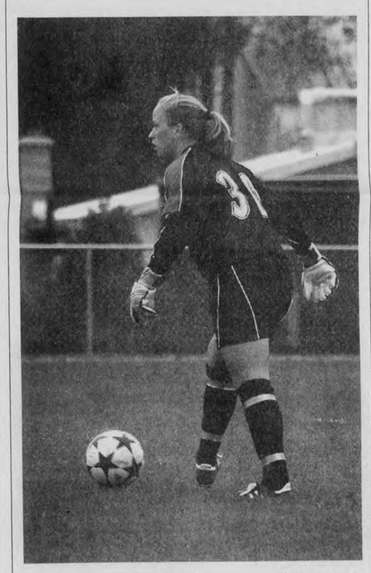
The Bison came close to tying the game when Jennifer Dervarics '09 hit the crossbar in the 32nd minute. Her teammate Jennifer Margolis '07 shot with the same result only a minute later. Dervarics also shot on goal in the 77th minute, but it was saved by Penn State goalie Kate Milstead.

"Our team played very well," Landis said. "We competed for the full 90 minutes, understood and executed our strategies very well, and defensively, we solved Penn State's attack. Ultimately, we did lose the game and that is always disappointing, but our effort and spirit as a team was where it needed to be to battle against a national powerhouse like Penn State.

That type of demonstration sets the tone for what we'll need to do each and every league game if we want to repeat as Patriot League champions, and it was good to see for an entire match."

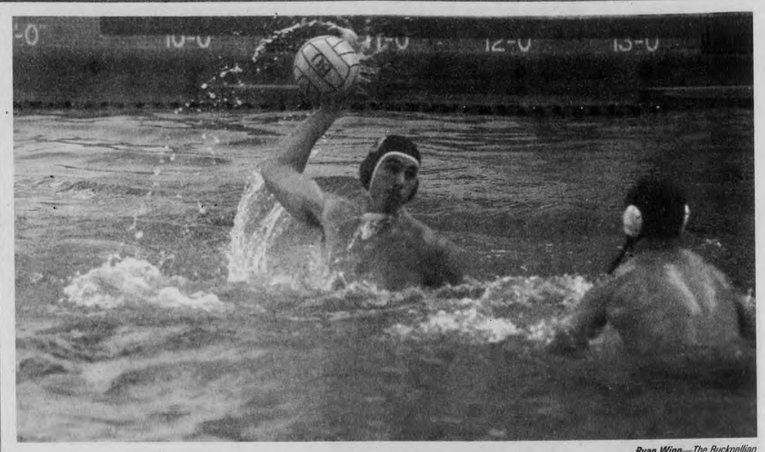
This week Dry and Renee Bernardo '09 received individual honors from the Patriot League. Dry was named BRINE Goalkeeper of the Week, while Bernardo received the BRINE Defensive Player of the Week award.

The Bison return to the field with a home match against Robert Morris at 1 p.m. on Sunday.



Bucknellian Archives

Katie Dry '07, above, has been named the BRINE Goalkeeper of the week for her performance the past two weeks.



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Kyle Roslyn '08 winds up before scoring one of his many goals over the weekend. Roslyn tallied a total of 10 goals in the invitational to help the Bison defeat #20 Johns Hopkins and Gannon.

Water polo competes at Bison Invitational, wins two

By Ty Clark
Staff Writer

The men's water polo team continued to play well this weekend, defeating number 20 Johns Hopkins and Gannon before falling to number 14 St. Francis (N.Y.).

In the first game of the Bison Invitational, the team jumped out to an early 3-0 lead in the game and never trailed en route to a 14-11 victory against league foe Johns Hopkins. Mark Masterson '07 and Jason Rechel '08 each scored four goals to lead the Bison in the contest.

Bucknell 14
JHU 11

"We were able to take them out of their game almost immediately," Kyle Roslyn '08 said. "It's always a battle when we go up against them, and it shows a lot about who we are as a team in terms of maturity and discipline that we were able to hold them off when they tried to mount a comeback in the fourth quarter."

The Bison matched up with Gannon later in the afternoon, winning 19-11, after a flying 6-1 start. Four players scored at least three goals (Roslyn, Rechel, Randy Ang '10, and Alex Lampley '09) to power the Bison. The Orange and Blue continued their strong team offense, outshooting Gannon 34-22. The Bison's 5-1 record at that point was the best start since 1985.

Bucknell 19
Gannon 11

"I felt we played extremely well as a team," said Roslyn, who tallied a number of points throughout the weekend. "We improved on some of the problems we had in the first tournament."

The next day, the Bison would not come away with a win, falling to St. Francis 13-11. St. Francis jumped out to an early 2-0 lead, due partly to the Bison's inability to avoid the frame of the net, which claimed three shots in the quarter. The Orange and Blue fought back to 8-7 in the second half, but the Terriers answered with a 3-0 run to put the game out of reach. Luke Belenky '08 continued his strong play, recording nine saves against a strong offense.

St. Francis 13
Bucknell 11

"The entire team is really contributing well," said Gabriel Heiber '09, who enjoyed a breakout game against St. Francis. "We're all really happy to see the team work well together, and it's showing in the matches."

Head Coach John Ziegler took the good with the bad.

"The St. Francis game was both positive in the sense of competing 'toe-to-toe' with the reigning Eastern Champions but negative in the realization that the contest was ours to take and we outplayed St. Francis in most aspects of the game," Ziegler said.

"I felt we played extremely well as a team. We improved on some of the problems we had in the first tournament."
—Kyle Roslyn '08

Despite the setback, there is a spirit of optimism among the entire team.

"I think it is important to play a team of that caliber this early in the season because it shows us not only what we need to improve on but also the possibilities this team has when everyone works together and we execute our game plan," Roslyn said. "With the ECAC championship coming up in 2 weeks, it is probable that we will face St. Francis again, and everybody is itching to get another shot at them."

In two weeks the Bison will travel to Brown where, as the fourth seed, they will face the host team in the first game of the tournament. Both Heiber and Roslyn noted the motivation the team has in practice during the time off.

"I know that we will be motivating each other and getting each other ready to play even better in two weeks and hopefully win a championship," Roslyn said.

"We don't have to look very far as our first championship test begins in two weeks," Ziegler said. "We enter this tournament looking for a title that we have come close to clinching the last few years." Perhaps this is the year the Bison bring home the crown.

This just in...

-WOMEN'S SOCCER-

Krista Lee Gentile '08 and Jennifer Dervarics '09 each scored a goal for the Bison (2-3-1), leading them to a 2-1 victory over St. Franics (Pa.) Wednesday. Gentile's goal broke a 1-1 tie at the 69 minute 18 second mark. Katie Dry '07 made two saves for the Orange and Blue.

-MEN'S SOCCER-

The Bison tied La Salle 1-1 at Wednesday's match in Philadelphia. Andrew Loia '07 scored the team's lone goal on a penalty kick toward the end of the first half, and Joey Kuterbach '08 made five saves for the Orange and Blue (4-1-2).

Study In English Abroad
The Swedish Program
STOCKHOLM UNIVERSITY
Public Policy
Literature
Economics
Film
Psychology
History
Sociology
Art History
Women's Studies
Politics
Environmental Studies
COME TO AN INFORMATIONAL MEETING
SEPTEMBER 14, 2006 4:00 P.M. TAYLOR LOUNGE
If you are unable to attend this meeting, please contact your Study Abroad Advisor or The Swedish Program, Hamilton College, 198 College Hill Road, Clinton, New York 13323
(315) 737-0123 www.swedishprogram.org

Domino's Pizza - A Proud Partner of Bucknell University
LEWISBURG • 524-9000
1722 Market St.
MANIC MONDAY $7.99 LARGE 1-TOPPING PIZZA - DELIVERED!
2xTUESDAY BUY ANY LARGE PIZZA AT REGULAR MENU PRICE & RECEIVE A 2ND OF EQUAL VALUE FOR FREE
WACKY WEDNESDAY BUY ANY LARGE PIZZA AT REGULAR MENU PRICE AND GET ANY SIDE ITEM FOR FREE!
TERRIFIC THURSDAYS $4.99 LARGE CHEESE PIZZA
HOT BROWNIES FREE
DOUBLE DEAL $11.99 2 MEDIUMS $13.99 2 LARGES
CHICKEN SPECIAL $17.99 1 MEDIUM 1-TOPPING, 1- ORDER OF CHEESY BREAD, 1- ORDER OF CHICKEN KICKERS & ONE 2-LITER OF COKE.
CARRY-OUT DEAL BUY ANY PIZZA AT REGULAR MENU PRICE & RECEIVE A 2ND OF EQUAL VALUE FOR FREE
CALL TODAY! 1.800.DOMINOS
(1.800.366.4467)

Taking it to the next level

Sean Conover '06 continues football career with the NFL's Tennessee Titans for the 2006 season

By Marcus Mateer
Staff Writer

As the football team kicks off another year of collegiate contention, a different squad toils a bit further to the south. In Tennessee, a certain defensive end who wreaked havoc in the Patriot League last year has earned a berth on the Titans' practice squad.

Former Bison Sean Conover '06 is one of only seven players on the scout team. Conover is in good company, as the other practice team members hail from such collegiate football powerhouses as the University of Southern California, Louisville and Auburn.

So what does it mean to be on the practice squad? Players receive a salary of $4,000 per week ($64,000 per season) for a maximum of two seasons. They practice with the team during the week but cannot play during NFL games.

Scout team members are also free agents. Regularly, teams who are short at a position due to injury will sign players from either their or another team's scout team, which is Conover's greatest chance at playing this season. Should there be a rash of Titan defensive end injuries, do not be surprised to see the alumnus tearing up professional offensive lines.

Conover started his Bison football career at tight end. He played in two games as a first-year student and grabbed five catches for 61 yards. The next year, he was moved to defensive end under the new Head Coach, Tim Landis.

"They had graduated almost their whole starting defensive line," Landis said. "We were going into spring football, and we had had some success at St. Mary's and Davidson in taking some guys and trying to fit them into the puzzle. With Sean we knew that he was good enough to play for us somewhere and help us. DE was where we had a need and we thought he could do that."

Conover took to the position with 142 career tackles, 33 tackles for loss and 17.5 sacks, ranking him fifth on the University's all-time sack list. He earned first team All Patriot League honors twice, as well as second team AP All-America honors in 2004.

In his junior season, Conover was named Patriot League Defensive Player of the year. It took some time for him to earn his primacy over the rest of the league.

"When I first met him as a freshman, he was skinny," Landis said. "He was tall but thin. He weighed about 220 pounds. By the time he graduated, he weighed 270-280 [pounds]. But really, his development occurred between his sophomore and junior years.

"[Conover] started as a sophomore, got beat up a little bit quite frankly, but he was there every day. He worked his butt off and was a good player in this league. Then, he came back his junior year and was a dominant player.... At that point, it became evident that if he continued on that path of improvement he probably could play at the next level."

Conover's breakout season was his junior year. He tied for the league lead in sacks with 10.5, which was also good enough for fourth in school history. He lead the league with five forced fumbles. He also posted career numbers with 55 tackles, 18 tackles for loss and four batted-down passes.

In the locker room, Conover preferred to let his on-field performance speak for him.

"He was a leader by example," Landis said. "I don't think Sean's comfort zone was doing a lot of talking. People might be a little surprised to know that he's really quiet. They maybe have this stereotype of an NFL prospect, especially a guy of his size, as being this huge personality. He's not at all.

"He's very humble, very quiet, and mild mannered.... He'd have to be really comfortable with you, and then he would talk. I would say he was shy. But put him on the football field, and he's a different person."

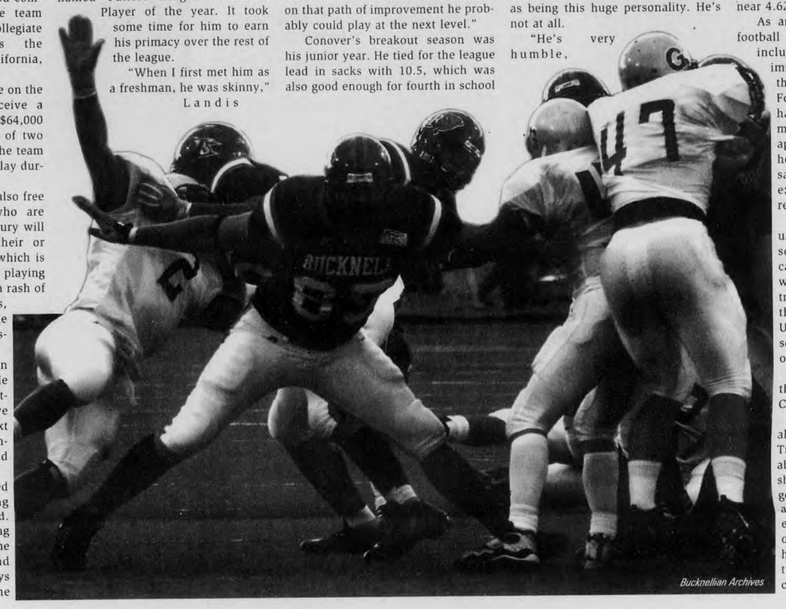
What most attracted scouts to Conover, besides his versatility at both defensive end and tight end, was his speed. The large lineman runs the 40-yard dash in a blazing 4.62 seconds. There are running backs in the Patriot League who do not run the 40-yard dash in anything near 4.62 seconds.

As anyone who is familiar with football will tell you (Coach Landis included), speed is the most important difference between the NFL and any other league. Fortunately for Conover, he has the speed necessary to make it. In his four pre-season appearances with the Titans, he tallied seven tackles and a sack of Aaron Rogers. More experience may be all he requires.

"I think he's in a great situation to be on the practice squad," Landis said. "You can't make a practice squad without making it through full training camp and he's got that under his belt now. Usually, if you make a practice squad you have a good chance of hanging on."

Landis shared what he thinks the future holds for Conover.

"I would think he'll be allocated to NFL Europe by the Titans and then that will probably be his real opportunity to show what he can do. So he's going to have to be patient, and be a practice squad player, and hope he gets a shot over there. The longer you hang around, the better opportunity you have to get your chance."



Bucknellian Archives

Women's golf begins season with strong showing Cardinal Classic

By Wes Trowbridge
Contributing Writer

The women's golf team picked up where it left off last season with an impressive showing at the Cardinal Classic over the weekend. Missing two starters from their lineup and competing against an extremely competitive group of scholarship programs, the Bison managed to finish 13th in the 18 team field.

The Orange and Blue were led by the play of Teri Schlang '07, who fired two rounds of 79. Her two day total of 158 placed her in a tie for 26th individually. Schlang was supported by Amy Loughney '08 and Kathryn Batchelor '08 who carded rounds of 79-83 and 82-86 respectively in their season debuts.

Missing regular starters, Emily Chiodo '08 and Deirdre Moran '09, Head Coach Kevin Jamieson started two first-year players. In their first collegiate tournaments Lexie Orr '10 and Leah Antkiewicz '10 both finished with scores of 169.

"They did a great job of stepping up and contributing to our teams' success," Jamieson said. "There is so much information [Orr and Antkiewicz] must absorb in order to be successful...and they are only scratching the surface of their potential as Division 1 golfers."

After a record breaking 2005-2006 campaign in which they set a new team scoring record and finished fifth in the competitive Big South Conference, the Bison are poised for yet another breakout season. The top five starters from last season are all returning and incoming first-year students look to add depth and contest for positions in the starting lineup.

In his seventh season as head coach, Jamieson has invoked a turn-around in the women's golf program. Now in their fourth season in the Big South, the Bison golfers consistently compete with scholarship athletes and have maintained or improved their finish in the conference every year.

After Saturday's round of 323 placed the Bison in 14th, a 333 on Sunday under difficult playing conditions was good enough to move them up one spot. Eastern Michigan won the team title with rounds of 296-311 and Ferris State placed second, eight shots back. Host team, Ball State finished in ninth place.

Ashley Smith of Grand Valley State captured the individual tournament title carding rounds of 71-74 beating out second place finisher Becky Hoffman of Ferris State by three shots.

The Bison women golfers will next see action at the Nittany Lion Invitational in nearby State College Sept. 23-24 and will host the Bucknell Bison Classic the following weekend.

"With a great start to our fall campaign, things certainly look pretty good for us," Jamieson said.

WEEKEND SCHEDULE

Friday

FIELD HOCKEY - Drexel, 7 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
WOMEN'S VOLLEYBALL - Wagner Bucknell Invitational, 8 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
MEN'S TENNIS - Brown Invitational, TBA, Providence, R.I.
MEN'S GOLF - Bucknell Invitational, All Day, Lewisburg, Pa.

Saturday

FOOTBALL - Cornell, 7 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
MEN'S SOCCER - Holy Cross, 3 p.m., Worcester, Mass.
WOMEN'S VOLLEYBALL - Princenton Bucknell Invitational, 12 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
MEN'S CROSS COUNTRY - Lock Haven Invitational, 2 p.m., Lock Haven, Pa.
WOMEN'S CROSS COUNTRY - Lock Haven Invitational, 2 p.m., Lock Haven, Pa.
WOMEN'S VOLLEYBALL - La Salle Bucknell Invitational, 4:30 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
MEN'S GOLF - Bucknell Invitational, All Day, Lewisburg, Pa.
MEN'S TENNIS - Brown Invitational, All Day, Providence, R.I.

Sunday

WOMEN'S SOCCER - Robert Morris, 1 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
MEN'S TENNIS - Brown Invitational, All Day, Providence, R.I.

Men's golf swing to victory at Colgate

By Jared Napolitano
Business Manager

It would be hard to imagine a better way to start off the 2006 Patriot League title defense than what the men's golf team accomplished over the weekend in Hamilton, N.Y.

The Bison captured the Colgate Invitational team title for the second time in three years and made a statement to the Patriot League that the squad has a very legitimate chance to repeat.

"This weekend was a great start to the season," Charlie Waddell '07 said. "It's always nice to start off with a win and send the message around the league that we are the team to beat."

The two-time defending individual champion of the Patriot League, Waddell, along with Keita Aoki '08, led the charge for the Bison, posting identical tournament scores (73-72, 145) for the two-day event.

"My putting right now is the best it's ever been," Waddell said. "I'm rolling the ball with confidence and feel like I should make every putt I look at."

Brian Bartow '10 and Andrew Cohen '10 both counted their scores each day and finished in a tie for seventh place and a tie for 28th place respectively in the 85-player field. Patrick Yingling '07 was the fifth member of the unit and shot a 166 composite score.

The squad (593) out-shot second-place Binghamton by three for the tournament and finished ahead of four other Patriot League contingents – Lehigh, two Colgate units and Lafayette. St. Francis (Pa.) (602), Central Connecticut (608) and Cornell (609) rounded out the top five. Binghamton (296) held a two-shot lead over the Bison and Cornell following round one action.

The consistent efforts of Waddell and Aoki, who finished tied in second place behind individual champion Dan McCarthy of LeMoyne, enabled the Bison to overtake the Bearcats on the leader board during Sunday's second round.

Another great sign for the Orange and Blue is the solid debuts of both Bartow and Cohen. Bartow carded a top-ten finish in his first-ever event (75-74) and Cohen shot matching 77s to show off the young talent on the part of the Bison.

Losing Ben Pellicani '06 was a concern for the squad, but the Bison have already erased doubt that such a loss would make the unit less competitive in 2006-2007.

"It was great for the freshmen to step up and get the taste of a victory in their first tournament," Waddell said.

The team looks to extend its winning streak to three at its host tournament, the Bucknell Invitational, competing today and Saturday at the Bucknell Golf Club.

Nancy's Nu-Wave Salon
..look your best
10% Discount with Student ID
524-2315
www.nancysnuwave.com
Main Street (Rte 45) - Montandon

Women's tennis team is young and talented

Bucknellian Archives

Paulina Gamboa '09 smashes a forehand in a match last season. The team won 10 matches this weekend in Bloomsburg Invitational.

By Connie Barko
Staff Writer

Although young, the squad was very successful during a two day invitational over the weekend. The women's tennis team took 12 total wins, providing them momentum for the 2006-2007 season. The Bloomsburg Invitational included a field of teams from Binghamton University, Villanova University and Bloomsburg University.

"We went into the weekend searching for a starting point with this extremely young team," Head Coach Rebecca Helt said. "On the first day, there were six freshmen, three sophomores and only one senior in the top ten. We have a very talented squad, but a very young squad. This weekend, and the entire fall, is about establishing where we are and what we need to work on."

Ashley Globerman '09, had five wins during the invitational.

"It is important to use the fall season as a chance to build our confidence and experience in match play," Globerman said. "We need to increase our strength and fitness level along with our patience on court. We also want to form a cohesive team, a strength of ours that has always been an advantage against our opponents."

The Bison won three singles and one doubles match Saturday. JoAnna Grossman '09, Kirstyn Sotak '10 and Globerman earned their first victories in singles play. Grossman defeated Alex Sinclair from Binghamton 6-1, 6-3, and Sotak dominated Binghamton's Jen Kucko 6-2, 6-1. Globerman won 6-3, 6-3 against Villanova player Leighann Reilly. In doubles play, Globerman and Carlin Calcaterra '10 outplayed Tracy Nissenbaum and Katie Hasyn from Bloomsburg University 8-4.

"I had a great experience playing doubles with two of our freshmen," Globerman said. "It was fun and we were successful!"

The excellent play continued with the Bison marking eight more victories Sunday. In the singles matches against Bloomsburg, Globerman downed Torie Cunningham 6-0, 6-4, and Tania Varela '10 outplayed Lida Hokkanen 6-2, 7-5. Calcaterra and Grossman gained their first victories of the season. Calcaterra defeated Bloomsburg's Emily Murphy 6-4, 6-0 while Grossman won a match against Nissenbaum 7-6 (7-5), 6-1. Camille Simonetti '09 also earned a victory 6-3, 6-4 over Jaclyn Kelly. Finally, Sotak overcame Allison Carney after a close two-set tiebreaker.

Doubles play showed similarly strong finishes. In a match against Villanova, Valera and Globerman defeated Candice Carlin and Colleen Walter 8-3. Their momentum helped them gain another 8-2 win against Lya Kushnirovich and Juliana Umeki of Binghamton.

"At this point what we need the most is experience," Helt said. "These young players need to get some collegiate matches under their belts so they can start to build and trust their games."

The Bison's next match should give them that opportunity. The Quinnipiac Invitational will be held Sept 22-4 in Quinnipiac, Conn.

Men's tennis competes well at the Bloomsburg Invitational

By Peter Lansinger
Contributing Writer

The men's tennis team kicked off its season at home Sunday. The Bison won an impressive six matches against Villanova in the morning singles matches.

Captain Ira Reibeisen '08 won his match to get things going for the Bison 6-3, 7-5. Ben Young '08 won his match in straight sets as well, winning 6-1, 6-3, while teammate Jonathan Brenner '09 won 6-0, 6-2.

Ben Rosenstock '09 won his match 6-1, 6-2 and Daniel Bednarek '09 and Zachary Hascoe '10 finished up the morning's work winning each of their matches in a tiebreaker set by scores of 10-5 and 10-8, respectively.

> "The team is getting much stronger, physically and mentally, as we've been working extremely hard on and off the court."
> —Rebecca Helt, head coach*

In the afternoon matches against Binghamton, the Bison notched another couple of victories as Bednarek and Young continued their strong play.

The Bison earned another two victories in doubles play against Bloomsburg. Ryan Sandburg '09 and Brenner won the first match 8-5. The duo of Bednarek and Sidharth Makkar '09 capped off victory for the Bison by a score of 8-2. After the first full weekend of tennis the men's team won a total of nineteen matches.

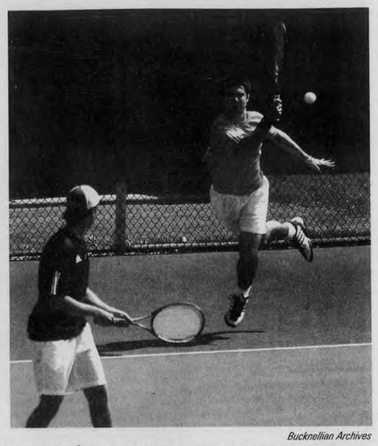
"This was a strong first outing for the men's team," Head Coach Rebecca Helt said. "The squad is fairly young, but has a solid base of experience."

The Bison's starting lineup included five sophomores and one first-year in their top eight. While Bednarek led the Bison with a total of six wins, first-year Hascoe made his debut with a 4-1 record for the weekend.

"All of my teammates have helped me bring my game up, preparing me for a new, tougher level of competition," Hascoe said after his first collegiate event.

"The team is getting much stronger, physically and mentally, as we've been working extremely hard on and off the court," Helt said.

With a talented squad and a bright future, Helt believes the "will to win" may be the most important factor in the team's upcoming success. The team plays at the Brown Invitational tonight, Saturday and Sunday in Providence, R.I.



Bucknellian Archives

Daniel Bednarek '09 returns a serve from a previous match. Bednarek won both his singles and doubles matches.

WANTED

Talented Individuals Interested in Pursuing an M.B.A.

Enter the Simon School 2nd Annual Online Business Simulation Competition for the chance to win a full-tuition scholarship and other scholarships!

On September 25, 2006, the Simon School will launch an online scholarship competition that uses a business simulation program as a unique method of identifying superior M.B.A. candidates. The winner will receive a full-tuition scholarship to the Simon School to be used within two years of the initial award.

For more information, rules and regulations, call (585) 275-3736 or visit www.simon.rochester.edu/scholarships/competition.aspx
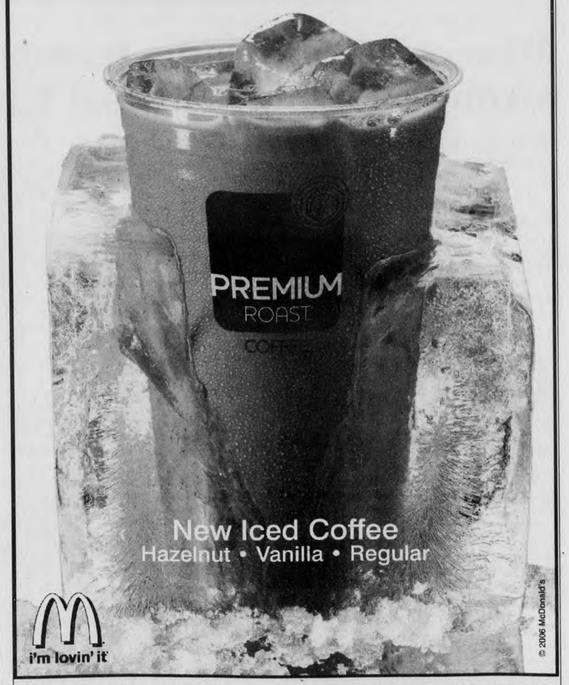
Participants must register and remit the $35 entrance fee by September 25, 2006. No late entrance will be permitted.

SIMON GRADUATE SCHOOL OF BUSINESS
University of Rochester
Where Thinkers Become Leaders

be cool to yourself



FREE
Medium Iced Coffee
With Purchase of a Sandwich*
(Breakfast or Large Sandwich)

*Excludes Dollar Menu and Snack Wrap™. Large Menu Sandwiches include: Big Mac®, Quarter Pounder®† with Cheese, Ranch BLT, Club, Classic Premium Chicken Sandwich™ and Filet-O-Fish®. Valid only at participating McDonald's® in Southeastern and Northeastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Kent & New Castle counties, Delaware. Current prices and participation based on independent operator decision. Void where prohibited. Valid when product served and may not be valid for custom orders. Limit one coupon per customer per visit. One free item per coupon. Cash value 1/20 of one cent. Price of required purchase is posted on menu board. Prices may vary. Plus tax if applicable. Not valid in conjunction with any other offer, discount, coupon or combo meal. Coupon may not be transferred, copied or duplicated in any way or transmitted via electronic media. †Weight before cooking 4 oz. (113.4 grams). ©2006 McDonald's

Expiration Date: October 31, 2006

i'm lovin' it

Football falls flat against Lafayette

By Matt Saylor
Sports Editor

The Bison suffered an uninspiring 31-0 loss to No. 25 Lafayette Saturday night. This is the worst home loss for the Orange and Blue (1-1, 0-1) since losing 45-9 to Lehigh late in the 2003 season.

Lafayette 31
Bucknell 0

The team had not been shut out at home since a 47-0 loss to William & Mary during the 1996 Patriot League Championship season. Ironically, members of that 1996 squad were honored at halftime of Saturday's contest, marking the 10-year anniversary of the University's lone Patriot League title.

The Leopards (2-0, 1-0) have been co-champions of the Patriot League the past two seasons, and made sure no one forgot that by scoring 14 points in the first quarter and 28 by halftime, sending many of the 6,273 fans in attendance toward the exits.

"[We were] just totally outplayed tonight as a football team," Head Coach Tim Landis said. "In every aspect of [the game]."

The Bison defense gave up 475 yards of total offense to Lafayette. Over the first two games of the season the Bison have given up an average of 501 yards of offense to the opposition, ranking them 105th out of the 108 Division I-AA teams in the nation.

Leopards quarterback Brad Maurer ran for a 72-yard touchdown and passed for an additional 252 yards. Lafayette's bruising ground attack added 223 yards of offense, led by the 99 yards and two touchdowns from Jonathan Hurt.

Unlike the game against Duquesne, the Orange and Blue's offense was unable to make up for any difficulties the defense may have had. The Bison were held to only 218 yards of total offense. A fumble by fullback Josh DeStefano '08 deep in Lafayette territory led to the third Leopards touchdown of the first half and quelled any momentum the team may have had on what was its longest drive of the game.

"It was one of the toughest defenses to read," quarterback Andrew Lair '10 said of the Leopards 3-4 scheme. "I'm really upset with the loss."

> "I think the positives will come down the line and how we react. We will work our tail off, take this, learn from it and get better."
> —Tim Landis, head coach*

This defense did not allow for the Orange and Blue to break any big plays out of its triple-option attack.

"The two downsides [to the option] are the possibility that the quarterback gets hurt and turnovers," Lafayette Head Coach Frank Tavani said. "The upside is the possibility for big plays. We had to contain it and stop them from going up the sideline."

Leopards linebacker Mark Leggier, the Patriot League Rookie of the Week, commented on the win. "It was a group effort you can't give the credit to one guy, We did a great job of not allowing the big plays."

Running back Rashod Bumpers '10 ran for 126 yards against Duquesne, but was limited to just two carries for 17 yards against Lafayette. When asked why Bumpers did not receive more playing time, Landis replied the Bison offense is predicated on different running backs receiving the ball depending on field position and what the defense looks like. Landis did have Bumpers return four kickoffs (he gained 96 yards) as a way to get the first-year player more touches in the game.

Fullback Paul Forcellini '10 suffered a season-ending left knee injury in the second half after being tackled by three different Leopards. Forcellini ran for 102 yards over the course of the first two games of the season, while sharing time with DeStefano. DeStefano led the team in rushing against Lafayette with 55 yards.

Co-captain Dorian Petersen '07 recorded a game-high 16 tackles for the Bison, while Ryan Slater '08 had 12 and Matt Palermo '07 added 11. Bumpers, Peterson and Palermo all received honorable mentions from the Patriot League for their efforts.

Landis was asked about what positives could be taken from the game.

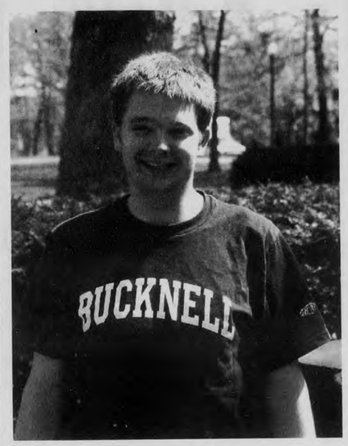
"I think the positives will come down the line and how we react. We will work our tail off, take this, learn from it and get better," Landis said.

The first opportunity to improve upon the game against Lafayette will be Saturday as the Bison host Cornell. Kickoff is scheduled for 7 p.m. at Christy Mathewson-Memorial Stadium.

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Bison quarterback Andrew Lair '10 begins to run the option against the Leopards. The Orange and Blue were held to only 218 yards of total offense against the two-time co-defending Patriot League champions.

Saylor Says



By Matt Saylor
Sports Editor

1. It is unfortunate that attendance for the Bison football game against Duquesne was only 1,910, while 6,273 fans turned up for the contest against Lafayette. The excitement of the first game against Duquesne helped to contribute to the increased fan turnout (but was not the only factor), and it is not a stretch to anticipate the team's lackluster performance against the Leopards could lead to a smaller fan turnout Saturday night against Cornell.

It may only be the third game of the season for the Orange and Blue, but this will be a critical match-up. The team must prove to itself that this season will not turn into last season all over again, and a competitive game against Cornell can be an important step in accomplishing that.

2. My latest baseball playoff predictions have the Yankees, Tigers, Athletics and White Sox representing the American League, with the Mets, Cardinals, Padres and Marlins coming out of the National League. This weekend's match-up between the Dodgers and Padres will help to determine the outcome of the N.L. West and shape the Wild Card race, with the Phillies, Marlins and Giants still in the hunt. The Tigers, Twins and White Sox are competing in the A.L. Central, with the team that comes in second almost assured of earning the Wild Card spot.

3. Roger Federer : Tennis :: Tiger Woods : Golf

4. Maria Sharapova : Tennis :: Charlize Theron : Film

5. Attendance at the men's soccer games over the weekend is estimated to have been around 500. It was great to see so many former players return to their alma mater to root on the team. The team rewarded its fans with victories over Campbell and Rider.

6. The NBA Hall of Fame held its annual induction ceremonies were the weekend. Charles Barkley, Joe Dumars and Dominique Wilkins were the players that entered with this year's class. They represent the first wave of many players from the late 1980s and 1990s who dominated the league for all those years. Look for Michael Jordan, Scottie Pippen, Patrick Ewing, Karl Malone, John Stockton and Hakeem Olajuwon to receive induction over the next few years.

7. The first week of NFL play featured 11 out of 16 games won by the road team. So much for the homefield advantage.

8. New York Islanders goalie Rick DiPietro signed a 15-year contract with the team this week. That is the longest contract in NHL history. Talk about job security.

9. The women's volleyball team is hosting the Bucknell Invitational tonight and Saturday afternoon. The team will try to continue its five game winning streak with games against Wagner, Princeton and La Salle.

10. Good luck to Indiana football coach Terry Hoeppner as he undergoes brain surgery to remove a possible tumor. Hoeppner underwent surgery in December to remove a tumor and a recent MRI showed a possible recurrence.

Field hockey tops Patriot League

HOCKEY From page B1

rowly missed earning her first shutout of the season when she was removed with seven minutes 20 seconds left on the clock. In those last few minutes, Siena's Traci Baldwin scored the team's only goal.

Typically, the women's field hockey team only plays one match per weekend. Lewis scheduled the double-header in order to give the team an idea of what the Patriot League Championships would be like in November.

"This weekend was really a team effort because it was about everyone contributing," Faust said. "It was a really important weekend because we played two games back-to-back like we hope to do in the first week of November for the Patriot League Playoffs."

Sunday's game against Longwood began slowly with neither team scoring in the first half. The physical endurance of the Bison enabled them to capitalize offensively during the second half.

Bucknell 3
Longwood 0

"I sensed Longwood getting a bit tired about 10 minutes into the second half and that's when we were able to continually bring in fresher legs," Lewis said. "Eventually we were able to wear them down and capitalize on our penalty corner opportunities."

In the second half the Bison were led by the unstoppable duo of Faust and Lutz. Two assists from Lutz, now leading the team with six for the season, converted to two of the three goals netted by the Bison during the game.

The other goal was completed by Costopoulos, earning her fifth of the season, on a pass from Katie Leinen '08. Once again the team outshot the opposition 10-6.

The well-balanced Bison captured three of the four Patriot League Player of the Week distinctions. Costopoulos earned Offensive Player of the Week for scoring in every one of the last three games. She collected six points for the week and is currently tied for second in the conference with five goals in the season.

Kelly Hoffman '08, the Patriot League's Defensive Player of the Week, led a defense which allowed only three goals the entire week, including a shutout against Longwood.

Groendyke earned her second Patriot League Goalkeeper of the Week award. In three games, Groendyke allowed only two goals with a save percentage of .905 and 19 saves. She also received her first shutout of the season against Longwood, with three saves in the game.

Last year at this time the Bison were 2-4, but this year's early season success does not mean the team is letting down anytime soon.

"We have been playing well thus far but not up to our fullest potential yet," Lutz said. "I am hoping that in these next two games we will play more as a unit so we are prepared for the start of Patriot League play."

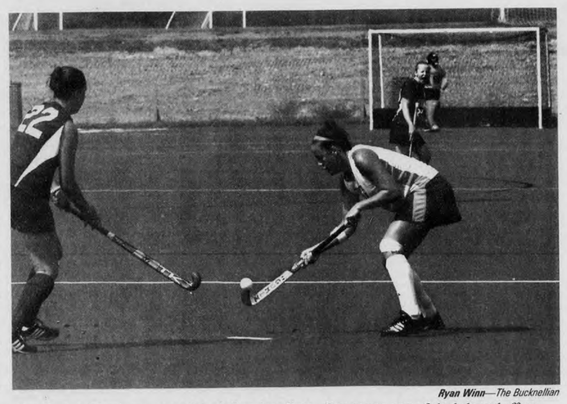
Lewis also commented on the state of the team.

"I think the biggest difference between this year and last year is the depth we have at each position," Lewis said. "Our team is competing every single day in practice and that competition has only made us tougher, physically and mentally."

Lewis considers future games to be the true test.

"We're looking at our upcoming game against Drexel as another opportunity to measure where we are as a team," Lewis said. "They're currently undefeated at 5-0 and are a formidable opponent for us. As coaches we'll be able to look at this game and have a really good sense of our strengths and weaknesses."

The women's field hockey team, currently the only team in the Patriot League still undefeated at home, will attempt to continue their in-house winning streak with a game 7 p.m. tonight against Drexel University.

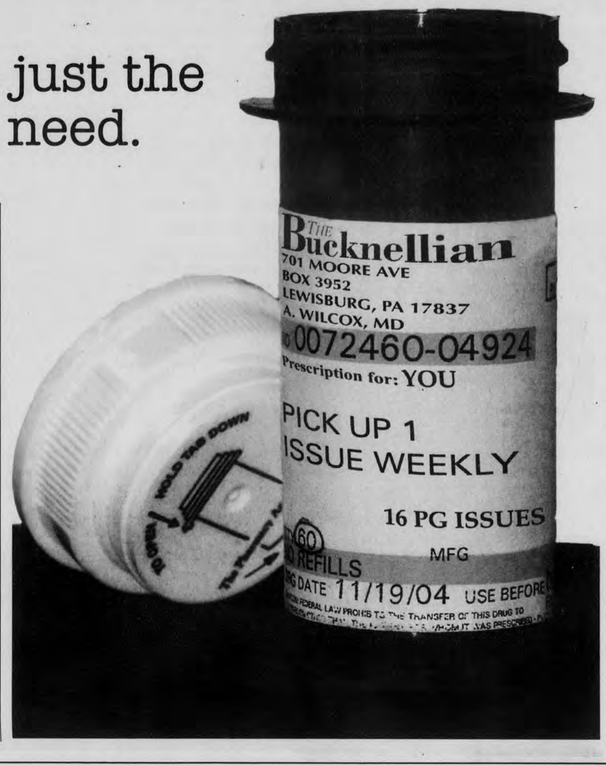


Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Alex Gomez '10 gains control of the ball against Siena. Gomez was part of the balanced effort that included four different scorers in the 4-1 win over the Saints.

THE Bucknellian

A subscription is just the prescription you need.



Subscribing to The Bucknellian for the 2006-2007 academic year is easy!

Enclose this form and a check (made out to The Bucknellian) and mail it to:

The Bucknellian, Bucknell University C3952, 701 Moore Avenue, Lewisburg, PA 17837

Name _____

Address _____

_____

Phone _____

E-mail _____

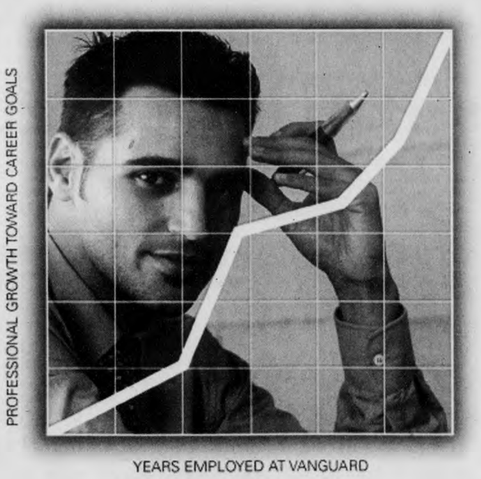
___ ONE YEAR: receive 24 issues each week for the academic year for only $45, a $15 savings!

___ ONE SEMESTER: receive 12 issues during the fall or spring semester for $30. Please specify semester: _____

For more information contact The Bucknellian at 570-577-1520 or bucknellian@bucknell.edu

Vanguard

Your first career decision just got easier.



PROFESSIONAL GROWTH TOWARD CAREER GOALS

YEARS EMPLOYED AT VANGUARD

Visit us at the Employer Expo 2006
Wednesday, September 20, 11:00 a.m.
to 3:00 p.m. at the Gerhard Fieldhouse

Make an easy transition from college to Vanguard, a company that invests heavily in talent from all majors. If you're a graduating student interested in rotating through a division of the company, consider our specialty programs in management, finance, information technology, or client relations. Or take on a rewarding, team-oriented associate position in client relations, finance or processing. If you're still in school, explore our paid summer business or IT internship program, which could lead to full-time employment. No matter which path you choose, exceptional opportunities begin at Vanguard.

FORTUNE 100 BEST COMPANIES TO WORK FOR 2006

Connect with Vanguard™ www.vanguardcareers.com
Vanguard is an Equal Opportunity Employer.

Vanguard, Connect with Vanguard, and the ship logo are trademarks of The Vanguard Group, Inc. All other marks are the exclusive property of their respective owners. ©2006 The Vanguard Group, Inc. All rights reserved.

Geocaching sends scavengers searching for hidden treasures

The latest internet fad takes searchers outdoors and around the world

By Lily Beauvilliers
Arts & Entertainment Editor

Do you remember those books you used to read as a kid, the ones about heroes and heroines who went on great adventures, met interesting people, discovered new places and always came home with a treasure? A new hobby, geocaching, gives people of all ages the chance to make those stories a reality!

What exactly is geocaching? A "cache" is any sort of hiding place and "geo" means earth, so basically it is a variety of places all over the world where people have hidden treasures for others to find. All the caches are recorded on the Web site www.geocaching.com. The first step to starting your adventure is making a free account there.

I pursued my first geocache this summer with the help of my best friend. She and her boyfriend use geocaching as a fun and relaxing date. I logged on to the Web site, set up an account and searched for caches near my home zip code. Lewisburg alone (zip code 17837) returned 790 results.

Our next step was to pick a cache and go hunting. Each cache has an assigned name, a description, coordinates and often a hint. The most common type of cache is called "traditional." It usually consists of a Tupperware or ammunition box filled with small trinkets and a log book.

Other caches, such as the micro (which is just a tiny container) and virtual (which is a place you find, not an object) do not have prizes, so if you are looking to treasure hunt, be careful what you pick.

My best friend and I found a traditional cache called "Book Nook" about a ten-minute drive from my house. But wait – neither of us had access to a global positioning system (GPS). How could we find the position of the cache, given to us in coordinates without a GPS unit?

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

The green Jeep travel bug is one of the trinkets one can find while Geocaching. This year, Jeep is sponsoring a sweepstakes where one lucky geocacher can win a real Jeep car.

Enter Google Earth, a free, downloadable program available at http://earth.google.com/. With it, you can look up driving directions from any address to any set of coordinates and also see a satellite image of your target area. It will not lead you directly to the cache like a GPS unit would, but you get a pretty accurate idea of where your cache is located.

GPS units can be purchased for as little as $100 from Web sites such as www.thegpsstore.com.

So, we had picked our cache and the location. What now? Before you leave the house, you need to grab a few things. You need a small item to leave behind when you take one. McDonald's toys and dollar store trinkets work well. You may need a pen or pencil, to sign the logbook. Your cache might require you to climb something or walk through mud, so sneakers are a must. Print out your directions and you are set to go.

My friend drove me to our cache, which was located on the grounds of a library in a residential neighborhood. I hopped out of the car and began searching for an ammo box. My friend immediately stopped me and told me to be more discreet. "Muggles can see you! You can't let them know it's here," she said.

Like any game with a small group of die-hard fanatics, geocaching has a unique vocabulary and some quirky rules. "Muggles" are people who do not know about geocaching. Geocaching in residential areas presents the extra challenge of discretion; no one can see what you are doing. If a "Muggle" asks you why you just reached under a trashcan or climbed a parking lot light (two places caches have been hidden), you need a back story to cover you.

Mine, we decided, was that I had lost my keys.

With discretion in mind, I began to stroll around the library. It did not take me too long to discover the primary area of interest—a wheelchair ramp under which a person could stand. Below the ramp, a shelf had been dug into the earth, and after careful inspection, I found my first geocache. The final challenges were wriggling it free, hiding it in a purse, and taking it back to the car without getting caught.

Soon the cache was secured, and I opened my first cache. I discovered something of particular interest - a green Jeep travel bug among items like a flip-flop key chain and a pen light.

A travel bug is an item that gets passed around from cache to cache, never staying in one place (or with one person). Jeep is currently sponsoring a competition (http://jeep.geocaching.com) where people who find Jeep travel bugs can win a Jeep. I signed the logbook with my name, my geocaching username, what I left (a Hello Kitty doll) and what I took (the travel bug, of course) and slipped the cache back in place.

Excited about our find, my best friend and I rushed home and got back on the geocaching Web site. The final step to any adventure is to brag about it, and geocaching is no exception. On the site, you can log which caches you found and leave a little message about it. When I logged in, I saw that my cache's log had been accessed about an hour before! A user left this note: "Stopped quickly to get Jeep TB, but it's already been taken. Boys made a quick trade."

One single box, underneath a wheelchair ramp in front of a library, had been accessed twice in one day. Think about all 790 caches in Lewisburg. How often do you walk by a hidden treasure and not even realize that it is there?

The best way to find out? Log on and start geocaching!

Just a word of advice—you may want to start right on campus.

See you caching!

How to overcome roommate blues

College is hard, but dealing with your roommate does not have to be

By Rajaa Qadri
Contributing Writer

Coming to college is challenging in more ways than one can imagine. Students encounter a new environment, new people, tough studies and above all living with total strangers for the first time: roommates.

Many college students never shared rooms with siblings, let alone a stranger. So when it comes to living with a stranger from across the country, it's not strange to feel uncertain about it.

It is not as difficult to get along with a roommate as we think it is (with a few exceptions). So if your roommate is not a crazy person, chances are you two will get along relatively well with each other.

The key is to relax. Enter your dorm room with an open mind. Do not adopt a "my-roommate-is-evil" attitude. No two people are alike. People approach particular situations differently and it does not mean you will not get along.

Cristina Sacco '10 has a wonderful relationship with her roommate.

"We get along so well because we both understand that you have to be considerate of the person you're living with, even if you don't agree with them all the time," Sacco said.

We expect our roommates to understand our needs but forget to do the same for them. Be understanding of what the other person wants and be considerate. You should compromise whenever possible; do not let your roommate take advantage of your consideration.

The ability to compromise is important in relations among roommates. You should give a little in order to get a little. If your roommate has friends over in the room and you need to study, grab your laptop and head for the library instead of giving him or her dirty looks. If you are studying and your roommate is being obnoxiously loud make sure you mention it is inconsiderate.

This leads to the most important and widely accepted rule: communication. Tell your roommate (respectfully, of course) what you can and cannot tolerate. Roommates should cooperate, not try to control one another.

Odinakachi Anyanwu '09, a Resident Assistant in Smith Hall, advises first-year students based on his personal experience.

"In order to prevent roommate conflicts from developing during your first year on campus, and throughout all of your college years, it is important to communicate with them," Anyanwu said. "Do not leave anything unsaid that bothers you."

Anyanwu believes it is important to set boundaries right away so each person agrees to compromise from the start. He said the lack of communication leads to the buildup of avoidable conflicts.

"I believe this is the key in having a good relationship with roommates and living in a favorable environment that will affect your academic performance as well as your social life," Anyanwu said. "As a Resident Assistant I make the effort to stress this to my residents daily."

The most frequent complaint from students is about their roommate's girlfriend or boyfriend. Students often feel uncomfortable around their roommate's significant others. Unwelcome roommates are even "sexiled" from the room—an action that causes a great inconvenience to the displaced roommate.

"We cannot expect our roommates not to bring anyone in the room at all," Nga Nguyen '08 said. "They will have visitors and so will we."

"There is a need to accommodate at times but if you are having trouble you need to tell them that you have nothing against the other person involved, but you feel uncomfortable having them around all the time."

Nguyen suggests that if the situation is not solved at that level you should reach a higher authority.

Roommates are not creatures from another world. They are not designed to make your life miserable. Living with a roommate can be a wonderful experience. We learn so much from them by living with them. We discover our own personalities at a deeper level.

Many students' roommates become their best friends. All it takes is a little bit of consideration, communication and accommodation to have a smooth ride. Have a wonderful year.

Mer Cares

Dear Mer:

I am currently pledging a sorority and I was pretty sure it was the right one for me when I received a bid from them a few weeks ago. But two weekends ago was welcome weekend and my whole perspective of the sorority changed that night. Many of the girls went and participated in illicit activities before we went and visited the fraternities. I chose not to participate and just watch and observe, but I felt out of place and I don't think that is how it should be if I want to be in a collective sisterhood. When we visited the frats later on that night, the sisters again showed a completely different side of themselves that I had not witnessed during the rush process. Now I am unsure whether or not I really want to pledge for the sorority or not. The sisters are very nice and did not pressure me to do anything I didn't want to do, but just seeing what kind of people they were outside of classes and Greek activities, the sorority itself seemed to bond over activities I might not feel comfortable with.

–Lost Sister

Dear Lost Sister:

This type of problem seems to come up frequently with sororities, fraternities and even in groups of tight-knit friends.

I think you really need to sit down and evaluate what you want to achieve in such a sorority and with your sisters. That's easier said than done of course, but a sisterhood should not be all about engaging in activities that not everyone is comfortable with.

If these activities include drinking and you feel happy with your friends in the group when they are their sober selves, then you have to weigh your options. If you feel happy enough with the girls, then I don't see why you can't hang out with them when they are doing sorority and sisterly activities – just don't hang out with them when they drink.

But, if you would feel left out and unhappy should they decide to go out and party it up on a Saturday night when there will be alcohol involved, maybe you need to reconsider joining.

Nobody wants to go to a party and feel pressured to participate with all your friends even if they don't do it physically or verbally. Often, just being around people drinking might cause you to grab a beer yourself so you look just as "cool" as they do.

Many students go to college saying they never drank in high school and promise not to drink in college. Very few people actually are able to hold true to their values and morals because of the increasing presence of alcohol and the fact that many underage upperclassmen drink illegally. The definition of a sorority/fraternity is a group of people united in a relationship and having some interest, activity or purpose in common. That particular interest should not be alcohol or activities you don't want to participate in. If you don't like the group of girls you associate with in the sorority drunk or sober, you may be better off with friends who understand you and are the same when they are sober as when they decide to drink occasionally.

If you want to stay in the sorority so you can have those close bonds, avoid activities you don't want to participate in at all costs and don't make excuses to your friends. Instead of getting intoxicated at parties with your friends, try spending your time socializing more than drinking. It may be hard to say no, but it's a smaller risk than the risks you would be taking if you drank.

If your friends try to pressure you into drinking, just say that you will have more fun being sober. You could always leave a party early if the temptation to drink becomes too strong.

If they are really your friends, they will understand. But at least you will have tried your hardest to be with them. It is something you should take into consideration to say because the effects of alcohol are very serious.

If you feel comfortable enough with the situation to talk about it, you could always try talking to your friends about your feelings towards these occurrences. If they are good friends or rather your "sisters" like you say they are, then they should care about your problems and not pressure you into doing uncomfortable things or drinking around you.

You need to tell them, because they might not know you don't like to participate in these sorts of activities at all. Next time you are out with them, they may do it again. So you have to simply tell them you are not interested or you are having a better time without any drugs or alcohol. If they want you to be their sister as badly as you want to be theirs, then things should work out the way you want them to.

In conclusion, my advice to you is to really think about the pros and cons of joining this sorority and if you are willing to do what is necessary if you are put in an uncomfortable situation.

Love,
Mer

Please send questions regarding any topic to marc001@bucknell.edu with subject line reading "advice" or you may send a letter via campus mail to box number C1099. I look forward to hearing from you!

Do you like to eat at restaurants?

For free?

Write for Features!

E-mail jjf018@

June 9, 2006: An unforgettable day in Germany

By Amanda Schroeder
Contributing Writer

My semester in Germany was filled with its own world of wonders from mountains and castles to cathedrals and chocolates.

What else could be expected from a place so old, with doorknobs and cobblestones with more history than our entire country?

Of course I have endearing stories of cultural barriers transforming into sources of appreciation and understanding. What defined my experience was not the architecture or the food but the occasion that took over the country on June 9: the World Cup.

Before I left for Hamburg, many people commented on what an opportunity it was to be in Germany for the World Cup. They told me what a "once-in-a-lifetime experience" I would have, but as a U.S. citizen who never watched a soccer game before, I did not share in or understand their excitement.

The preparations in Hamburg soon began. People transformed TV towers into giant soccer balls. They made bus stops look like goals and hung pictures of the German players the size of hotels. I thought it was all somewhat silly.

One evening when I was in the living room of my dorm, one of my hall-mates asked if I was looking forward to the World Cup. I responded with a polite smile and said I was not much of a soccer fan. He smiled in return and said it was a shame; I did not know what I was missing out on. He was right. I had no idea.

One main aspect of the World Cup I quickly came to appreciate was the sheer magnitude of the event. In the United States I only heard about the last four or five games of the tournament, but from start to finish the Cup is a month long with up to three games played per day.

The only comparable event in the U.S. sporting world is the Super Bowl, an event that lasts about six hours, including all of the festivities. Though the Super Bowl attracts a large viewing audience it is almost exclusively from the United States and includes an undeniable contingent only watching for the commercials.

Drawing from an international pool each game of the World Cup rivals the enthusiasm our sporting world achieves for a few hours.

It was not the viewing audience that caught my attention but the fact that on June 9, it became socially acceptable to decorate your car with gaudy paint, hang banners from your balcony and walk around wearing your country's flag as a cape.

I discovered the nationalities of taxi drivers simply by seeing what flag was flying from their car windows. Each morning I found out which teams were playing by looking at the clothing of people riding the subway.

This display of national spirit was especially noteworthy with German fans not only because they were supporting the home team, but due to the somewhat taboo status German flags and German national pride has had since the end of World War II.

The German team participated in many past World Cups. Yet it was not until this critical passage of time combined with the hosting of the Cup and a team everyone could wrap their hearts around that it once again became acceptable to wave a flag or sing the national anthem.

World Cup tickets are expensive and infamously hard to obtain. Many major cities in Germany set up "FanFests" where fans could watch the games on giant screens surrounded by thousands of singing, clapping, cheering, flag-bedecked friends.

By the time the final games of the Cup arrived, I had caught the bug along with other students in my program. We watched games with our hall-mates and developed attachments to particular teams.

Two of us who were fond of the German team decided to try to get into the FanFest for some of the final games. Despite the massive sizes of these Fests, the Hamburg field would be filled to capacity two to three hours before the start of the games with 70,000 fans.

With this in mind and a failed attempt behind us we decided to make a day out of going to the FanFest for the quarter final game of Germany versus Argentina. Arriving four hours before the game we obtained a pair of the coveted bleacher seats, giving us somewhere to sit for the long wait.

For a summary of how amazing the game was I am sure any news Web site would do a better job. The game ended 1:1 and remained tied after double overtime. It came down to free kicks during which German goalie Jens Lehmann won the heart of every person watching with two brilliant saves. We sang, cheered, danced, lit sparklers and hugged strangers. It was fantastic.

My time in Germany taught me much about the language and the culture, but it lacked the palpable bond I hoped to develop traveling abroad. I was in a country with a population notoriously known for being "hard to get to know."

Photos courtesy of Amanda Schroeder and Julia Fuchs

Top: Crowds at the Hamburg FanFest arrived hours before the scheduled kick-off in order to get a standing spot to see the games. Bottom left: Amanda Schroeder '07 and a friend enjoy the spirit of the World Cup. Bottom middle: Fans go to all extremes in order to show support for their team. Bottom right: Everything from cars to buildings are decorated in a country's colors and flags.

Yet jumping up and down wearing flags and face paint, singing, cheering at the triumphs, groaning at the defeats and simply sharing a team seemed to break the barriers I encountered during the rest of my time there.

This became even clearer to me returning to the FanFest for the Germany versus Italy semi-final match. Though we were in the crowd instead of the bleachers we felt the same energy present at the Argentina game. This time we participated even more having caught on to the cheers shouted throughout the game.

When Italy scored and the crowd grew silent, it felt like something in me stopped. I looked at the man next to me, who was cheering and giving me high-fives moments before, and he was staring at the screen and crying. I did not know what to do.

Returning to my room I saw the boy who spent the days of Germany's games wearing only his boxers and a flag as a cape. I felt the urge to ask him if he was OK and got an answer I did not expect.

"I have been waiting six years, ever since they announced the World Cup would be here. I said, yes, this is the time we will win it again. And now it is over; we have lost and it is all gone," he said.

In becoming infatuated with the enthusiasm of the Germans supporting their team, I should have expected to share the heartbreak.

I traveled to many cities and saw awe-inspiring things, but the moment I hold as one of my most fond memories occurred on the subway back from the FanFest after the Italy game. One popular song among fans started with the lyrics "54, 74, 90, 2006" – the years Germany won the Cup and 2006 as the one they hoped would follow.

As we traveled in silence one teenage boy started singing it softly, almost to himself. Everyone in the car looked at him, confused, until they heard what he was singing: "54, 74, 90, 2010." I smiled to myself and felt it was the perfect conclusion to my experience.

Tell us your darkest secrets

www.postsecret.com

Tell us anything.
Funny, bitter, sexy, depressing.
Something only you know.
This is your chance to get it all off your chest.
Design a postcard, write a secret on it, and send it in.
Entries will be published at the end of the semester.

MAIL

Send your secret anonymously to:
The Bucknellian
C-3952

Fashion runway to make debut at the University

By Sarah Novello
Writer

Right now, fashion is in, and students plan their Wednesday night around their new favorite reality show: Bravo's "Project Runway."

The University's fashion club, Culture Couture, caught the "Project" fever and is now planning their very own "Project Runway: Bucknell." It will display the designing, modeling and even film-making talents of the student body.

Abby Borden '08, president of Culture Couture, describes "Project Runway: Bucknell" as "a real group effort."

The show will incorporate the designing and modeling expertise of the club. In order to incorporate two rounds into "Project Runway: Bucknell," the film club will film the first round, which will be shown before the Sept. 29 show.

For the first round, the 10 designers will be given a budget and a challenge. They will be set loose in Wal-Mart to find the materials necessary to make their garment, after which they will have five hours to create their clothing in the Craft Center. In the spirit of "Project Runway," the designers will not be able to return to their garments after those five hours.

Culture Couture member Lauren Kushner '09, explains the schedule for the show Sept. 29.

"The 10 designers will present their garments to the judges, who will immediately eliminate five designers," Kushner said. "The remaining five will be given another task to create on stage in a time frame of 10 minutes. The three judges will pick a first, second and third place winner."

Borden added the winner will receive a grand prize, "as well as the opportunity to design for the Spring Show without any judging for voting as we do for the other designers."

Judging "Project Runway: Bucknell" will be two faculty members, along with the audience member determined "best dressed" by Culture Couture. In that respect, "Project Runway: Bucknell" is also a contest for the audience.

"Culture Couture wanted to create an event in the fall to get ourselves noticed on campus before the Spring Fashion Show," Borden said. "Project Runway is a popular show, and anyone who watches it weekly will probably be curious to see what we've come up with – we're very excited."

Borden is hoping to draw more attention to Culture Couture and to let the campus know that it is easy to get involved with the club, even if you cannot sew.

"We don't just sit around and read Vogue," Borden said. "We have models, people interested in the set, music, make-up, PR—anything. Even without any experience at all, you can be a designer, if you're determined enough, in just a year."

"A terrific example from last year is that one of our designers came into Culture Couture not knowing how to sew or even draw. She ended up having an amazing ball gown, stitched to perfection in the spring show."

Applications for "Project Runway: Bucknell" will be sent out in a campus-wide email. Culture Couture encourages anyone to sign up. Applicants simply have to submit a photo or sketch of a garment they have designed in the past in order to display their talent. All who apply must be available Sept. 23 and Sept. 29.

Culture Couture is an intricate organization with a wide array of creative people. Members are passionate about introducing the campus to the fashion business in a way many of us already enjoy: the "Project Runway" way!

It is definitely worth checking out "Project Runway: Bucknell." Who knows, it could even inspire you to design your spring wardrobe yourself!

See B10 for more fashion

Listening Post provides an outlet for local children with problems

Students devote time listening and talking with grade-school children

By Liza Banhalmi
Contributing Writer

The more people you interact with, the more relationships you will have.

This simple concept is practically second nature to college students, but for the youth struggling with the pressures and adjustments of middle school, it is not so easy.

The Listening Post is a program for middle school students where they get to interact with peer counselors in informal conversations or take part in other activities. The program takes place five days a week around lunchtime at different schools.

The program began at the middle school level and now has spread to the fourth and fifth grades at Linntown Intermediate schools and the high school.

Any student in the elementary school can get a pass and have lunch while partaking in the various Listening Post activities.

The program started in 1978 because parents and teachers were concerned about drug and alcohol abuse in the youth. Now, it is simply "a prevention program," as coordinator Catherine Shooter puts it.

"Students can come in and just talk about all the normal troubles that accompany the pre-teen and teenage years. [It] also serves as an extra layer of support for troubled students," Shooter said.

The Listening Post is a private, non-profit agency supported in part by the United Way.

"The main purpose of the Listening Post is to enhance positive youth development of young people in our local public schools," said Associate Professor of Sociology Chris Boyatzis, who has been on the Listening Post's advisory board for about five years. "The Listening Post gives youth a place to talk informally and confidentially with college students."

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Vanessa Hershberger '08 and Liz Messerli '08 are Listening Post "near peers" who spend some time each week at the local schools, talking to the children there about any issues they may have. The Listening Post has been in existence for almost 30 years.

How is this program related to the University? Many students on campus are peer counselors, or "near peers" to the students at the middle schools.

Vanessa Hershberger '08 got involved through a good friend.

"[My friend] told me about her job as a near peer, which is something between a peer and a counselor to the students. I was excited to join a program that made a space for the children in elementary school to be people. They are students during class and tutees after school but they are rarely just invited to tell stories about themselves or play during the day. It sounded like the perfect job for me," Hershberger said.

Students receive some training before participating in the Listening Post activities.

A majority of the students that participate in the Listening Post program are psychology and/or education majors but anyone can participate.

Currently, the new coordinator of the Listening Post here at the University is Shooter, a licensed clinical social worker who has worked at the Susquehanna University Counseling Center.

"I love working with school-aged kids, so when this position became available, I jumped on the opportunity to get involved" Shooter said.

Previously, the coordinator was Nancy Marrara, who has now become a guidance counselor in Middleburg.

When Boyatzis first joined the Listening Post's board, he was curious to see if there was any evidence that the Listening Post was beneficial in any way. In turn, he heard stories of the Post's success, but no systematic evidence.

Soon after, Boyatzis went forward with a research team of five psychology majors to evaluate the Listening Post, and collected survey and interview data from the youth, parents, teachers and near peers.

"[The outcome] gave strong evidence for the effectiveness of the program," Boyatzis said.

"The youth found it a safe and needed sanctuary to discuss their personal issues as well as a safe haven just to hang out with another mentor figure who was older than their friends but younger than their teachers and parents," Boyatzis said.

While many of the near peers have graduated, a fresh new group will take part in the program this year.

Anyone interested in the Listening Post should contact Shooter or Boyatzis from the psychology department.

A new column that bares it all ...

Love and the Bubble

Sex.

Many people have sex. In different ways, places, positions. Oral. Anal. Vaginal.

Some do it with one person. Others do it with multiple partners. Of course, there are even ways to do it yourself.

Some prefer "making love." Others are into bondage with whips and leather straps. Whipped cream and chocolate sauce. Exhibitionism. Role-playing. The list goes on.

And some people do not have sex at all.

Everyone has his or her own preferences. Everyone has a different level of experience and desire. But one thing is for certain: sex is a fascinating subject.

Sex is everywhere.

Around campus, it is easy to catch bits of conversations about this juicy topic.

"We went back to my room and made out after the party last night."

"We have been hooking up for a few weeks and now we are finally officially together."

"We had a huge fight and decided we want to see other people."

Often when sex is brought up, relationships in various forms are discussed as well. The distinctions range from hooking up to going out, with many different possibilities in between. And it is not necessarily easy to figure out what your status is.

Sex and relationships are everyday issues. We talk about them with friends, see them on television, hear about them in music and even discuss them in class.

As little kids, sex was a subject kept from most of us, like a secret. As we have grown older, we have seen it glorified on the big screen and heard it preached about in high school sex-ed classes. And during those years, many of us took our first steps into the world of sexuality.

But things are a bit different now. We are in college.

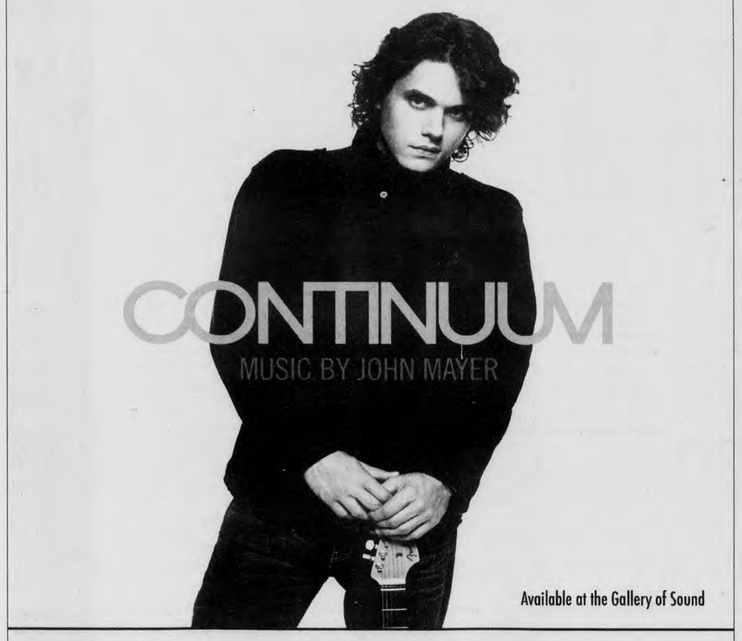
With all kinds of different decisions to make and discussions to have, with real life happening every day, there are inevitably questions about sex and relationships that you need answered. And that, my friends, is why I am here.

Allow me to introduce myself. I am Ms. O. I am your Q&A girl, here to answer all the burning questions you have about sex, love and everything in between.

Sex and relationships are complicated. A little unbiased advice may be just the thing you need.

So if you want to know, ask. I will do my best to answer objectively and let you know what is really going on.

Just e-mail me at MsOintheBubble@yahoo.com or send your questions through campus mail to Ms. O, The Bucknellian, C-3952. All authors of questions will remain anonymous.



Available at the Gallery of Sound

THE NEW ALBUM FEATURING
"WAITING ON THE WORLD TO CHANGE" IN STORES AND ONLINE NOW
JOHNMAYER.COM
"COLUMBIA" AND ℗ REG. U.S. PAT. & TM. OFF. MARCA REGISTRADA. © 2006 SONY BMG MUSIC ENTERTAINMENT

Are you interested in layout?

The Bucknellian is currently looking for a dedicated student, preferably with experience, to help with Features layout.

E-mail mvanorde@ for more information.

Welcome to JESUSLAND!
*Formerly the United States of America
Shocking Tales of Depravity, Sex, and Sin
UNCOVERED BY GOD'S FAVORITE CHURCH, LANDOVER BAPTIST

- Pastor Opens Fire in Lingerie Section of Local Wal-Mart
- Christian Ladies Go Undercover for Jesus at Des Moines Sex Club
- Pastor's Demonstration of the Fires of Hell Leaves First Four Pews without Eyebrows
- Effeminate Man Asked to Leave 11 A.M. Service
- And more!

"THE FUNNIEST BOOK I DIDN'T WRITE!" — God
Available in paperback
WARNER BOOKS
Hachette Book Group USA
Read an Excerpt Online at www.hbgusa.com
Warner Books and the "W" logo are trademarks of Time Warner Inc. Used under license.

Turning over a new leaf

A look at what's in store for the upcoming season

Get the skinny on this fall's fashion fads

By Allie Litwak
Contributing Writer

For fashion favorites this fall, look no further than the 80s. Once a decade ridiculed for its eclectic look, the 80s has inspired pieces to pop up on everyone from models walking the runway to girls heading to class.

Whether this news makes you shudder at the mere memory of shoulder pads or makes you want to break out your leg warmers, try to keep an open mind about these fall fashions. More sophisticated than scrunchies (but just as much fun), they are sure to breathe some life into your wardrobe this season.

Leggings and tights made a comeback this spring and will likely become more popular as the temperature drops. Black leggings, in particular, were seen on many fashion-conscious stars this summer, from the trendy Lindsay Lohan to the bohemian Sienna Miller.

The great thing about leggings and thick tights is they are inexpensive pieces that virtually double your spring and summer wardrobes. Dresses, tunics, shorts and mini skirts become fall-friendly when worn with a pair.

"Leggings are great for fall because they keep your legs warm," Alice Rie '09 said. "If you want to wear a dress but you think you may get cold, leggings are the perfect way to still wear your dress, stay warm, and look cute and trendy."

"I'm into skinny, but not super skinny. I like straight leg styles, but not tapered."
—Meredith Neely '08

If you are nervous about easing into this trend, try a classic black pair. If you are feeling adventurous, go for bright colors and fun patterns. Full-length leggings and tights are best for elongating legs. Cropped pairs are a popular variation of the style, especially for warmer days.

The September issue of In Style magazine featured a five-page spread on this new fashion staple; check it out for tips and tricks of the trade.

Another 80s-inspired look on the rise is the bubble hem. This fun and flirty hemline puts a fresh spin on dresses and skirts. In Style cautions that the hem should not fall below the knee.

One last trend you may notice around campus is the skinny jean. Though Stacey London and Clinton Kelly, TLC's "What Not to Wear" gurus, have cautioned against the tapered pant, there are many styles available that do not produce the image of the dreaded "Mom jeans."

If you are not built like an Olsen twin or a 9-year-old boy, avoid styles that taper too much at the ankle. Choose straight leg styles that, while still trendy, will not make your legs look disproportionate or bulky at the thigh.

"I'm into skinny, but not super skinny," Meredith Neely '08 said. "I like straight leg styles, but not tapered."

In Style suggests sticking with dark, unadorned washes. Crystals, embroidery and other embellishments are not necessary to make these jeans stand out.

When you are making your latest purchases for fall, remember these tips and keep your eyes open for fashions with that 80s feel. Be creative and have fun. Just remember to keep your slap bracelets in storage.

Fashion history helps explain today's trends

By Lauren Kushner
Writer

Men and women are obsessed with fashion in the United States.

Today, many styles are influenced by French and Italian designers, but this has not always been the case. Fashion choices and styles are different all over the world, as shown by Japanese Kimonos and Senegalese dresses.

Fads, or fashions that are worn for a relatively short period of time, change constantly.

We admire and emulate fashion icons such as Marilyn Monroe, Madonna and Paris Hilton. Our culture is one that emphasizes beauty and as a result we are constantly looking around, trying desperately to grab hold of the newest fad in the fashion industry.

Fashion today is different from what it has been in past centuries and even past decades.

Because our culture has become more comfortable with exposing various parts of the body, fashion styles have changed to fit the new modes of what is acceptable to expose.

In the 1950s fashion styles were mostly conservative. With barbeques, cocktail parties and other social events, men and women across the United States were encouraged to dress up. Women's shoes were supposed to be the same color as a dress or skirt. Coco Chanel and Christian Dior's styles influenced this decade greatly.

The 1950s introduced a new kind of shoe: the stiletto heel, which elongated women's legs and helped them appear slimmer.

Poodle skirts, penny loafers, saddle shoes and Converse sneakers all gave the 50s their characteristic glam and glitter.

The 1960s were a crucial time for fashion. Styles became a little more relaxed than those of the 1950s.

Anything goes in this decade and one should not feel bad standing out.

With this decade came the introduction of the mini skirt, but unlike the previous decade, women of the 60s did not flaunt panty hose or "tights." They preferred to show bare legs, a style that would have been unacceptable a decade earlier. Women sported Capri pants and Culottes while a sweater-dress also offered a conservative-liberal approach to a night out on the town.

The 70s, or the disco era, is probably the most widely talked about era in fashion.

Huge teased-out hair and platform-soled shoes took over. Men and women alike sported bell-bottom jeans and ultra bright shirts. Polyester was a commonly worn fabric. Tie-dye was also big in this decade. The 1980s were a time for women to choose among a variety of looks. Shoulder pads and off-the-shoulder looks were quite common. Most clothes were worn tailored and women often wore pant suits.

Diana, the Princess of Wales, was the biggest fashion icon of the decade.

Social events demanded a hat, and fashion mandated that hats match shoes perfectly in color and style. Gold and silver were lauded colors in this era.

1990s fashion in the United States marked a huge turning point. Fashion styles lost all sense of conservatism and it became popular to accentuate certain body parts.

After the turn of the decade, women were no longer expected to dress up on a daily basis and a shift from skirts to pants became widespread. Less became more and, as a result, fashion interest declined. The long-line jacket became trendy for nighttime and Adidas and other sports companies took over the daytime fashion scene.

The classic blazer made a comeback, as well as the petticoat dress.

Today, there is truly no limit to what is appropriate or acceptable to wear.

Huge bangle bracelets are paired with oversized handbags in all shapes and colors.

There has definitely been a resurgence of designer appreciation. Louis Vuitton, Juicy Couture, Prada, Armani, Michael Kors, Seven for all Mankind and Coach can be spotted in both the workroom and the classroom.

It is better to be overdressed than underdressed. Chunky heels have come back into style, as well as tight, brightly colored Capri pants. Short jean skirts are popular. Layering one shirt on top of another is another great style.

Bell-bottoms are no longer in style, replaced by the skinny-fit jean. Long necklaces are in as are popped collars for men and women. Sailor-inspired jackets and headbands have made a reappearance on the red carpet. Military print and stripes are now fashionable fabric choices.

Anything goes in this decade and one should not feel bad standing out.

Of course, styles will change quickly. We will just have to change with it.

Do you have an opinion about what should be "in" this fall? Read more about Culture Couture's "Project Runway: Bucknell" on page B8.

Photos and illustration by Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

The Bucknellian

September 22, 2006

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

Volume 138, Number 4 | Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue | www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Talkin' alternative rock blues

A&E contributing writer Angela Tchou discusses the changing sounds of alternative rock.

See page A9

Vandals spray-paint Sigma Phi Epsilon house

By Amanda Sidman
Staff Writer

Sigma Phi Epsilon Fraternity was a victim of vandalism Thursday. Brothers awoke to find racial slurs and derogatory terms spray-painted on the outside of their fraternity house. Two cars in front of the house were also vandalized.

"For the most part the guys understand that pranks happen," said Patrick O'Malley '07, the president of sigma phi epsilon. "But some of the things written were extremely immature and offensive."

Public Safety Director Jason Friedberg confirmed hateful words such as "nigger" and "fag" were written on the house as well as on the two cars parked in front of the house. The owner of one of the cars, a female, paid close to $1,000 to have the spray paint removed from her car.

"It was just so disgusting," she said.

Friedberg said this is "not a hate crime," since it was not directed against one individual, but a "bias crime." He and his team are taking serious measures to get to the bottom of this case.

"We are dedicating all of our resources to investigate and prosecute this crime," Friedberg said.

He also commented that this act has not only violated the law but "everything that Bucknell stands for."

Until individuals have been prosecuted, which Friedberg believes will happen quite soon, O'Malley has tried to ease the worries of the fraternity members and has asked all of the brothers to remain calm.

"This is a small campus, and something like this generally doesn't just go away without somebody finding out who did it. So for now we're just going to continue on normally and if/when something does turn up [we will] have the administration deal with the person(s) accordingly," O'Malley said.

Friedberg and Public Safety have encouraged students to continue using the anonymous tip line (http://www.bucknell.edu/About_Bucknell/Offices_Resources/Public_Safety/Anonymous_Tip_Form.html) which has already helped them obtain leads. Public Safety requests the cooperation of the student body in the investigation of this case, as it is vital to the safety and well-being of our campus.

CREAM OF THE CROP

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

Saturday's Fall Fest festivities drew one of the largest student crowds in recent years. Students participated in pie-throwing contests, threw balls at dunk tanks, sunbathed and listened to this year's musical performers My Shady Uncle Thomas, Daphne Loves Derby, the Hush Sound and headliner Jack's Mannequin. Turn to page A10 for a recap.

Joyce Carol Oates to receive award, speak to students

By Sarah Germani
Contributing Writer

Joyce Carol Oates will become this year's recipient of the Janet Weis Fellow in Contemporary Letters. Oates is an award-winning author who will accept this award as well as speak to the students, faculty and community members at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday in the Weis Center for the Performing Arts.

The Fellowship was created in 2002 in order to distinguish great achievement in fiction writing. The award was formed in honor of Janet Weis, who was known to be an author, civic leader and philanthropist. The Degenstein Foundation provided a grant in order to make this award possible.

Oates has written 37 novels, 25 collections of short stories, seven books of poetry, four books of plays and much more. Her most famous works include "A Garden of Earthly Delights," "Black Water," "You Must Remember This" and "We Were the Mulvaneys." Throughout her writing she expresses experiences and emotions relevant and characteristic of her time.

"It seems like students don't have time to read for pleasure," Elizabeth Regan '10 said. "Having a speaker like [Oates] might excite people about reading."

Oates has a reputation for excellence and has been considered by some to be one of the greatest writers of this time period.

"It would be a great opportunity to hear an author speak who is so popular and influential at this time," Laura Eckman '10 said. "It's important to have an author students can relate to."

Other honors and awards Oates has received include a three-time nomination for the Nobel Prize in Literature. She received a Pulitzer Prize, the National Book Award, the 2005 Prix Femina, a literary award for best novel published in France, Oprah book of the Month and many more.

Oates' dedication and passion for writing began early on as a child. She constantly trained herself to write and evolved as a writer, drawing from her experiences from childhood to her life in Detroit to her teaching.

See OATES page A2

Cafeteria suspends serving of spinach due to E. coli outbreak

By Nilanjana Saha
News Editor

The Bostwick Cafeteria stopped serving spinach after The U.S. Food and Drug Administration issued a warning Friday morning against an E. coli outbreak that presumably spread through freshly bagged spinach.

"Our supply of baby spinach and all salad blends containing spinach was pulled back as an immediate reaction to the warning in order to maintain the highest safety standards," Executive Chef Brian Ritchie said. Notices were posted around the Bostwick and the Bison informing students and faculty about the outbreak last week.

This particular strain of E. coli called O157: H7 has already affected 131 people nationwide, including six from Pennsylvania, according to the Center for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) Web site.

See E. coli page A2

Barry calls government aid for Katrina disaster inadequate

By Ahmed Kadouda
Contributing Writer

The flooding of New Orleans in the wake of Hurricane Katrina was a "man-made disaster," said a member of Congress's bi-partisan committee for flood control.

Historian John Barry gave this year's first "Science, Technology and Society Colloquium Series" speech on Hurricane Katrina in the context of the 1927 Flood of the Mississippi River on Monday. The Elaine Langone Center Forum was full of students, faculty and citizens of Lewisburg as they listened intently to his speech.

Barry is the author of five books, including "The Rising Tide: The Great Mississippi Flood of 1927 and How it Changed America." Barry is a native of Rhode Island and a graduate of Brown University. He is currently a Distinguished Visiting Scholar at Tulane University.

See BARRY page A3

Fraternities attempt to re-establish image

Theta Chi moves back into former Summit House, DU re-colonizes

By Michelle Laxer
News Editor

The University welcomes the return of Delta Upsilon Fraternity this fall. In addition, the Theta Chi fraternity has reached a milestone by recruiting enough members to move back into their on-campus house this semester.

Both organizations will spend the year focusing on recruitment and establishing their respective images on campus.

Theta Chi returned to the University last year after a five year hiatus. The fraternity was first installed at the University in 1947.

Due to low numbers at the end of 2000, members of the fraternity decided to close their doors and try to rebuild the brotherhood in a few years' time.

"Our alumni came back, along with consultants from our international headquarters and they went through the formal recruitment process," said Joe Rusiewicz '07, president of Theta Chi.

They were not able to recruit men during the formal

See FRATS page A3

Nilanjana Saha—The Bucknellian

Achot Kazarian '09 and Joseph Valickus '09 pose in front of the Demosthenean House. The fraternity recruited 18 new members.

INSIDE THIS ISSUE

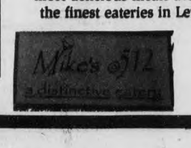
SPORTS

Bison crushes Cornell with a 20-5 win at a well-attended home game.

B1

FEATURES

Check out some of the most delicious meals available at the finest eateries in Lewisburg



B9

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

Bela FLeck played a phenomenal show last weekend in The Weis Center.

A8

OPINIONS

Students should make use of their tuition dollars and attend the Joyce Carol Oates speech.

A4

Public Safety Log

Wednesday, September 13

PROPERTY RECOVERED—RB Winter State Park: Park signs recovered from LCA storage shed.

Thursday, September 14

CRIMINAL MISCHEIF—Roberts Hall: Unknown male broke out two window panes in an exterior door.

CRIMINAL MISCHEIF—Demosthenean Hall: Graffiti spray painted on the pathway.

CRIMINAL MISCHEIF—Sigma Phi Epsilon: Graffiti spray painted on the front door and two vehicles in the parking lot.

Friday, September 15

ALARM-BURGLAR—Swartz Hall-Uptown DJ Booth: Cause Unknown.

FRAUD—Langone Center-Bookstore: Officer investigating various charges to a credit card. Multiple agencies involved.

SUSPICIOUS ACTIVITY—Moore Ave Parking Lot: Employee reported that her vehicle had a flat tire. Cause Undetermined.

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—Swartz Hall: Student cited for underage consumption. Report filed.

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—Computer Center: Underage student transported to Evangelical Hospital emergency room for medical treatment. Report filed.

Saturday, September 16

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—Swartz Hall: Underage student transported to Geisinger Medical Center for an alcohol overdose.

DISORDERLY CONDUCT—Swartz Hall: An RA reported an unauthorized party in a student's room. Public Safety confiscated alcohol. Report filed.

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—St. George Street: A student reported that unknown person(s) at Sigma Alpha Epsilon Fraternity threw bottles at him as he was walking on St. George Street.

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—Larison Hall: Student cited for underage consumption and criminal mischief. Public Safety report filed.

DISORDERLY CONDUCT—Sojka Pavilion: Unidentified male urinated on a bathroom wall. Report filed.

DISORDERLY CONDUCT—Swartz Hall: Male urinated on the pathway outside Swartz Hall.

Sunday, September 17

CRIMINAL MISCHEIF—Sigma Chi: Two Non-BU males broke out window panes. Subjects caught and arrested. Report filed.

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—Swartz Hall: Public Safety assisted with an underage student who became ill and was turned over to a RA.

ASSIST OTHER AGENCY-POLICE—River Area: Public Safety and Lewisburg Police Department responded to the river area after hearing gunshots. A check found nothing.

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—Swartz Hall: Underage student urinated on another. Student was cited and transported to Evan ER for medical treatment.

ALARM-INTRUSION—Swartz Hall: Unknown Cause.

ALARM-INTRUSION—Stadium: Unknown Cause.

VEHICLE ACCIDENT—7th Street Lot: Unknown Persons struck a student's vehicle while it was parked in the 7th Street Lot.

ASSIST OTHER AGENCY-POLICE—Strawberry Alley: An employee found an intoxicated, unconscious male in a vehicle in Strawberry Alley at the rear of Sigma Alpha Epsilon Fraternity. Public Safety assisted Lewisburg Police Department.

Monday, September 18

WELFARE CHECK—Campus: A student's parent called with concern for her son's welfare. Public Safety located the student and he was directed to Psychological Services.

THEFT—Front Smith Hall: Employee reported that her son's bike was stolen.

Tuesday, September 19

VEHICLE ACCIDENT—Walker Street Bridge: Delivery driver backed into the bridge causing minor damage.

BURGLARY—Bucknell West: Two students reported their iPods missing for their Mod.

ALARM-INTRUSION—Coleman Hall Sound Booth: Cause Undetermined.

Oates to speak on campus

Courtesy of the Office of Communications

Author Joyce Carol Oates has written 37 novels, 25 collections of short stories, seven books of poetry, four books of plays.

OATES From page A1

She describes herself as living in moderation with a consistent enjoyment of her work.

The Celestial Timepiece, a Web site dedicated to Oates and her work, gives a portrayal of the success and accomplishment Oates has achieved.

According to the site, http://jco.usfca.edu, "The dramatic trajectory of Oates' career, especially her amazing rise from an economically strained childhood to her current position as one of the world's most eminent authors, suggests a feminist, literary version of the mythic pursuit and achievement of the American dream."

Health groups warn against spinach consumption

E. coli From page A1

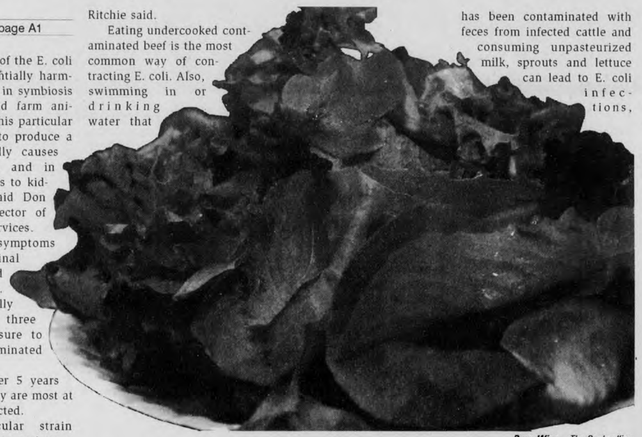
"Most strains of the E. coli bacteria are essentially harmless and can live in symbiosis with humans and farm animals. However, this particular strain is known to produce a toxin that usually causes bloody diarrhea and in severe cases leads to kidney failures," said Don Stechschulte, director of student health services.

Other symptoms include abdominal pain, anemia and mild fever. Symptoms usually appear two or three days after exposure to the contaminated spinach.

Children under 5 years old and the elderly are most at risk of being infected.

"This particular strain does not create as serious a problem for college kids," Ritchie said.

Eating undercooked contaminated beef is the most common way of contracting E. coli. Also, swimming in or drinking water that has been contaminated with feces from infected cattle and consuming unpasteurized milk, sprouts and lettuce can lead to E. coli infections, according to the CDC Web site.



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Bostwick cafeteria stopped serving spinach following a FDA warning about an E. coli outbreak.

Most people usually recover from E. coli infections with the help of antibiotics, but the CDC confirmed one death in Wisconsin from this particular outbreak.

"Although about a hundred people have been infected, percentage wise, it is still a pretty small portion of the population," Ritchie said.

Currently the CDC warns against eating all raw spinach and products containing spinach. But according to their Web site, E. coli can be eliminated by cooking spinach at 160 degrees Fahrenheit.

To avoid cross-contamination, Stechschulte advised students to be aware of how they are handling meat and dairy products.

"You have to always be conscious of your surroundings," Stechschulte said.

Keeping dairy and fresh produce separated also reduces contamination. Frequently using hand sanitizers and disinfectants can also prevent infection.

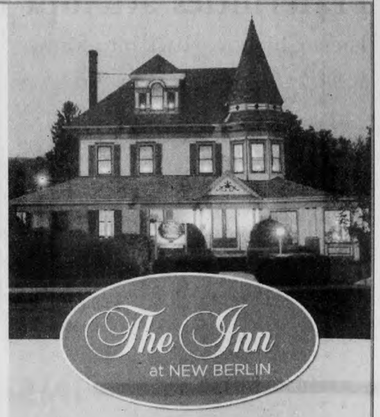
"The duty of a newspaper is to comfort the afflicted and afflict the comfortable."

Write for News.
etu001@

Not too long ago, you chose a small college in the middle of cow country. And, wisely, it chose you, too.

Now go ahead and make another good choice.

For dinner.



The Inn at New Berlin is a short, 10-minute drive from the Bucknell campus, on scenic country roads. It's a perfect distraction from writing papers - or grading them.

Students and faculty love our relaxed atmosphere and our award-winning dining, while parents appreciate the luxurious lodging during parents' weekend and graduations. But don't wait till then to discover us!

Dine. Shop. Stay.

570-966-0321 InnAtNewBerlin.com

"Turn your Power ON and Add LIFE to your Years!"
Michael D. Morrison D.C.
1205 W Market Street
Lewisburg, PA 17837
Office: 570-523-1221
MORRISON'S ADVANCED CHIROPRACTIC CARE
A Healthy Spine Equals a Healthy YOU!

Bucknell Students may receive a free exam and x-rays (if needed) with mention of this advertisement.

Need More Space?
LOFT BEDS
FUTONS
HIGH RISE BEDS
CollegeBedLofts.com

Barry speaks about Katrina Disaster

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

John Barry speaks in the Langone Center about the failures that took place after Katrina. He said that the disaster after Katrina was "man-made" and government aid provided was not enough.

BARRY From page A1

His speech addressed the failures that had taken place immediately after Katrina.

"The first government aid that got to Saint Bernard parish was the Royal Canadian Mounted Police from British Colombia," said Barry. He said the flood of 1927 helped Herbert Hoover become the front-runner in the presidential elections of 1928.

He asserted that the number one impact of the flood of 1927 was the number of people being fed by the Red Cross. Not a single federal dollar went to feed, cloth or shelter a single U.S. citizen affected by the flood.

Similar to Katrina, the Flood of 1927 was mainly caused by the over-breaching of levies that were built poorly to protect the people.

"The hurricane protection system was protection in name only. If the levies had worked properly, it may have saved many lives," Barry said.

He went on to explain the geology of the Mississippi River. In fact, the Mississippi is 20 percent larger than the Yellow River; it is easily the most important river system in the world.

"It directed the expansion of our nation, it created great fortunes; blues, jazz...would not be without this river," Barry said.

It is important to understand the significance the Mississippi River has to the United States. Kansas City, Minneapolis, Pittsburg and Tulsa are ports with connections to the ocean because of the Mississippi river. New Orleans, along with its separate port jurisdictions is the biggest port in the United States. By tonnage, it is the biggest port in the world. In terms of offshore production, 29 percent of domestic oil is offshore Louisiana. He also mentioned that 31 percent of all fish eaten by people in the United States comes from the Louisiana cost. He argued that the fact that New Orleans is below sea-level is not important; most ports around the world that are located in cities which lay on deltaic rivers are below sea-level as well.

He went on to speak about Hurricane Katrina and the devastating tragedy that followed. "What happened in Katrina is a perfect storm of what can go wrong," Barry said.

Students found Barry's speech to be educational.

"I thought John Barry was a really informative speaker. With his background information on Katrina, he really made the audience understand why the levies broke and why we should rebuild," Jennifer Arroyo '10 said.

Michael Gunderson '10 offered a similar opinion.

"I thought his reasons for restoring the city in its former location were well founded and demonstrated the need for us to unite towards this restoration, while keeping in mind the need for better flood prevention measures," Gunderson said.

> "The hurricane protection system was protection in name only. If the levies had worked properly, it may have saved."
>
> — John Barry,
> visting scholar at Tulane University

The Science, Technology and Society Colloquium Series will continue this year with other speakers. Kevin Phillips will discuss oil, debt, religion and geopolitics Nov. 1. Volker Härtkopf will discuss global and national implications of innovations in building Feb. 5. Joel Mokyr will discuss the Industrial Revolution and the beginnings of the modern economic growth on March 21.

Theta Chi and Delta Upsilon flourish on campus

FRATS From page A1

process, but the alumni and consultants decided to stay and hold informal recruitment.

"They found a group of us from other groups and organizations that they pulled together," Rusiewicz said. From this group, they were able to attract more men through friends and acquaintances.

This fall was the first time the members of Theta Chi went through the formal recruitment process.

"[It] was something new to us, but it was a positive experience," Rusiewicz said. Their membership currently stands at 16.

"Right now, we're still considered an interest group," Rusiewicz said. "None of us are initiated brothers yet."

National fraternities have their own unique sets of guidelines that potential and current chapters must adhere to.

In order for Theta Chi to be considered a colony, they must meet the required number of members.

A colony consists of all new members who are interested in learning about their fraternity and spreading interest throughout the campus.

Obtaining colony status puts the men of Theta Chi one step closer to re-installing their chapter at the University.

Even though Theta Chi has not recruited enough men to re-colonize, they were able to fill their quota to move back into their house, formerly known as Summit House.

"To get the house back, we had to fill the house and 80 percent had to be members," Rusiewicz said.

The house was built specifically for the fraternity in 1957, and the first class moved in that same year. Upon the fraternity's departure from campus, the house was sold back to the University.

"In exchange, they would fix up the house and then when we came back to campus, we would be allowed to have the house back to live in," Rusiewicz said.

The next step for Theta Chi is to meet their national guidelines in order to re-colonize.

"From here, we continue to recruit," Rusiewicz said.

The men of Delta Upsilon, who returned to the campus this year, are going through a very similar process. The fraternity was removed from campus in fall of 2003 for numerous violations.

"They were given a number of second chances and they kept violating them," said Joe Valickus '09, president of delta upsilon. The new members are very excited about DU's return.

"[It's] a great opportunity to start up your own fraternity and make it what you want it to be, along with all your friends," member Jim Ritter '09 said.

Leadership consultant Colin Finn from DU's international headquarters came to the University to conduct the formal recruitment process.

"A bunch of the alumni came from around the area," new member John Mlodzinski '09 said.

"The alumni were very active in the recruitment process," Valickus said.

Recruitment events were held behind the library and each night Finn and the alumni focused on one of the four pillars of DU: friendship, culture, justice and character. Activities included a small community service project and a trip to the Samek Art Gallery.

Bucknellian Archives

Theta Chi moved back into Summit House this fall. The fraternity also went through formal recruitment and plans to re-colonize with the help of new members.

The members of the new DU plan to adhere to their four ideals to rebuild DU's reputation on campus.

"We want to focus on community service and helping out," Ritter said.

"We're trying to get out there academically and socially," Valickus said.

With 18 new members, DU obtained enough men to meet their national requirements to colonize. DU held their official colonization ceremony Saturday.

"We had 12 [members] after formal rush and since then we've gotten six more guys," Valickus said.

The members hope to install a chapter by next fall and recruit enough men by this winter to meet the requirements to move back into their chapter house next year.

As far as University requirements are concerned, DU and Theta Chi must comply with the Plan for Prominence in order to remain on campus.

"They must be [chapters] in good standing with the University," said Lewis Marrara, assistant dean of students and director of fraternity and sorority affairs.

Both DU and Theta Chi will continue to recruit and develop their images throughout the year.

"Theta Chi believes in 24/7, 365 days a year recruitment," Rusiewicz said.

DU, the first non-secretive Greek organization, encourages potential members to attend their chapter meetings.

"We're looking for more guys, the right guys; we're looking for a few good men," Valickus said.

"There are a lot of good guys who didn't even rush," DU member Achot Kazarian '09 said.

News Briefs

Drunken tourist fights panda

A drunken Chinese tourist fought with a panda at the Beijing Zoo on Tuesday. After consuming four pitchers of beer, Zhang Xinyan climbed into the pen of Gu Gu, a 6-year-old male panda, who was sleeping at the time.

Originally, he was only going to touch the panda, but reached out to hug it when nobody stopped him. The panda woke up startled and bit Zhang's right leg. In response, Zhang kicked the panda, which in turn bit his other leg. Zhang and Gu Gu continued to fight.

"I bit the fellow in the back," Zhang said, according to CNN.com. "Its skin was quite thick."

Zookeepers sprayed Gu Gu with water to get him under control. The panda was healthy and was not injured in the tussle. Zhang was hospitalized and received stitches up and down both legs.

Coup in Thailand overthrows prime minister

While Thaksin Shinawatra, prime minister of Thailand, was in New York attending the U.N. General Assembly, the Thai military staged a bloodless coup in Bangkok on Tuesday.

They seized control of government buildings and television stations, and Army Chief General Sonthi Boonyaratglin took charge of the country as head of an interim military-run Political Reform Council.

According to CNN.com, the council has revoked the constitution and declared martial law. The streets of Bangkok are patrolled by military tanks and troops.

There has been no opposition to the coup, as Thaksin "has been using Thailand as a front for his family telecommunication business," his critics said, according to CNN.com.

King Bhumibol Adulyadej, the popular Thai monarch, has approved of the coup.

Thaksin has been prime minister since 2001 and has grown increasingly controversial in recent months due to corruption allegations.

The army has told the people of Thailand they will try to appoint a new prime minister within two weeks. In the meantime, Thaksin has declared a state of emergency and fled to his London apartment.

Chavez makes inflammatory speech against Bush

During a U.N. speech, Venezuelan president Hugo Chavez insulted President George W. Bush by calling him an imperialist, racist "devil."

The Washington Post reported Chavez accused Bush of devoting six years to military aggression and oppression of the world's poor. His speech was followed by a round of applause.

"Chavez said he could still smell the sulfur -a reference to the scent of Satan," according to The Washington Post. Numerous U.N. speeches have criticized the United States as being a superpower, but Chavez's remarks were still considered very inflammatory.

His remarks followed other critical speeches by Iranian president Mahmoud Ahmadinejad and Sudanese president Omar al-Bashir, other U.S. adversaries.

They are the leaders of oil-rich countries that are choosing to "defy U.S. demands to change their policies on a range of issues," according to The Washington Post.

Bush administration officials dismissed the remarks as reckless ravings. Chavez's remarks are attributed to developing the Venezuelan appearance to aid them in their search for the Latin American seat on the U.N. Security Council.

In Lewisburg Since 1969

BRYNWOOD 535 Inc. Rentals

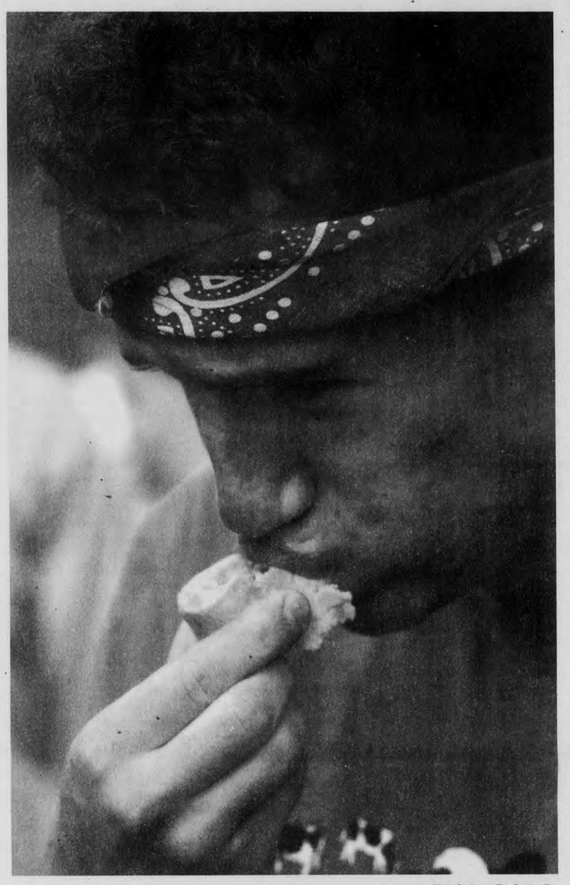
Your search begins..... and ends here.

Professional 24/7 Maintenance Staff

Apartments (furnished & unfurnished)
Houses for professionals students families
Rental Garages Also Available
Office & Retail Space
300—3,000 sq ft

brynwoodrentals.com
611 Market Street, Lewisburg
ph: 570.524.2121 x 3

Outwit, outplay and outlast at ACE-hosted Survivor Challenge



Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

Members of team "First-year Hallmates from Swartz" compete in a spam-eating contest. A total of five teams participated in the ACE survivor challenge during Fall Fest.

By Emilie Linsenmeyer
Contributing Writer

Five teams competed in the Activities and Campus Events (ACE) Survivor Challenge during Fall Fest Saturday, which was comprised of three preliminary events and the Final Challenge.

The competing teams included a group of sophomore friends, Team Rock Star; girls from the rugby team, Team Senior Rugby; new members of the Alpha Chi Omega sorority, Alpha Chi Biddies; first-year hallmates from Swartz, Organized Pain; and first-year friends AZN Sensations Featuring Gundy.

The teams reported at 2 p.m. to start the challenges with a water relay. One member of each team was blindfolded and then directed by another member of the team to take sponges filled with water from one bucket to the next. In the ensuing fun, a bucket was knocked over and Team Rock Star emerged victorious putting the first 10 points on the scoreboard.

"We're pretty competitive and we need the money so when we saw the sign, we knew it was a calling," said Claire Duffy '09, member of team rock star. "We're Survivors!!"

While members of the teams were running around with water, one member from each team had to stand on a stump for the duration of all three preliminary events. The member could change as often as the team desired.

The next event was a highly competitive Egg Toss. Team Rock Star slipped to receive second place, as Team AZN Sensations Featuring Gundy dominated the challenge.

Michael "Gundy" Gundersen '10 used his unique strategy for winning the egg toss: "Connect with the egg: Be one with the egg."

Team Senior Rugby was very optimistic at the beginning of the last preliminary challenge, "Eat It," with team member Kira GaNun '07, nicknamed "The Vacuum," stepping up to the plate.

All the teams anxiously waited at the table where 12-ounce cans of generic brand Spam sat underneath colorful bandanas baking in the sun. There was a quick gasp, but then the teams dug in.

Organized Pain took an early lead with AZN Sensations Featuring Gundy and Team Senior Rugby close behind. Alpha Chi Biddies and Team Rock star decided to opt out. In the end, Organized Pain ran away with the win. Team Rockstar dropped to third and subsequently lost in a tiebreaker to Team Senior Rugby.

> "I'm pumped, it was intense as the team slid into the table for the finish, I was exhilarated!"
>
> — Chen Mao '10

"We came to inflict pain on the other teams by beating them." said Tim McLees '10, organized pain team member.

After the three intense challenges the five teams were cut down to three, leaving Team Senior Rugby, Organized Pain and AZN Sensations Featuring Gundy to compete in the final challenge.

The final challenge required both physical and intellectual speed. Three logic puzzles were arranged at the top of the hill across from Freas Hall. Starting at the bottom of the hill, each team had to run up the hill to one challenge at a time, complete it, and then run back to the start with the team flags. The team to complete all three puzzles and reach the start first was the victor.

Organized Pain emerged with an early lead completing a puzzle requiring them to connect nine dots with four lines in record time. Although struggling briefly at the Soduku challenge, AZN Sensations Featuring Gundy was quick to tie it up. Team Senior Rugby was in it too, with their speedy completion of the Anagram challenge.

Eventually as they completed the last challenges simultaneously, Organized Pain and AZN Sensations Featuring Gundy took off in a downhill race to the finish. Gundy was ultimately victorious as members crashed into the table marking the starting point.

"I'm pumped, it was intense as the team slid into the table for the finish, then I was exhilarated!" Chen Mao '10 said.

AZN Sensations Featuring Gundy walked away with first place and $300, while Organized Pain and Senior Rugby left with $200 and $100 respectively.

Nancy's Nu-Wave Salon
...look your best
10% Discount with Student ID
524-2315
www.nancysnuwave.com
Main Street (Rte 45) - Montandon

Summer Breeze Stables
Est. 1973
10 minutes from Campus
Riding Lessons for all levels
Certified Professional Trainer
Large indoor and Outdoor Arenas
Boarding, Training and Showing
Call 570-412-0771 for an appointment

Igniting Creative Ideas
On Fire Promotions
by trautman associates, inc.
promotional products · fundraising items
embroidered & screenprinted caps & apparel
awards · trophies · business gifts
800-538-8009
Lewisburg Showroom 434 Market 570-522-8009
www.onfirepromotions.com
Bring in this ad for one FREE SCREEN!!!
GOOD ON ANY APPAREL ORDER
(minimum 36 pieces)

DOES YOUR CAR NEED SERVICED?
Our Service Department has $25,000 in new upgrades, including a new alignment rack, brake lathe, tire machine, and hundreds of hours of training for the techs. We now offer shuttle service to and from work or home. We have become a complete service center that can perform any work on any model, from an oil change to engine replacement.
Lewisburg Ford — Oil Change w/Multi-Point Inspection $19.95 (Excludes Diesels. Must present coupon at time of service. Expires 12/31/06.)
Lewisburg Ford — Oil Change/Tire Rotation w/Multi-Point Inspection $34.95 (Must present coupon at time of service. Expires 12/31/06.)
Lewisburg Ford
2265 Old Turnpike Rd.
(Route 45 West)
Across From Brookpark Farm
Call Today! (570) 524-7267
Visit us on the web at www.lewisburgford.com

COLDWELL BANKER
PENN ONE REAL ESTATE
Thank You, Bucknell!!
For thirty years of calling Bucknell and Lewisburg home.
Susan Warner-Mills, Sales Associate
Competence, Integrity, Service
524-7500; swm@coldwellbanker.com

Nancy's Nu-Wave Salon
...look your best
Sept/Oct Special
One Hour Massage $35
Main Street (Rte 45) Montandon
524-2315
www.nancysnuwave.com

CatmanDo
Handyman Services
Specializing in small home repair jobs:
Custom Carpentry
Painting
Light construction
Greg H Mathias
570-524-4724
Free Estimates Fully insured

Real Smoked BBQ!
Beef Brisket, Pork, Chicken, Ribs!
Sandwiches, Wraps, Salads, Platters!
NO RESERVATIONS NEEDED!
Call in for TAKEOUT!
SKEETERS PIT BBQ
ON THE BLUFF
OVERLOOKING THE SCENIC SUSQUEHANNA RIVER
AT THE INTERSECTION OF ROUTES 11 & 15
SHAMOKIN DAM
570.743.2727
Daily 11:00am - 10:00pm
Sundays till 9:00pm
www.SkeetersBBQ.com

Marimba soloist
Dog walker
Urban cowgirl*

Learn more about Erin Towery and tell us more about you. Visit pwc.com/bringit.

Your life. You can bring it with you.

*connectedthinking

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

© 2006 PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP. All rights reserved. "PricewaterhouseCoopers" refers to PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (a Delaware limited liability partnership) or, as the context requires, the PricewaterhouseCoopers global network or other member firms of the network, each of which is a separate and independent legal entity. "connectedthinking" is a trademark of PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (US). We are proud to be an Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity Employer.

The Bucknellian
Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue

Volume 138, Number 4
C-3952 Bucknell University
Lewisburg, Pa. 17837
(570) 577-1520
bucknellian@bucknell.edu
http://www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Editor-in-Chief
Catherine Heverling '07

Associate Editor of Content
Jamie Jacobson '08

Associate Editor of Layout
Rina Van Orden '08

Business Manager
Jared Napolitano '08

Senior Editor
Drew Larson '08

News Editors
Evan Unger '09
Nilanjana Saha '09
Michelle Laxer '09

Opinions Editors
Hallie Stebbins '08
Michael Dippery '08

Sports Editors
Matthew Saylor '08
Barbara Perlman '09
Brian Mulligan '08

Features Editors
Julia Fuchs '09

Arts & Entertainment Editors
Kimberly Kane '08
Lily Beauvilliers '09

Photography Editors
Ryan Winn '08
Ellyn Ercolano '09

Chief Copy Editors
Kathleen Conti '08
Greg Hamilton '08

Advertising Managers
Meredith Reighard '07
Kat Wallis '07
Katie Casteel '08
Emily Senko '08

Office Manager
Kate Wood '07

Cartoonist
Juliana Su '09

Adviser
James F. Lee

Op-Ed Policy

The editorials of The Bucknellian reflect the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the editor-in-chief. All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

Letters to the editor must be received by noon on the Tuesday before publication. Letters may not be longer than 600 words and the Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny or edit any letter to the editor. Letters must contain the writer's name and phone number (used for verification purposes and not to be printed). Mail or e-mail letters using the addresses above.

Publishing Information

The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester entirely by Bucknell students. All published material is chosen by the paper's Editorial Board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its adviser, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

Subscription Information

Subscriptions are available for $45 per year or $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian Subscriptions, Bucknell University, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, Pa. 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

Members of the local community may pick up a complimentary issue each week, with the understanding of one free issue per person. If you would like more for a nominal fee, contact the print office.

Advertising Policy

The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements if deemed offensive, illegal or in bad taste. Advertisements reflect the opinion of the advertiser and not necessarily that of The Bucknellian. For advertising rates and information, please contact the advertising department at (570) 577-1985. Copyright © 2006 The Bucknellian

The Bucknellian
EDITORIAL

Students should attend lectures

As University students, we live in an environment that is fueled by academic success. Students are consistently given the opportunity to enrich their knowledge both in and out of the classroom.

Tuition pays for the hours we spend in class listening to our professors lecture. But that yearly check also goes toward bringing prominent scholars, authors, politicians and experts from a variety of fields.

These speakers are selected in order to promote diverse thought and intellectual discussion.

A minority of students sleep through class, frittering away their tuition. But many more are inadvertently tossing money about the window by not taking advantage of the knowledge that can be gained through attending lectures outside of class.

Despite the fact that some of these speakers are paid upwards of $20,000 for their appearances, attendance at these events is consistently sparse.

College students live busy lifestyles, between classes, sports, extracurricular activities and socializing.

It is easy to take additional academic opportunities for granted, but consider the fact that once you graduate you will enter a world in which many of these opportunities will disappear.

Take advantage of the chance to interact with some of the academic geniuses of our time, and realize how privileged we are to be in the presence of these people.

When historian and author John Barry visited the University Monday to discuss the damage New Orleans suffered after Hurricane Katrina, students and professors filled nearly every seat in the Elaine Langone Center Forum.

Why was there such an immense turnout?

While some students went on their own accord, most were either required or strongly encouraged by professors to attend the event. But the students who did attend, whether they were geology majors or philosophy students, left knowing that one of the biggest news stories of their young lives—the flooding of New Orleans—could have been prevented.

There is no way of predicting what knowledge you might glean from attending one of these lectures. Actor Sean Astin's talk two years ago proved to be one of most ill-prepared and poorly delivered speeches of our span of institutional memory.

But what compelled students to attend? What did students expect to learn from a character in the Lord of the Rings? Perhaps they just wanted to take a walk down memory lane with their favorite star from the Goonies.

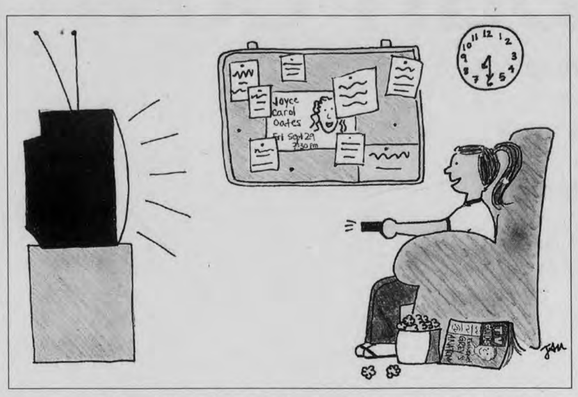
In any case, most professors were not handing out extra credit points for this lecture and yet students found their way to the Weis Center.

We encourage students to take the time to acknowledge the accomplishments of this week's speaker, Joyce Carol Oates, and give her the reception she deserves.

The newly formed English Club is on the right track. It has prepared for Oates' visit by ordering copies of her work, distributing them to members and holding book-club style discussions. More clubs should incorporate these types of activities into their agenda so that when speakers visit campus, students are better prepared to understand and respond to their lectures.

Her name, unfortunately, might not be as well-known as Astin's among college students, but Oates is recognized by the rest of the world as one of the most talented writers of our time.

We hope that come Tuesday, students will take advantage of the academic opportunity they are being offered outside the classroom, whether their professors require it or not.



Letter to the Editor

Cage just a party theme, not an insult

To the Editor:

This is in reply to the article written by Lily Beauvilliers ("Fraternity party serves up a symbol of powerlessness," Sept. 15). We [the members of the fraternity] would like to begin by apologizing to anybody who may have been offended by the sight of a cage at a party, or anybody else who has heard about it in the meantime.

Just to clarify for anybody who was not at the party: the cage was constructed out of PVC piping (which is made of a plastic and extremely light) that could be removed by simply pushing on it. The bars of the cage were wide enough where two people could fit through, thus not being constrictive at all.

Additionally, there were just as many men dancing in this area as there were women throughout the night. We actually make a cage similar to this for a campus-wide philanthropic event, called Jail Bail, that student leaders, Deans and Administrators participate in each year.

Simply put, the presence of a cage served no other purpose than to add to the theme of the night. The party's theme was that of a club, and many clubs across the globe have cages in them. I will agree that with the presence of a cage at a lot of these clubs one might perceive it as a way to exploit women. This didn't seem anywhere near the case two weeks ago.

The fraternity at which this party was held has no intention of making anybody feel uncomfortable or "powerless." The fraternity has actually been a strong contributor and advocate toward women's rights—the Susquehanna Women In Transition (SVWIT) being one of its top philanthropic contributions each year.

Again, we apologize to anybody in the community that may have taken offense to this, and by no means was it intended for anybody to feel uncomfortable.

We felt as if there should be clarification to the situation and hope that last week's opinion can be put behind us.

While we still feel we did nothing intentionally wrong, we will take this event as a learning experience in being more conscious when planning future events.

Sincerely,

Patrick O'Malley '07

"Freedom of the press, if it means anything at all, means the freedom to criticize and oppose."

— Eric Arthur Blair

Write for Ops.
E-mail hstebbin@

Harvard takes the lead in the sprint toward racial equality

By Hallie Stebbins
Opinions Editor

Harvard has recently taken the first step toward curbing economic advantage in college admissions. The institution ended its early action program, which provides students who apply early with the chance to find out if they are accepted or not before regular decision applicants. Some schools offer an early decision option, in which students who are accepted early are obligated to attend.

Harvard argues for its decision, claiming that erasing its early action program will open up many spots for the regular application pool, many of which will go to those who are not as economically privileged.

Their reasoning is this: by maintaining an early action program colleges are encouraging those who prepare heavily for college ahead of time to gain an advantage. Admissions officers claim that students who tend to prepare this early are from the upper-middle class or higher.

Early action and early decision programs that bind students to their schools also bind them to a financial aid package. These students have no opportunity to compare the prices and packages offered to them by other schools. Students who simply cannot afford to take the risk of financial ineligibility tend not to apply to expensive, first- and second-tier schools early.

Harvard admits about 21 percent of its early action applicants. These applicants have applied one or two months into their senior year. Harvard's program does not require accepted students to attend; still, up to 21 percent of the first-year class is already filled before half of the seniors in public high schools even learn what "early decision" means.

Ending the early decision program nation-wide has been crossing the desks of university presidents for years. As the Web site www.newyorktimes.com points out, it would take a school with a standing as reputable as Harvard's to take the first step.

Other schools would most likely lose applicants they would have otherwise had, as many students relish the safety and satisfaction that comes with finding out what college they will attend months before their peers. These students do not want to wait as long for those dreaded letters of acceptance or rejection and would much rather avoid dealing with the application process altogether.

The college application process has become so stressful that this is, indeed, a valid concern of today's high-school juniors and seniors.

Harvard's bold move is bound to be the first in a series of changes enacted by other top schools in the admissions programs. It is incredibly respectable for a university such as Harvard to have the integrity to realize that the national removal of the early decision process would take a strong leader. Harvard is without a doubt leading by example, an example that holds a great amount of promise.

Many top-tier schools struggle with a lack of diversity. Other universities need to follow Harvard in its attempt to provide equal opportunity for all, instead of ignoring the obviously unfair admissions process that is nationally skewed towards the economically fortunate.

Recording industry must adapt to changing consumer tastes

By Michael Dippery
Opinions Editor

According to the Recording Industry Association of America (RIAA) the music industry loses $4.2 billion annually due to piracy. Or so they say.

That statistic raises a number of interesting issues, the first of which is the true amount of money lost to piracy each year.

There is no doubt that piracy, especially from peer-to-peer filesharing services like Limewire, contribute to some losses in the music industry. The figure cited by the RIAA presupposes a person who pirates a few songs definitely would have bought the album on which that song appears.

That is ridiculous. Would everyone who has "Don't Stop Believing" in their iTunes library really have purchased "Escape"? I think not.

What these figures really come down to is propaganda. The record industry wants you to believe it is losing a gazillion dollars a year due to your rampant downloading of tracks. It wants you to believe your piracy is putting artists out on the streets and driving up CD prices for legitimate music consumers.

Ridiculous. Let us look at some other facts.

According to the International Federation of the Phonographic Industry (IFPI), an industry trade group, music sales in 2005 totaled $1.1 billion, a threefold increase from 2004. U.S. album sales saw a seven percent drop in revenue, from $650.8 million to $602.2 million, according to USA Today. Online music sales saw a startling 148 percent increase, from $134.2 million in 2004 to $332.7 million in 2005.

It does not look like the music industry is doing that terribly.

The unfortunate fact of business is that markets change; if companies wish to survive, they have to adapt to the changing times. Once upon a time, a guy could make a decent living running a milk delivery service. Nowadays, he would have to open his own supermarket to earn a buck.

By the same token, the music industry needs to realize consumer demands are changing. People do not listen to music the same way they used to, and if the industry wants to keep making money, it has to adapt to changing times.

I am no business genius, but I am sure there is a way to make music from the Internet. If nothing else, record companies could just give away music, spreading the band's popularity and thus increasing concert ticket sales. You might be able to record a song, but there is no way to capture the feeling of a live performance.

In fact, if I were an artist, I would dispense with record companies altogether. Record companies are not there to support artists; they are there to support themselves. I would bypass the record executives, release my music online for free (or perhaps a nominal fee), and use that to propel live bookings.

Besides, it is not as if music is going away. The world is always going to have a need for music. Perhaps not the music of musicians signed by record labels to make a few more bucks, but certainly for the music of true artists. Musicians will always be able to make music recording for movie soundtracks, writing songs or even performing on their own.

And in the end, is that not what music is about, anyway? Call me idealistic, but the fact that music has been commoditized and made into a product does not sit well with me. Music is not a product, it is an art.

I am not against a musician making money from his craft; that has been done since man realized banging the bones of saber-toothed tigers against the stretched skin of gazelles could be made pleasingly rhythmic. I simply cannot be that upset when a major corporation is finding it hard to market an art form.

Part of the decline in CD sales is due to piracy, yes. But a lot of it is due to a lack of anything new in the music industry, as well as a general greediness on the part of record companies. Recall that after the success of the iTunes Music Store, record executives were not content to sell tracks for $1—they negotiated for months for a price increase before Apple told them to buzz off. And in the end, they capitulated.

People are still willing to pay for their music, but not when it is packaged as an album that consists of one good song and 12 filler tracks and sold for $20.

People are not willing to pay that kind of money for an album by a band with the exact same sound as another popular band that came before them.

And people are not willing to pay that kind of money for a whole CD when they can just as easily download the "good" tracks one at a time for a dollar. The record industry killed the quality of the album a long time ago. Now that technology has caught up, consumers are realizing how much they have been gouged over the years, and they are doing something about it.

While I do not encourage the piracy of music, I cannot help but enjoy the backlash the music industry is facing. Companies that do not adapt and treat their customers as criminals are not likely to be successful.

Maybe record companies will realize this before it is too late, and maybe not. I almost hope they do not, because I think the world of music would be better off without a bunch of greedy corporations running the show.

My Favorite Mistake

The perils of snail mail

By Michael Dippery
Opinions Editor

It is nice to get mail in your campus mailbox. In fact, I can only think of two types of mail I do not like to receive: University junk mail and bills.

Nearly everybody gets bills, but no one actually likes to pay them, especially when deciding how to pay them is a chore in and of itself. Online or by check? Automatically or manually? The choices are enough to make your head spin.

A few weeks ago, I got a bill from Cingular Wireless. I dutifully sent my payment check in immediately by U.S. Postal Service.

That turned out to be my mistake. I sent the check the very day I received the bill, but Cingular never got the check. What happened to it has baffled me; all I know is a few weeks later I got a letter from the company. Treating me like a common thief, Cingular threatened to cut off my phone service if it did not receive the payment immediately.

If we can put a man on the moon, can we not build a soda machine that works every time? Perhaps soda machines are designed to consume a little bit of change.

I phoned Cingular to discuss the problem. The woman in the billing department claimed Cingular never received the check. Her assurance that Cingular, a major corporation, never received payment is worth much, much more than my word that I did, in fact, send a check. She offered to let me pay my overdue bill via credit card.

Having no choice, I obliged. But a few things were on my mind.

First of all, where was my check? And second of all, what is to keep a company like Cingular from "losing" checks from time to time, just to collect overdue fees? I am not alleging that occurred in this case, but it does raise an interesting question.

The thought of a business "stealing" from consumers floated around my mind ever since I noticed just how often soda machines "eat" change—a little bit too often, if you ask me. I mean, if we can put a man on the moon, can we not build a soda machine that works every time?

I have hypothesized that perhaps soda machines are designed to consume just a little bit of change from time to time—enough to make a few extra dollars here and there, but not enough to keep people from using them.

I digress. The issue here is Cingular, not soda. And my check, too—let us not forget that. The check alone cost me $22 to place a stop payment order on it. Had I known of the fee, I may have just taken the chance that some unscrupulous person would attempt to cash my check.

On top of that, Cingular charged me a $5 late fee on my next bill. And that is where I draw the line. I immediately paid my overdue bill via credit card. Was there a need to tack on an extra $5 fee?

Let us not forget that I had sent my payment. It is not my fault if the U.S. Postal Service—or Cingular, for that matter—lost my check. And I should also point out that I have always paid my previous bills immediately. You would think Cingular could take that fact into account and let this one slide.

Or you would think that the entity responsible for handling my check could cough up some compensation.

In the end, my choice to use the U.S. Postal Service cost me an extra $27. But I have learned from my mistake. As much as I hate to do so, all future bills will be paid with a credit card.

Except my Visa bill. I am pretty sure I still have to pay that with a check.

THE Bucknellian
The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell
Student fined $400 for releasing monkeys
Bucky The Bison voted top mascot
Dining vendor

You have a right to know.

Insights, issues and how to use
The Freedom of Information Act,
the Right to Know Law & the Sunshine Act

Friday, Sept. 29, 2006
12-1:30 p.m.
Langone Center, Room 256

PRESENTED BY:

Barry Bachrach, Esq.
Specializes in FOIA, environmental, and intellectual property litigation.
Member, Bowditch & Dewey of Boston, MA

Walter Brasch, Ph. D
Professor of Journalism, Bloomsburg University and President, Pennsylvania Press Club

Teri Henning, Esq.
General counsel, the Pennsylvania Newspaper Association

Paula K. Knudsen, Esq.
Staff attorney, American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU) of Pa.

The 90-minute seminar will be a working lunch with time for questions. Advance reservations are required. The buffet lunch is $10. Please call 570-374-0466 for reservations.
BU students register via the BRIDGE.

Sponsored by the Central Susquehanna Chapter of the ACLU and co-hosted by Bucknell's Pre-Law Advising Program and the Bucknellian adviser and editorial board.

'i am no one you know'
By Joyce Carol Oates

By Lily Beauvilliers
Arts & Entertainment Editor

❖ Book Review

In the 1960s Joyce Carol Oates began publishing the startling novels about life in the United States for which she is still celebrated today. Maybe it was the atmosphere of the sixties during her early novelist years, or maybe it is an intuitive sense of what life in this country really means that led to "i am no one you know," an intense collection of short stories published in 2004.

Perhaps the collection's most defining characteristic is Oates' style. Vivid, unforgiving descriptions puncture every story, breaking through the writing and presenting it to the reader as an undeniably true experience. If a girl is abused, Oates describes her wounds in precise detail. If a man is a psychopath, every physical and character trait is enumerated and made real.

But the style remains tolerable—Oates tempers the grotesque side of reality with beautiful descriptions of time and place. In "The Instructor," she calls into being a bureau with such detail you can picture it in your own home—it is "a primitive piece of Shaker furniture painted robin's egg blue and decorated with tiny pink rosebuds, a girl's bureau with a romantically fogged oval mirror …."

Despite this attention to detail, no story ever strays far from Oates' main themes: love and violence in U.S. life, expressed through crimes, secrets, race, dependency and myriad other devices.

Often, the stories themselves do not even resolve—Oates chooses instead to let their endings hang, suspended indelibly in our curious imaginations.

Many of the stories are written with first-person female narrators, often academics or writers, but each story is unique enough to stand as its own work.

Take "Fugitive," for instance. More a sketch than an out-and-out story, "Fugitive" describes the relationship between a white woman and a black man, the love and tension that exists between them. When her husband's possibly-criminal brother shows up fleeing the police, she feels compelled to both help him and turn him out at the very same time.

Oates has been described as a feminist writer, but the women in "i am no one you know" often seem to have surprisingly little control over their lives. Oates deals with issues of self-worth—how much people define themselves and how much they are defined by events beyond their control or the psychology of people they hardly even know.

In the first story, "Curly Red," the narrator laments some of the turns in her life by saying, "In AA they tell you: nobody starts out thinking, as a kid, he's going to wind up an alcoholic or a junkie. […] Add to that a daughter denounced by her family for ratting to the police on two brothers. Nobody starts out thinking she'll be so defined, but there it is."

Not all of the stories focus on women. "Aiding and Abetting" describes one man's interaction with his wife's brother. His wife seems obsessed with her brother, defending him in every instance with claims that he has had a difficult life.

The question arises—is her unconditional love for her brother a common human emotion or an obsession? Oates answers in the story, "You can call this love morbid, or admirable; a symptom of childhood pathology, or an expression of adult loyalty. But there it is."

The truth is Oates provides no real resolution to the issues she sheds light upon. Often, the stories themselves do not even resolve—Oates chooses instead to let their endings hang, suspended indelibly in our curious imaginations.

The inconclusive endings can be frustrating, but Oates' writing is powerful and provocative enough to weather the reader's frustrations.

Even more importantly, "i am no one you know" is just plain interesting. So whether you are looking for a quick, gratifying read or some contemporary fiction with weight, I highly recommend it.

Audience flocks to Flecktones

By Evan Unger
News Editor

❖ Concert Review

Eight-time Grammy winner Béla Fleck and the Flecktones awed audience members at the Weis Center for the Performing Arts with its bluegrass and jazz improvisations. The group played a mixture of music incorporating jazz, pop, classical and some R&B into a unique experience.

The four members of Béla (pronounced Bayla) Fleck and the Flecktones took the stage to a loud round of applause from a surprising mix of local residents and students.

Béla, wearing a "Slacker" T-shirt, played both electric and acoustic banjo. Before Fleck, I have never heard a mainstream musician play a banjo before, let alone in Fleck's style. He was able to jam with his fellow Flecktones, brothers Victor Wooten and Roy "Future Man" Wooten, and Jeff Coffin, with almost telepathic skill.

"We do know how to play together," Fleck said.

"Future Man," clad in a pirate costume, wielded a strange instrument he actually invented himself, the "synth-axe drumitar." It looked like a paint-spackled guitar with a strange box attached to the end. "Future Man" tapped the device with his fingers to create the sound of a full percussion band.

"'Future Man' blew my mind," Andrew Cusick '10 said.

Wooten is the group's impressive bass player. He dazzled the audience with a solo appearance in which he recorded a series of notes using foot pedals. He then played the notes over again and added more music as he went, repeating the process to the audience who rewarded him with a standing ovation.

Coffin tied the ensemble together with his saxophone, horn and flute skills. At one point Coffin grabbed a second saxophone and played both at the same time using an adapter. It was a testament to the group's willingness to have fun on stage.

The band even threw in familiar melodies such as "My Favorite Things," "Come Together" and "Baby Bumblebee."

The group only announced a few select songs from their set list, such as "Scuttlebutt," "Rococo" and "P'lod in the House." "Future Man" introduced "P'lod in the House," a song he wrote after he dreamt that Coffin composed it. "Future Man" woke up and remembered the music from his dream.

The song is titled for the aliens named "P'lod" from tabloids such as the "Weekly World News."

Béla played a song called "Who's Got Three?" which he wrote for his grandfather. Bela's grandfather gave him his first banjo at the age of 15.

The audience enjoyed the performance. The heads of students and even one of an elderly woman could be seen bobbing with the beat of the music.

"I love Béla Fleck and the Flecktones," Doug Bobrow '09 said. "I've seen them four times; twice as the feature. The Weis Center's concert was amazing [due to its] acoustics, intimate crowd and small setting."

Some students knew little about the group but still enjoyed the experience.

"I really didn't know what to expect coming here," Stephen Secchio '10 said. "I had heard lots about them and I loved it."

Courtesy of belafleck.com

Béla Fleck jams out on acoustic banjo, an unusual instrument for mainstream musicians. Fleck's grandfather, to whom he dedicated a song, gave him his first banjo at the age of 15.

Local film fights for distribution

By Sarah Novello
Writer

❖ Movie Review

When their first feature-length film premiered last April, Juliana Brafa '05 and Todd Bieber's hard work was just beginning. They spent more than two years creating "All is Normal" and they are now as busy as ever promoting their film and searching for a distributor who will get it out there for more people to watch.

"Of all the movies made, only two percent get theatrical release," Bieber said at a film screening over the weekend. "It's a struggle for us to get out there. There are a lot of great movies."

"All is Normal" is the story of Janet (Brafa), a confused girl who takes a job as a house-sitter in Appalachia attempting to escape from her abusive boyfriend.

The majority of the film was shot within 30 minutes of the University. Some places on campus are highlighted in the film. The basement of the Student Health Center is the dingy, muddy basement of the house in which Janet is staying.

"All is Normal" is by no means sitting on a shelf collecting dust. The film has won several awards and has been shown at numerous film festivals across the country, which is no small feat. Film festivals generally receive 1,000 to 2,000 applications, 50 to 100 of which are actually shown. By those standards alone "All is Normal" is doing quite well, but Bieber and Brafa are still waiting for their investment to pay off.

A few distributors have shown interest in the film, but the duo insists upon receiving appropriate compensation for all of their hard work. Since "All is Normal" was such a significant financial investment, the two are currently making commercials and films for hire while they are not promoting their film.

The film is promoting itself pretty well. There have yet to be any negative reviews (this will not be the first) and Bieber and Brafa's truly artistic film is a rare example of brilliant writing meeting brilliant cinematography and production. "All is Normal" is extremely sophisticated in all aspects; only the youth and unperfected style of many of the actors shows the amateurism of the film.

The majority of the film was shot within 30 minutes of the University. Some places on campus are highlighted in the film. The basement of the Student Health Center is the dingy, muddy basement of the house in which Janet is staying.

Perhaps having years of experience in film is not as necessary as it may seem; a fresh eye is extremely appreciated. Bieber showed particularly effective cinematography using stirring camera angles and filming methods by applying a rather simple visual style.

"When I'm shooting I try to think that the camera represents the human eye," Bieber said after an audience member commented on the creativity of camera angles and filming methods. "If you're in a rushed situation it's handheld."

Every aspect of the film was appropriate for the script – the music, cinematography and acting – even if the lack of acting experience was apparent.

Experience was not lacking on Linda Blair's part. After speaking with her at a festival where a short film of theirs was shown, Bieber and Brafa were able to convince the former "Exorcist" cast member to participate in "All is Normal." Blair's strong presence helped the depth of acting throughout the film.

The non-chronological script is intentionally ambiguous. The main character, played by Brafa, is not mentally stable, and since one of the goals of the film was to reflect her inner state, it is difficult to figure out what exactly is going on until the end of the film.

"We wanted to keep it open to different interpretations," Brafa said.

"We wanted people to have the reaction of 'well, what did happen?'" Bieber said.

One of the benefits of wider distribution of "All is Normal" is that audiences will be able to view the film for a second and third time and thereby attempt to further understand the film.

Bieber recognizes the importance of secondary views. When asked technical questions about the plot, Bieber said, "What I would do is buy the DVD," which naturally evoked laughter.

"We really tried to mess with people's heads," Bieber said.

Caitlin Mawhinney '08 is one of the many viewers who enjoyed having her head "messed with."

"'All is Normal' engages your mind," Mawhinney said. "It's ambiguous. It's not the type of movie that can be neatly stacked in a box and categorized, and that's what makes it provoking."

As Bieber and Brafa continue promoting their first full-length film, the campus can only support and applaud them – they have truly done some exceptional work and continue to rise in the film industry.

Villager GMAC Real Estate
521 N. Derr Dr. Lewisburg, PA 17837
570-523-3244

CALL US FOR THE LARGEST SELECTION OF RENTALS IN TOWN
1-5 Bedroom Units
Houses or Apartments for 2007/2008 and 2008/2009

A few choice units for 06/07 left!

Call Linda or Duska
or e-mail us at linda-treese@villagerrealty.com for a complete list of our rentals.

A Bucknell Tradition Since 1968
bull run inn
Open 7 days a week:
Mon. – Sat. 11:30 a.m.—2 a.m. and Sunday 11:30 a.m. – midnight
605 Market St., downtown Lewisburg
ph: (570) 524-2572
www.bullruninn.com
(check for current features and events)
Now serving SUNDAY BRUNCH 11:30 a.m.—2 p.m.
Live Bands /Karaoke (no cover/21 & over) these Thursday's 11 p.m.—2 a.m. Sept 14—Given
Beach Party
Wed., Sept 20 10 p.m.—2 a.m. featuring the live band:
Blue Suede Goo
POP QUIZ—Tuesday's—9—11 p.m.

Joseph Carroll Salon
Hair Care for the Entire Family
Stop in before September 30 to enter into a raffle to win a free instant hot lather machine or basket of hair care products!
No purchase or service necessary.
431 Market Street, Lewisburg
524-0790
Open Tuesday-Saturday
We accept Walk-Ins when time permits.

Talkin' alternative indie-rock blues

By Angela Tchou
Contributing Writer

❖ A&E Opinion

Todd Snider penned the song "Talkin' Seattle Grunge Rock Blues" for his first album, "The Daily Planet." In it, Snider tells the story of a band he created in Seattle, Wash. during the Eddie Vedder/Kurt Cobain-induced Grunge Age of music.

Snider's band tried to make it to the top of the music scene by advertising itself as "the only band that refuses to play … [they] called it 'silence' / music's original alternative." As the song goes, a record producer hears about the band and proclaims that he loves their work, but "he [isn't] sure that he can sell an album without any music on it."

Snider's catty response: "Man, you've been doing that all year."

These days, a good number of artists from the United States have perfected the art of releasing albums with songs that bear almost no semblance to music. It does not matter what is on the CD as long as record producers slap an "Alternative" or "Indie-Rock" label on the album cover.

It does not matter that most of the songs on these records are anticlimactic, sickeningly avant-garde and dry of inspiration. It does not matter that most of the music on these albums will rely solely on the extravagance of its performers.

Icelandic Sigur Ros moans foreign lyrics over monotonous musical riffs created by pulling a cello bow over an electric guitar. Tilly and the Wall's new album "Wild Like Children" features a tap dancer as its sole percussionist.

One of the media's favorites, Sufjan Stevens, creates complex song titles for not-so-complex songs and has declared that he will create a record for every state in the United States. His first release glorified the Eden known as Illinois, which ironically has one of the highest population densities in the United States. Are they artistic renderings or mere gimmicks?

Not all alternative and indie-rock music has no merit. Listen to Yo La Tengo's "Prisoners of Love" if you want an incredibly diverse collection of alternative songs set in a dreamy ambience and dripping with hard, fast emotion.

Frontman Ira Cohen's thick voice, comparable to that of Lou Reed, will give you chills listening to tracks such as "Our Way to Fall."

Animal Collective released "Feels" as one of the best albums of 2006 utilizing heavy amounts of musical distortion in order to create discord that actually moves the album instead of hindering it. The icing on the euphonic cacophony is the almost unintelligible lyrics.

Courtesy of Wikimedia Commons

On the track "The Purple Bottle," the heart is described as a "purple bottle." The image is extended as band-member Avey Tare sings "Did I tell you that you are the purple in me?" It becomes concrete as he sings "I talk too much about you / My ears are getting tired of me singing all the night through."

Unfortunately, unlike Yo La Tengo and Animal Collective, the majority of new artists are misusing sound.

In a recent Rolling Stone interview Bob Dylan said, "you listen to these modern records, they're atrocious; they have sound all over them. There's no definition of nothing, no vocal, no nothing, just like—static."

Contrary to what most new U.S. musicians believe, it is still possible to write and record great albums using simple recording techniques and minimal instrumentation.

Snider is a folk singer who sits on stage and in the studio playing his guitar, using an upward of maybe five chords and sometimes a harmonica. With passion for music and charming wit, he may be one of the better songwriters of our time.

It is worth buying Snider's "East Nashville Skyline" album just to hear him sing the song "Conservative Christian, Right-Wing Republican, Straight, White, American Male," which contains lines such as, "Quite diligently workin' so hard to keep the free reins of this Democracy / From tree-huggin', peace-lovin', pot-smokin', barefootin' folk-singin' hippies like me."

The Old 97's are also performers of a simplistic nature, needing only a bassist, two guitarists and a drum kit to be one of the best bands of the time. Frontman Rhett Miller's lyrics evoke Bob Dylan on a bad day.

Choosing J.D. Salinger's description of his sister, "Rollerskate Skinny," as the title for a song he penned about Wynona Rider, Miller sings, "I believe in love, but it don't believe in me." On a track titled "Barrier Reef" he introduces himself to an apathetic girl by belting, "My name's Stuart Ransom Miller / I'm a serial lady-killer" only to be turned down cleverly with "'I'm already dead' / That's exactly what she said."

Music needs only passion and inspiration to be great. Perhaps that is why so many "alternative" rockers choose to mask theirs with excessive amounts of sound. Music that is complex in its simplicity is profound and any song that is an inversion of this profundity is a waste of time.

Perhaps the fact that disastrous albums dubbed as "alternative" seem to garner so much attention can be attributed to a population of restless teenagers who constantly want to be perceived as different, new and thus "hip." Hopefully it is just a phase.

In the meantime I will forgo being "hip" to listen to music that actually makes me feel, instead of listening to music that makes me feel as though I have wasted my money.

'Studio 60' pilot shows prime-time potential

Courtesy of imdb.com

The cast of Aaron Sorkin's latest show, "Studio 60 on the Sunset Strip," pose for a publicity shot. Matthew Perry, Bradley Whitford, and Amanda Peet starred in the show's pilot.

By Matt Saylor
Sports Editor

❖ TV Review

The most anticipated new show of the television season is, without question, "Studio 60 on the Sunset Strip." So the new question becomes, "Will the show live up to the hype?" Approximately 13.4 million viewers received a first taste of the show as NBC aired its pilot episode Monday.

Aptly entitled "Pilot," the premiere episode demonstrated the type of high-quality writing, acting and direction associated with an Aaron Sorkin-created project. Sorkin, creator of such critically acclaimed shows as "Sports Night" and "The West Wing," continues themes of his previously-established shows. He explores the behind-the-scenes action the public usually does not see. This is the second show he has created that takes a look at the inner workings of a television show. "Sports Night" showed how a primetime sports-news show is produced, while "Studio 60" takes a look at the production of a show like "Saturday Night Live."

The main characters in "Studio 60" are Matt Albie and Danny Tripp, played by Emmy nominee Matthew Perry and Emmy Award winner Bradley Whitford, respectively. This is the first return to network television for Perry since his 10-year run on "Friends" ended in May 2004. Whitford is only months removed from his seven years on "The West Wing."

The characters of Albie and Tripp are hybrid representatives of Sorkin and his directing-producing partner Thomas Schlamme. Sorkin is known for his past drug problems and in the premiere it is established that Tripp, a director, recently failed a cocaine test. Besides assigning the drug problem to the Tripp character, Albie is the reincarnation of Sorkin, while Tripp is the equivalent of Schlamme.

Amanda Peet plays Jordan McDeere, the newly hired president of the fictional National Broadcasting System network. This character is based on Jamie Tarses, the first woman to become president of a major television network. The star of the show within the show is Harriet Hayes (Sarah Paulson), who is a microcosm of Sorkin's real-life ex-girlfriend Kristin Chenoweth. Chenoweth is known for her Evangelical beliefs, which the Hayes character shares. Hayes, along with Simon Stiles (D.L. Hughley) and Tom Jeter (Nathan Corddry), represent the stars of the comedy-sketch show.

Steven Weber and Timothy Busfield round out the cast, playing the Chairman of NBS and a control room director, respectively.

Weber's character, Jack Rudolph, previously fired Albie and Tripp from "Studio 60." McDeere wants her first act as president of the network to be bringing them back as the new heads of the show, following an on-air outburst by now-fired show runner Wes Mendell (guest star Judd Hirsch).

Albie and Tripp are somewhat forced into taking the job due to the failed drug test by Tripp. Besides his (and Tripp's) rocky relationship with Rudolph, Albie also has to confront the fact that he is now the boss of Hayes, with whom he has just broken up (reminiscent of Sorkin and Chenoweth again).

The episode contained the classic Sorkin dialogue and featured the walk-and-talks that Schlamme mastered in his direction on "The West Wing." Hirsch is excellent in his guest role and Paulson, Peet, Weber and Whitford all deliver promising performances. In the end, it is Perry who steals the show. Fans concerned that Perry would be unable to channel a character other than Chandler Bing should put their minds at ease, as he effortlessly conveys the humor, sadness and drama associated with Albie's life.

Everything is not perfect with the show. Peet's character is a little too good to be true, and hopefully will develop more realistically as the first few episodes air. Sorkin's writing also takes on a bit of a self-righteous tone, which becomes grating on viewers, especially those not used to his previous work and style. Sorkin needs to avoid turning the show into his own autobiography. It is fine to base characters on his own life, just not to the degree where each week fans will be trying to figure out which celebrity is being portrayed.

Just like in the pilot of "The West Wing," Sorkin takes shots at the Christian Right. This time he thinks he is actually doing them a favor by making Hayes likable and saying she would want to be in a demeaning sketch because it is funny. Unfortunately, Sorkin misses the point, just as he does in the rant Mendell delivers at the beginning of the show about free speech. If he wants to portray someone from the Christian Right, he should portray her as being true to herself and her beliefs. Mendell's speech criticizes the restrictions placed on television in an age when television expresses more than it ever has. The points are good to make—if done so correctly.

Another issue the producers of the show will have to confront is that Peet is pregnant. They will need to make a decision on whether or not to write it in to the show and if yes, then how. At this early stage of the show it does seem unlikely a pregnancy will be written for one of the main characters, so look for the usual not-so-creative ways of hiding a real-life pregnancy on television.

Future episodes will feature storylines revolving around the relationship of Albie and Hayes, as well as the early struggles that Albie and Tripp face returning the show to its former glory. Lauren Graham will be playing herself over a two-episode guest arc in October, and look for other stars and musicians to follow with performances on the show about a show. The program started this trend with Felicity Huffman and Three 6 Mafia both appearing as themselves in the pilot.

All of the pieces are in place for "Studio 60 on the Sunset Strip" to be a critical and commercial success. It is in Sorkin's gifted, yet occasionally troubled, writing hand to see it through.

TV recap—the basics of 'Grey's Anatomy'

By Shannon Pitsch
Writer

❖ TV Review

Unsure about the difference between McDreamy and McSteamy? Confused when your friends debate about Izzie and Denny? If you are tired of feeling left out when the topic of conversation switches to "Grey's Anatomy," The Bucknellian can provide you with a much-needed pop culture lesson.

Meredith Grey, following in the footsteps of her famous mother, Ellis Grey, is the main character and one of five surgical interns at Seattle Grace Hospital. On the first day of work Meredith, Izzie Stevens, Christina Yang, Alex Karev and George O'Malley are all assigned to work under Dr. Bailey, an attending surgeon with a reputation for being unrelenting.

If you want to be caught up to speed, relationships are the most important factor, even though the show takes place predominately in the hospital.

At the beginning of the series premiere Meredith has a one-night stand with Derek Shepherd – unaware at the time that Derek is Dr. Bailey's boss and a neurosurgeon at Seattle Grace.

Throughout the first season Meredith and Derek (also known as McDreamy) become romantically involved. Derek also has a wife, Addison Shepherd, who he left because she cheated on him with his best friend (McSteamy) in New York.

At the start of season two Addison appears at Seattle Grace Hospital and begins working as a surgeon, hoping to reconcile with Derek.

For most of the season Derek attempts to reconcile with Addison and his relationship with Meredith continues to complicate the marriage. By the end of the second season it appears that Meredith has moved on when she begins dating Finn, a veterinarian.

But in the season finale Derek and Meredith sleep with each other, leaving their relationship the on-going cliffhanger of the show.

Another important character is Christina Yang, the self-proclaimed surgery junkie and valedictorian of Stanford Medical School. Despite her outwardly-cold demeanor, Yang becomes involved with Preston Burke, a cardiothoracic surgeon at the hospital. Their relationship is centered on Burke's love for Yang and her inability to become emotionally devoted to him.

In the final episode of last season Burke is shot in the shoulder. This injury could potentially paralyze his right arm making it impossible to perform surgery. He looks to young for strength and advice, but she continues to run away from the situation in fear.

George and Izzie are two more of Meredith's roommates and co-workers. George falls madly in love with Meredith and in a painfully awkward mid-season episode professes his love to her while she is still in love with Shepherd.

In a moment of weakness Meredith sleeps with George, but begins crying and tells George she does not like him. For the rest of season two George refuses to speak to Meredith until the final episode when they learned to forgive and forget. George begins dating Cali, another surgeon at Seattle Grace, at the end of last season.

Supporting herself financially through medical school by stripping at a local club, Izzie Stevens has a reputation for being the "pretty one" who becomes too involved with her patients.

During season two Izzie falls in love with Denny, a heart transplant patient in serious condition. Desperate and in love, Izzie disables his life support in the final episode in order to move himself up on the donor list. After he receives a heart and proposes to Izzie, the unethical decision seems justified, but in the final minutes of season two's finale Denny dies and Izzie quits her internship program.

In the third season of "Grey's Anatomy" there promises to be even more drama, as ABC moves the series to the coveted 9 p.m. Thursday time slot in competition with CBS's program "CSI." Will Derek stay with Addison or will he and Meredith get back together? Will Izzie come back to Seattle Grace? Can Burke forgive Young for turning her back when he needed support? Now that you know the basics of "Grey's Anatomy," you will just have to watch to find out.

Courtesy of imdb.com

Dr. Derek Shepherd (Patrick Dempsey) and Dr. Meredith Grey (Ellen Pompeo) talking in Joe's Bar. The two doctors become romantically involved in the first season of Grey's Anatomy, a relationship complicated when Shepherd's wife returns to him.

Sojka lawn hosts Fall Fest

Daphne Loves Derby

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

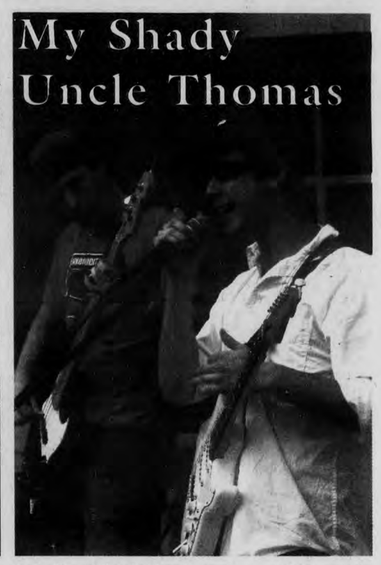
The Hush Sound



My Shady Uncle Thomas

BY CATHERINE HEVERLING
Editor-in-Chief

If you walked past the typically quiet Sojka Lawn Saturday afternoon, you would have seen girls donning pearls while throwing footballs, student leaders walking around with pie cream on their faces and musicians playing so intensely they caused a generator to start smoking.

Skies cleared up for the start of Fall Fest and students took advantage of what might prove to be one of the last "dog days" of summer.

Festivities kicked off at 2 p.m. with the Bucknellian Jack's Mannequin performance.

"I thought Daphne Loves Derby was really good," said Lee Bowes, a Manhattan-native who flew in from Ohio that morning. "I was sad people weren't really into it."

While the crowd had a good mix of quality and strong stage energy, their soft music did not seem to suit the rocking atmosphere present elsewhere on the lawn.

"They didn't dance a lot," said Kelly Bowes. "They were cute, but really boring."

Most students instead took this time to visit the various stands, many of which were sponsored by Bucknell Student Government (BSG) and Residence Hall Association (RHA), where they had the chance to win goldfish, on his throat for a few weeks so that he can be at top performance when he starts singing again," Kelly said.

Band members Jon Ginn '07 and Tom Wechsler '09 shared the lead singing duties Saturday, but Zanelli is expected to be back at the mic soon.

More students began arriving around the time Daphne Loves Derby set up, but there were still very few near the stage area.

The most attentive listeners lining the stage front were a number of [illegible] Jack's [illegible] including covers of Paul Simon's "Diamonds on the Souls of her Shoes" and Sublime's "What I Got," as well as three of the band's original songs.

"Choosing songs is a strange but fun process for us," said Pete Kelly '07, the band's bassist. "We like to keep what covers we do as fresh as possible. ... We try to hear songs with other band's flavor, and, in the [illegible], we'll learn it and give it a try and we always try to play our originals."

Listeners might have noticed a difference in the sound of the band due to the absence of lead singer Alessandro Zanelli '07 at the microphone.

"He hemorrhaged his vocal chords and has been taking it easy fling pies at class representatives and throw balls at a dunk tank. Students also flocked to the extensive buffet of picnic foods, including everything from hotdogs to brownies.

Following Daphne Loves Derby, and with very little time between sets, the Hush Sound took the stage. The band applied a trend recently popularized by Panic! at the Disco by heralding their one-of-a-kind sound with unusual vintage clothing.

The band kicked off their performance with "Crawling Towards the Sun" and "Sweet Tangerine," but hearing the third song of the set, "Bullets," caught many audience members' attention, as strokes and squealing violins near the microphones near the stage.

Fall Fest took an unexpected intermission as technicians repaired the generator that had blown during the performance.

"We were exploring all of our options, but we were just hoping we could fix the generator that we had. There was a problem with the valves, but [illegible] there were some people around who knew what they were doing and could help," said Mandy Hart '07, a member of the Fall Fest committee.

After 30 minutes, the Hush Sound returned to the stage, claiming "the rock was too much."

They didn't have much right.

The band's drummer Darren Wilson exhibited wild drumstick flailing comparable to Animal from the Muppets. And co-lead singer and pianist, Greta Salpeter brought her classical piano training to the table in songs like "Dark Congregation," a jazzy Vaudeville-inspired ballad infused with powerful piano and guitar solos.

While the band members seemed to knowingly excel at their given instruments, they sometimes lacked the skills of collaboration. Guitarist Bob Morris's vocal talent paled in comparison to his counterpart, Salpeter, as he plugged his ears to harmonize and often sounded a little off-key.

The band performed a second set Saturday night at Uptown, where they literally [illegible] with the crowd.

"We want you to get even closer," said Morris, as he invited about 30 listeners to dance on stage with the band. "If you can't dance to this song, you can't dance."

The Hush Sound failed to draw the audience closer to the Fall Fest stage but once Jack's Mannequin [illegible] student [illegible] to the moshpit.

Sporting a green buttoned-down shirt and black sunglasses, lead singer Andrew McMahon took his seat at the piano.

The set's first song was "Bruised," which started off slow, but soon had fans in the crowd singing along.

Roxannah Hunter '07, a Mannequin enthusiast like many others, was inspired by not only the band's music, but also its message.

"I got into Jack's Mannequin because I had a familiarity with Something Corporate [McMahon's other band] that grew into an excited anticipation for the release of a debut album. What my brother and I found so inspiring about the band was Andrew McMahon's battle against cancer and his persistence to pursue life through what he loved—music," Hunter said.

While others had not heard the music of Jack's Mannequin or of the band's "Tour for the Cure" throughout Leukemia Awareness month, many were familiar with the music of Something Corporate.

A majority of the [illegible] along to Mannequin's performance of "Drinking Corporate's "Me and the Moon," and others swayed back and forth to its lilting chorus.

Traditionally, bands save their biggest hit for last. Jack's Mannequin chose to perform their first single "Swim" near the middle of their set.

But audience members stuck around.

McMahon continued to engage the audience during the next song "La La Lie," with one hand playing the piano and the other reaching a microphone out to the crowd. McMahon seemed to be making a conscious effort to interact with the audience.

"He wasn't some tripped-out California wannabe, but an intuned musician who went so far as to have two different microphones so that he could gaze o u t over the crowd from time-to-time," Hunter said.

McMahon exhibited impressive piano and vocal skills while using this double microphone approach during "Into the Airwaves." The effect was a two-sided conversation with the lyrics: "So hang on, it's gonna be a hard day," "Don't panic, there simply is no need. We are hanging here."

This band performs nearly every [illegible]

Mannequin proved to be an excellent choice for Fall Fest-goer, drawing more than 2,000 listener, according to Carrie Ingalsbe, Fall Fest committee advisor.

"It would say [illegible] was definitely a better turnout than when Josh Kelley came last year," said Ashley Shamansky '07, member of the Fall Fest committee.

After a five-hour festival of music and fun, students [illegible] Lawn Saturday evening with full stomachs, sunkissed cheeks and a collection of catchy songs still ringing in their ears.

And, if they were lucky, a goldfish.

An interview with Andrew McMahon

Before Saturday's show, representatives from The Bucknellian and WVBU had the opportunity to talk to Jack's Mannequin lead singer Andrew McMahon. The following is an excerpt from this interview, which is available in its entirety on WVBU's public space.

The Bucknellian: How does the sound of Jack's Mannequin differ from Something Corporate?

McMahon: Truthfully my intention was not to go and make something incredibly different when I started.... I wasn't really doing Jack's Mannequin; I was just writing songs and recording them because I had some time off and I always write, regardless of whether I'm with a band or not with a band.

I've been writing since I was nine years old ... I think there's a lot more classic rock influences—Beach Boys, Beatles—the sort of things I was listening to at the time. And I think it's grown up a little bit since Something Corporate stuff, but, you know, that's probably primarily because I've grown up a little bit.

The Bucknellian: Is Jack's Mannequin going to put out another record?

McMahon: I would imagine that the next record I do will be a Jack's Mannequin record although I can't say for sure. ... I don't make any real plans until it all starts making sense in the speakers. ... I think too many people try to make art as an end goal.

I used to do that and I found that it negatively affected what I was doing. ... I try to write and record throughout the year ... and if something really inspires me then I'll run to the studio and record it.

WVBU: So are you still working with Something Corporate or is your focus primarily on Jack's Mannequin?

McMahon: My focus has been there for sure recently ... but I'll definitely do things with Something Corporate. I think the first thing you'll see out of us is a tour, which I hope happens in 2007.

The Bucknellian: Where did the name of the Jack's Mannequin album "Everything in Transit" come from?

McMahon: The record was sort of based on this journal that I kept in the process of writing. ... I think the record in general is representative of the most significant transitory period of time in my life. I was in one place – not to say I was discontent, but I was definitely trying to get my head around a handful of things.

I spent a lot of time in constant flux trying to figure my own head out, and through that, it sort of occurred to me that if you live like that, it's a positive way to live, constantly assessing where you are and just sort of moving with things. And I liked the motion of the sound of the record. You know, "everything in transit," everything is constantly moving.

WVBU: Is there one band that you would say has influenced your music?

McMahon: It was kind of weird because I had grown up listening to mainstream pop bands ... then I got signed to Drive Thru [Records] with Something Corporate and we were raised up in a scene where it was very uncool to be mainstream or popular, which kind of defied everything that I had grown up understanding. Like why wouldn't you want millions of people to hear your songs? ... It seems like a natural thing. It would be like the epitome of success, I would think.

And I took a break from Something Corporate to kind of try to re-educate myself on why I liked music in the first place. You know, I started thinking about those great bands that had maintained their integrity and their credibility, but still managed to reach millions of people and connect with them in their songs. And for whatever reason in the middle of it all, I encountered the "Pet Sounds" record and really listened to it for the first time. Brian Wilson was really saying something ... In some ways, some of it was bubble gum pop, but it was the orchestration ... it was really a pop record, but it was made with the kind of integrity that the most underground indie artist never makes a record with and the most over-the-top mainstream act now doesn't make records with. And I thought this seems like a template for a really brilliant approach for making massively popular music. It really inspired me.

The Bucknellian: How has your music changed since you've had leukemia?

McMahon: It's like anything that happens in your life small or big – it generally tends to play into the perspective you apply to everything you write.

[I don't know] whether it'll be blindingly apparent when I put out another record that "This kid was sick" at some point ... but to some extent, I think there will be tinges of the perspective that I gained.

WVBU: Is there one specific message you try to get out through your music?

McMahon: You know, I kind of let them take from it what they will. I got sick and realized that I could use what I do to try and raise awareness for leukemia research because it's obviously close to me. But up until this point I never really tried to have a cause or a concern to involve anybody with. This one came up and it's close enough to my heart that I'm okay to put it out there for people and try to get them to join me and make a difference. ...

The truth of the matter is the biggest thing to me is that a lot of these kids think that I'm such a hero, but the reality is I'm not. I'm just a dude trying to get through the day like everybody else is. And I appreciate that I get that from people, but the thing I want people to take away from my music is it's just human ... and whether you like it or not, I mean it.

The Bucknellian September 22, 2006

Sports

Volume 138, Number 4 Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

'Freshman 15'

Find out how to avoid the dreaded weight gain that often accompanies the transition to college.

See page B7

Orange & Blue bowl over Big Red

Football crushes Cornell in a 20-5 decision in front of over 6,000 at Christy Matthewson Stadium

BY MARCUS MATEER
Staff Writer

In every sport an entire season can hinge on one single moment. For the football team, one such moment occurred on the kickoff against Cornell Saturday.

The Big Red's Shane Kilcoyne took the kick and was leveled by Dorian Petersen '07. The football launched into the air and was pounced upon by David Frisbey '07. Five plays later, quarterback Andrew Lair '10 punched it in for a touchdown.

Bucknell 20
Cornell 5

The tone for the game was set. An undersized Bison defense delivered bone-jarring hits and led the team to a 20-5 victory in front of 6,152 fans at Christy Mathewson-Memorial Stadium. That first score was all the home team would need due to the opportunistic play of the defense.

"I couldn't be more proud of a football team," Head Coach Tim Landis said. "That win right there is one of the biggest I've been around. The physicality [we had] was great. ... The defense has had six straight great defensive quarters. We have only allowed eight points [in that span]."

The lone Big Red score came on their initial drive following the fumbled kickoff. The offense moved easily through the Bison defenders until a pair of incompletions stalled the drive. A field goal from Peter Zell cut the Bison lead to 7-3. The Cornell offense would not score again.

On the ensuing drive, the Bison offense appeared ready to stall after a false-start penalty made it third down and 15 yards to go. Lair calmly stepped back in the pocket and floated a beautiful pass to Daniel Zvara '09, who streaked up the sideline for 42 yards.

Another completion to Zvara moved the Bison within field goal range, and the Will Carney '09 kick pushed the lead back to seven. Lair finished the day five-for-seven for 99 yards.

The next Cornell drive was halted abruptly when Petersen delivered a punishing blow to force his second fumble of the day. First time starter Brigham Farrand '10 recovered in what would be a career day for him. He and Petersen led the team with 11 tackles.

The success through the air on the previous Bison drive opened up the running game. Lair busted a 32-yard scamper, and slotback Peter Kaufman '07 blew past the Big Red defenders on a 41-yard run for a score. Lair seems to be settling in as field general, as his decisions scorched the defense.

"I'm feeling more comfortable," Lair said. "[The reads] are getting easier every week. It makes it difficult for [the opposing defense] because they don't really know where we are going."

The Bison tacked on a field goal with 8 minutes 47 seconds left in the second quarter to round out the offensive scoring. Cornell would threaten but be turned away by solid defensive play.

Following a missed field goal on their initial drive of the second half, the Big Red threatened again. On a day when the Bison were out-gained 436-331, the defense would bend but not break. Cornell's Nathan Ford led his team down the field again during the drive but made the mistake of following his receiver with his eyes on third-and-eight at the Bison 11-yard line. Farrand stepped in front of the pass and returned it for 36 yards.

"I was just able to read the quarterback and make a break on the ball," Farrand said of the pick. "I just wanted to hold onto the football. We have a great offense, and I wanted to give them another shot."

Cornell had one final shot to steal the game. With 7:36 left in the game they took control at their own eight-yard line. Ford, who completed 18-of-36 for 202 yards, moved the team all the way down to the Bison six-yard line. A poor snap caused the football to carom over his head.

In the scramble for the ball, it ended up all the way back at the Bison 35 before Cornell could fall on it. A valiant effort by the visitors was all for naught when Farrand upended receiver Anthon Jackson just short of the goal line on fourth down.

Punter Phil Azarik '09, averaging over 43 yards per punt, took the snap in the end zone and trotted out for an intentional safety after the ensuing drive was stopped. Ryan Slater '08 picked off a pass to finish off the Big Red.

The Bison will have to bring the same intensity to Richmond for the first road game of the season. In their first two weeks, the Spiders blanked Division I-A Duke 13-0 and blew out Virginia Military Institute 58-7. The game will be played at 1 p.m. Saturday in Richmond.

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Josh DeStefano '08 blocks for teammate Rashod Bumpers '10 in a recent victory against Duquense. The Orange and Blue are off to a strong start, posting two wins in the past three games.

Bison win home opener

BY JOSEPH DEBRAGGIO
Contributing Writer

The women's soccer team controlled its home opener, beating the Robert Morris University Colonials 4-1 thanks in part to a two-goal performance from Krista Lee Gentile '08 and a solid defensive effort.

Bucknell 4
Robert Morris 1

The Bison dictated play right from the start of the game. Good ball movement led to a few close attempts by the Bison in the opening minutes. The Orange and Blue finally cracked the Robert Morris defense in the 17th minute when Renee Bernardo '09 switched the ball to Kelly Boswell '09.

A one-time cross from Boswell met the foot of Jennifer Dervarics '09, who put the ball up and over the goalie for the first goal of the match.

Robert Morris replied with pressure but the Bison defense, led by goalie Katie Dry '07, was up to the challenge. Dry finished the day with five saves.

With 15 minutes remaining in the half, Boswell beat the Colonial goalkeeper with a long pass from midfielder Leslie Schulze '09 and slotted the ball into the back of the net. The goal marked Boswell's second of the season and gave the Bison a 2-0 lead going into the half.

The Orange and Blue wasted no time scoring their third goal when the second half began. One minute into the half a hard shot from Boswell was deflected to Gentile, who knocked the ball in for her first goal of the game.

Her second goal came with 36 minutes remaining. Gentile faked the shot and then drove a low, hard blast into the right side of the net. Dervarics and Caitlyn Kuntz '07 received the assists on the play.

The Colonials started to really push for a goal and they got one in the 70th minute. Robert Morris received a corner kick and, despite Erin Lavery '10 heading the first shot away from the Bison net, the second attempt found its way into the goal. The Robert Morris goal was scored by Daneen Stevenato, her second of the year.

The Bison had a few good chances late in the game, including a great shot from Lauren Bayne '07, which was met with an equally good save from the Colonials' keeper.

"I thought that our players would be ready to go for their home opener, and that was clear from the start," Head Coach Ben Landis said.

While acknowledging the victory against Robert Morris, Landis was looking ahead to the next game, which was Wednesday against Marist.

"We'll take each opponent as they come, one at a time. Our focus is to be a very, very tough team to score against, and we do have lots of confidence in our attacking players to find ways to score," Landis said.

Gentile said the strength of the Bison offensive is "our creativeness. We are able to create a lot of havoc for opposing defenses and every one of us wants to score."

That mentality was on display in the Saturday game as the Bison offense moved the ball extremely well.

"We have a lot of returning offensive players, and since last year we've gotten to know each other even better as players," Gentile said. "Hopefully our strengths will come out even more on the field."

The Orange and Blue will need that offense to click for them to repeat as Patriot League champions. Another key to repeating is the tough early schedule the team played.

"We feel like the difficult schedule earlier in the year along with some building confidence now will allow us to compete for a victory each and every match from here on out," Landis said. "We like our chances to defend but realize that it is going to be a battle, game in and game out as the league is very, very close."

The team appears to be ready for those battles.

"Our goal is to improve on last year – do everything we can to achieve what we have already done and more," Gentile said.

The Bison face-off with Duquesne at 1 p.m. Saturday at home.

"It should be a fun couple of weeks," Landis said. "We're looking forward to the challenges ahead."

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

Jennifer Mrozek '07 challenges an opponent for control of the ball. Mrozek has started all but two games in the past two years.

Men's soccer extends winning streak to six

BY JOHN MLODZINSKI
Staff Writer

The men's soccer team defeated Holy Cross 2-0 in its Patriot League opener Saturday at Linda Johnson Smith Stadium.

The Bison now stand at 5-1-2 overall and 1-0-0 in Patriot League play.

Bucknell 2
Holy Cross 0

Chris Hennings '09 scored his second goal of the season in the 77th minute to put the Bison up 1-0. With just 24 seconds left in the game, Anthony Ferraro '09 added an insurance goal off of a pass from Dan Ziznewski '09 to put the Bison up 2-0. It was Ferraro's first goal of the season.

"It felt great to score a goal at such a critical point in such a critical game," Ferraro said. "I feel it emphasized that we were the better team. It feels great to be a part of such a successful team."

Ferraro also notes his team worked very hard to get where they are today.

"I am proud of how hard we have worked to get this far, but I feel it's important that we keep working to achieve more success," Ferraro said.

Joe Kuterbach '08 stopped three shots in the game, recording his second shutout of the season.

Keith Bauer of Holy Cross also stopped three shots as well. In the contest, the Orange and Blue out-shot the Crusaders 14-11 while they split the corner kicks battle 4-4. The Bison played a very clean game, only being whistled for six fouls.

The win extended the men's unbeaten streak to six games, its longest in 13 years.

The Bison also won their league opener for the fourth straight year.

Head Coach Brendan Nash feels this is one of his hardest working teams he has coached in his career.

"The staff really enjoys coaching this team," Nash said. "They have a great attitude. They realize they are young, so everyone is looking to learn and get better on a daily basis. From 1-24 everyone works hard and accepts his role. ... There is no pressure on anyone to carry the team. If someone is not having their best game, or is injured, his teammates will pick up the slack."

When asked about the team's current six game unbeaten streak, Nash said, "We do not even think about it. Once the game is over we enjoy it for a bit but then move on to preparing for the next game."

"This team has great focus on the process of getting better. We have some long-term goals, but we rarely talk about them. We talk about getting better each day and the long term will take care of itself."

The Bison will play Army at 7 p.m. Saturday in their first home Patriot League game.

Men's golf captures second and third at Bison Invitational

By Wes Trowbridge
Contributing Writer

The men's golf team showcased a talented group of underclassmen in addition to their experienced group of seniors, as the Orange and Blue's two teams finished second and third at the Bucknell Invitational over the weekend.

The all-underclass squad, led by Keita Aoki '08, captured second place with a 54-hole team score of 874 (289-293-292), 16 shots behind tournament champion Rider University (289-282-287). Aoki finished three-over-par and tied for fourth place individually with rounds of 72-70-71.

He was supported by the steady play of four first-year students who entered the tournament with a combined four rounds of experience at the Division I level. Ryan Schneiter '10 (71-75-75) tied for 10th individually, Jeff Pike '10 (76-76-70) played an excellent final round to finish tied for 13th, Andrew Cohen '10 (73-73-77) tied for 18th, and Brian Bartow '10 (73-75-76) tied for 22nd.

Five strokes back, the all-senior team moved up one spot in the final round to capture second place.

Charlie Waddell '07 rebounded from a six-over-par 76 Friday morning with scores of 67 Friday afternoon and 69 Saturday to tie for second place, one stroke behind tournament medalist Tyler Brewington of Rider.

"[In the first round] I wasn't swinging well or making any putts," Waddell said, who triple bogeyed the final hole of the first round. "I went out in the second round and just tried to stay loose and make good swings. I got off to a good start and kept that momentum going and played my last 36 holes very well."

"In terms of my game, all aspects are pretty sharp right now ... I'm looking forward to the next couple of weeks to see if I can get a few wins under my belt."
—Charlie Waddell '07

It was Waddell's second consecutive second place finish, going back to the previous week's Colgate Invitational.

"In terms of my game, all aspects are pretty sharp right now ... I'm looking forward to the next couple of weeks to see if I can get a few wins under my belt," Waddell said.

Ryan Hom '07 (75-74-73) also played better as the tournament progressed, to tie for 13th place. The solid play of Charles Wagner '07 (74-74-77), Kyle Moran '07 (74-77-74) and Patrick Yingling '07 (75-80-73) contributed to a final score of 879.

The Bison also had three individual competitors in the tournament, led by Rahul Desai '08, whose steady rounds of 75-74-73 placed him in a tie for 13th. Stuart Lindgren '08 (81-75-75) and Brian Poe '09 (80-78-79) also competed.

The top five were rounded out by St. Francis University (292-297-295), five shots behind the Bison seniors with an 884, and Patriot League rival Lehigh University (294-303-291), shooting 888.

If their start to the season is any indication, the Bison should be looking to top their record setting season of a year ago in which they captured their first ever Patriot League title. They opened the season with a victory at the Colgate Invitational, and the four first-year students look to compete for significant playing time while adding depth to the roster. In two tournaments, the Bison are also 7-0 against fellow Patriot League competitors.

The team competes for its next victory at the St. Bonaventure Invitational Sunday and Monday.

Bison win two of three

Women's volleyball dominates LaSalle and Wagner; improve to 8-6

By Ellis Hudes
Staff Writer

The women's volleyball team won two of three matches at the Bucknell Invitational over the weekend, bringing its overall record this season to 8-6.

Three Bison players received honors for their outstanding play: Jenna Henderson '08, Shannon Pitsch '09 and Kristen Sydlowski '07. Henderson and Pitsch represented the home team on the Bucknell Invitational All-Tournament Team, and Sydlowski was named All-Tournament Libero.

Henderson averaged 4.56 kills, .56 aces and hit .272 for the tournament. Pitsch in turn averaged 11.33 assists and 2.56 digs. Sydlowski continued to anchor the defense with 6.67 digs per game. All three players also made honorable mention for Patriot League Player of the Week.

"I'm proud of how we responded after the tough loss and I think our team is coming together nicely, but our serve and service return will be the keys to success as we enter Patriot League play."
—Cindy Opalski, head coach*

The team swept La Salle in a late afternoon match to conclude a successful home stand in Davis Gym.

Bucknell 3
LaSalle 0

An initial 14-4 run and forcing La Salle into multiple offensive errors propelled the Bison to a game one win. The second game remained close until about the halfway point when the Bison went on a 13-4 run and won by a 10 point margin. The third game was the tightest of all, characterized by much smaller runs from each team, but the Bison escaped to clinch the match 30-26.

Both Pitsch and Henderson helped fuel the offense, the former with 35 assists and six digs and the latter with 15 kills and hitting .343. Emilie Hardinge '09 had an impressive all-around game, posting 10 kills, two aces and three blocks

Earlier that afternoon the Bison's six game winning streak, the team's longest since 2003, ended with a 3-0 loss to an undefeated Princeton squad.

Princeton 3
Bucknell 0

Once again the offensive tandem of Pitsch and Henderson registered team best numbers in assists and kills, respectively.

Sydlowski has made the libero position her own in the team's last few matches and posted 17 digs against Princeton. Other solid performances included Jennie Smith '07 with five block assists and Sarah Groman '07 with seven kills and four blocks.

The Tigers used some tricky offensive schemes to disrupt the Bison's rhythm and made things very tough for the home crowd. They took control with large runs in the first and third games while the second was the most closely contested.

Head Coach Cynthia Opalski was impressed with Princeton's overall strategy, but she knows that the Bison can be proactive when faced with such a difficult opponent.

"We got frustrated as a team against Princeton and let one player who was playing well that day get into our heads," Opalski said.

Friday evening marked the beginning of the Bucknell Invitational with the home team matching up against Wagner. A convincing sweep of the Seahawks capped off the team's winning streak at six matches.

Bucknell 3
Wagner 0

Hardinge stepped up by tallying 14 kills and hit .333 in a very clean individual performance. Pitsch posted a double-double with 37 assists and 10 digs, while a consistent Sydlowski led the defense with 21 digs.

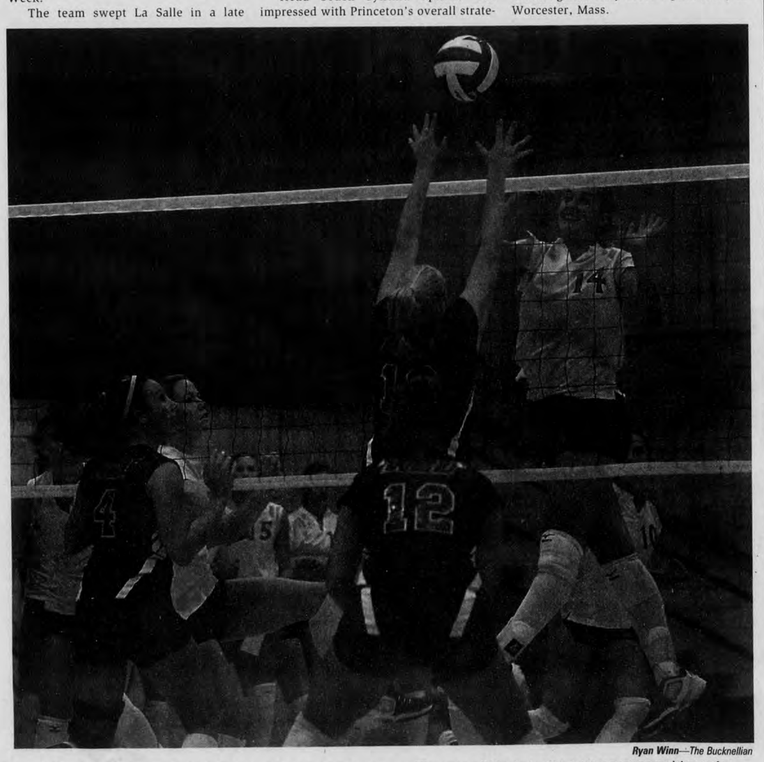
Smith and Henderson added to a potent Bison offense, which did an excellent job of reading Wagner's defense.

Trailing 26-25 in the first game, the team responded following a timeout to take five of the last six points to clinch the game. They played their best in the next game, which included a 13-4 Bison run.

There was a healthy crowd on hand to support the home team. Inspired by the bench's creative cheerleading, the fans did the wave, shouted individual encouragement and even stood for the final few points of the match.

"I'm proud of how we responded after the tough loss and I think our team is coming together nicely," Opalski said, "but our serve and service return will be the keys to success as we enter Patriot League play."

The team plays its first Patriot League match against Holy Cross 7 p.m. today in Worcester, Mass.



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Jennie Smith '07 spikes over a West Chester player in a previous game. The team will begin its Patriot League competition today against Holy Cross in Worcester, Mass.

Saylor Says

By Matthew Saylor
Sports Editor

1. There are only about 10 days to go in Major League Baseball's regular season and the contenders are starting to separate themselves from the pretenders. This will essentially be my final predictions, and next week "Saylor Says" will look at the scenarios that could play out during that final weekend. Right now I see the Yankees, Tigers, Athletics and Twins coming out of the American League (say goodbye to the defending champion White Sox), and the Mets (who became the first team to officially clinch a playoff spot this past week, winning its first division title since 1988), Cardinals, Dodgers and Phillies coming out of the National League. Further down in "Saylor Says" you can read why a Dodgers win over the Padres on Tuesday may catapult Los Angeles into the post-season and send San Diego home for the winter.

2. It is impossible to imagine the shock and grief that must be felt on the campus of Duquesne University, following the shooting of five of the players on the men's basketball team. Prayers especially go out to Sam Ashaolu, who was shot twice in the head and is listed in critical condition.

3. Through Wednesday, the University's men's water polo, volleyball, football, women's soccer, men's soccer and field hockey teams have a combined record of 30-15-3. This is a fantastic start, and evidence of the hard work and effort put forth by student-athletes and the coaching staffs.

4. Congratulations to Charles Lee '06 for receiving a contract from the San Antonio Spurs. Lee will participate in training camp with the Spurs, competing for one of the 15 roster spots.

5. The Los Angeles Dodgers became only the fourth team in Major League history to hit four consecutive home runs. The back-to-back-to-back-to-back jacks came in the bottom of the ninth inning in a pivotal game against the division rival Padres, tying the game at 9-9. The Padres would go on to take the lead in the top of the 10th, but Nomar Garciaparra hit a two-run home run to give the Dodgers the dramatic walk-off win. This is the kind of game that can boost a team into the playoffs and destroy another team's chances. Following that game, the Dodgers had a half game lead on the Padres for the division title, while the Padres were one and a half games ahead of the Phillies in the Wild Card race.

6. Michigan's 47-21 win at Notre Dame is an impressive statement that immediately vaults the Wolverines into national title contention. It is not an easy schedule for Michigan down the road though, as the team has games at home against Iowa and away at Penn State and Ohio State.

7. The Bison football team's 20-5 win over Cornell was an impressive display for the Orange and Blue. The defense again gave up a lot of yards, but it forced four Big Red turnovers in keeping Cornell out of the end zone. It was a nice performance by the offense as well, especially following its tough game against Lafayette. Cheers to the squad for its increased physicality and intensity, and to the coaching staff for its solid preparation. It certainly paid off.

8. The Ryder Cup takes place this weekend in Ireland. The United States has the top three players in the world, but will be the underdog heading into the event. The United States has not won the tournament since 1999, and Europe has won four of the last five.

9. If you are looking for a mix of sports and entertainment, try watching NBC's new show "Friday Night Lights," premiering on Tuesday, October 3. The show is based off of the book and movie of the same name, and its pilot episode is receiving some of the strongest reviews of any new show this season.

10. Good luck to my younger sister Lauren as she continues her first season of high school varsity tennis. It is fortunate that you have the same athletic ability as your brother...

Field Hockey struggles with weekend play

By Shannon Pitsch
Staff Writer

The weekend was a disappointing one for the women's field hockey team, with the exception of two players ranked number one in the nation for individual performances.

The Bison faced Drexel University Friday night with the intent of remaining the only Patriot League team undefeated at home. In the sixth minute, Drexel's Amanda Horyat scored the first shot of the game.

Drexel 2 (OT)
Bucknell 1

Despite outshooting the Dragons 3-2, the Bison could not score and remained down 1-0 at the end of the first half. The second half remained predominately scoreless with two saves from Emily Groendyke '07 and seven from Drexel's goalkeeper.

With just 41 seconds left in the half, offensive power Amanda Faust '09 completed a penalty corner assisted by classmate Stephanie Graf '09, bringing Faust's total to five goals for the season.

The Bison entered into overtime, having out-shot the Dragons 9-6 in regulation play. A fast break and goal from Drexel's Sarah Gostomski in the 70th minute of play led to a University loss of 1-2.

The Orange and Blue traveled to local rival Lock Haven University Tuesday night. Despite seven saves in 53 minutes from goalkeeper Groendyke, the Bison were outscored 15-2.

Lock Haven 6
Bucknell 0

The offensive power of Lock Haven led to five first-half goals, three coming from Blair Wynne of the opposition. Defensively, the Bison improved, allowing only two shots in the goal. Lock Haven defeated the Bison 6-0, improving their record to 4-3.

With a season record of 4-3 and only a few practices before Patriot League competition, two Bison players currently lead the NCAA statistically.

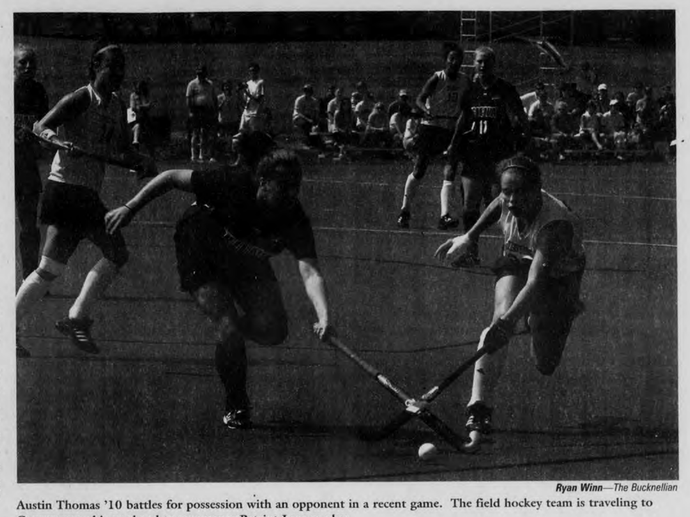
Anne Lutz '07 is tied for first in assists per game, with six for the season, and teammate Emily Hutchison '09 is tied for first in the penalty stroke category with two.

Additionally, the Bison captured two Eastern College Athletic Conference awards for the week. Callista Costopoulos '07, currently tied for first on the team in goals with five, earned Player of the Week. Groendyke, currently first on the team and fourth in the Patriot League with 34 saves, earned Goalkeeper of the Week.

"As we prepare for the upcoming Patriot League season, we must continue to improve defensively – both our individual defense on the ball and our team defensive organization," Head Coach Heather Lewis said.

"In addition, despite what the stats show, we are not 'finishing' our scoring opportunities at a rate we are happy with. We can always score more goals, and I've been telling this team since last year, individual defense and scoring are a matter of effort and attitude," Lewis said.

The Bison will begin Patriot League play Saturday at Georgetown University.



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Austin Thomas '10 battles for possession with an opponent in a recent game. The field hockey team is traveling to Georgetown this weekend to commence Patriot League play.

Cross country races at Lock Haven Invitational

Men's team takes third place overall, while the women's squad takes fourth among tough competition

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

The women's cross country team competes in a recent meet. Both the men and the women were exposed to regional competition at Lock Haven and are preparing for the upcoming Penn State Altoona Invitational.

By Brian Mulligan
Sports Editor

The Lock Haven Invitational presented the men's and women's cross country teams with a glance at their Mid-Atlantic regional competition, which includes La Salle and Penn State.

The men's team showed their prowess with a third place finish, led by team captain Matt Forys '07.

Forys placed fifth overall among a field of a 111 runners from across the region. A longer 10 kilometer race was another hurdle the team had to jump over.

"The meet went pretty well, but we definitely can improve upon our performance. Some of the team really stepped up and had great races, while some team members struggled," Forys said. "We placed third on an off day, so this meet shows that we have a lot of potential for the rest of the season. I think the next few meets will really show what kind of team we are."

"The meet went pretty well, but we definitely can improve upon our performance. Some of the team really stepped up and had great races, while some team members struggled."
—Matt Forys '07

Second to place for the Bison was Donnie Sanner '09, producing a time of 32 minutes 54 seconds to grab 15th place overall. Andy Corral '08 finished only five seconds behind Sanner to take 16th place. Joe Foley '09 and Mike Gibney '08 performed well, placing 21st and 22nd respectively. The teamwork is evident in the results with four of the top five runners placing close together. Head Coach Kevin Donner was pleased with the effort, but is optimistic for improvement.

"We do need some of our veterans to step up and when they do that, we will be a more solid team," Donner said.

The fourth place finish for the women's team shows promise for the squad, as the top four teams were separated by only 16 points. The winning team, LaSalle, is one of the top squads in the region. Leanna Nastase '07 produced the best showing for the Orange and Blue with a time of 21:37 to earn the fifth place spot.

"It was a very competitive race on the women's side. We ran an average race and nearly won the meet," Donner said. "LaSalle is getting national attention and we were only 16 points behind them, which bodes well for how we will compete with them at the Mid-Atlantic Regionals."

Jenny Stevens '07 placed 11th overall among 161 participants in the six kilometer race, finishing in 22:01. Erin Cranmer-Hart '08 finished only five spots behind Stevens with a time of 22:12. The duo of Gillian Nordquist '09 and Molly Pritz '10 rounded out the top five scorers by placing 25th and 27th respectively. The well-rounded performance on the women's side shows promise for the future of the Bison program.

The team will send a select group to the Penn State Altoona Invitational on Saturday in Altoona, Pa. On the men's side, an all first year squad will be sent, while a squad made up of middle runners will be sent for the women.

"This meet gives our middle tier runners a chance to score for the team and gain some valuable experience," Donner said.

The meet will begin at 10:30 a.m.

CUSTOMIZED SKINCARE
FOR THE TREATMENT OF ACNE

Each of these product lines allow us to meet the individual needs of our patients.

OBAGI La Roche Posay SkinCeuticals

- Vitamin Supplements
  Healthy Skin provides internal skin care by enhancing the body's natural ability to provide nutrients.
- Blue Light Treatments
  This special blue light simply and painlessly kills bacteria in your skin.
- Intense Pulsed Light
  This treatment offers improvement in pore size and acne scars.
- Chemical Peels
  Refines skins' texture and simulates skins natural renewal process.
- Microdermabrasion
  Gently exfoliates the skin and leaves a smoother texture, promoting the growth of healthy new skin cells.

CENTER FOR SKIN HEALTH
Ernest Norrington, M.D., FACS
210 IPM Road in Lewisburg • (570) 524-7777 • www.drnorrington.com

Domino's Pizza - A Proud Partner of Bucknell University
LEWISBURG • 524-9000
1722 Market St.

MANIC MONDAY
$7.99 LARGE 1-TOPPING PIZZA - DELIVERED!
ADD ON A 2ND MORE 1-TOPPING & 8-PC WINGS TODAY FOR ONLY $6.99
MONDAY ONLY

2xTUESDAY
BUY ANY LARGE PIZZA AT REGULAR MENU PRICE & RECEIVE A 2ND OF EQUAL VALUE FOR FREE TUESDAY ONLY

WACKY WEDNESDAY
BUY ANY LARGE PIZZA AT REGULAR MENU PRICE AND GET ANY SIDE ITEM FOR FREE
• 8-PC BREADSTICKS • 10-PC WINGS
• 8-PC CHEESY WINGS • 8-PC KICKERS
• 8-PC CINNA STIX • 2-LITER COKE
• BROWNIES
WEDNESDAY ONLY

TERRIFFIC THURSDAYS
$4.99 LARGE CHEESE PIZZA
PICK-UP ONLY! DELIVERY ON 2 OR MORE.
THURSDAY ONLY

HOT BROWNIES
FREE
WITH PURCHASE OF ANY LARGE PIZZA AT REGULAR MENU PRICE.

DOUBLE DEAL
$11.99 ea 2 MEDIUMS
$13.99 ea 2 LARGES

CHICKEN SPECIAL
$17.99 1 MEDIUM 1-TOPPING, 1- ORDER OF CHEESY BREAD, 1- ORDER OF CHICKEN KICKERS & ONE 2-LITRE OF COKE.

CARRY-OUT DEAL
BUY ANY PIZZA AT REGULAR MENU PRICE & RECEIVE A 2ND OF EQUAL VALUE FOR FREE

CALL TODAY! 1.800.DOMINOS
(1.800.366.4467)

#6: MVP and home run champ?

Philadelphia Phillies' first-baseman Ryan Howard keeps on slugging to push the Phitins to a Wild Card title

By Jared Napolitano
Business Manager

The date is July 15, 2005. I am at Citizens Bank Park watching my beloved Phillies playing the second game of a four-game set with the pesky Florida Marlins.

Sports Opinion

Enter the bottom of the ninth. One out. Runners on the corners. Pat "The Bat" Burrell steps into the box. With this, I now decide it is time to trek my way down from Section 433 (no comparison to the old 700-level nosebleeds at the Vet), for God knows this man still does not know how to spell "clutch."

To not a single attendee's surprise, Burrell pops out. Now the 6'4", 252-pound kid from Missouri who has been making some headlines in the Philly papers steps into the batter's box. In my best attempt to keep my hopes at the level they should always be at as a Philadelphia sports fan (assuming the worst is usually a good bet), I assure myself a strikeout will conclude this divisional match-up.

Four pitches. Two swinging strikes, a foul ball and a called third-strike looking. Beautiful, and I say to myself, "Pat the Bat Part II has arrived."

Enter the 2006 Major League Baseball season. Ryan Howard has simply been the beacon of hope in a hopeless sports city. To the excitement of every cheese steak-devouring fan, Howard may legitimately capture the Most Valuable Player Award and, in the minds of many, the single-season home-run-record.

To me, Ryan Howard is the obvious choice for the National League MVP, even over whom I believe is the best player in baseball today, Albert Pujols of the St. Louis Cardinals. Put simply, the Phillies would be the laughing stock of the league (even though they still may be with their poor salary-wins correlation or lack thereof) and would finish in last place in the NL East without him.

The lefty's numbers are astounding for a second-year player, even though he is 26 years old. After capturing the NL Rookie of the Year Award in 2005 by slugging 22 home runs, 63 RBIs and batting .288 in only 88 games, Howard has continued to compile figures that rank atop the big league's offensive categories.

The Hank Aaron Award finalist currently leads Major League Baseball with 57 long-balls (which he can hit to all fields, seemingly effortlessly) and 140 "ribbies." Included in the 57 are two of quite possibly the most eye-dazzling home runs I have ever seen – the first being an estimated 496-foot blast into Ashburn Alley (the walkway behind the batter's eye at Citizens Bank Park) that traveled through the woods, over the two-level bullpen, past grandma's house, and then right near Geno's Steak stand in nearly dead-center field.

If this one was not enough, take the June 20 game (loss, typical with this team) with the Yankees this past year. Not only did Howard go three-for-four with seven RBIs, two home runs and a triple, but he also happened to blast a ball off Yankee ace Mike Mussina into the third deck (where my cheap self usually sits) in right field: uncharted territory. Somehow, the ball was estimated to have only traveled 461 feet. I do not believe that number for a second. The seat is now marked; the city has not forgotten.

Put simply, the Phillies would be the laughing stock of the league ... and would finish in last-place in the NL East without him.

In yet another chapter of this magical season (we are wishful thinkers also) that will only end positively if the "Phitins" happen to win the NL Wild Card in most eyes, Howard put on what cannot be called anything besides a "show" at the Home Run Derby at PNC Park in Pittsburgh in mid-July.

Not only did Howard win the event, and over the Mets' David Wright (we have to count our victories over the Mets this season in some way), but he also hit his last bomb off the "Hit It Here" sign in right field, which gave away 500 free round-trip tickets to fans in attendance.

Oh, and I almost forgot about the balls he sent to the Allegheny River that rivaled the now-tarnished display that Mark McGwire put on at the Derby at Fenway in 1999 (I can still hear ESPN's Chris Berman yelling, "That one's in New Hampshire!").

Barry Bonds (do not even get me started) won four straight MVP titles from 2001-2004 without even accumulating more than 480 at-bats once. Howard's intimidation factor is unequaled this year, even to Albert Pujols and Big Papi (who, by the way, does not weigh 22 pounds less than Howard despite the official listings).

This cannot be more obvious than in a big August series with the then wild card-leading Cincinnati Reds where Howard was walked three-count them, three-times in extra innings, including with runners already only first and second and no one out. If that is not fear and intimidation, I do not know what is.

A recent commercial from the Phillies organization shows, in a very simplistic way, several of Howard's home runs. Then, it just shows upcoming games and the ticketing number to call. In other words, the Phillies put it bluntly, "He puts butts in the seats, come to our games."

But again, back to the MVP Debate. Take Pujols off the Cardinals, you at least have a Cy Young-caliber (and the 2005 winner) ace on the pitching staff in Chris Carpenter, as well as classy veterans Scott Rolen (yes, we let him get away for peanuts) and Jim Edmonds. The Phillies pitching staff is third-worst in the NL, which had Jon Lieber and Cory Lidle as their "aces" for most of the season. And sticking with the whole peanuts theme, we let arguably our second or third best player, Bobby Abreu, get away to the "damn" Yankees for peanuts as well.

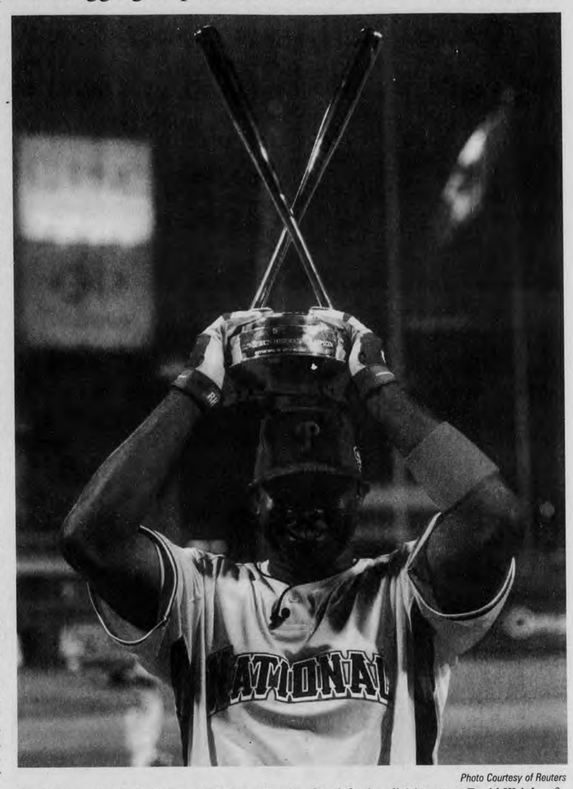

Photo Courtesy of Reuters

Ryan Howard hoists the Home Run Derby Trophy after defeating division-mate David Wright of the New York Mets in the annual Home Run Derby held at the All-Star Game at PNC Park in Pittsburgh on July 10.

This brings me to another point working in Howard's favor. While no team could quite resemble the off-season fire sale of the one and only Florida Marlins (who seem to wreck the Phillies playoff hopes every September more often than Donovan McNabb loses NFC Championship games), the Phillies offloaded Abreu, Lidle, fan-favorite Sal Fasano, David "Groundout Machine" Bell and relievers Real Cormier (their best bullpen arm by ERA) and the former steroid-using Ryan Franklin. In other words, Phillies General Manager Pat Gillick gave up hope for 2006, but Howard, with the Robin to his Batman, Chase Utley, did not lay down.

Utley's 35-game hit streak complemented with Howard's absolute tear in August (.348 BA, 14 HRs, 41 RBIs in 29 games) put the Phillies right back into the futility battle that is the NL Wild Card race. Who needed Abreu anyway, Mr. Lackadaisical out there in right field?

While Howard's glaring 164-strikeout total might make some knock the slugger, his .312, which is fourth in the NL, throws the argument back in his favor. The now franchise-record holder (Howard passed Mike Schmidt's 48 home runs as most in Phillies single-season history) still lags behind Pujols in average and on-base plus slugging-percentage, but this is where the award's title speaks for itself. If it was not for the fact that Phillies fans are sadists and do not mind subjecting themselves to pain and constant heartbreak (read: one World Series title in 123 years, and Mitch Williams), the Phillies attendance would rival the Fins in South Florida without Howard bringing fans in by the droves. MVP to the team and the city: the verdict is in, give the kid the award.

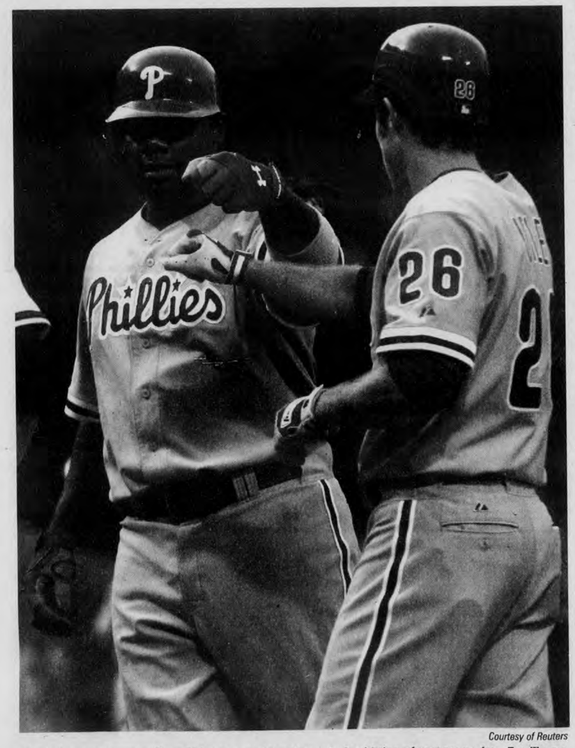
After all, he is the biggest figure of hope in a city which lives and dies with its sports teams, loves its soft pretzels (which are always best from some shady guy on the street outside the stadium) and worships a blue-collar playing style (see: Aaron Rowand, who may never be booed in a city that did, undoubtedly, boo Santa Claus). We call it a drought: 23 years without a major sports championship, which seems to run on a four year pattern of finals losses: Phillies '93 (I hate you, Joe Carter), Flyers '97 (sweep), Sixers '01 (won game one, lost four straight) and Iggles '05 up through 2004, how legitimate are the astronomical figures that Bonds (so eloquent with the media by the way), McGwire (as Saturday Night Live put it, "World Back Acne Champion") and Slammin' Sammy Sosa ("I hit ball far.") put up in the late 90s and early 2000s?

In other words, Phillies General Manager Pat Gillick gave up hope for 2006, but Howard, with the Robin to his Batman, Chase Utley, didn't lay down.

I, for one, still view Roger Maris' 61 in 1961 as the record and hopefully by season's end, my boy Ryan Howard will lay claim to it "unofficially." While it is a whole 'nother story in itself, if and when such sluggers as Bonds, McGwire and Sosa are found guilty, Howard may some day officially have the single-season crown. And no, there is no way Howard is using them. He is a big kid with a big heart and a sweet swing. It just looks like he is using a tree trunk to swing at pitches.

If his career numbers at least stay somewhat consistent (I know it is only two years of work), he could qualify as the best slugger of the generation. With 81 home runs in his first 256 games, Howard hits a home run in 9.01 percent of his at-bats. As a benchmark, Bonds has hit a home run in 7.71 percent of his trips to the plate. Extrapolation is good, but I am still knocking on wood.

My hope for this season is not only that Howard brings home the MVP Award, but also, and he is the first to say it, the 13-year playoff drought comes to an end. Joe Carter still haunts me in my sleep.



Courtesy of Reuters

Phillies' second baseman Chase Utley congratulates Howard after hitting a homerun on Aug. 7 at Turner Field in Atlanta, Ga. against the Atlanta Braves. Howard and Utley were both All-Stars in 2005.

MLB Single-Season Home Run Totals

1. Barry Bonds	73
2. Mark McGwire	70
3. Sammy Sosa	66
4. Mark McGwire	65
5. Sammy Sosa	64
6. Sammy Sosa	63
7. Roger Maris	61
8. Babe Ruth	60
9. Babe Ruth	59
10. 3 tied with	58
11. Ryan Howard	57

Source: Baseball-Reference.com

From walk-on to captain

Katie Urosevich '07 excels on and off the field as a University leader

By Connie Barko
Staff Writer

Katie Urosevich '07 is not your typical year-round athlete whose primary focus is sports 24 hours a day, seven days a week. She is both the captain of the field hockey team and a cadet in the University's Army ROTC.

In addition to daily practices, weight lifting sessions and frequent games, Urosevich attends Army physical training at 6 a.m., weekly ROTC class and weekend "labs" where students develop skills needed for the military.

Unlike other athletes who were recruited out of high school, Urosevich was a "walk-on" to the field hockey team. She grew up in Lewisburg but never expected to go to the University when she graduated from high school.

While babysitting for a University employee, the former University President, Steffen H. Rogers, stopped by and convinced her that this was the college for her. He helped her apply and even introduced her to the field hockey coach, Heather Lewis. Her future seemed to fall into her lap.

"I didn't think that I was going to play [field hockey]," Urosevich said. "I thought I was going to run track. One thing my track coach said in high school was, 'Do what makes you happy.' It wasn't track. It was field hockey."

In contrast to track which tends to be an individual sport, Urosevich enjoys the team aspect of field hockey. Mistakes can be made, and someone else can compensate. In field hockey other teammates have your back.

Urosevich was not a superstar from the start.

"I went out on my first day and looked around at everyone else," Urosevich said. "I thought, 'I'm really bad.'"

Fortunately, Lewis promised not to cut her if Urosevich continued to work with her and improved. The motivation provided by Lewis and Urosevich's dedication paid off. She started her sophomore year as a forward and is now one of the team's captains.

"I went from nothing—I played a minute my freshman year—to being pretty essential on the field," Urosevich said. "Gaining confidence has helped me."

Her involvement in Army ROTC was one of the things that marked a change in her athletic career. It helped her gain the confidence she needed to be a presence on the field.

Urosevich reflected on her experiences at Airborne School, a summer camp where cadets learn how to jump out of airplanes.

"When I was going to make my first jump, I was really scared," Urosevich said. "One of the sergeants asked me if I was afraid to jump. I said, 'No,' but my eyes were tearing up ... he told me that the only difference between leaders and everyone else is that it isn't that leaders are not scared but that they control their fear. That has made a big difference for me on the field."

As one of seven seniors, Urosevich has enjoyed the camaraderie and positive energy on the team. Because of the level of experience among the players, one of the team's goals this fall is to win the Patriot League Championship. At the outset of the 2006 season, they were ranked third.

"We have not [won the Patriot Leagues] since I have been here, but this is the strongest team in my three years that we have put out," Urosevich said.

Regarding individual goals, Urosevich's focus is still on the team.

"I want to make more of a difference on the field – be a presence, score more goals," Urosevich said. "I want to lead the best I can. Be an example. Be a positive source."

After graduation Urosevich will miss field hockey, but does not want to leave it behind for good.

"I would like to coach maybe at the high school level," Urosevich said. "I like what I got from it. You not only teach the sport but also a lot of other things too. Coach Lewis did that for me. She gave me confidence."

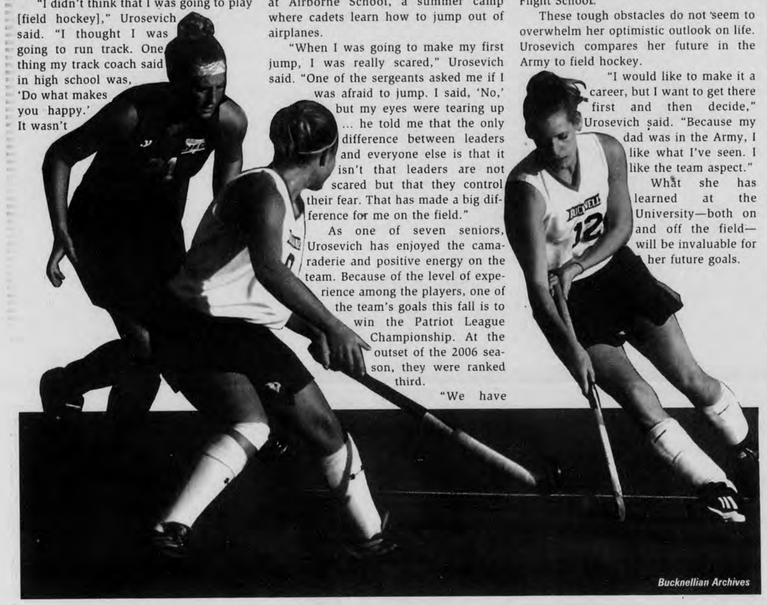
Urosevich is contracted to serve at least four years in the Army after graduation; she currently plans on making it a career. Aviation is her branch of choice and she hopes to fly Black Hawk helicopters one day.

In order to meet this goal she must endure a Basic Officer Leadership Course (BOLC), Survivor Escape Training and Flight School.

These tough obstacles do not seem to overwhelm her optimistic outlook on life. Urosevich compares her future in the Army to field hockey.

"I would like to make it a career, but I want to get there first and then decide," Urosevich said. "Because my dad was in the Army, I like what I've seen. I like the team aspect."

What she has learned at the University—both on and off the field—will be invaluable for her future goals.



Bucknellian Archives

Tight competition in the NFC East

By Ty Clark
Staff Writer

Two weeks into the nascent NFL season, many things are starting to become clear. To name a few: the Raiders are the overwhelming early favorites to win the first overall pick in the draft, the Jacksonville Jaguars could be this season's 2000 Baltimore Ravens, and most definitely, the NFC East is the toughest and most even division in football.

How even is this group? Even enough that every team has been predicted to finish first, second, third and fourth—just by ESPN's group of NFL analysts alone. Quite frankly, nobody knows exactly how this division will play out. All of these teams feature many excellent players, and were recently hailed as some of the better teams in their conference, making the projections even harder.

On the surface, the teams appear quite different. New York is an offensive juggernaut, with Pro Bowl caliber players at every skill position. The Dallas Cowboys prefer to stop the kind of offense the Giants thrive on. The departure of numerous key players has made the Washington Redskins the Sean Taylor and Clinton Portis show. The Philadelphia Eagles are the wildcard, missing the playoffs last year, thanks to their 0-6 record in division play, only to reload impressively.

However, the teams are not as different as they appear. All are focused around their quarterbacks, although the Redskins, with aging Mark Brunell, are simply hoping that he can still throw 20 yards. All the teams feature strong defenses capable of playing various styles. And all teams have huge questions surrounding key areas. Can the Giants secondary cover anyone and will the team ever stop playing down to opponents? Can Dallas and Drew Bledsoe ignore the sideshow of Terrell Owens and focus on the game? Can the Eagles run the ball effectively late in the game—a weakness that sorely hurt the team in Sunday's matchup against the Giants. Can Mark Brunell throw twenty yards?

This past weekend offered fans a good glimpse of the teams, as the Giants battled the Eagles and the Redskins played the Cowboys. And while the Giants walked away with an incredible, improbable win, the Cowboys cruised to a victory over the Redskins, creating a three-way tie at the top of the division (the Redskins hold the cellar, just a game back). And while many people will read too much into this, there is still much football left to be played. In all likelihood, the Eagles will hold the division lead after four weeks, owing to their weak early schedule, and will immediately be in contention for a playoff spot.

A division title will not be easily won—with the quality of the teams in the division, the winner will probably be no better than 11-5, severely hurting the other team's chances for a wildcard spot. No other division can boast this kind of dogfight. Even the AFC North, with Baltimore, Pittsburgh and Cincinnatti, has Cleveland to spot the other teams wins. The NFC East will feature many intense battles as divisional play picks up, and it is sure not to disappoint most football fans—except those whose teams will miss because of the strength of the others.

Bucknellian Correction:
Last week's Women's Soccer article misidentified the Bison's opponent in the headline. The team played Penn State, not Penn.

Men's tennis aces competition at Brown Invitational

By Kyle Barndollar
Contributing Writer

The men's tennis team competed in the Brown Invitational over the weekend in Providence, R.I. The team's overall strong performance was highlighted by a doubles victory from Jon Brenner '09 and Ryan Sandburg '09, and an unanticipated singles win from Zach Hascoe '10.

After a rainy Friday, Sandburg and Brenner defeated teams from Boston College, Montréal and Rhode Island on their way to the flight two doubles championship Saturday.

"It rained the first day and we were at Brown on Friday from eight in the morning till 11:30 at night waiting," Sandburg said. "Brown is one of our harder tournaments and to do so well is a great preview for our spring season." The duo has yet to lose on the season.

Hascoe surprised a lot of people, including himself, by capturing the flight four singles championship.

"I went into the tournament just hoping for some strong results against good players," Hascoe said. "But I ended up just cruising through the singles tournament." He defeated Brian Garber from Boston College 6-1, 7-5 and Villanova's Sean Daly 6-2, 6-3 Sunday to win the main draw.

"[Hascoe] really impressed me with his smart match play throughout the entire tournament," Head Coach Rebecca Helt said.

Ira Reibeisen '08 finished 13th in the flight one back draw, posting 6-0, 6-0 victories over both Ben Schueler of UConn and Carlton's Arthur Labanek on day three. Brenner and Sandburg each competed in singles events as well, with Brenner finishing ninth in flight three after defeating Marshall Wheeler of Colgate 6-0, 6-4. Sandburg took sixth in flight two, falling 6-4, 0-6, (6-10) to Assumption's Matt Stopp.

Ben Young '08 and Sidharth Makkar '09 both reached the semifinals of their respective flights before being defeated, and Daniel Bednarek '09 made it to the fifth place final before falling to BC's Brian Hartness 6-2, 6-3.

The prestigious Brown Tournament hosts some of the best players from the northeast.

"[There were] a lot of very solid performances from the men's team this past weekend," Helt said. "We had some tough first round draws, but managed to get a few wins in the consolation brackets."

The Bison return to Lewisburg to host the Bucknell Invitational Oct. 7-8 before heading to the Quinnipiac Invitational Oct. 13-15 in Hamden, Conn. They round out their fall season with the ITA Regionals Oct. 19-21 in Philadelphia, Pa.

This just in...

-WOMEN'S SOCCER-

The Bison scored two second-half goals to come from behind and defeat Marist 2-1 on Wednesday. Jennifer Devarics '09 scored within the first five minutes of the second-half, erasing the Orange and Blue's first half deficit. Jennifer Margolis '07 scored what would turn out to be the game-winning goal in the game's 83rd minute. Katie Dry '07 made six saves for the Bison, whose record improves to 4-3-1 this season.

-MEN'S SOCCER-

The Orange and Blue achieved its longest unbeaten streak since 1976, defeating St. Peter's 1-0 in a Wednesday afternoon match-up. This win has extended the Bison's unbeaten streak to seven consecutive games, and upped its record to 6-1-2 this year. Alex Russo '09 scored with less than five minutes to go in the game, and Joey Kuterbach '08 recorded three saves for his third shut-out this season.

WEEKEND SCHEDULE

Friday

WOMEN'S VOLLEYBALL - Holy Cross, 7 p.m., Worcester, Mass.
WOMEN'S TENNIS - Quinnipiac Invitational, TBA, Hamden, Conn.

Saturday

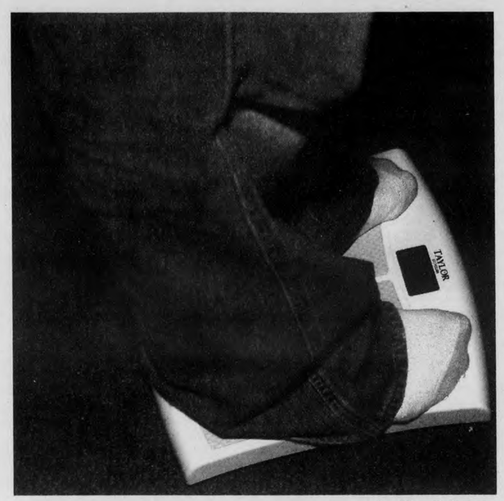
FOOTBALL - Richmond, 1 p.m., Richmond, Va.
MEN'S SOCCER - Army, 7 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
WOMEN'S SOCCER - Duquesne, 1 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
WOMEN'S CROSS COUNTRY - Penn State Altoona Invitational, 10:30 a.m., Altoona, Pa.
MEN'S CROSS COUNTRY - Penn State Altoona Invitational, 10:30 a.m., Altoona, Pa.
MEN'S WATER POLO- Brown, 10:30 p.m., Providence, R.I.
FIELD HOCKEY - Georgetown, 12 p.m., Washington, D.C.
WOMEN'S VOLLEYBALL - Army, 5 p.m., West Point, N.Y.
WOMEN'S TENNIS - Quinnipiac Invitational, All Day, Hamden, Conn.
WOMEN'S GOLF - Nittany Lion Invitational, All Day, State College, Pa.
MEN'S WATER POLO - ECAC Championship, TBA, Providence, R.I.

Sunday

MEN'S GOLF - St. Bonaventure Invitational, All Day, Olean, N.Y.
MEN'S WATER POLO - ECAC Championship, TBA, Providence, R.I.
WOMEN'S GOLF - Nittany Lion Invitational, All Day, State College, Pa.
WOMEN'S TENNIS - Quinnipiac Invitational, All Day, Hamden, Conn.

Illustration by Evan Unger—The Bucknellian

Avoiding the "freshman 15"



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

When students first arrive on campus, it is easy to slip intobad eating habits. The best way to avoid the dreaded "Freshamn 15" is to balance your life and stay healthy.

By Rajaa Qadri
Contributing Writer

The food in our cafeteria is surely tempting.

The moment you enter the cafeteria, the sight of the delicious cakes and yummy cookies makes you wonder about high-calorie dessert before having lunch or dinner.

For as long as I have been at the University, I have not seen the ice cream corner in the cafeteria deserted or even less than crowded.

For some strange reason, the late-night pizza orders seem more delicious than any other pizzas we ever had before. Most people cannot seem to focus if they are not sipping soda or nibbling on a chocolate bar while writing a paper or reading for a class. So, are we gaining weight?

Researchers at Cornell University found that an average college student will gain four pounds during the first 12 weeks of his or her first year, which is 11 times higher than the typical weight gain for 17- and 18-year-olds.

There are several reasons why first year students are likely to gain weight. Most students are away from home for the first time. They usually get overwhelmed by the independence they get on campus. The unlimited supply of healthy and not-so-healthy food from the cafeteria is the attraction.

Some students often turn towards food in response to anxiety, stress, sadness and homesickness.

So, should we freak out? Should we shun ourselves from the delicious cafeteria desserts once and for all? Should we start spending six hours a day in the gym?

I do not want to sound like your mom and bombard you with advice but here are some realistic ways that can help you avoid being a victim of "Freshman 15."

Remember that the cafeteria is a place to eat and not to socialize. Students tend to sit in the cafeteria for hours in order to chat, and during that time they are likely to eat more than required.

First, the obvious one—exercise. This does not mean spending seven hours in the gym every day.

"'Freshmen 15' is something all freshmen dread and can happen easily," Emily Haley '09 said. "A key point to avoiding the 'Freshmen 15' is exercising. Bucknell has a fantastic athletic complex that is open to all students, and a daily workout of 30 minutes will allow you to fully enjoy all the food the caf offers."

If you are too lazy or busy to do that, there are a lot of different alternatives. Try walking briskly around campus. Explore other options such as jogging, swimming or taking the stairs and not the elevator.

Watch your eating habits. Usually students do not have a fixed time to eat. They will grab a bite whenever they can, and this irregularity in eating causes all sorts of problems. Having a fixed time for eating helps one eat in a balanced way.

Remember, the cafeteria is a place to eat, not to socialize. Students tend to sit in the cafeteria for hours in order to chat, and during that time they are likely to eat more than required. Set a time limit for you to eat (say, 20 minutes) and then leave.

When you sit at the table with your lunch or dinner, look at your food. Is it just pizza or beef? Try to maintain variety in what you eat. Try consuming more veggies, whole grains and lean meats, and please stop drinking soda four times a day.

Most of us do not realize how much soda we consume each day. Students who eat fruits and drink water are likely to stay more healthy than students who have soda and cookies stacked in their rooms.

Apart from food, sleeping habits also matter. Sleep helps keep stress under control, but we tend to stay up until 3 a.m. on weekdays when we have 8 a.m. classes.

"I see students procrastinating and not getting down to studies until late at night, which [will] eventually keep them up all night," Cristina Sacco '10 said. "I know it is not easy to always get eight to nine hours of sleep every day, but I still try to make sleep a priority."

Keep a regular schedule of going to bed and getting up every day and avoid taking naps at odd times. Avoiding caffeine, listening to loud music and watching television just before going to bed can help keep one's sleeping schedule in shape.

Finally, smoking is one of the biggest culprits which often goes unnoticed. Along with all the other harms it does to the body, smoking also makes exercising and normal activity difficult.

One of the other things that can guarantee 15 pounds or more is alcohol. Alcoholic beverages are not only high in calories, they also lead to poor decisions about food. So if you do choose to drink, please do so wisely.

Gaining weight is not inevitable in college. A little bit of planning beforehand and making wise choices could let you have a smooth ride during your first year. And hey, we have so many other things to worry about in our first year of college—do not let weight gain be one of them.

Sixteen ways to buff out boredom

By Mandy Hart
Writer

It is Saturday afternoon: that mid-day lull between meeting your friends for brunch and when the night's plans begin. You do not want to do homework because Saturday is your one day off. You are excited for the night to start. Face it, you are bored.

How to pass these unforgiving minutes? Lucky for you, I have generated a list of 16 cures for the sneaking onset of boredom.

1. Take it outside.

Saturday is a big day for University athletics. Why not walk out to West Fields for an afternoon soccer or field hockey game? Better yet, get your friends and bring a Frisbee. Not a sports fanatic? Take a stroll to Market Street. Pick up cheap school supplies at CVS or stop in at The Mercantile to get Mom a little gift to thank her for your last care package.

2. Tap into your stalker self.

Facebook, AIM and MySpace are virtual boredom-killers. Check up on your old high-school friends or see how those people that you saw every day at your summer job are doing. And while you are on the Internet...

3. Try an online laugh.

There are tons of Web sites that have no redeeming value, save for their sense of humor. Check out the Web sites www.ebaumsworld.com or www.homestarrunner.com for some good laughs.

Lauren Litts '07 agrees.

"Usually when I'm bored I will put on music or a movie that I haven't seen in awhile," Litts said. "Or I'll visit Web sites dedicated to making people laugh."

4. Make something special.

The Craft Center is the perfect place to go for a fun activity alone or with friends. Most items are very inexpensive. You can make something to use daily like a mirror or mug, or you can make a personalized gift.

5. Play around.

The 7th Street Café contains a plethora of board games like Battleship, Scrabble and Monopoly. Challenge your friends to a game over coffee or break out a deck of cards in your dorm and War your roommate for the last soda in the fridge.

6. Correspond.

Everyone loves mail. Even your grandmother. Pick up a pen and write some cards or letters to loved ones. It will be appreciated, guaranteed.

7. Plan your fantasy trip.

Even if you never plan on taking it, knowing where you would go if you ever had the opportunity is always helpful. Those three months in between graduation and your first job can be tedious. It will make you want to take your signing bonus and get packing for the trip that you have already planned.

8. Give your brain a rest.

TV is a luxury that most people cannot have during the week. Take this time to catch up on re-runs or just as an opportunity to lounge around with those funny Next-ers.

9. Make the rounds.

Go visit your friends. Start uphill and make your way downhill, stopping at all the dorms to say "hi" to neglected friends.

10. Revisit old favorites.

"When I'm bored, I usually put on my favorite movie and decompress," Doan Huynh '08 said.

There is a reason you brought your movie collection to school. Use it!

11. Crack open a book.

There, I said it. Reading for pleasure is something that most college students are over and done with. But why? Take advantage of the free hour or two per week to remind yourself that most people read for fun, not for work.

12. Shop 'til you drop.

Even if you do not have a car, you can take the University shuttle to the Susquehanna Valley Mall. Stroll around the stores or catch the newest movie on the big screen.

13. Get active.

Even if you are not a gym rat, keeping in shape is an important part of maintaining a healthy lifestyle, especially when you are constantly surrounded by fried foods. Go to the gym for a nice run or brisk walk. Your body will thank you later.

14. Explore your surroundings.

Did you know that there is a drive-in movie theatre not far from campus? How about the paintball arena in Mifflinburg? The bowling alley in Milton? Lewisburg and its neighboring towns have much more to offer a bored soul than you may assume.

15. Clean up your act.

Boredom is a great opportunity to catch up on neglected activities like laundry, cleaning and for all of you scruffy guys, shaving.

16. Rock out.

Revisit your music collection. Play an instrument. Check out purevolume.com for some great new bands in your favorite genre. Visit www.pandora.com and type in your favorite band to be matched with other great artists. Listening to or playing your own music is a great way to pass the time on a restless day.

Whatever your pleasure, hopefully this list will get you going on days when motivation is lacking, time is unsympathetic and boredom grips you with its large talons.

And if that last reference eluded you, try tip number 10.

A new column that bares it all ...

Ms. Love and the Bubble

Dear Ms. O,

I've been friends with this guy for about two years now. He just got out of a pretty serious relationship, but we've been going to parties together and hooking up afterward for the past couple weeks. The thing is, I've liked this guy for a long time, but I can't tell if he's really into me or just getting over his ex. How can I be sure? I don't want to lose him as a friend either.

Rebound Girl?

Dear Rebound Girl,

It's hard to know exactly how much time he's going to need before he is over his previous relationship. He may have been emotionally involved right until the end, or he may have started withdrawing beforehand. He may move on from past relationships right away, or he may seek distraction to forget what he's really going through.

There's no set amount of time that's "long enough" between a break up and a new relationship, and there's no way to know exactly how long he needs.

There's a stigma about being the "rebound relationship" and while many of these stereotypical situations happen, being the rebound is not always a bad thing. It provides time to have fun and get to know each other.

Just because one person isn't ready for anything serious when the hook-ups start, doesn't mean that that can't change over time. It's definitely something to keep in the back of your mind, but don't think being the rebound means your would-be relationship is doomed to fail. It depends on the connection between the two of you.

Many guys don't like to define their relationships right away. Going with the flow provides an easy, fun, non-confrontational way to get close to someone and escapes the complications that setting up relationship parameters can cause.

He is probably still sorting out exactly what he's feeling, both about his previous relationship and you, and may not be quite ready to think about your relationship yet.

You can look for some signs in his behavior that may help you decipher where his mind is. When you go to parties, is he focusing most of his attention on you or is he dancing with a bunch of other girls? Has he asked you hang out aside from parties, like grabbing dinner together or watching a movie? Is he affectionate with you in front of other people?

Be careful in looking for these signs. Try to gauge whether he is more affectionate with you now than he has been in the past. Don't read into things that were already present in the friendship.

If he treats you affectionately, he may be looking for more than just hookups. Because you've known each other for so long, he may feel comfortable with you and know that you are what he's looking for in a significant other, which is why he was ready to get involved with you so soon after his last relationship.

He may really like you, but at the same time be afraid to get into another serious relationship right away. If this is the case, don't take it personally. He needs time to be single for a while and it doesn't mean that he doesn't care about you.

If he seems like he is more involved just for the sexual aspects of your relationship, he may not want anything more from you than a hook-up.

I suggest waiting a while before you confront him. You should use this time to examine his actions and attempt to feel out where he's coming from. In the meantime, he may bring the subject up to you. He may have just as many uncertainties about your feelings as you do about his.

If he doesn't mention anything about your status in the next few weeks, you should bring it up with him. Don't pressure him to make a decision if he's not prepared to. He just got out of a relationship, which complicates matters. He may not have the answers yet.

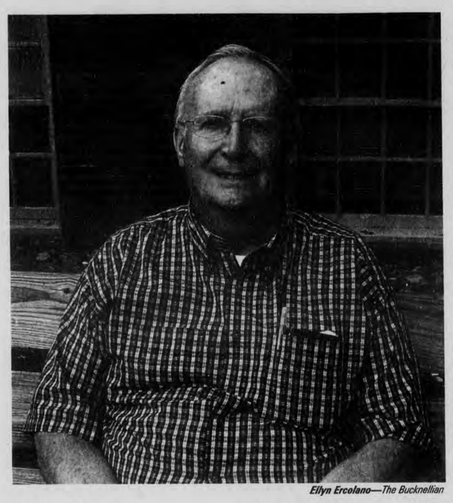
Ultimately you have to do what's right for you. If you don't feel comfortable with waiting to see what's going to happen, ask him about it now. It may be better to know, but be aware that he may give you a vague answer anyway.

And don't forget, it's always an option to back off a bit and focus on your friendship. Perhaps down the line he will be ready for something serious, but you might feel better if he's more ready to define it.

~Ms. O

E-mail me your questions at MsOintheBubble@yahoo.com or send them through campus mail to Ms. O, The Bucknellian, C-3952. All authors of questions will remain anonymous.

The professor's briefcase: Russell Dennis



Ellyn Ercolano—The Bucknellian

By Zak Marsh
Contributing Writer

For the last four decades one man has touched the lives of thousands of students, educated virtually every person on the Pennsylvania School Board, seen university presidents come and go and chronicled the University's history while quietly learning, teaching and advising in the education department.

His name is Russell Dennis, professor of education and University historian.

Dennis has been on campus since before his career. He was a member of the class of 1964 and graduated from the University with a Bachelor of Arts degree in history.

"I originally had decided to go on and do graduate work in history, but I changed my plans and decided that I didn't particularly want to do graduate work in history right after I graduated with my bachelors degree," Dennis said, "so I came back to Bucknell with the intention of becoming certified to teach secondary education in history and social studies."

After a teaching internship program with the Milton Public School system funded by a Ford Foundation grant, Dennis was offered a research assistantship in the University's department of education. He stayed on and completed his Masters degree program here.

Rather than pursue a history profession, Dennis decided to teach.

"In the 1960s, there was an awful lot of optimism in terms of both national and social programs and various private philanthropic programs in using education and schools as a way of bringing about change in the social order, as a way of both combating racial problems, racial segregation," Dennis said.

He explained how this reasoning influenced his career decision.

"That's what really pushed me in the direction of becoming involved in education, because I saw it as a mechanism for social change. I believe that schools can really do an awful lot to provide upward social mobility for individuals ... [education] also can bring about solutions to an awful lot of social problems like segregation and poverty," Dennis said.

He chose to teach in the education department over history for similar reasons.

"I was more interested in being involved in preparing people who could go out and serve as change agents within society," Dennis said. "I think I was much more drawn to education in that sense than history because of the fact that I saw a mechanism for having the impact on society that history would not have had."

Over the years, he certainly has had an impact.

"He has taught the majority of superintendents in Pennsylvania," said Lynn Hoffman, associate professor of education and acting chair of the education department.

Dennis stands out for a number of reasons. He is the longest-standing professor in the education department, and his experience makes him invaluable to the other professors. "We'd never make a decision without hearing what he has to say," Hoffman said.

The other professors have a deep respect for him and his years.

"He's not just the department's historian, he is the University's historian," Hoffman said. "He knows everything about Bucknell's history: how it evolved, how it developed, how the buildings came about."

The university truly is a part of him.

"He's the repository of Bucknell's past," Hoffman said. "He has a deep love and affection for Bucknell."

It is easy to see why.

"My father worked for Bucknell, my mother worked for Bucknell, I got my Bachelors degree from Bucknell," Dennis said.

This family history and being a lifelong resident of Lewisburg made the decision to teach here easy.

"I was offered a position at Bucknell while I was still doing graduate work at the University of Illinois," Dennis said. "I saw it as a chance to return home."

In his 38th year as a professor of education, Dennis has seen a lot of the history he teaches in his Capstone course "Bucknell of Yesteryear and Today."

This is a cross-disciplinary class "which takes a look at Bucknell University from its founding year in 1846 to the present time and attempts to look at different historical periods, seeing the continuity and change and how over the years the education offered by the institution has maintained a central purpose but has also changed to accommodate with the times," Dennis said.

Other courses he teaches include Social Foundations of Education; the Laws, the Courts and the Public Schools, a foundation seminar; Higher Education in the United States; and an evening course in the philosophy of education.

> "He's not just the department's historian, he is the University's historian. He knows everything about Bucknell's history: how it evolved, how it developed, how the buildings came about."
>
> —Lynn Hoffman, associate professor of education*

It is his manner in the classroom that has endeared him to many students.

"I love his personality through what I've seen as a student of his education class," Amora Foy '10 said. "I feel like he's really passionate about showing us what he's trying to teach. He doesn't just present us with a bunch of facts. He discusses the material in a way in which he encourages us to analyze it."

Dennis describes his teaching style as "centered mostly on getting people to discuss particular issues and think about particular issues within the context of the discipline."

"My style is what could be called lecture-discussion: presenting information to individuals so that they have a basis upon which to think about particular types of issues," Dennis said.

In class, Dennis has two distinct goals.

"I believe in both ... the mastery of a certain type of content which is necessary in order to form an informed judgment but also forming that judgment and sharing it with others and talking about it in a class room situation," Dennis said.

"He connects with the students well because he engages the students' ideas," Foy said. "He reminded me of my grandfather – I just get a sense of caring from him to see people do well."

After over 40 years in education, Dennis is thinking about retirement, probably in the next two or three years. One of his students was disappointed to hear of his planned retirement.

"Professor Dennis' presence is indispensable to the education department," Kathleen Conti '08 said. "He is incredibly knowledgeable and passionate about everything he teaches, and his lectures are always energetic."

Foy also shared her feelings on Dennis' future retirement.

"Being that I'm a freshman and I'm already attached to him as a professor, I would say that he will be really missed at Bucknell," Foy said. "I would hope that he doesn't leave before I graduate because I was interested in looking to him for assistance in pursuing education as a major. He just seems like a really wonderful person."

At the end of the day, Dennis feels the satisfaction makes all the years worthwhile. "[What] made me feel really rewarded is to hear from someone that either directly or indirectly said ... that I had some sort of effect on them which they later came to appreciate and affect in a positive way," Dennis said.

"You've had them in class and they're out in the world and they reflect upon their life ... and they think that something that you did really had a meaningful effect upon them. ... It means that you've really done something that's been worthwhile," Dennis said.

Tell us your darkest secrets

www.postsecret.com

Tell us anything.
Funny, bitter, sexy, depressing.
Something only you know.
This is your chance to get it all off your chest.
Design a postcard, write a secret on it, and send it in.
Entries will be published at the end of the semester.

MAIL

Send your secret anonymously to:
The Bucknellian
C-3952

BOSTON UNIVERSITY
INTERNATIONAL PROGRAMS

This is B.U.
This could be you.

AUSTRALIA
BELIZE
ECUADOR
ENGLAND
FRANCE
GERMANY
IRELAND
ISRAEL
ITALY
MEXICO
NEW ZEALAND
NIGER
SPAIN
SWITZERLAND
U.S.A.

INTERNSHIPS
LANGUAGE
LIBERAL ARTS
SCIENCE
ENGINEERING

www.bu.edu/abroad
Financial aid is available

BOSTON UNIVERSITY
INTERNATIONAL PROGRAMS
232 Bay State Road
Boston, MA 02215
617-353-9888
abroad@bu.edu

A fetching time with therapy dogs

By Genna Jerrard
Contributing Writer

If you are experiencing separation anxiety from a pet left at home, love playing with animals or are simply looking for a well-deserved study break, you need not have looked further than Coleman Hall on Monday, where 14 friendly dogs mixed and mingled with the University community.

I was excited about the dogs' visit myself, as I left behind my 8-year-old yellow lab when I left for college.

It was hard to think that I would be leaving her for such a long time. My brother even tried to put her on the phone a few times to make me feel better when I called home, although that never worked well.

When I heard about the therapy dogs coming I could not wait to see them.

Before I reached the Academic Quad I heard barking, laughter and conversation as people meandered through the crowd, stopping to pet and play with the dogs on their way. There was Frisbee-throwing and dog racing; even some doggy tricks were performed, which the owners took pride in showing to the public.

I watched as one golden retriever patiently balanced a biscuit on his nose as he waited for his owner's signal to finally eat it.

I had to watch and laugh because I knew my dog would never be that cooperative when it comes to food. She would have eaten it quickly, having no concern for whether she went for the biscuit or my finger.

As I watched the people interact with the dogs, I spoke with some of the owners about their experiences with Therapy Dogs International (TDI), the volunteer organization the dogs are from.

I was first attracted to a pair of adorable cocker spaniel-King Charles spaniel mixes, who attracted a large crowd of admiring students. I must say their names, Jack and Turner (in honor of "Pirates of the Caribbean"), were even more adorable.

Sally Grottini, the owner of a Newfoundland who looked like a small and cuddly bear, explained how her dog was saved from a near-death experience.

Since then, Grottini said, "I have volunteered my time to give back to the hospital and community."

Some may have been turned off by this dog's gargantuan appearance, but she insisted that Chance was the sweetest dog ever.

She exclaimed proudly that he was named the mascot for the local animal response team, and had once saved a nest of baby rabbits by picking them up in his mouth and individually taking them back to the house where she cared for them.

I also visited a rather energetic golden retriever named Katie' Do whose owner, Ginny Pentz, explained the process of becoming a member of the organization. She said all the dogs must pass a series of training classes and be people-oriented and friendly.

She found that people respond quite well to the dogs. Even at the nursing home, Pentz said, "many people who might have been unresponsive to other forms of therapy treatment instantly light up when the dogs arrive."

As far as college campuses go, Pentz said she really enjoys visiting the University because "so many of the students have either left a pet behind or are too stressed out from tests and homework. Especially around exam time when people are most feeling the brunt of academic pressure, I find that the dogs' presence works wonders."

Tracy Shaynak, who helped bring the dogs to campus, agreed.

"I think the animals play an important role in many peoples' lives, and I am pleased that this event is one which continues to receive support, both from our students and from the University," Shaynak said.

In her e-mail to the student body she announced that it is clinically proven that interaction with animals lowers blood pressure, stress levels and emotional uneasiness.

Many people have already felt the benefits of interacting with animals, especially dogs, and I would encourage you to do the same.

The dogs are scheduled to be back on campus Nov. 6 and Dec. 4, so if you missed their visit on Monday, plan to be there.

It is the perfect way to take a break and relax with some furry friends and as Elaine Smith, the founder of TDI, said, "paws a little for love!"

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Students spend some quality time with "man's best friend" at Coleman Hall on Monday. The therapy dogs came to help relieve stress and homesickness students often experience.

From translation theory to cell phone displays

Students spend their summer at the University to research with faculty

By Liza Banhalmi
Contributing Writer

It may have been easy for some to leave the University's campus immediately after spring semester, but others just could not bear to get away. While some people spent their summers vacationing or just relaxing at home a handful of students stayed on campus doing research.

"It was easy to stay here during the summer because I love the campus and it's very difficult to leave for so long over the summer," Cara Jellison '08 said.

As an accounting and chemistry major, Jellison did research in order to get more involved in the chemistry department. In the fall of 2005 her organic chemistry professor told Jellison about his research opportunities and asked her to stay to do research during the summer.

The title of the project was "Sequential Radical and Anionic Polymerization Leading to Two Different Polymer Chains Grown From a Single Carbon: Synthesis of Fluorenyl Macromonomers," which Jellison simplified.

"I tried to grow two different polymer arms off a fluorene unit and eventually a polyfluorene unit," Jellison said.

Polyfluorene is a substance commonly used for display purposes in things like cell phones. She did analysis using techniques such as a nuclear magnetic resonance, or using a "big magnet," and gel permeation chromatography, which tells the molecular mass of a polymer.

Besides doing research, Jellison also gave campus and science faculty tours through the admissions department. In her free time she ran and cycled.

Eric Tillman, assistant professor of chemistry, and a few other students are continuing the project. They hope a publication will come out of it soon.

Nick Kupensky '07 did research in a fairly uncommon area: English. He looked at "The Lives of the English Poets," "A Dictionary of the English Language" and various essays, all written by Samuel Johnson, a writer from the 18th century.

Kupensky said he "looked at the writings as acts of translation" and in the perspective of translation theory. Translation, in this sense, can also be thought of as interpretation. Kupensky looked at Johnson's writing and its translational nature and was concerned with understanding – how one person understands another and what gets in the way.

> "Research is one of the most rejuvenating things someone can do at Bucknell. You decide everything; you determine all the rules."
>
> —Nick Kupensky '07*

This concerned not only a misunderstanding between two people but also what gets in the way of understanding writing. He looked at the language of Johnson and how people tried to understand it but did not, and related this all to translation theory.

Kupensky met once a week with his research advisor, Professor of English Greg Clingham. Clingham is one of the world authorities on Samuel Johnson and has published works on translation and translation theory.

Despite only meeting with his advisor once a week, Kupensky was still hard at work developing translation theory using Johnson's work.

"I'm bringing things together that haven't been brought together," Kupensky said.

As a product of his research over the summer, Kupensky wrote an essay on his work, "speaking in the vernacular of a person in translation theory." Originally, Kupensky wanted to publish his work but thought it would be more useful if he integrated it into other research. He hopes to turn his work into a book on translation theory in graduate school.

Both Jellison and Kupensky are advocates of summer research at the University.

"I would definitely recommend underclassmen to take advantages of all of the research opportunities," Jellison said. "A lot of the projects available allow students to do things at the undergraduate level that a lot of other schools do not allow, like have a student's name on a publication as an author. Through research, you can learn a lot more about the field of study; plus, it can potentially look great on a resume if you do a good job."

"Research is one of the most rejuvenating things someone can do at Bucknell," Kupensky said. "You decide everything; you determine all the rules. You can set academics to the rhythms of your everyday life. You don't have to trudge on other people's schedules."

It is easy for anyone to get involved in research. Just talk to a professor, or if you have an idea yourself, map it out, present it to the appropriate professor, and you are on your way.

Do you know a student or professor worth writing about?

Write for Features!

E-mail jjf018@

Mer Cares

Dear Meredith:

I live in a double so I have a roommate. My roommate is a smart, interesting and fairly attractive guy. The thing is he is really shy. He does not go out much and even when he does, he does not talk to a lot of people.

As you can imagine, he is in the room a lot. This is a problem because my girlfriend and I really enjoy our "alone time." I think it would be great if he could find a nice girl for several reasons.

First of all, he would probably be a lot more relaxed. Secondly, it might get him out of the room more often, which would give my girlfriend and I more time to ourselves. Do you have any advice for a shy guy to meet a nice girl?

—Double Trouble

Dear Double Trouble:

It sounds like you are in a bit of a pickle to say the least. Just be glad you do not live in a triple.

I believe we can fix this problem of yours. It is a common problem – the roommate who will not ever leave and does not get the hint when your significant other comes over. Every now and then you run into the rare few that hole up in their room and are too shy to come outside of their isolated world.

What your friend needs to do is get outside of the room. You can help by bringing him into the great college life that surrounds his classes. Bring him and your girlfriend to an event where there will be both guys and girls—maybe even some of your girlfriend's close friends.

Knowing familiar faces will allow him to be more comfortable and more confident when talking to other people. Of course, you cannot just let him talk to you the whole time. Force him to interact with other people and with girls that you already know by talking up some of the people.

It will make him either 1) come over and try to be a part of the conversation, if not for trying to be social but rather for not looking like an outcast, or 2) try to talk to a different group of people than you or your girlfriend are talking to because he will want to be a part of social interaction. Nobody wants to just stand around looking ridiculous all by himself.

This can teach your roommate how to begin to interact with girls in the same social situation as guys so he feels comfortable. If he seems really shy, introduce him to a few girls at the event and bring up a common subject, like the parties going on that weekend.

As the girls start talking to you and your roommate about what you two plan on doing that weekend, make your roommate be a part of the conversation by saying "What do you think ____?" or "____ loves the funnel cake at Fall Fest. Right, ____?".

I guarantee if the girls ask your roommate what his plans are and if he says he will be studying all weekend (his version of sitting around and occupying your room), the girls will try to pull him in by inviting him to go to a party or hang out in someone's room.

If he seems hesitant at first, you may want to go with him the first time just to help him adjust, and then maybe leave later on in the night as your roommate starts to get more into being around people.

You need to show your roommate how to make conversation with girls and he will mimic you once he sees how you do it. He will feel more confident doing it your way than trying to find his own way to talk to a girl.

Laugh, smile and make jokes with the girls and other people at the event to show him "how it's done." It is part of human nature—you subconsciously mimic the actions of those you admire because you want the same attention they have.

If you need backup, you can always have a book just "lying around" on his bed such as "The Shy Guy's Guide to Dating," which is available at www.amazon.com. It is only a matter of time, I promise.

Try to get your roommate to join clubs with you and go play on co-ed sports teams and eventually he will realize what he is missing. If he is afraid of rejection he needs to come to terms and understand that yes, it will happen and yes, it will most likely happen many times over the course of his lifetime.

But that is life, and rejection, while painful, teaches the "rejectee" what he needs to fix in his approach and suaveness.

While it might seem like women want the confident guy who thinks he is God's gift to womankind, many ladies prefer the quiet guy that listens more than he speaks—and thinks twice before speaking at all.

Shyness can be attractive, but of course too much of anything is never good. Perhaps your roommate is the shy guy who always sits at the back of the class or the timid type who only speaks when spoken to.

The shy guy never really got the girl in high school—it was the jock who was crowned homecoming king. But once the shy guys mature and start to interact with people, women are drawn to them.

The appeal of a shy gentleman could lend itself to the intrigue he possesses; the less he says about himself, the more mysterious he seems. Just wait it out or hurry the process along by putting him in social situations where he must interact with girls.

Women like the challenge of cracking open the reserved guy. We know there is a wild animal lurking inside that innocent physique, and we want to be his "tamer." It is common for women to take pride in successfully breaking a guy out of his shell and making him wild for her eyes only.

Shyness can also come across as modesty, as the bashful guy tends to lay low in a crowd and avoids being the center of attention. Shyness can be "adorable" and appealing to the opposite sex up to a certain extent of course.

Besides the ladies who are jerk magnets, most women do not want an overconfident, cocky man when it comes to a serious relationship in college, nor do they want a man they have to take care of. But if shy men are intriguing, how could they not be all they are cracked up to be?

Just like I am sure your roommate is slightly envious of the care and time and attention you give to your girlfriend, I am sure your roommate just needs to be taught how to talk to girls. Show him a bit of confidence and self esteem and he can get a harem in a short amount of time. Girls love guys with intelligence and a sense of humor, and the attractiveness part does not hurt either.

If not in college, when will he learn–once he gets out into the real world? You need to show him, guide him and teach him the ways. Good luck and let me know how it all turns out!

Love, Mer

Please send questions regarding any topic to marc001@bucknell.edu with subject line reading "advice" or you may send a letter via campus mail to box number C1099. I look forward to hearing from you!

Central PA dining in style

Handpicked local restaurants for all occasions, including families, dates and all your college friends

FOR YOUR FRIENDS

Victoria House

- in the process of adding a pub to appeal to younger crowd
- friendly staff
- appealing presentation of food
- sealed envelope at end with sur prise inside

By Ali Burack
Contributing Writer

There are few restaurants in Lewisburg offering "fine dining." After dining at the Victoria House over the weekend, I have placed this restaurant at the top of that list.

I was impressed with both the food and the ambience of this charming restaurant.

Before going to the restaurant, I looked at a user review on the restaurant's Web site www.eatingpa.com, which stated, "The [Victoria House] offers a unique gourmet dining experience that will melt away the day's anxieties and place your taste buds in the magical realm of culinary ecstasy."

I had high expectations coming from New York City, where multiple restaurants that qualify as fine dining are located within a one-mile radius.

I arrived at the restaurant for my reservation, gave my name and was greeted with a warm welcome.

The crowd within the restaurant consisted of families and older couples wearing casual to slightly dressy attire.

There was noticeable construction in progress at the restaurant.

Our waitress, a University student, said the Victoria House is in the process of building a pub. The goal of the establishment is to attract a more youthful crowd, and they hope to accomplish this with the addition.

The hope for the future is more University students will dine at both the restaurant and pub, which is described as a "cozy little English-style pub where friends gather to unwind from the day, or play a game of darts over a pint" according to www.thevictoriahouse.net.

The Victoria House aims to have the pub open to the public in early November.

The waitress was very friendly and more than willing to answer my questions.

After digesting the information about the restaurant, I was hungry and more than ready to order.

The menu has a variety of selections including appetizers ranging from shrimp cocktail to soups and salads. Entrées include filet mignon, salmon, pasta, chicken and more.

Another feature of the restaurant is a tantalizing dessert tray. After placing our order we were served a complementary appetizer.

Our dinner was brought out and each plate's presentation was very lovely. The lobster bisque soup was garnished with a ring of goldfish around the bowl. I was very impressed by this and enjoyed my meal thoroughly.

My dining companion, Courtney Carter '08, agreed.

"[The Victoria House] is a great place to go when you just can't stand eating in the Caf or the Bison," Carter said. "The food is good and you leave full. [It is] very charming."

A little surprise awaited us when we finished our meals and were presented with the check. It was a sealed red envelope. I was told if you come back to the restaurant before the date written on the envelope and bring it back unopened, you will be rewarded with a $50 gift certificate, a $10 discount to your meal, a free dessert of your choice or a free appetizer of your choice. Unable to determine my prize, I believe my curiosity will force me to dine at the restaurant again in the near future.

Wanting to learn more about this restaurant, I looked up the Web site conveniently located on my red envelope. I discovered there are six seating areas and the restaurant is open for lunch Tuesday to Friday and dinner Wednesday to Saturday. There is also a delivery and take-out service.

I highly recommend the Victoria House. I polled some people in the University community who have dined there before to see what they thought about the restaurant.

"I was pleased to be transported by the atmosphere to a place so different from Bucknell as I was served a meal unparallel to others I have had in the area," Cordy Elkins '08 said.

La Primavera

- relaxing, calm atmosphere
- separate room for large social gatherings
- spacious dining room, so no reservations necessary
- Quality service and food

FOR YOUR FAMILY

By Deidre Carlin
Writer

When University students get tired of calling Original Italian Pizza, Dominoes and Papa Johns to get "Italian cuisine" delivered to their door, they often frequent La Primavera on Route 45.

La Primavera has become a staple in the Lewisburg community since it opened its doors on October 31, 2000. Vito and Salvatore Mazzamuto initially opened the restaurant and still serve as its proprietors today. The Mazzamutos are extremely proud of their establishment and state on their Web site www.laprimaverarist.com that "La Primavera Restaurant is our dream and represents the culmination of our years of experience in preparing the finest Italian recipes for your enjoyment."

One of the restaurant's downsides is that it is not within walking distance of campus. Because of this, it may take a few months for first-years to discover the restaurant. Once students find upper-class friends or bring their cars sophomore year, they find it much more accessible.

Students often like to get away and extend themselves beyond the typical group of restaurants near campus. Kaitlin Carleton '07 said that she enjoys La Primavera because "[she] likes to get away from the rest of the places on Market Street."

La Primavera also offers diners a unique array of food, as it is not a chain restaurant like Applebee's and Damons.

The atmosphere of La Primavera is calm and relaxing; the entrance to the restaurant is unlike anything that students are used to, as it has a fish tank and waterfall statues.

The restaurant is rather spacious and even has a separate event room where large gatherings can take place. Many of those involved in Greek life are quite familiar with La Primavera, as sororities and fraternities often host their formals there.

The restaurant's spacious nature usually makes reservations unnecessary.

"It's good because they have a large area so if you have your whole family you can fit," Stephen Peters '07 said.

Unlike many other upscale Lewisburg restaurants, one can decide to go to La Primavera at the spur of the moment. If there is a big event going on around campus or in Lewisburg, most would suggest that you call ahead.

La Primavera features all Italian cuisine. Menu items range from Fettucini Alfredo to fish and veal. Guests of age can choose from a great wine list and dessert is also offered. Prices for dinner range from about $15-$25 per entrée, so it is definitely not an inexpensive place to eat.

When Brad Bisignano '07 heard the price of La Primavera, he responded by saying that "it's definitely a third date restaurant." Some would say that the higher prices are worth paying as diners get a fair amount of food for their money.

Meals at La Primavera start with a delicious bread basket served with butter. Most entrées come with a salad, which serves as a nice addition to a meal filled with carbs.

After the salad comes the main entrée. The entrées are rather large and usually there is enough left over to take some home. This makes the slightly higher prices more difficult to swallow.

Most would agree that La Primavera is a good up-scale restaurant, but if you are just looking for some Italian cuisine, there are several other restaurants in the area that can satisfy your needs at a cheaper price.

At La Primavera you are definitely paying for ambiance, atmosphere and quality. If you are looking for a great meal off campus, I suggest that you give it a try yourself. La Primavera is open for lunch and dinner each day of the week except Mondays.

FOR YOUR DATE

Mikes @ 512

- the inside provides a vacation reminiscent atmosphere
- affable service
- unique cooking methods using different woods
- ideal for an intimate dinner experience

By Lily Beauvilliers
Arts & Entertainment Editor

Mike's @ 512, a fascinating restaurant located at 512 Market Street, fails by fast food standards, but its ambiance, interest and great flavor more than make up for the length of a meal.

A pink pig grill outside of the restaurant serves as the most visible indicator that you have reached Mike's. I had the good luck to talk to Mike himself, an ambitious, enthusiastic man who has been working with restaurants since the age of 19. He told me that the pig grill is under seige due to zoning standards and may have to be removed—although he has a petition to save the pig.

The restaurant's small size is supplemented by a patio on its right but the most compelling features are located inside.

Inside Mike's, the pig theme continues, with pig plushies, pig paintings and even a pig penny bank. The atmosphere avoids country bumpkin (like the Country Cupboard) or wholesale pork fanatic. The rough wood-framed, wire screen door, the three fountains and additional decorations of relaxation (golf paraphernalia and light, fringy curtains) create an environment almost like a vacation.

"Take pleasure in your time here," Mike says in the menu. And boy, does he make it easy to do.

All the atmosphere in the world cannot help a restaurant if it is wildly expensive or inconvenient. Mike's takes care of the first problem with options like delivery, take-out and a Web site: www.mikes512.com.

The second is slightly harder to overcome. A self-proclaimed "distinctive eatery," the Mike's dinner menu is full of interesting—but somewhat pricey—items. The cheapest entrée is $14.50; perfect for a special date or small party, but not so good for the average college student's wallet.

Lunch is a more affordable alternative, with salads starting at five dollars and sandwiches at eight dollars—comparable to the Bison's On-the-Go sandwiches.

But the real beauty of Mike's is the sit-down dinner experience: enjoying a unique, delicious platter in the relaxing dining room.

My dinner began with a basket of corn bread, a lighter, sweeter alternative to the heavy Italian rolls normally served at restaurants.

The rough wood-framed, wire screen door, the three fountains and additional decorations of relaxation (golf paraphernalia and light, fringy curtains) create an environment almost like a vacation.

My personal foray into Mike's menu began with an appetizer, the potato skins. Only three skins were served (leaving me wondering what happened to that extra half of potato), but they were exceptionally hearty, with a thick layer of potato left on them and covered generously with melted mozzarella.

I learned another charm of Mike's while ordering the potato skins: incredibly affable service.

A friend who came with me is a vegetarian, and thus could not eat the skins with the chili normally served on them. Our waitress, Caroline Connolley, agreed to a simple alternative and brought out a separate bowl of chili.

The chili, like the potato skins, was practically filling enough for a meal. Sweeter and significantly less spicy than the chili I am used to, it was filling and obviously homemade.

Flourishes like bread and appetizers are delicious, but good entrées are vital to any menu. Mike's particularly specializes in "the smooth & hearty flavors of slow-smoked food," according to the Web site. Smoking food supposedly seals in juices and adds a smoky flavor to the food.

On the front of the menu the kinds of flavors one can expect from different woods are listed, including pecan, which is "rich and mild," and alder, which tastes like the "mellow west coast."

I had already chosen the N.Y. Strip steak smoked with mesquite, "the true taste of Texas," when I ordered my appetizer. With each entrée comes two sides, so I picked the "512" baked beans and Yukon gold mashed potatoes.

Slow-smoking takes time, but the smells alone are worth it. While awaiting my steak, my appetite increased threefold as the rich, smoky scents filled the dining hall.

I was a little disappointed with how well-done my steak was (I had asked for it as rare as possible, although in this age of mad cow disease rare is often too dangerous to risk), but it was still tender and just as flavorful as the menu promised. The mashed potatoes, seasoned with salt, pepper and a secret ingredient, were also delectable. The baked beans were sweet and as filling as the chili, with generous chunks of bacon and pale, not brown, beans.

Time restrictions required that I leave before dessert, but I was sorry to depart from such a tranquil haven.

I personally recommend Mike's to anyone looking for a relaxing, private dinner, perhaps with a date or a group of friends. But Mike's has other uses as well.

Joel Molina, a resident of Lewisburg, came to Mike's for six take-out hickory wings.

"The wings here are bangin'!" Molina said. "They have a great flavor and they're meaty. The blueberry barbecue are my favorite."

Mike told me himself that he recommends the restaurant to anyone—in his words, "families, flip-flops and suits are all welcome."

"Bucknell and the local community have been very supportive. Last year we were filled on graduation Saturday, and we already have reservations for this year's graduation."

In whatever capacity, I highly recommend you try Mike's at least once during your college career.

The Bucknellian

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

September 29, 2006

Volume 138, Number 5 | Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue | www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Growing up in the 90's

Relive a little bit of your past with this reminder of the trends we grew up with

See page A10

Weis fellow examines inspiration

By Genna Jerrard
Contributing Writer

Creativity can bloom in childhood and persevere despite rejection, said prominent writer Joyce Carol Oates addressing the campus and local community Tuesday evening.

President Brian C. Mitchell and Harriet Pollack, associate professor of English, were joined by many in the community to welcome Joyce Carol Oates as the 2006 Janet Weis Fellow in Contemporary Letters.

Weis herself attended the lecture and was greeted warmly by audience members as the speakers acknowledged both her and Oates' scholarly achievements.

Before Oates made her way to the podium, Pollack listed the multiplicity and diversity of the author's work ranging from plays to poetry and short stories to novels. She noted how Oates' style as a writer is revealed through her attention to U.S. families, as well as through her use of violence—a symbol which she incorporates into much of her work.

Quoting Oates, Pollack said, "a serious writer takes witness" to criticisms of his or her own work and artistically portrays real life in his or her writing.

Following what Oates called a "gracious introduction," she took the podium, entering a light-hearted discussion of her childhood.

Speaking about the origins of creativity in childhood, she began by reading a brief poem entitled "O Crayola!", dedicated to her colleague John Updike. Idealizing the carefree life of

See OATES page A3

Kanye drops in for Fall Concert

Reuters Photo Archive

Six-time Grammy winner Kanye West will perform at Sojka Pavilion on Oct. 21. Kanye is famous for his No. 1 hit "Gold digger." Tickets for the concert will go on sale on Oct. 2 at noon.

Student Health Services warns against mumps outbreak

By Sarah Nochenson
Contributing Writer

Over 2,500 cases of mumps, a viral infection, have been reported, mainly among college students 18-25 years of age since December 2005. The first outbreak occurred in Iowa and spread to at least 11 other states, including Pennsylvania.

Mumps is often characterized by symptoms including swelling of the salivary glands, fever, headache, earache, sore throat, pain when swallowing, tiredness, aching muscles, poor appetite and vomiting according to webmd.com.

The disease spreads through contact with bodily fluids, and it takes 16-18 days for symptoms to appear. There is an increased risk of transmission at colleges and universities due to the close living conditions and the geographically diverse mix of students.

"It is critically important to decrease the risk of mumps among the students and others in the communities in which they reside," said the Center for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) and the American College Health Association (ACHA) in a letter to all U.S. residential colleges and Universities.

The mumps outbreak has become an area of concern for health professionals in educational institutions, and there has been an increased emphasis on controlling and containing the disease.

Don Stechschulte, Jr., director of Student Health Services, assured that the University is taking a very active stance against mumps.

In the summer months, each student's records were reviewed to ensure that two doses of the mumps, measles and rubella Vaccine were given. Until recently, only one dose was required for admission to the University, as was the case at many similar institutions. In light of recent events, the CDC changed its policy and now strongly recommends that colleges and universities require documentation of two doses before allowing matriculation.

"What the outbreak

See MUMPS page A3

Baruch gives insight on Israeli conflict

By Ahmed Kodouda
Contributing Writer

The recent conflict in Lebanon was between Israel and Hezbollah, not the Lebanese government, Tomer Baruch said in a speech on Sunday in the Gallery Theater.

Baruch, an Israeli youth, focused on the recent conflict in relation to the previous war and occupation in southern Lebanon. He also spoke about the media's reaction to the war.

Baruch was invited to campus as part of Israel Week which took place from Sept. 20-25. Baruch, whose parents were born in Israel and whose two grandparents were Holocaust survivors, finished his compulsory military service in the Israeli Defense Force.

"I came with Hillel, for the Jewish students," Baruch said. "I believe that there is a connection between the Jewish students and Israel. It is important for the Jewish people to know what is going on in Israel. Because, in a way it is their country too."

Aided by Google Earth and a projector, he helped the audience visualize the physical and political layout of his country. He recapped the events leading up to the war with Hezbollah.

On June 25, 2006 Palestinians kidnapped Gilad Shalit, a corporal in the Israeli Defense Force (IDF) in retaliation for the Israeli bombing of a Palestinian family on a Gaza beach.

He went on to speak about two IDF reservists who were by kidnapped Hezbollah in a cross-border raid on July 25, 2006. That same day, IDF began a major offensive that destroyed Beirut International

See ISRAEL page A4

Constitutional historian joins panel about slavery

By Wes Kinter
Contributing Writer

The issue of slavery has always been prominent in the history of the Constitution, historian Paul Finkelman said in a discussion entitled "A Covenant With Death: Understanding the Proslavery Constitution" on Wednesday in the Elaine Langone Center Forum.

He was joined by Provost Mary DeCredico and Leslie Patrick, associate professor of history.

Part of the University's recognition of Constitution Day, the public event focused on establishing important connections between the history and impact of slavery in the United States and the Constitution.

President Brian C. Mitchell commenced the event welcoming the audience and introducing the panel before Finkelman began his lecture.

"They may have expected something celebratory, but what they will get is analysis and understanding of this important historical document," Finkelman said regarding Constitution Day.

"From day one of the Constitutional Convention to the day the document was signed in 1787, the subject of slavery was either in the foreground or the background of debate," Finkelman said. "Slavery was always there."

Finkelman spoke about the influences of wealthy landowners in the South, describing the importance of congressional representation based on the population of each state and the shaping of the Constitution to ensure the bastion of slavery.

Finkelman cited three ways slavery was protected in the Constitution: creating a government of limited power, the intricate amendment process and the election of the president.

"So the only way slavery could be ended on a national level was with a Constitutional amendment, which was incredibly difficult to attain," Finkelman said.

DeCredico presented her lecture following Finkelman's speech, continuing to speak on the presence of slavery in the history of the Constitution.

"As the ratification of the 13th Amendment abolished slavery in the United States," DeCredico said, "the idea was not realized until the advent of the Second Reconstruction in the 1950s."

Following DeCredico's

See PANEL page A2

Lewis Black to perform at Homecoming

Comedian Lewis Black, a frequent guest on the Daily Show, will perform on the Sojka lawn on Friday, Oct. 6 at 7 p.m. This outdoor extravaganza will include food, campfires and performances by a capella groups. Read more about Black in next week's issue.

INSIDE THIS ISSUE

OPINIONS
Vandalism on campus shocks students and professors.

A6

NEWS
Joyce Carol Oates encourages struggling writers after accepting award.
A3

FEATURES
Damon's offers a great atmosphere for sports and steak lovers alike.
A9

SPORTS
Men's water polo places fourth at ECAC championship.
B1

Public Safety Log

Wednesday, September 20

VEHICLE ACCIDENT—Physical plant: Employee struck a parked vehicle causing minor damage.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Chi Phi Parking Lot: Student reports that food had been thrown on her vehicle.

Thursday, September 21

ALARM FIRE—The Mods: Alarm caused by cooking on the right side of the Mod.

ALARM- INTRUSION—Swartz Hall: Cause: Unknown.

DISORDERLY CONDUCT—Roberts Hall: Student reported a suspicious male at the Writing Center.

ALARM-FIRE—Vidinghoff: Alarm caused by cooking.

ALARM-FIRE—Roberts Hall: Alarm caused by cooking.

BURGLARY—Swartz Hall: Laptop Computer taken from Room.

Friday, September 22

ALCOHOL VIOLATION—McDonnell Hall: Intoxicated male causing a Disturbance.

PARTY CHECK—LCA: Unauthorized Party.

Saturday, September 23

ALARM-INTRUSION—Langone Center: Cause: Unknown.

ALARM-FIRE—Cause: Unknown.

T.W.F.E—64 University Ave: Pull Station on 2nd Floor stairwell activated

Sunday, September 24

ALARM-FIRE—The Mods: Unknown Cause.

CRIMINAL TRESPASS—Library: Intrusion Alarm activated by persons who had entered the Library through the tunnel entrance.

ALARM-FIRE—The Mods: Cooking

Monday, September 25

ALARM-FIRE—The Mods: Cause: Steam from the shower.

Tuesday, September 26

CRIMINAL TRESPASS—Zellers Lounge: Three individuals skateboarding on private property, escorted off campus.

FIRE-ALARM—Vedder Hall: Fire alarm activation caused by a student burning food.

PANEL From page A1

presentation, Patrick discussed the local significance of slavery and black rights at the University. She spoke about Charles Bell, a black man who escaped slavery by traveling to Canada. He was later freely employed at the University in 1867 before retiring with pension in 1905.

"So we ask the question: did the Constitution succeed? Did Bucknell succeed?" Patrick said concerning the success of Bell. "I don't know, I leave that up to you."

The lectures were followed by a brief question-and-answer session. Members of the audience asked questions to the panel, allowing the speakers to elaborate on the nature of the Constitution and slavery.

Students enjoyed the lectures.

"Not only was Dr. Finkelman's lecture intellectual and interesting, but the speeches by Provost Mary DeCredico and Professor Patrick were intriguing as well," Alessandro Zanelli '07 said.

Robertoa Reed '07 expressed similar sentiments.

"It was interesting to listen to the speakers discuss the connections between slavery and the shaping of the Constitution," Reed said. "They confirmed and elaborated on ideas we already knew."

Zanelli was disappointed with the student turnout.

"I just wish there would have been more students attending," Zanelli said. "They are hosting these lectures for us; that's the point."

Riding on the Wave Poetry Bus

Courtesy of Poetrybus.com

The Wave Poetry Bus with approximately 100 artists visits the University in a co-sponsored presentation of the Stadler Center for Poetry. Five poets and eight University students read their selections during this event.

By Ashley Elizabeth Hook and Wes Kinter
Contributing Writers

The Stadler Center for Poetry co-sponsored a presentation on Sept. 21 by the Wave Books Poetry Bus, which is visiting 50 cities in 50 days.

The bus, a collection of approximately 100 literary artists, visited the University in a nationwide tour promoted by the Wave Books corporation located in Seattle, Wash.

"Based in Seattle, Wave is an independent publishing house that's all about newness and risk and West Coast brio," said Jeff Gordinier, a journalist with the tour, "and the Poetry Bus Tour is ready to give those principles a high-octane road test."

Shara McCallum, director of the Stadler Center for Poetry and assistant professor of English, felt this group's program was especially suitable for the University's literary community.

"Stadler's mission to bring wide variety and diversity was echoed in the Wave Book event," McCallum said.

The project is headed by two editors of Wave Books, Matthew Zapruder and Joshua Beckman, who read with numerous other published and unpublished writers at the University event. One such writer is the 1994-95 University poet-in-residence Bruce Smith.

According to www.poetry-bus.com, "Bruce Smith is the author of five books of poems … His fourth book, 'The Other Lover,' was a finalist for both the National Book Award and the Pulitzer Prize."

His poems and essays have also appeared in numerous publications including The Nation, The American Poetry Review, Newsday and the Harvard Review.

The tour has already visited an array of cities in the United States, ranging from Denver, Colo., Chicago, Ill., Minneapolis, Minn., and Salt Lake City, Utah. The bus is headed north to Buffalo, N.Y., and will follow with a tour through Canada.

"The bus tour does not just bring poetry to academic venues," said University Stadler Fellow Betsy Wheeler, "but to public settings like the Space Needle, the Walker Arts Center and elementary schools."

Wheeler's poetry has appeared or is forthcoming in numerous publications, including the Brooklyn Review, The Journal and Painted Bride Quarterly. She "hopped the bus" when it stopped at the University and is traveling with the tour through Buffalo, N.Y.

Among Wheeler, Smith, Zapruder and Beckman, the Lewisburg venue featured Anthony McCann, Matt Hart, Mark Bibbins and Paula Closson Buck. The event also featured local poets and an open mic portion for audience members.

"For the scheduled venues during the tour, each city assembles a list of local poets and writers interested in joining segments of the tour," Wheeler said.

This contribution of local talent from all over North America promotes the tour's message of expressing true contemporary poetry.

"If the most common beef against much of American poetry is that it's cut off from American life," Gordinier said, "well, I can't think of a better remedy than to ride out on a 40-foot bus and take poetry straight into a teeming pandemonium of Wal-Mart and crystal meth and 'American Idol.'"

Prior to the beginning of the reading, eight University students shared some of their own selections in an open mic session.

Christine Friedlander '09 expressed her enjoyment of the experience, both as a participant and an audience member.

"Despite the fact that these people looked like they hadn't slept in weeks, the bus tour poets really gave an energetic and enthusiastic reading," Friedlander said. "I was blown away by the quality and variety of poems read during the open mic. Bucknell creative writers really embrace the art and are quite willing to experiment with different styles and forms in such a raw atmosphere."

Jenna Silvi '08 described the reading experience as an unexpectedly pleasurable situation.

"I got up there to read my piece, and I was shocked at how easy it was," Silvi said. "I really liked having an audience hear my work. I felt comfortable among my peers, and I enjoyed listening to their poems as well. It was a really great experience and I strongly encourage other students to attend future readings and open mic sessions. "

Friedlander agreed with this sentiment.

"It is one thing to read a poem to yourself; it's an entirely different thing to read a poem in front of a knowledgeable and experienced audience. The instant feedback you receive from a reading is so rewarding," Friedlander said.

McCallum reinforced that this valuable opportunity is a campus-wide resource.

"[The Stadler Center] offers a chance for students to see other authors outside of their classrooms and their professors. The variety of style they get exposed to is great," McCallum said. "Students from many different disciplines can be attracted to the Stadler Center."

Many members of the audience replied in an energetic manner. Jessica Vooris '09 was pleased with the excellence of the poetry reading.

"It was really cool to hear what people from our own school had written, and then to also have these other people come in too. It was really great to see everyone sharing what they had done," Vooris said.

Vooris, considering a major in creative writing, said the entire program was very interactive and appropriately geared toward the audience.

The Stadler Center is located in Bucknell Hall. All of its events are free and open to the public. The organization can be contacted via the Web site www.bucknell.edu/stadler-center for additional information regarding upcoming literary events.

BOSTON UNIVERSITY
INTERNATIONAL PROGRAMS
AUSTRALIA
BELIZE
ECUADOR
ENGLAND
FRANCE
GERMANY
IRELAND
ISRAEL
ITALY
MEXICO
NEW ZEALAND
NIGER
SPAIN
SWITZERLAND
U.S.A.

This is B.U.
This could be you.
INTERNSHIPS
LANGUAGE
LIBERAL ARTS
SCIENCE
ENGINEERING
www.bu.edu/abroad
Financial aid is available
BOSTON UNIVERSITY
INTERNATIONAL PROGRAMS
232 Bay State Road
Boston, MA 02215
617-353-9888
abroad@bu.edu

Write for News
e-mail etu001@

Marco's Tapas
Specializing in Regional Dishes from Spain and in Gourmet Pizzas
Open:
Sunday 4-9
Monday – Thursday 10-10
Friday – Saturday 10-11
434 Market Street
Downtown Lewisburg
523-0023
Fax: 523-0187
All major credit cards accepted
Take out available and weekend delivery to Lewisburg area

Oates discusses muses of literary artists

Author traces her love of writing to an early age

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

Joyce Carol Oates, a prominent author and a three time nominee of the Nobel Prize for Literature spoke about the creativity and inspiration of literary artists. Oates is a recepient of the Janet Weis Fellow award.

OATES From page A1

children, she said how both she and Updike became writers because as children they both enjoyed expressing their creativity "without any sense of reward or personal destiny."

She saw herself "writing and illustrating her own book with Crayola crayons," and cited her first characters as the drawings of the chickens and cats present on her farm. Oates knew she wanted to tell stories from this very young age, and said amusingly, "Nobody stopped me."

Oates followed this reflection of childhood memories with a portrayal of writing by citing examples of others' artistic experiences. She delved into the secret lives and struggles of such well-known artists as Emily Dickinson, James Joyce, Samuel Clemens and D.H. Lawrence.

She explained the importance of all artists' ability to learn to deal with negativity.

"How do we learn to deal with wounded-ness and rejection that are often at the core of creativity?" Oates said.

Oates examined the lives of artists who suffered the brunt of society's harshness and how they dealt with such hardships.

She described Emily Dickinson's rebellion against society's attempts to, as Dickinson herself writes, "Keep [her] still." Oates also said Samuel Clemens' transformation "of his sense of loss into a lifetime zeal for entertaining as Mark Twain."

She referenced the work of D.H. Lawrence and Flannery O'Connor and explained how they transformed the "psychopathology," as their subject matter was considered at that time, "into an art."

Oates' ended her lecture with an inspiring look at the need for persistence and dedication for an artist's success. Speaking of the solidarity that many authors face, she said this may be beneficial to their work, as they take on the "perspective of the psychic outlaw." She said with conviction they need not pay attention to what is considered the norm by societal outlook. Instead, she pleaded that all artists "rely in the end on [their] own judgment and sense of self worth."

> "[All artists] rely in the end on [their] own judgment and sense of self worth."
> — Joyce Carol Oates, Author

Students had mixed opinions on the speech.

"I was kind of disappointed that she focused on other authors. I would have rather [liked if] she had a more personal speech," Daylin Oakes '09 said.

Oates' remarks reached some audience members.

"It was very intellectual," Jane Dalzell '09 said. "I thoroughly enjoyed hearing her thoughts on other authors."

See more on Oates on A6

University takes precaution against mumps

Center for Disease Control recomends all students have two MMR vaccines to enroll showed us was that some of our long-held beliefs weren't holding up anymore," Stechschulte said.

MUMPS From page A1

"It used to be believed that anyone born before 1957 was immune to the disease due to the fact that everyone was exposed to it. Iowa showed us that this wasn't the case anymore. More people than ever are at risk of contacting the disease. A new plan of action is needed, especially at colleges and universities, and that is what is being done here."

Stechschulte sent out a letter on July 6, 2006 alerting all students that lacked the second immunization as well as informing them of the situation in the midwest.

The letter also told the students that the CDC recommends both vaccines and gave them advice on how to obtain the second one.

"The best stance to have is one of prevention. Ideally, everyone connected with Bucknell would know that: One, they have had the disease [already], two, [that] they had two vaccines, or three, [that] they had a blood test to determine their level of antibody protection against mumps," Stechschulte said.

> "The best stance to have is one of prevention."
> — Don Stechschulte, Director of Student Health Services

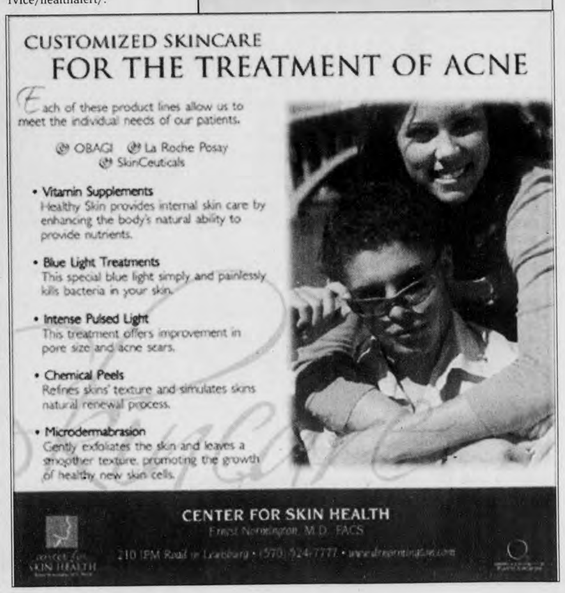
A follow-up letter was sent out on Sept. 20 informing the few students that are still without proper immunization that it is now required for registration for the Spring 2007 semester.

"We recently sent a letter to faculty, staff, and students informing them of steps they can take to protect themselves from mumps and [to] help student health services can offer in providing vaccinations," Mackey said.

Stechschulte is confident in the steps that the University is taking.

"What we're going to have is a campus that is well protected and very well covered," Stechschulte said.

Student health services has a website for registering for vaccinations and for finding out general mumps information, http://www.departments.bucknell.edu/health_service/healthalert/.



CUSTOMIZED SKINCARE
FOR THE TREATMENT OF ACNE
Each of these product lines allow us to meet the individual needs of our patients.
OBAGI La Roche Posay SkinCeuticals
• Vitamin Supplements
Healthy Skin provides internal skin care by enhancing the body's natural ability to provide nutrients.
• Blue Light Treatments
This special blue light simply and painlessly kills bacteria in your skin.
• Intense Pulsed Light
This treatment offers improvement in pore size and acne scars.
• Chemical Peels
Refines skins' texture and simulates skins natural renewal process.
• Microdermabrasion
Gently exfoliates the skin and leaves a smoother texture, promoting the growth of healthy new skin cells.
CENTER FOR SKIN HEALTH
Ernest Normington, M.D. FACS
210 IFM Road in Lewisburg • (570) 524-7777 • www.drnormington.com

News Briefs

University vandalism incident investigated aggressively

Public Safety has devoted an officer to investigating the vandalism incident that was reported on Sept. 14. and has developed a few leads in the case. An unknown person or persons spray painted hateful words on the walls and sign of the Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity house, as well as on two cars in its parking lot.

President Mitchell was concerned about the vandalism.

"The administration takes [this type of incident] very seriously and feels a sense of outrage," Mitchell said. "Bucknell prides itself on its civility."

The University plans to purse the investigation aggressively. If the perpetuator of the crime is a student, he or she will be brought before the Judicial Review, a committee consisting of faculty, administration and students. They will assess the evidence, render a decision and, if necessary, a punishment.

An anonymous tip website has been created and can be found at http://www.bucknell.edu/x6442.xml.

Hostage in Colorado dies from gunshot wounds

Shots were fired and six people were taken hostage by a gunman in a Bailey, Colo. high school on Wednesday. The gunman held his hostages in a second-story classroom. Four were released and he kept two female hostages for more than three hours. The gunman shot and critically wounded one of the two hostages, a student, when police stormed the classroom. She later died at the hospital from the wounds. It is believed that she was 16 years old. The gunman then killed himself when the SWAT team approached him. Students from the high school and the neighboring middle school were evacuated to a safe place. A SWAT team and the Jefferson County bomb squad were called in to negotiate with the gunman. According to CNN.com, there was reason to believe that the gunman had a bomb. The gunman was male, and believed to be in his mid-30s, Fox News reported. Authorities have no other information on the gunman and they have not yet released additional details. "We have almost no information on the suspect, almost nothing," said Jacki Kelley, spokeswoman for the Jefferson County sheriff. Bailey, Colo. is adjacent to Jefferson County, Colo., the location of the Columbine shootings in 1999.

Depiction of Mohammad's severed head cancels opera

An opera house in Germany cancelled "Idomeneo," a Mozart production featuring a scene that shows the severed head of the Prophet Mohammed. Director of Deutsche Oper in Berlin, Kristen Harms, chose to call off the production because state security officials warned that the scene could cause dangerous reactions from the Muslim community. The opera has been criticized for the scene featuring severed heads of various religious figures, including Mohammed, Jesus and Buddha. Hans Neuenfels added the heads to the production in 2003 to depict his "protest against any form of organized religion or its founders," according to CNN.com. Germany's Islamic community had mixed opinions. "Some [praised] the decision and others [called] on Muslims to accept the role of provocation in art," writes CNN.com. Any depictions of Mohammed are prohibited by Islamic law because it could lead to idolatry. The violent responses earlier this year to Dutch cartoons depicting Mohammed attributed to the decision to call off the production. "We believe that needs to be taken very seriously," Deutsche Opera said to CNN.

Teddy bear kills trouts

Two thousand five hundred trout deaths have been attributed to a teddy bear dressed in a yellow raincoat and hat. New Hampshire state officials told CNN.com that "the bear fell into a pool at a Fish and Game Department hatchery earlier in the month and clogged the drain." The flow of oxygen was blocked and the fish suffocated. "The bear is believed to be the first stuffed toy to cause fatalities at the facility," Hatchery Supervisor Robert Fawcett said to CNN. It is unknown as to who dropped the bear, but Fawcett urges employees to remove any possible obstructions. According to CNN.com, Fawcett released a written warning that read: "RELEASE OF ANY TEDDY BEARS into the fish hatchery water IS NOT PERMITTED."

Baruch provides Israeli perspective on recent conflict

ISRAEL From page A1

Airport and many highways leading to Syria. Israel also blockaded Lebanese waters. According to Baruch, there have been 44 Israeli civilians killed compared to the estimates of the U.S. Agency for International Development of 1,187 Lebanese civilian deaths.

> "People in Israel felt like this is totally unjustified; we have retreated from Lebanon, and still, these people won't leave us alone."
>
> — Tomer Baruch

Baruch also summed up the Israeli sentiment about the conflict.

"People in Israel felt like this is totally unjustified; we have retreated from Lebanon, and still, these people won't leave us alone," Baruch said.

Most people in the country were in favor of the war, even those who usually would not be supportive, according to Baruch.

"In the beginning, some left-wing organizations even supported the war," Baruch said.

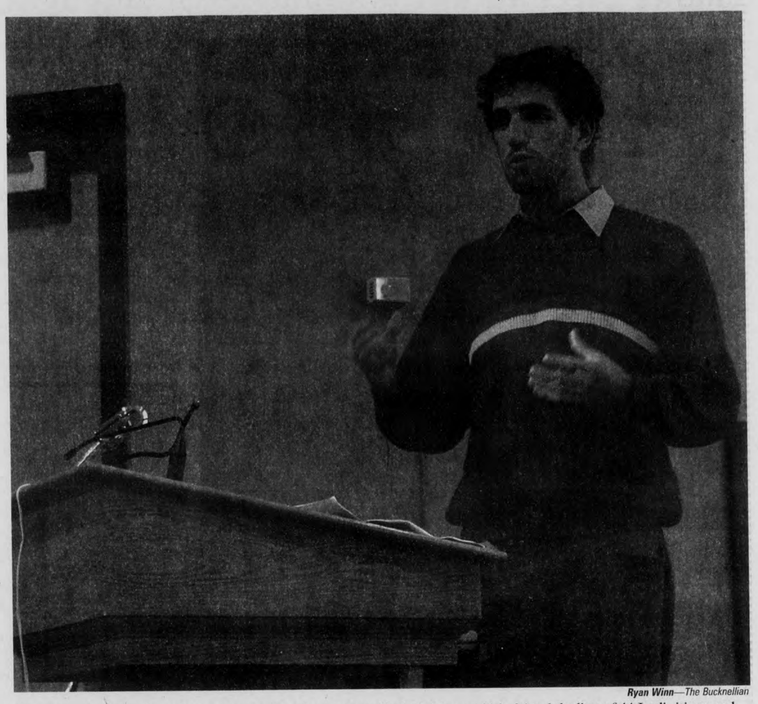
He spoke about both the aftermath of the war and what had gone wrong for Israel. He said the media was covering all aspects of the conflict–from bombings to causalities–and was very quick to get the news to the people. Baruch also said some people thought news agencies were covering too much of the situation, which in turn was helping the other side.

He focused on the measures taken by the government to examine why Israel did not win the war.

"I thought it was really good having an average citizen's point of view brought to us so we can get a feel for the reaction of the people, not what someone is trying to make us think," Zak Marsh '10 said.

Jewish Chaplain Serena Fujita talked about why she selected Baruch.

"The reason I brought someone here from Israel who is about the same age as Bucknell students was to give them a taste of Israel from the perspective of a young adult; to make them aware that Israel is a country like any other country, not a country that always thinks of war," Fujita said.



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Tomer Baruch, an Israeli, speaks to students about the recent conflict in Lebanon, which claimed the lives of 44 Isaeli citizens and over 1,100 Lebanese. Baruch gave listeners a personal prespective to the problems in the Middle East.

Subscribing to The Bucknellian is easy!

Enclose this form and a check (made out to The Bucknellian) and mail it to:

The Bucknellian, Bucknell University C3952, 701 Moore Avenue, Lewisburg, PA 17837

Name _____ __ ONE YEAR: receive 24 issues each week for the academic year for only $45, a $15 savings!

Address _____

_____

Phone _____ __ ONE SEMESTER: receive 12 issues during the fall or spring semester for $30. Please specify semester: _____

E-mail _____

For more information contact The Bucknellian at 570-577-1520 or bucknellian@bucknell.edu

Summer Breeze Stables

Est. 1973

10 minutes from Campus
Riding Lessons for all levels
Certified Professional Trainer
Large indoor and Outdoor Arenas
Boarding, Training and Showing

Call 570-412-0771 for an appointment

Igniting Creative Ideas
On Fire Promotions
by trautman associates, inc.
promotional products · fundraising items
embroidered & screenprinted caps & apparel
awards · trophies · business gifts
800-538-8009
Lewisburg Showroom 434 Market 570-522-8009
www.onfirepromotions.com
Bring in this ad for one FREE SCREEN!!!
GOOD ON ANY APPAREL ORDER
(minimum 36 pieces)

DOES YOUR CAR NEED SERVICED?

Our Service Department has $25,000 in new upgrades, including a new alignment rack, brake lathe, tire machine, and hundreds of hours of training for the techs. We now offer shuttle service to and from work or home. We have become a complete service center that can perform any work on any model, from an oil change to engine replacement.

Lewisburg Ford
Oil Change w/Multi-Point Inspection
$19.95 Excludes Diesels. Must present coupon at time of service. Expires 12/31/06.

Lewisburg Ford
Oil Change/Tire Rotation w/Multi-Point Inspection
$34.95 Must present coupon at time of service. Expires 12/31/06.

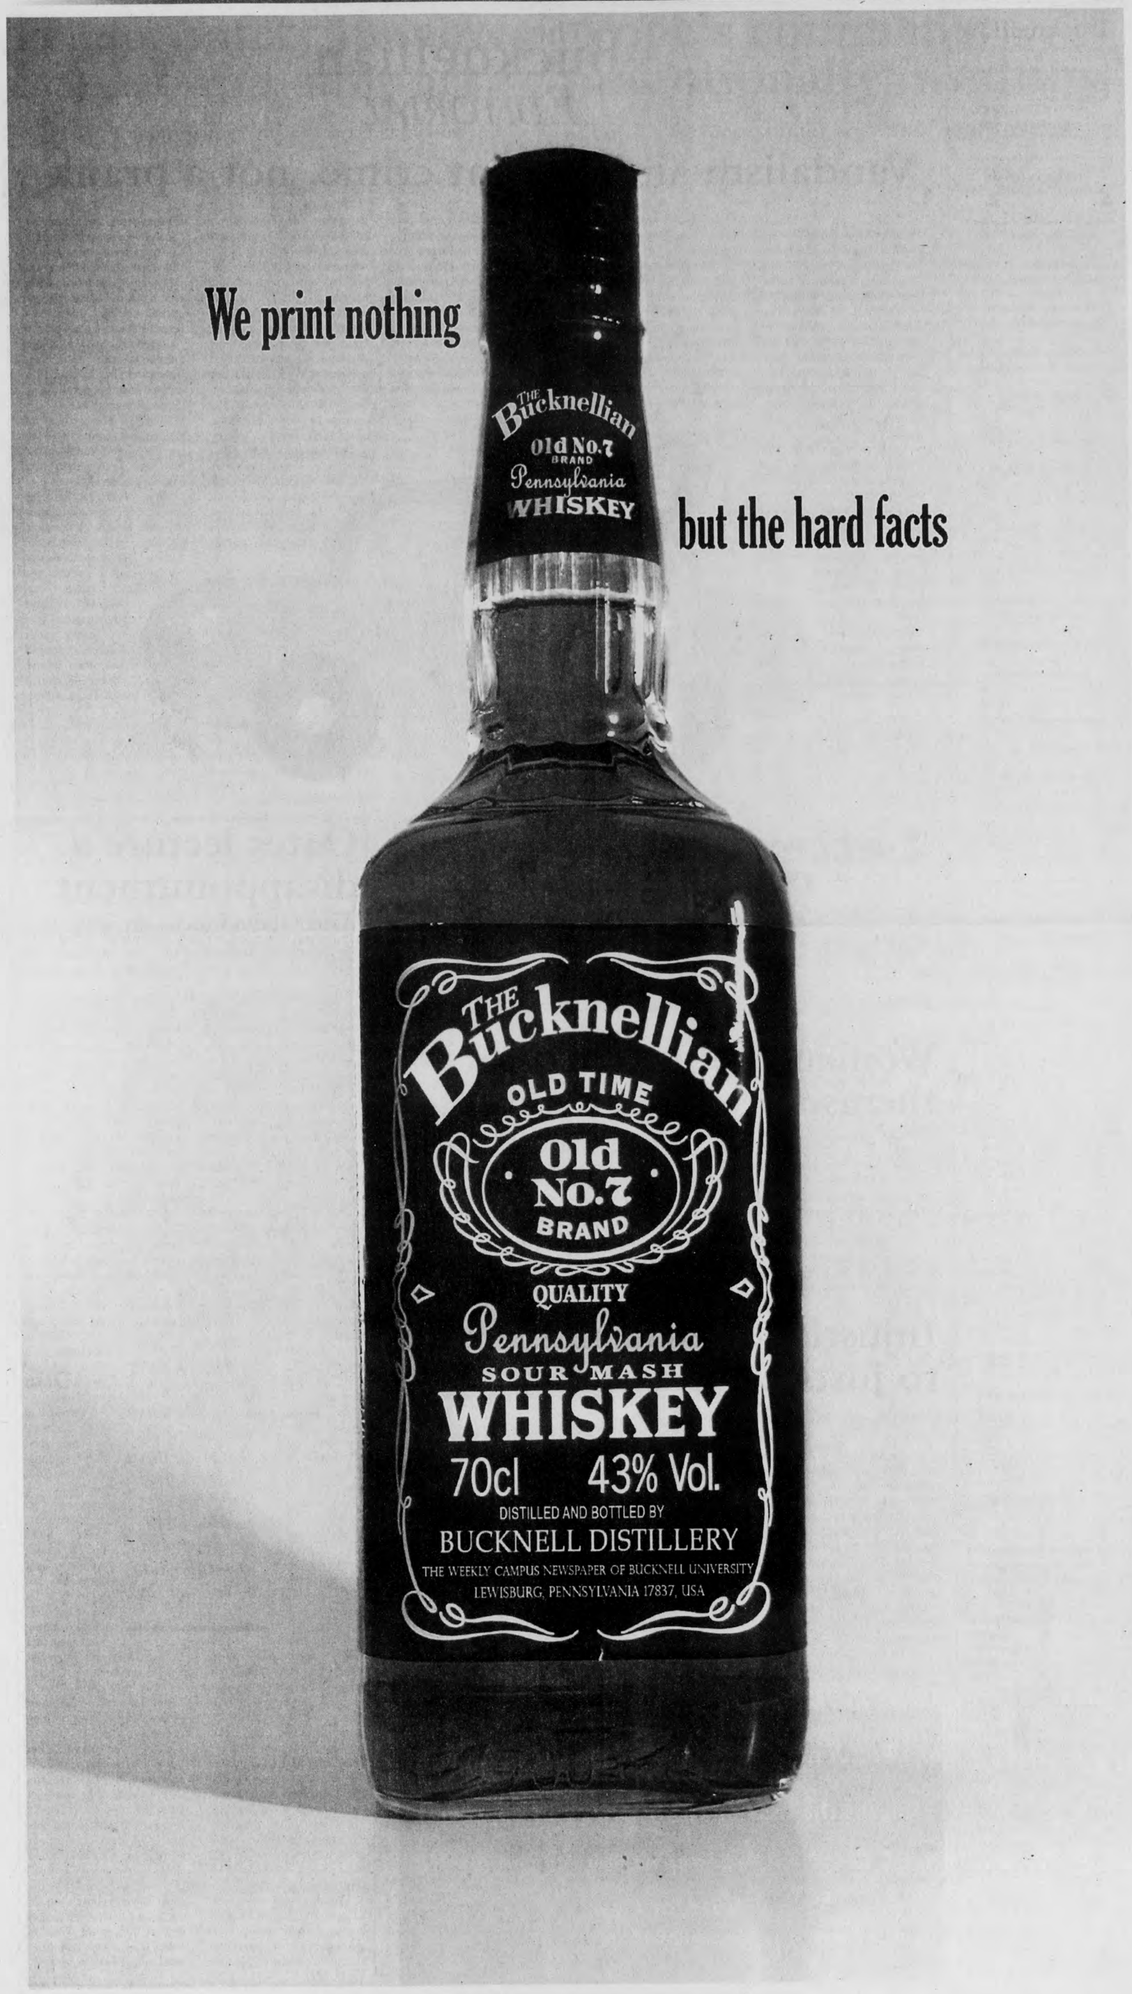
Lewisburg Ford
2265 Old Turnpike Rd.
(Route 45 West)
Across From Brookpark Farm
Call Today! (570) 524-7267
Visit us on the web at www.lewisburgford.com

COLDWELL BANKER
PENN ONE REAL ESTATE
Thank You, Bucknell!!
For thirty years of calling Bucknell and Lewisburg home.
Susan Warner-Mills, Sales Associate
Competence, Integrity, Service
524-7500; swm@coldwellbanker.com

Nancy's Nu-Wave Salon
look your best
Sept/Oct Special
One Hour Massage $35
Main Street (Rte 45) Montandon
524-2315
www.nancysnuwave.com

CatmanDo
Handyman Services
Specializing in small home repair jobs:
Custom Carpentry
Painting
Light construction
Greg H Mathias
570-524-4724
Free Estimates Fully insured

Real Smoked BBQ!
Beef Brisket, Pork, Chicken, Ribs!
Sandwiches, Wraps, Salads, Platters!
NO RESERVATIONS NEEDED!
Call in for TAKEOUT!
SKEETER'S PIT BBQ
ON THE BLUFF
OVERLOOKING THE SCENIC SUSQUEHANNA RIVER
AT THE INTERSECTION OF ROUTES 11 & 15
SHAMOKIN DAM
570.743.2727
Daily 11:00am - 10:00pm
Sundays till 9:00pm
www.SkeetersBBQ.com



The Bucknellian
Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue
Volume 138, Number 5
C-3952 Bucknell University
Lewisburg, Pa. 17837
(570) 577-1520
bucknellian@bucknell.edu
http://www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Editor-in-Chief
Catherine Heverling '07

Associate Editor of Content
Jamie Jacobson '08

Associate Editor of Layout
Rina Van Orden '08

Business Manager
Jared Napolitano '08

Senior Editor
Drew Larson '08

News Editors
Evan Unger '09
Nilanjana Saha '09
Michelle Laxer '09

Opinions Editors
Hallie Stebbins '08
Michael Dippery '08

Sports Editors
Matthew Saylor '08
Barbara Perlman '09
Brian Mulligan '08

Features Editors
Julia Fuchs '09

Arts & Entertainment Editors
Kimberly Kane '08
Lily Beauvilliers '09

Photography Editors
Ryan Winn '08
Ellyn Ercolano '09

Chief Copy Editors
Kathleen Conti '08
Greg Hamilton '08

Advertising Managers
Meredith Reighard '07
Kat Wallis '07
Katie Casteel '08
Emily Senko '08

Office Manager
Kate Wood '07

Cartoonist
Juliana Su '09

Adviser
James F. Lee

Op-Ed Policy

The editorials of The Bucknellian reflect the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the editor-in-chief. All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

Letters to the editor must be received by noon on the Tuesday before publication. Letters may not be longer than 600 words and the Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny or edit any letter to the editor. Letters must contain the writer's name and phone number (used for verification purposes and not to be printed). Mail or e-mail letters using the addresses above.

Publishing Information

The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester entirely by Bucknell students. All published material is chosen by the paper's Editorial Board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its adviser, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

Subscription Information

Subscriptions are available for $45 per year or $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian Subscriptions, Bucknell University, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, Pa. 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

Members of the local community may pick up a complimentary issue each week, with the understanding of one free issue per person. If you would like more for a nominal fee, contact the print office.

Advertising Policy

The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements if deemed offensive, illegal or in bad taste. Advertisements reflect the opinion of the advertiser and not necessarily that of The Bucknellian. For advertising rates and information, please contact the advertising department at (570) 577-1085. Copyright © 2006 The Bucknellian

The Bucknellian
EDITORIAL

Vandalism an ignorant crime, not a prank

Pranks can be funny. Pranks can be harmless. But pranks that deface property with the words "nigger" and "fag" are not funny or harmless—they're just wrong.

The act of vandalism committed at Sigma Phi Epsilon two weeks ago not only caused significant damage to University and personal property but it is an affront to everyone who believes in basic human decency.

In a recent editorial, The Bucknellian discussed the importance of diversity at the University.

We commend the students who engage in intergroup dialogues and take classes dedicated to the study of different cultures and religions. We are ecstatic that the University consistently invites internationally known speakers to campus to talk about promoting cultural understanding and cooperation.

Yet when vandalism like this makes headlines, it underscores the University's need to improve diversity even more, not just in terms of classes and speakers but also in terms of its actual composition.

We must expand our minds and perceptions in order for real diversity to be a possibility. On that note, there is not a more closed-minded way of thinking than the use of outrageously offensive profanities.

Still, we cannot allow a single depraved action to define the entire University. Most of us are above the use of denigrating pejoratives to make a point.

As college students, we value our voices and strive to make them heard. We also sign our names when we write something, standing by our opinions and beliefs.

Clearly the vandal(s) wanted to make a statement, but using these slurs and cans of spray paint was not the way to do it. They felt hate and expressed it, but did not have the courage to take responsibility for their words.

We live in a society that stands for and promotes free speech for everyone and we cry out in protest against those who try to take that guaranteed freedom away from us.

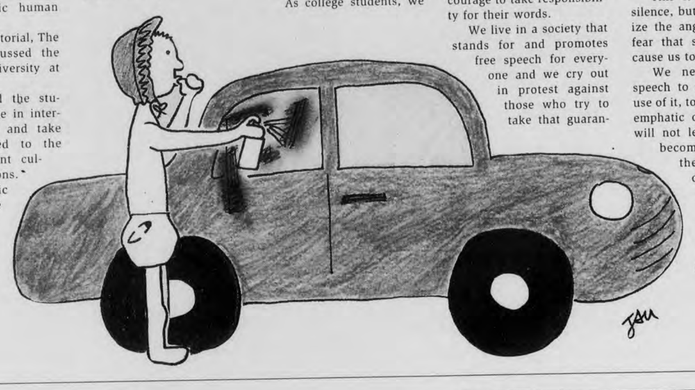
But spewing hatred in this manner is an abuse of the First Amendment. It's this type of speech that fosters a desire to restrict all speech—even when it's responsible.

The vandal(s) left permanent scars on the University, but in turn they created an opportunity to incite change.

This is not a time for silence, but a time to vocalize the anger, sadness and fear that such vulgar acts cause us to feel.

We need to use our speech to combat the misuse of it, to state in the most emphatic of terms that we will not let our University become a canvas for the artists of obscenities and defamation.

And that voice should resonate louder than our cheers in Sojka Pavilion.



Letters to the Editor

Women should not treat themselves as sex symbols

To the Editor:

As a parent of a Bucknell sophomore and mother of 3 sons, I would like to commend Lily Beauvilliers on her well-written article "Fraternity party serves up a symbol of powerlessness" (Sept. 15).

Lily mentioned several factors that affect today's young women (and some older ones as well), but the most important issue is respect for women—not only from men, but from women themselves. While the cage dancing may have been "just for fun," it indicates women are willing to be treated as sex symbols for the pleasure of men.

Women have so much more to offer to society (especially the bright women of Bucknell).

Thanks again Lily for opening some eyes.

Sincerely,
Debora Hachey

Injustice anywhere a threat to justice everywhere

To the Editor:

As a member of the community at the University, you were the victim of a hate crime. On Sept. 14, the words "nigger" and "fag" were sprayed on Sigma Phi Epsilon's fraternity house and two vehicles parked outside. The "N" word is a lingering sickness that has infected the lungs of our country for decades. The "F" word cuts just as deep and discriminates to the same degree. Neither should be tolerated.

Whether defined as a hate crime or a bias crime, the "N" word and the "F" word disseminate hate. This is not only an issue for the Black community or the LGBT community, but an issue for the entire campus community.

We understand pranks and jokes occur, but there is a stark difference between vandalizing a car with an egg and vandalizing a house with discriminatory slurs. This was not just an attack on the Sigma Phi Epsilon house, but on the entire University community.

As members of English 321, we are embarrassed. We are ashamed. We are appalled. We are motivated. We want to encourage change and combat ignorance. The University's collective response to this act will reveal our character and integrity as an institution of higher learning.

Sincerely,

Professor Tameka Cage and students of English 321

"Freedom of the press, if it means anything at all, means the freedom to criticize and oppose."

— Eric Arthur Blair

Write for Ops.
E-mail hstebbin@

Oates lecture a disappointment

Writer should focus on writing

By Christine Totten
Staff Writer

Joyce Carol Oates is the recipient of this year's Janet Weis Fellow; an award she received Tuesday evening and followed with a lecture. This award, starting in 2002, is given to highly successful and decorated contemporary fiction writers. Those who have since received the award include Toni Morrison, John Updike, Salman Rushdie and Tom Wolfe.

Oates is the author of about 100 major published pieces, including 37 novels, 23 short story collections, seven volumes of poetry, four volumes of plays and five books of literary criticism, among other works. The volume and success of Oates' writing makes me hesitant to say anything negative. What I'm about to say is nothing against her as a writer, just an explanation of the disappointment I felt leaving the lecture.

The sheer volume of her published work is impressive in itself, but when you take into account the success her published works have received, it's unfathomable as to how she does it.

Her talk was split into three identifiable parts. First, an introduction in which she read "O Crayola", a cutesy but poignant five-line poem ending with "O Crayola!—even the taste was good." Second were her comments and examples of well-known writers who persevered through rejection to eventually find success. The third and final parts of her talk included the stories of those few lucky writers who became overnight successes.

The message was great-success and failure in writing are closely linked. They are always shifting; never an absolute certainty because they can masquerade and transform into one another in a blink.

Many times writers who are overnight success stories never produce further works after their first major publishing experience. Oates used Ralph Ellison, author of Invisible Man, as an example. Ellison wrote Invisible Man at a young age, and then proceeded to work on his second novel for decades, but unfortunately did not live to see it published.

In the end, Oates said, the most important thing for writers to remember is to rely on their own self worth. If they can do this, she said, they can persevere through the rejections that writing can bring, be it from publishers or family and friends.

This would have been all well and good if I attended the lecture hoping to receive an inspirational, "never quit" speech. Don't get me wrong, Oates was not "rah-rah" in her delivery, but her ending point was that to be successful, perseverance is the key.

Call me crazy, but I hoped to receive some sort of insight into Oates' writing process.

The sheer volume of her published work is impressive in itself, but when you take into account the success her published works received, it's unfathomable how she does it. I don't know what kind of direction Oates was given upon notification of her selection as the Janet Weis Fellow, but in the future I hope the recipients of this award will talk about their own transformations and growth as writers.

Public Safety deserves respect and support

Friedberg's new initiatives will help improve image

By Lauren Berninger
Writer

When University students talk about "PS" they are not using the abbreviation in the context of writing a letter, but with respect to the often dreaded department of Public Safety.

Over the years, Public Safety developed such a negative connotation many people grimace at the mention of the term. The new idea of Public Safety becoming more involved in student activities and events under new Public Safety Director Jason Friedberg leaves some students feeling a bit uneasy.

I am confident such a policy will only facilitate better communication and a better overall relationship between the department and the rest of campus.

Public Safety's reputation on campus has plenty of room for improvement. Until now, Public Safety has been called everything from "the rent-a-cops," an extremely unprofessional phrase, to the "po-po."

In a way students have almost dehumanized them, giving them all the more reason to reciprocate an equally poor image of us.

Public Safety wears many hats, but most of its duties are perceived negatively by the student body. For example, Public Safety officers are notorious for being parking-ticket distributors. Countless students have received one of those annoying slips of paper for parking without flashers, backing into a space or unknowingly parking in a faculty spot.

Secondly, students recognize Public Safety officers as the uninvited guests of weekend parties. No one appreciates the person who breaks up an evening gathering.

Finally, Public Safety officers are most famous for their duties as alcohol policy enforcers. On a Saturday night, officers are a feared authority, second only to the Lewisburg Police Department.

We forget in the event that some maniac follows us home or is sitting in our common area, we almost instinctively call Public Safety to take care of the situation.

It is not surprising students frown upon Public Safety when you list all of the domineering roles officers fill. As students we have let the dark shadow of these responsibilities hide all of the positive services they provide on campus.

We forget these officers walk through the basement of the library at 4 a.m. during finals week when you are there all by yourself. We forget they are often the first ones at the scene when your best friend is lying unconscious on the floor.

We forget in the event that some maniac follows us home or is sitting in our common room, we almost instinctively call Public Safety to take care of the situation.

We have looked at the department so disdainfully that Public Safety has almost become an entity separate from the University. Most of us know half of the employees in the bookstore and dining services, but I doubt the majority of students could identify a Public Safety officer in plain clothes.

Friedberg's new policy of getting Public Safety involved in campus activities is one step toward highlighting positive roles the department plays on campus.

Getting to know officers by name and being able to converse with them outside of their jobs boosts the relationship between Public Safety and the student body. Increased communication allows both sides to express their grievances toward one another and hopefully establish a more complete understanding of both perspectives.

Most importantly, I anticipate Friedberg's new initiative will help bring the good reputation of Public Safety back to campus so it will become a department respected by students as much as any other University office.

Pope's comments intentionally insulting

Christian leaders should act with Christian values

By Christopher M. Opiela
Contributing Writer

Muslims are in an uproar over the Pope's recent comments about Islam. It has come to the point where one group cannot wiggle its lips without offending or causing a misunderstanding with the other side. It is time for both factions to give up this petty finger-pointing and acknowledge the other has the right to exist.

Since the end of the 11th century these religious sects have been trying to exterminate each other. The First Crusade was announced with the promise of amnesty and a trip to heaven for those who fought the "infidels." Is this not a policy of Islamic extremists?

Now, the pope is apologizing vehemently. But I have had enough of this "accidental-insult-followed-by-apologies" gig. I don't believe the quote was an accident. It was a blatant attack on Islam. It is past the time for apologies; the pope must act.

Pope Benedict XVI should have exercised more caution with his word choice recently. How he thought the words he uttered in light of academic pursuit were never going to spark controversy, I have no clue. Quoting a 14th-century emperor who vehemently supported the Crusades was not smart. Calling the teachings of Islam "evil and inhuman" echoes that thought.

Now, the pope is apologizing vehemently. But I have had enough of this "accidental-insult-followed-by-apologies" gig. I don't believe the quote was an accident. It was a blatant attack on Islam. It is past the time for apologies; the pope must act.

I do not call for a new crusade. The crusades only resulted in death and a greater misunderstanding of each faction. I doubt a 79-year-old pontiff could get very far crusading himself anyway. I call instead for the launch of a campaign that sends a different message: one of love.

It is time Christians act how Jesus taught them to act. I don't expect Christians to be perfect; that is unattainable. I just ask the kindness of love be granted. I ask people to put forth the effort to attempt understanding. What people preach on Sunday ought to be what they at least try to practice during the week.

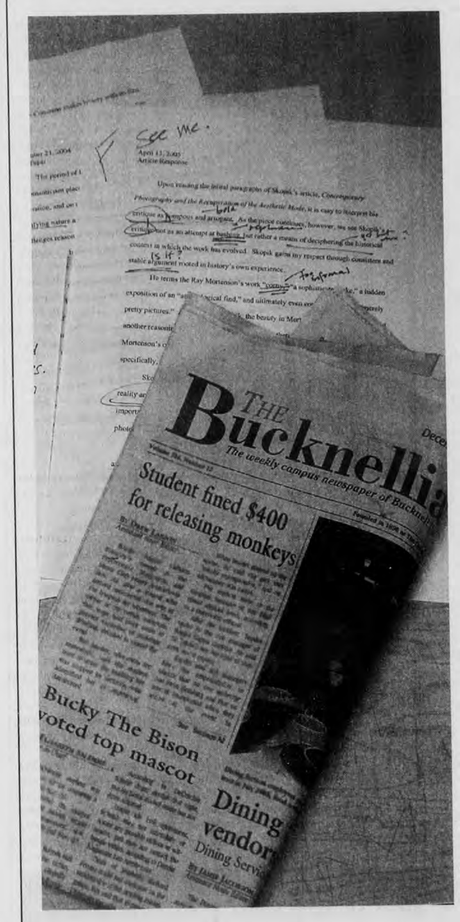
Jesus taught, "You shall love your neighbor as yourself," according to Matthew 22:39. Christians took the first step and slaughtered Muslims in the Crusades. Now, factions around the world are facing what they once dealt out themselves: terror and death.

Christians must attempt, again, to make the first move — this time the correct move. Move in the direction of peace; move in the direction of understanding, with love creating the path.

The pope can begin by reaching out. He has the power to explain and reveal the Church's doctrines. He can assist Muslims in the understanding of Christian beliefs. And in turn Muslims must do the same. Mutual love and understanding is the path to peaceful existence.

The pope has a unique opportunity to go beyond the call for apologies. At a time when Muslims are asking for apologies, they are willing to listen. He has the opportunity to love.

As pope, he was elected to and needs to have the courage to break through the barrier that prevents understanding and coexistence. If he does not, he fails to serve the people he was chosen to serve.



You have a right to know.

Insights, issues and how to use
The Freedom of Information Act,
the Right to Know Law & the Sunshine Act

Today
12-1:30 p.m.
Langone Center, Room 256

PRESENTED BY:

Barry Bachrach, Esq.
Specializes in FOIA, environmental, and intellectual property litigation.
Member, Bowditch & Dewey of Boston, MA

Walter Brasch, Ph. D
Professor of Journalism, Bloomsburg University and President, Pennsylvania Press Club

Teri Henning, Esq.
General counsel, the Pennsylvania Newspaper Association

Paula K. Knudsen, Esq.
Staff attorney, American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU) of Pa.

The 90-minute seminar will be a working lunch with time for questions. Advance reservations are not required. The buffet lunch is $10. Please call 570-374-0466 for reservations.

Sponsored by the Central Susquehanna Chapter of the ACLU and co-hosted by Bucknell's Pre-Law Advising Program and the Bucknellian adviser and editorial board.

Mer Cares

Dear Mer:

I have a friend who is the sweetest and most caring person ever, and we are great friends. However, lately she's had these severe mood swings, where I never know how she's going to react anymore. She has become stubborn and gets very upset if she doesn't get her way, and she has started getting "sick" a lot lately. I want to be there for her, and we've had long talks about what is bothering her, but frankly, her constant mood swings are starting to get old. I don't want to call her on them because I'm afraid she'll get upset again and mad at me, which I don't want. What should I do?

—Frazzled Friend

Dear Frazzled Friend,

There are a few things that may be causing your friend's mood swings. The spectrum ranges from depression and eating disorders to suicidal thoughts, drugs and drinking. But I don't want to jump the gun and say that it is any of these harsh ideas. So let me just give you some possibilities of what your friend might be going through and how you can help her.

A person with a mood problem is like a human roller coaster. One minute they're up and the next minute they're down, but they can never seem to get off the ride. Are her mood swings intense, sudden and out of control? Does she seem to be having just a long mood swing of bad days or are her happy/upset mood swings intermittent? Chronic and severe mood swings like chronic depression or panic attacks are a psychological disorder. Sometimes, they are even the result of a physical problem, like premenstrual syndrome.

If her mood swings are every now and then and seem to be a few bad days a month, it could be caused by premenstrual syndrome, where her hormones may cause her to be very emotional and experience physical discomforts that begin mid-cycle. There are remedies for dealing with the disadvantages of PMS, such as calcium and vitamins. She may just need regular exercise to boost her endorphins and put her in a pleasant mood. Salt is also known to decrease mood alterations

But then again, it might not be a "little friend" visiting each month. It could be that your friend is dealing with a sudden death in the family or something is upsetting her in her classes that she does not want to express verbally. Many people think that if they keep their emotions bottled up, they will go away or they can avoid them for as long as possible. Little things could be making her stubborn and difficult to deal with, but she does not want to let people in and chooses to push them away. Having talks with her may not be the best option right now, as she seems to be pulling away and not being herself. She may just need some alone time to figure out what is going on. When she is ready to deal with it and let her friends help her, she will come to you instead – it's just a matter of time. It's easier said than done, but eventually she may realize that just saying things out loud will allow her to start to cope with them.

Some people don't come out of this isolation easily. If her mood swings persist even as she sees her friends drifting away from her, you may need to seek help. While she may be adamant about not "needing help," she will be thankful in the end. She just may have trouble telling her problems to her friends right now even with all the trust you have for each other. A therapist or someone unbiased may be just the trick until she is able to understand what she is going through.

Teenage moodiness is a normal part of adolescent development. In part, it is caused by hormonal changes that cause her moods to fluctuate constantly. If she tends to be "sick" often, she may be depressed, in which case your friend will need a lot of help and support. There is also a rare possibility your friend may have bipolar disorder also known as manic depression. According to the National Institute of Mental Health Web site, at www.nimh.nih.gov, it is "a type of depressive illness that involves mood swings that go from periods of depression to periods of being overly 'up' and irritable. Sometimes the mood swings are dramatic or rapid, but most often they occur gradually, over several weeks. The 'up' or manic phase can include increased energy and activity, insomnia, grandiose notions and impulsive or reckless behavior, including sexual promiscuity." Your friend may need to speak to a doctor or psychologist because medication is usually effective in controlling these symptoms and preventing the recurrence of both manic and depressive episodes.

All in all, your friend just may be high-strung. Everyone has different temperaments. Being a friend means offering support, giving someone a chance to discuss his or her problems, whether or not she takes your offer at the moment. Sometimes, just hanging out can go a long way to help an upset friend. But when a friend develops more severe emotional problems, it's usually necessary to get adults like trusted parents, doctors or counselors involved. The worst thing teens can do when experiencing severe mood swings is to keep everything to themselves. According to an interview conducted by Science World with Dr. Bruce Waslick, sharing your problems with someone you trust is a big step toward learning to be an adult. Teens should know that learning to cope with strong emotions like sadness and anger is necessary in growing up and living a healthy adult life, but not to the extent of depression. All I can advise to you is to just be there by her side through the thick and thin. That doesn't mean being caught in her war-zone of emotions and outbursts. Just look out for her, and if things get rough she'll come to you. If you think the situation has gone too far, get help. It could be the best thing a friend could ever do.

Love,
Mer

Please send questions regarding any topic to marc001@bucknell.edu with subject line reading "advice" or you may send a letter via campus mail to box number C1099. I look forward to hearing from you!

The professor's briefcase

Tom Solomon

By Liza Banhalmi
Contributing Writer

Tom—not Tom Solomon, associate professor of physics, or Sir Thomas Solomon of Physics—just Tom.

On the first day of classes Solomon insists on being called "Tom," creating a more personal and relaxed environment in the classroom. While Physics is a very intimidating subject for some, Solomon eases his students into the physics atmosphere asking them to call him by his first name.

Aside from physics classes, Solomon teaches introductory courses and foundation seminars. He is married with two children, Avigal and Polly, and he loves the Beatles and Harry Potter books.

"I would hate to be single in Lewisburg. It's a great place to raise kids but not to meet someone," Solomon said.

Solomon grew up in Chevy Chase, Md. He got his bachelor's degree at Brown in 1984 and his doctorate at the University of Pennsylvania in 1990. He had a postdoctoral research position at the University of Texas at Austin.

Research is very important to Solomon. It is one of the reasons he is at the University today.

"Bucknell was a perfect fit for me—a place that values both teaching and research—something that not many colleges or universities can balance well," Solomon said.

Solomon almost did not make it to his job interview at the University. He flew into Pittsburgh, Pa. during a massive snowstorm and it took him 14 hours to get to Lewisburg. Those 14 hours paid off, as Solomon has been here for 13 years.

Solomon teaches Physics 211E, which he said is a more "aggressive" course than Physics 211. Originally, students who performed well in high school physics jumped to sophomore-level physics but ended up doing poorly. The creation of Physics 211E four years ago helped these students excel. Jeffrey M. Bowen, associate professor of physics, taught it the first two years and Solomon has taught it the past two years.

Solomon's specialty in physics is chaos. He does research on advection-reaction-diffusion systems. Solomon researched the effects and behavior of mixing liquid with gas and fire and compared this to disease epidemic. If you were to spill gas on the floor and light it on fire, the flame would sweep across the floor. Unburned gas represents healthy people, burned gas represents sick people and the flame represents the disease propagating throughout the population. The gas flow and fluid behaviors are similar to the movement of people.

Lily Beauvilliers '09 did research with Solomon over the summer.

"Research with Tom this summer was an amazing experience," Beauvilliers said. "I never felt like the undergraduate student working on someone else's project—Tom made it our project. All the characteristic Tom energy that students are used to seeing in class carries over to his research."

There is even a Facebook group called "Tom Solomon Appreciation Club" that truly values Tom's enthusiasm both in and out of the classroom.

This energy is contagious. There is even a Facebook group called "Tom Solomon Appreciation Club" that truly values Solomon's enthusiasm both in and out of the classroom.

One of Solomon's dreams is to open a store called "Physics World: The Physics Superstore." Solomon described a dream in which he walked into this store and encountered a whole aisle of water rockets.

This is part of the many reasons why Solomon became a physics professor: besides the fact that it is "awesomely cool" and he enjoys the students and research, it gives him "a good excuse to collect lots of cool physics toys," Solomon said.

Michelle Kong

By Janna Shapiro
Writer

Walking into Assistant Professor of Art Michele Kong's sculpture class brings new meaning to the word dichotomy. The laid-back Los Angeles resident's slight frame contrasts her challenging curriculum: she insists on original thought, teaches students how to use power tools and pushes a rigorous work schedule packed with late nights at the Art Barn.

Kong works in sculpture, drawing and architecture. Her teaching style shares the dichotomy of her own organic works.

"We're really happy to have her," said Janice Mann, associate professor of art. "We put a lot of work into finding the right candidate. Michele stood out among our applications. She will bring a new vitality to the department."

Like any good University stalker, I was tempted to "Google" my professor before attending my first elementary sculpture class. Intimidation does not accurately express the combination of awe and fear I experienced upon seeing photos of her installations.

Kong painstakingly constructed walls, ceilings and sculptures into symmetrical patterns and representations of natural phenomena from hot glue. The works change the environment and perception for a viewer instantly.

Though it may sound like a nightmare of work for artistically-challenged people, Kong spends as long as necessary on each piece, making sure each element is completed to perfection.

"People say I have a lot of patience," Kong said.

Patience and neutrality are apparent aspects of Kong's teaching style.

Students notice she does not project her own preferences on their work. Her students huddle around the chalkboard in student-led lectures on the theory of creativity at the beginning of each class.

During work periods, Kong walks around the room and listens to each student's ideas for his or her pieces. After the student gives a complete description, she will help brainstorm practical ways to create the sculpture without ever questioning the student's vision.

Letting students be fully in charge of all aspects of their work is very important to Kong because it enables them to grow continuously as artists.

"Bucknell prides itself on teaching and learning. Not all institutions are designed that way. I can also grow as an artist ... I'm impressed by the students; it's clear that the administration prides itself on who they accept. As I grade your papers, I can say it's as much about you all growing as it is about us," Kong said.

Letting students be fully in charge of all aspects of their work is very important to Kong because it enables them to grow continuously as artists.

Though Kong stays relatively impartial in the creation of student works, she is still eager to pass on her tried and tested "survival strategies." For instance, it is her patented strategy of combining caffeine, fattening food and 10-minute "power naps" that allowed me to write this article.

Kong lived in Baltimore, Md. most recently but enjoyed a relatively easy move to central Pennsylvania.

"I'm enjoying how quiet it is here. I've lived in cities mostly," Kong said.

Kong has a Bachelor of Arts and Bachelor of Fine Arts from the University of Colorado and a Master of Fine Arts from the acclaimed Rhode Island School of Design.

Kong owns the Clear Space Studio domain as an outlet to publicize her work. Her solo exhibit opens Nov. 10 at the Bemis Center for Contemporary Arts in Omaha, Nev.

Kong took over the teaching position this year after William Lasansky, former professor of art, retired in June after being on the University faculty since 1968.

Do you stay on top of the latest trends?
Write for Feats!
E-mail jjf018@

Central PA dining

FOR THE STEAK AND RIBS

Rusty's

- Appeals to a variety of people
- Great ribs and steak
- More upscale than the Bull Run Inn

By Michael Tonetti
Contributing Writer

If you are looking for a quiet place with similar food choices to the Bull Run Inn, then Rusty's is the place for you.

Rusty's was established in 1983 shortly after Bull Run. Its original founder, Russ Gardner, moved to Lewisburg after working for General Mills. He had previously established Bull Run Inn in 1973. Originally he bought the building across the street and set up a bowling alley, but it burned down in 1972. Eventually, Russ passed ownership of Rusty's off to his son Kevin Gardner who currently owns the establishment.

The restaurant has an inviting, rustic atmosphere, with old antiques lining the walls as well as pictures from when it was founded.

It is dimly-lit and has a bar off to the side, separate from the dining area. The bar is actually one entire piece that came from an old bar in Williamsport, Pa.

Rusty's is a casual restaurant open Wednesday and Thursday for lunch and Friday and Saturday for dinner. It is right next to Bull Run, but the entrance is off to the side.

We went for dinner and when we walked in it was not too crowded. There was a wide variety of people ranging from college students to families and friends.

The restaurant provides a great area to go with your family. It is not expensive, so it could fit a college student's budget. It is a little more upscale than the Bull Run Inn and less crowded, providing a quieter atmosphere and more seclusion.

It would also make for a casual place to take a first date.

Bull Run and Rusty's differ in atmosphere, but they share the same kitchen along with Brynnwood catering, and all of the waiting staff interact.

When we walked in we were seated promptly. The waitress was very accommodating when I asked her if I could speak to someone about the restaurant and its history.

After glancing over the menu for 15 minutes due to our indecisiveness, we decided to hear the specials.

One interesting choice was the Natural Light beer-battered catfish.

Just kidding.

It was Yuengling beer-battered fish.

The menu has a variety of choices ranging from seafood, homemade soups and pasta to steak and different appetizers such as wings and calamari. All of the entrees are surprisingly under $15 except for a full rack of baby back ribs. They also recommend a certain wine to accommodate each entrée, which is a nice addition for those who are of age.

For diners enjoying a non-alcoholic beverage, refills are free.

After we ordered our meals which consisted of calamari and crab quesadillas for appetizers, baby back ribs and sirloin steak with sides of sweet potato fries and salads for entrees.

The service was alright; it seemed a little bit on the slow side.

For the most part the food was very tasty. After we ordered, the bread was brought out. There were no plates to go with it, which was odd. The crab quesadillas were very good and a little spicy but the calamari was not too appetizing. I would not recommend it. The salads were brought out in the middle of the meal, but their taste made up for the odd timing.

The ribs and steak were delicious. The steak was medium-rare just how I ordered it. Those are two meals I would personally recommend. The portions were generous and the barbecue sauce was a perfect match with the ribs. The sweet potato fries were very well made.

Other enjoyable meals are the prime rib, a favorite of Russ and his wife, and the crispy chicken salad, which they said is popular.

For dessert I had the delicious snickers cheesecake. They also offer a selection of other cheesecakes and a raspberry sponge cake.

If you are looking for a not-too-extravagant date or a nice night out with some friends, Rusty's is the answer. Make sure you are willing to take your time and are not in a rush for anything. Other than the calamari and the lack of bread plates, the food and accommodations were great.

If you are looking for something quick they also have a bar and a room in the back for larger groups.

FOR THE SPORTS FANATIC

Damon's

- Upbeat, sporty atmosphere
- Separate room for private dining
- Best place to watch football

By Chris Petersen
Contributing Writer

If you have a car and are getting a little sick of the food in the Bostwick Cafeteria, maybe it is time to take that five-minute drive and visit Damon's Grill.

A fairly new addition to Kelly Commons on U.S. Route 15 North, Damon's Grill has been open since Nov. 15, 2005 and quickly became many students' favorite place to eat.

At Damon's you have the unique opportunity to enjoy great food, such as the signature ribs or onion loaf, while watching almost any sports game you want. Four big-screen televisions adorn the main dining room and countless others are scattered throughout the restaurant.

"It is a great atmosphere," Assistant Manager Jamie said. "It is a really upbeat and fun place to work."

As soon as I sat down I knew this was not going to be a normal dining experience. With Fall Out Boy, Tom Petty and Lifehouse heading up the nonstop music list, our waitress, Jess, asked if we just wanted to eat or if we wanted an "NTN" remote.

One of the big-screen televisions showed a trivia game known as NTN. Anyone in the restaurant could answer a series of trivia questions in order to accumulate enough points to beat the rest of the participants.

"People come here specifically to play NTN," Jess said. "It is a great way to pass time while you wait for your food or drinks to be served."

Damon's is heaven for a sports fan. Scattered among the televisions are framed and autographed jerseys and photographs of both high school and college athletes, not to mention a significant amount of University apparel.

While I waited for my meal to arrive I turned on the "Soundog" on the table, which gave me the choice of listening to any of the four big-screen televisions at the front of the room.

After only a 10-minute wait Jess returned with my succulent prime rib and shrimp combo, as well as my dining partner's bacon cheeseburger combo.

The food was delicious. Jess brought out new drinks before we finished our first drinks and Jamie walked to every table to ensure that everyone was having a pleasant experience. To top it off, the reasonable bill of around $25 for two made it a very worthwhile experience.

Impressed by the friendly atmosphere and wonderful food, I asked several University students their impressions of Damon's.

"Not only is the food great; Damon's is really supportive of [University] sports," Erin Williams '09 said. "It is exciting to see that the Lewisburg community is just as enthusiastic and excited about [University] athletics as the students are."

Damon's is open seven days a week from 11 a.m. to 11 p.m., and to midnight on weekends. The restaurant offers half-price appetizers on Monday and Wednesday as well as "Happy Hour" Tuesday to Friday and Sunday from 5-7 p.m., with discounts on numerous drinks.

So if you have a car or are willing to walk a few miles, Damon's is one of the few places in Lewisburg that seems to have a truly relaxed college atmosphere. Whether you order take-out at the "Curbside Pick-Up" or sit down for a nice lunch or dinner, Damon's is definitely one of the most entertaining places you will ever come across.

Not too long ago, you chose a small college in the middle of cow country. And, wisely, it chose you, too.

Now go ahead and make another good choice.

For dinner.

The Inn at New Berlin is a short, 10-minute drive from the Bucknell campus, on scenic country roads. It's a perfect distraction from writing papers – or grading them.

Students and faculty love our relaxed atmosphere and our award-winning dining, while parents appreciate the luxurious lodging during parents' weekend and graduations. But don't wait till then to discover us!

Dine. Shop. Stay.

570-966-0321 InnAtNewBerlin.com

Another tantalizing edition brought to you by ...

Love and the Bubble

Dear Ms. O,

I always hear that guys like girls to talk dirty in the bedroom but I always feel so silly when I try. Do you have any tips for making the bedside chatter flow smoothly and still be steamy?

Tongue-Tied

Dear Tongue-Tied,

Talking dirty can be a great addition to your sex life. It makes things hotter and provides a great way to open up communication. And you can learn each other's sexual preferences while you're actually having sex.

Part of the thrill of talking dirty is saying words you're not "supposed" to say.

The first thing to do is to decide on the terms you're okay with using. There is a whole range of words and phrases that can be thrown into a bedroom session. Some are just considered dirtier than others.

If you're not used to using the words and phrases you decide on, say them out loud a few times to yourself, so you can get used to hearing them in your own voice. Thinking and saying the words can be two different things.

Also, don't start off with extreme naughty talk if you're not sure how your guy will react. His comfort level should be taken into consideration. Test the waters.

It may also help if you start by whispering the dirty things on your mind, because it's still sexy but seems a little less forward. You can find your comfort zone and then expand on it as your comfort levels increase.

Don't focus so much on what you're saying that you forget to enjoy the experience. Talking dirty is meant to enhance the sexual encounter, not become the primary activity.

The easiest way to implement talking dirty is to go with the mood. Say what's on your mind. Tell him what you want him to do, what turns you on. Tell him what you want to do to him. Tell him how good it feels being with him.

Once you feel comfortable, mix it up between whispering and saying it loud. Switch from naughty to nice and back again. Moaning never hurts either.

Make sure you use specific terms. The more exact you are, the more vivid a mental picture you create, thus raising the intensity. The whole point of adding dirty talk to your repertoire is to stimulate pleasure and the imagination. So don't be afraid to get a little graphic.

The more you show you're comfortable with dirty talk, the more likely it is to become a conversation. Most guys will respond, but remember, it may take time for them to find their comfort levels as well.

He is likely to tell you what he enjoys and this way you will be able to find out what turns him on without having to ask him. Listen to what he says, and if you want to, do it.

This works both ways. When you tell him what you want, he is more likely to do it because he knows exactly how you want it.

Typically, guys love this type of affirmation. They want to know exactly how to pleasure you, and since you're telling him it makes him all the more eager to please.

By getting comfortable with talking dirty in the bedroom, you can use your skills in others areas of your sex life too. Sending him a dirty text or IM in the middle of the day increases his anticipation for later. If you and your guy ever need a little pick-me-up while you're apart, phone sex will be a more viable option – you'll already have the dirty talk down.

Whatever your preferences, remember that talking dirty is not a requirement for your sex life. Your experience can be just as sexy and meaningful, and some people are just not comfortable with it. It may also work with some partners but not others. It is not essential to making sex exciting.

That's what toys are for.

~Ms. O

E-mail me your questions at MsOintheBubble@yahoo.com or send them through campus mail to Ms. O, The Bucknellian, C-3952. All authors of questions will remain anonymous.

Send your secrets to
The Bucknellian!
Create a postcard and mail to C3952

GROWING UP

By Melissa Duffy
Contributing Writer

Boy bands. Disney movies. The "real" Nickelodeon. Oh, how we loved the '90s. As the young generation of the past decade passes the threshold from childhood to adulthood, nostalgia for the 1990s has entrenched itself as its own lighthearted component of today's pop culture.

A simple search for "the '90s" on the college phenomenon Facebook will yield hundreds of results that dedicate themselves solely to the fads of the happy decade. Over the past few years, VH1 has entertained millions of sentimental viewers with its show "I Love the 90s," featuring topics ranging from music to movies to the most ridiculous outfits of the decade. But why all the hoopla for a time so recently past?

"The '90s were a great time to grow up," Barbara Perlman '09 said. "They were definitely an easier, more prosperous time between the end of the Cold War and the onset of the 'war on terrorism.' People seemed to have more time, money and energy to indulge in things that we now might consider to be more frivolous."

Lauren Jaeger '09 recalls the '90s as a decade of "watching 'Boy Meets World' on television network ABC's 'TGIF' show lineup [and] wanting a twin so I could be like Mary Kate and Ashley" from the popular television series "Full House". Who doesn't remember the days of settling in with a peanut butter and jelly sandwich to watch a favorite episode of "Sesame Street," "Barney," "Muppet Babies" or "Reading Rainbow?"

"'Sesame Street' rocked... and even my mom kept watching it for three years after I stopped," said Eli Bowen '09, reflecting upon his childhood as a daytime television connoisseur.

Other popular favorites catered more specifically to gender-based appeal less common on today's television networking. Little girls enjoyed the endeavors of Firefly and Thunder in "My Little Pony," of Starlight and Rainbow in "Rainbow Brite" and the whole family of "Care Bears." Little boys, in turn, chose favorites from "Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles," "Mighty Morphin' Power Rangers" and "Batman."

The phenomenon of the "number one kid's station," Nickelodeon, also had a large impact on the free time of '90s youngsters.

"We loved 'Legends of the Hidden Temple,'" Jaeger said. "This year for Halloween, a bunch of us are dressing up as members from the different teams. Who wouldn't want to be a blue barracuda?"

Another Facebook search for the popular children's network currently yields 290 groups dedicated to nostalgic love for childhood television favorites.

"Children's television in the '90s seemed to be much simpler...the point of TV was to keep kids entertained and maybe educate them in the process," Perlman said. "It didn't take itself as seriously as educational television does today, or on the other side of the spectrum, make really fresh material seem as acceptable. I suppose that the disparity between the '90s and today's TV for kids is just a sign of the times."

When asked about the decade, not everyone immediately thinks back to the days of "Rugrats," "Doug" and "Salute your Shorts."

"The show about nothing, 'Seinfeld,' was 'Cheers' for Generation X," Todd Mueller '07 said.

Other favorite teen, adult or family sitcoms such as "Friends," "Wings," "The Nanny" and "Home Improvement" all strike resonant chords with people of all ages across the country. Even today, a large portion of younger siblings can religiously recite the catchy introductory rap for "The Fresh Prince of Bel Air" ("This is a story all about how..."), mimic the endearingly dorky habits of "Family Matters's" Urkel, or said.

Courtesy of Google Images

Outside of the vivid world of rapidly-developing visual effects the '90s is remembered for, music also made quite an impact on new listeners.

"What I remember most about the '90s was how inescapable the boy bands and pop musicians were," Andrew Loucks '09 said.

Indeed, the birth of MTV's "Total Request Live" brought music to the center of pre-teens' emotional and pre-pubescent education. Each day before our eyes, the crooning melodies of the multi-platinum boy bands like the Backstreet Boys and N'SYNC broke the hearts of girls everywhere, whereas the pretty smiles of Britney Spears and Christina Aguilera had boys in living rooms across the United States forgetting that they had suffered through fifty-five minutes of Carson Daly, Nick Carter, Justin Timberlake and Nick Lachey for a mere two-minute glimpse of their leading ladies.

Music was not all boy bands and pop princesses, however.

"I've only just begun listening to stuff from the '90s like Nine Inch Nails," Hinshaw said.

Not only did the decade give birth to classics such as Nirvana's "Smells Like Teen Spirit," Semisonic's "Closing Time" and The Verve's "Bitter Sweet Symphony," it also gave rise to the increasing popularity of the rap genre. Artists such as controversial Eminem brought the worlds of music, politics, morals and ethics into debate. The topics of social censorship relevant to thematic elements and language common in Eminem-like music now clearly stand as precursors to the usage to similar language in schools across the United States. "What it comes down to is that everyone feels an inclination toward the whole 'when I was young' frame of mind at some point," Perlman said. "People who grew up in or got used to the relative ease of the '90s have sort of been thrown into shock about the seriousness of our situation now, and they miss 'the good old days,' even though they only happen to be a few years ago. It's the same concept, only it's happening much earlier."

Perhaps the magic of the '90s is the decade's air of frivolity, or its shameless attention to the details of the pop culture whose greatest worries revolved around the television guide, the box office and the Billboard charts. Topics ranging from fads to the Clinton impeachment to the advancement of the computer to the evolution of the English language all seem to take the back seat to the wonderful world of entertainment birthed during the period. Maybe this is due to the genuine interests of the '90s generation, or perhaps the '90s really were as carefree as most of us remember them to be. It is even possible that the positive perception of the '90s stems from the need to remember a time in the world less stressful than that of the present. Regardless of the reason, we did love our pop culture and growing up in the '90s.

STYLE

Why we refuse to do our assigned homework

By Rajaa Qadri
Writer

We hear about it. We talk about it. We fear it. We see others do it. We do it ourselves.

Yes, I am talking about procrastination.

Procrastination is a highly-contagious viral infection. It passes from one individual to another in no time. It is usually common among first-year students but you can find it anywhere and anytime. Yes, whether first-year students like it or not, they are highly vulnerable victims.

We know an assignment is due the next day, but we will still put it off for as long as possible. We know there is a major exam on Monday, but for some strange reason we will not start studying until Sunday night.

The idea of going to Seventh Street Café at 1 a.m. seems much more important than the paper that is due the next morning. And sometimes, no matter how hard we try, things just do not get done.

Interestingly enough, we have no idea why we procrastinate most of the time.

"I don't usually realize that I am procrastinating," Walter John Schwenger '10 said. "It just feels good. It gives me time to do things that I want to do like watch movies or hang around with friends, and most of the time I get things done under pressure."

Procrastination is an understandable behavior among first-year students, as it is often their first time away from home. They are facing different types of challenges at the same time.

You can overcome procrastination by simply reducing the pain and increasing the pleasure you associate with beginning an assignment.

"I get easily distracted," Amanda Rose '10 said. "It's just that I am still adjusting to life here and the sudden load of coursework overwhelms me at times. Procrastination actually prevents me from being homesick. It fills the gaps."

Prolonged procrastination frequently leads to major problems in your career and personal life. The first year is the time when students start to make their own choices and determine how they want to lead their lives in future. Habits formed in the first year of a person's college careers are likely to leave a significant impact on his or her personality. Considering this, some first-year students regret procrastinating.

"I sometimes find myself being guilty of procrastinating," Patti Le Sesne '10 said. "Procrastination is not a good habit to have unless you are good at working under pressure of time. And even with being able to work under pressure, it is still good to get your work done in advance, but procrastination is a hard habit to break."

Remember, procrastination is not simply laziness. It is when you willfully put off something that should be done. If students do not consider this issue at this stage, they will most likely suffer in the workforce as well as in their personal lives.

Students tend to procrastinate because they assume their work is harder than it actually is. They want to do it at the last moment to "get it over with." The key is not to think you HAVE to do it, but you WANT to do it.

Saying you have to do a particular assignment means you are forced to do it. The idea of being forced is not intriguing for anyone. If you want to do something and give it a try, there is a chance you will get it done and get it right.

Another reason why first-year students procrastinate is the coursework depresses them.

Students think most assignments are difficult to understand, requiring hours of concentration in solitude and putting your life on hold for that time. This type of thinking triggers a rebellious action toward that particular assignment, such as putting it off until the last minute.

The key is to relax. If you have to read 40 pages for one class, try not to complete the reading in one sitting. Give yourself breaks. Get up and stretch. Go get a snack. This keeps your blood flowing and you will concentrate more on the work.

Making studying and reading fun will help you stop procrastinating. Once you are done with the reading, reward yourself by watching your favorite TV show or hanging out with friends. The more you try to enjoy your work, the more unlikely you are to waste time.

Procrastination is almost always associated with some sort of pain or unpleasantness caused by the task you are trying to accomplish. You can overcome procrastination by simply reducing the pain and increasing the pleasure you associate with beginning an assignment.

And if you simply cannot associate pleasure with an assignment, just keep this in mind: the sooner you begin a task, the sooner you will finish it.

The Bucknellian
September 29, 2006
Sports
Volume 138, Number 5 Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Voyage to Macedonia

Writing center director Deirdre O'Connor attended an international poetry conference in Europe in August.

See page B9

Soccer strikes in eight straight

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

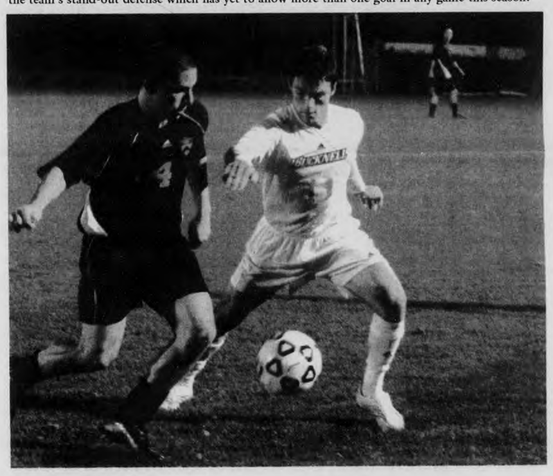
Above: Andy Kummer '08 tracks down the ball in Wednesday's match against Princeton. Kummer has played in eight games this year, starting a career high four matches.
Below: Joe Mellott '08 fights for possession in an earlier game this year. Mellott is a member of the team's stand-out defense which has yet to allow more than one goal in any game this season.



By John Mlodzinski
Staff Writer

Bucknell 2
Army 0

The men's soccer team extended its unbeaten streak to eight games with a 2-0 victory against Army on Saturday. The unbeaten streak is the third longest in University history.

The first half featured few scoring chances, except for a goal by Army called back due to offsides. The Bison offense came to life in the second half, scoring just over seven minutes into the half.

Conor O'Brien '10 gained possession and kicked the ball toward the Army net. Army goalkeeper A.J. Glubzinski misplayed the ball, and Alex Russo '09 got past Glubzinski and put the ball in the net for his team-high fifth goal of the season.

Five minutes later Jason Soto '09 threw the ball in to Nathan LaGrave '10. LaGrave passed the ball to O'Brien who easily deposited it in the net. It appeared Kevin Holmes '08 gave the Bison a 3-0 lead toward the end of the second half until an offside call negated the goal.

The Bison improved to 7-1-2 overall and 2-0-0 in Patriot League play. Joey Kuterbach '08 made four saves and picked up his third consecutive shutout and fourth of the season.

"The defenders do an excellent job in front of me, and it makes getting shutouts much easier when you have four solid backs in front of you," Kuterbach said.

"The offense we are creating this year also takes a lot of pressure off me to 'save the game,' which makes our defenders and me play better."

Russo also leads the team in points with 12 while LaGrave is right behind him in goals and points, with four and 11 respectively.

"I feel like I am blessed to be in a position to score goals for our team," Russo said. "Last year they didn't come easy, and before the season started, we didn't know where they were going to come from this year. Our midfield, especially freshman Conor O'Brien, makes it possible for me to score goals. Their hard work and unselfish play allows me to do what I do."

It may be hard to imagine this team getting better, but many players believe they have not shown the best of Bison soccer yet.

"The first thing that comes to mind when considering the team's play is that there is plenty of room for improvement," Kuterbach said.

"We do realize that the toughest part of our schedule is yet to come, so we cannot get complacent or over-confident, and still need to look to putting some complete 90-minute performances together."

"We're about to enter the tougher half [of] our season with games against Lehigh, Lafayette, American, Maryland and Penn State all on the road," Russo said. "Scoring goals and winning is going to be a team effort from back to front."

The Bison are currently in a three-way tie for first in the Patriot League, along with Colgate and Lehigh.

They will continue their three-game homestand when they return to action against Colgate at 4 p.m. on Saturday.

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Men's water polo places fourth at ECAC championship

Squad downs Brown, while dropping games to Princeton and St. Francis

By Ty Clark
Staff Writer

The men's water polo team took fourth place at the ECAC Championship for the second year in a row in a weekend of tight competition.

The Bison took on fifth-seed and tournament host Brown for their first match, escaping with an 8-5 win.

Bucknell 8
Brown 5

The Bison relied heavily on their fantastic defense, which turned in its second-best defensive effort of the season.

Aside from the opening quarter, the Bison limited Brown to one goal per quarter and stopped five of Brown's six 6-on-5 opportunities.

Head Coach John Zeigler '91 was pleased with the results.

"It was great to control the game against the home team, particularly in a game against a longtime rival that dates back to the '70s," Zeigler said. "Sean Robinson '07 also had a breakout offensive performance with four strong goals."

Josh Sunday '08 also played a strong game and tied a personal high with four steals.

After a strong opening performance the Bison took on No. 14 St. Francis, falling to the Terriers. After a slow start the Bison pulled close but never took the lead before falling 13-11 to the eventual tournament champions.

St. Francis 13
Bucknell 11

Mark Masterson '07 avenged his scoreless game earlier in the day tying Sunday for team-high honors with three goals. Kyle Roslyn '08 netted two goals to go along with his three assists and goalkeeper Luke Belenky '08 enjoyed a strong showing in goal with seven saves.

"We just mis-communicated or allowed players to take strike zone positioning and shots on multiple goals. As a result we were able to keep things close with St. Francis, but never could mount a charge to take over the game."
—John Zeigler '91, head coach

"The strong defense we showed against Brown escaped us in the next two games," Zeigler said. "We just mis-communicated or allowed players to take strike-zone positioning and shots on multiple goals. As a result we were able to keep things close with St. Francis, but never could mount a charge to take over the game."

In the final contest the Bison fell 12-4 to No. 16 Princeton. The score was close after the first quarter, but Princeton tallied six goals in the second quarter to increase its lead to seven, and the Bison could not recover.

Princeton 12
Bucknell 4

Zeigler again saw some problems.

"That combination of inconsistent defense and [a] struggling offense led to the frustrating Princeton game," Zeigler said. "Princeton made us pay for all of our mistakes; as the score reflected, we made plenty of them."

Tonight at 8 the Bison get a second chance to defeat Princeton, hosting them as part of a critical three-game set against league opponents. After taking on the Tigers, Saturday's action will feature games against George Washington and Navy, when the Bison will work to improve their 1-0 league record.

At this point in the season, the team turns its focus toward securing a top seed for Southern Championships. With a record marred only by losses to ranked teams, they are in a good position to do so. Tonight and Saturday will have a large say in the standings.

Women's golf ties team record

By Wes Trowbridge
Contributing Writer

Propelled by two career-best performances and a team record, the women's golf team played a very solid final 36 holes, capturing sixth place at the Nittany Lion Invitational over the weekend.

After a steady 334 under difficult playing conditions Friday, the Bison rebounded with two solid performances to move up three places in an extremely competitive field. Saturday's round of 314 catapulted the team into sixth place and tied the team record set last spring in the Big South Championship.

Amy Loughney '08 fired the fourth best round of the day, a 3-over-par 75, tying her career best and flirting with the school record, if not for a double bogey on the 17th hole.

"I had gotten my swing-rhythm back, which allowed me to hit 13 greens," Loughney said. "I struggled a bit with my putting, but I made a lot of pars."

The team shot a 318 , securing a sixth place finish in the field of 14, just one stroke behind University of North Carolina-Greensboro and Rollins College on Sunday.

Team captain Teri Schlang '07 had the fourth-best score of the day on, a career best 75 on Sunday. Schlang's previous career low was 77, which she accomplished several times.

"Individually, it was really exciting to shoot 75; it is something I have been waiting to have happen for two years now and I feel it will only help my playing improve because now I have proof that I can play to my potential," Schlang said.

In addition to the outstanding rounds by Schlang and Loughney, it was the consistent play of two other Bison golfers which led the team in scoring. The Bison's lowest 54-hole total was 240 by Kathryn Batchelor '08, whose consistent rounds of 80-79-81 placed her in a tie for 18th individually. Deirdre Moran '09 carded rounds of 82-80-79, one stroke behind Batchelor, and tied for 22nd with 241.

Schlang, shooting 242 (87-

See GOLF page B5

Women's soccer continues winning ways

Orange and Blue begin Patriot League play on four-game winning streak, host Colgate Saturday evening

By Joseph Debraggio
Contributing Writer

A two-goal outing for Krista Lee Gentile '08 and a shutout for goalie Katie Dry '07 allowed the women's soccer team to beat the Duquesne Dukes 3-0 and to extend their winning streak to four games.

The Bison took control of the game early. Less than three minutes into the game, Jennifer Dervarics '09 had a slashing run, but her shot went wide to the right of the goal.

Bucknell 3
Duquesne 0

The Orange and Blue continued to get close chances, putting a shot off the crossbar and another just over the top of the goal. With just over 11 minutes to go in the half, Dervarics went on a run down the entire field before being taken down in the box right after she passed to Gentile. The Orange and Blue were awarded a penalty kick and Gentile put the shot in the bottom left corner to give the Bison a 1-0 lead.

Gentile scored again around the 40-minute mark. A long throw-in from Chelsea McGorry '10 was knocked around in the box until Gentile slotted the ball into the left side of the goal for her second goal of the game and her fifth goal of the season. Gentile is now tied with Dervarics with five goals apiece for the team lead. Kimberly Cannon '08 had the assist on the second goal.

The Dukes took advantage of having the wind at their backs in the second half and pushed more on offense, attempting to get on the scoreboard. The Bison's defense was more than up to the task with Dry making some fine saves, including shutting down a dangerous scoring chance for Duquesne off of a corner kick in the 54th minute. Dry had five saves in the game and the defense recorded its third shutout of the season.

In the 72nd minute the Bison scored again. Chelsea Brinkman '10 hit a screaming shot from 25 yards out and left the Dukes' goalkeeper with no chance. Her shot curved into the upper-right corner of the goal and gave the Bison the 3-0 lead that would be the final score.

> "We'll focus on our strength, fitness, but specifically, our speed of play on the ball and communication and organization defensively."
> —Benjamin Landis, head coach

A few more saves from Dry, including snatching the ball out of the air and away from an attacking Duke, and the game was over.

Things look good for the team with the offense scoring and the defense gelling just in time for their Patriot League opener against rival Colgate.

"It is always good to win, especially at home," Head Coach Benjamin Landis said, "and the clean sheet was gratifying knowing how well our backs and GK [goalkeeper] are playing together right now."

"The game was a good confidence builder for our defense," Dry said. "We are playing a new three back system which can be difficult to play well."

The Orange and Blue had no games this week; their meeting tomorrow with Colgate is the center of attention.

"We'll focus on our strength, fitness, but specifically, our speed of play on the ball and communication and organization defensively," Landis said. "There's a lot of time between games for us this week so we want to be ready, but not too ready too early."

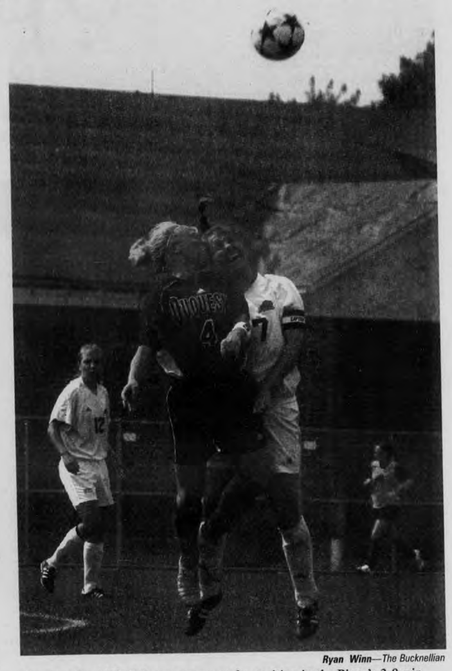
The team has had trouble in the past against a very strong Colgate squad.

"Opening the league against Colgate is always a challenge," Dry said. "The past two years we've played them away, but this year we're playing them at home. We need to have a solid week of practice and be able to channel the energy that comes from playing such a big game at home into something productive."

The game marks the first home night game for the Bison against the Raiders.

"We've never hosted Colgate for a home night game before, and we hope our supporters give us that extra lift while making it difficult for Colgate to feel comfortable when playing in Lewisburg," Landis said.

The women's soccer team has delivered its fans a message, and it is time for the fans to respond. The game is at 7 p.m. Saturday at West Fields.



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Shannon Curd '07 fights an opponent for position in the Bison's 3-0 win over Duquesne. Curd is team captain and reigning Patriot League Tournament MVP.

Cross Country races to impressive finish

Women's team show depth with win, while first-year men impress with second place showing at Altoona

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

The women's cross country team gets off to good start in the most recent home meet. The women's team won the Penn State Altoona Invitational, beating Robert Morris and Juniata.

By Brian Mulligan
Sports Editor

The women's cross country team won the Penn State Altoona Invitational on Saturday, crushed varsity programs from Robert Morris University and Juniata College.

The men's team sent an all first-year squad, giving the younger members experience running at a varsity level. They performed with confidence, taking second to Robert Morris.

"[This was] a developmental meet for our athletes that don't get a chance to travel and run on the varsity squad," Head Coach Kevin Donner said. "It helps us gauge the future of these young athletes and gives them a chance to gain racing experience."

The challenging 5,000-meter women's race course with many hills and a soft terrain from the rain the night before did not hinder the Orange and Blue.

Molly Burke '10 led the Bison with a fourth-place finish in 20 minutes 56 seconds. Teammate Lisa Prybella '08 crossed the finish line 10 seconds later, taking seventh overall. Ashley Behre '09 and Erin Heidecker '10 had a back-to-back finish, taking eighth and ninth respectively. Gaby Skovira '10 grabbed 11th place, finishing in 21:35.

The women's team won the meet with a total of 39 points, while the next-closest team from Robert Morris scored 45 points. Juniata rounded out the top-three with 63 total points.

On the men's side, the first-year runners surprised rival teams, placing second overall on a 7,500-meter race course.

Conor McNamara '10 crossed the finish line first for the Bison, taking sixth place. Zak Elmanakhly '10 took ninth place with 26:20, while classmate Baron Willeford finished only two spots behind him with 26:39. Kevin McGoldrick '10 and Austin Ricker '10 were the last two scorers for the Orange and Blue, finishing thirteenth and fourteenth respectively.

"It was great to run with an all-freshmen team. It really allowed us to bond as a class, as well as give us a glimpse of the what the future of Bucknell [cross country] is going to be," McGoldrcik said. "I think we're all as excited for the coming seasons as we are for the current one."

The men lost to Robert Morris by a score of 49-53 while the team beat Juniata College, outscoring them by 18 points. The second place finish among varsity programs bodes well for the future of the men's program.

"Our freshman team ran an outstanding race," Donner said. "They went out easy and moved up the crowd, and we almost won the meet against varsity programs. It's a very good indicator for the future."

The squad will be back in action at 2 p.m. today at the Paul Short Invitational in Bethlehem, Pa. The invitational marks the first large meet for the Bison and includes Patriot League and Mid-Atlantic competition.

> "It was great to run with an all-freshmen team. It really allowed us to bond as a class, as well as give us a glimpse of the what the future of Bucknell [cross country] is going to be."
> —Kevin McGoldrick '10

The Orange and Blue will compete against nationally ranked schools such as the University of Wisconsin and the University of Tennessee for the women and Villanova University on the men's side.

A Bucknell Tradition Since 1968

bull run inn

Open 7 days a week: Mon. – Sat. 11:30 a.m.—2 a.m. and Sunday 11:30 a.m. – midnight

605 Market St., downtown Lewisburg
ph: (570) 524-2572
www.bullruninn.com
(check for current features and events)

Now serving SUNDAY BRUNCH
11:30 a.m.—2 p.m.

Live Bands /Karaoke (no cover/21 & over):
Oct. 12—Blue Suede Goo

POP QUIZ—Tuesday's—9—11 p.m.

Trick or Treat at Bull Run Inn
Halloween Pop Quiz
Costume Contests between rounds
Tues, Oct. 31 @ 9 p.m.

Monday Night Football @ 9 p.m.
drawings & specials

Villager GMAC Real Estate
521 N. Derr Dr. Lewisburg, PA 17837
570-523-3244

CALL US FOR THE LARGEST SELECTION OF RENTALS IN TOWN
1-5 Bedroom Units
Houses or Apartments for 2007/2008 and 2008/2009

A few choice units for 06/07 left!

Call Linda or Duska or e-mail us at linda-treese@villagerrealty.com or duska_rishel@yahoo.com for a complete list of our rentals.

Write for Sports
Contact msaylor@

Joseph Carroll Salon
Hair Care for the Entire Family

Stop in before September 30 to enter into a raffle to win a free instant hot lather machine or basket of hair care products!
No purchase or service necessary.

431 Market Street, Lewisburg
524-0790

Open Tuesday-Saturday
We accept Walk-Ins when time permits.

Volleyball splits pair of Patriot League matches

Women start conference schedule with four straight road games, head to Lehigh and Lafayette this weekend

By Ellis Hudes
Staff Writer

The women's volleyball team went 1-1 over the weekend in its first two Patriot League matches of the season. The Bison found themselves at both ends of a sweep, defeating Holy Cross and falling to league leader Army.

The team concluded league play this weekend after being swept by the Black Knights at the Gillis Field House in West Point, N.Y. Army took all three games, the first game 30-21 and the last two 30-15.

Bucknell 2
Army 0

"A number of things went wrong for us against Army," Head Coach Cynthia Opalski said. "We made too many unnecessary hitting errors and the slow start didn't help either. The execution simply wasn't there."

The Bison intend to bounce back after such a tough loss; They have a positive outlook for the coming weeks.

"Rebounding after this loss is a good test for our team," Emilie Hardinge '09 said. "Coming together as a team and working together to reach this goal is what it's all about for us."

Statistically, Jenna Henderson '08 was the major standout for the Bison with a team-high seven kills and six digs.

Sarah Groman '07 contributed an additional five kills for the team's offense while Shannon Pitsch '09 continued to excel as the team's primary setter by posting 21 assists and six digs.

In the middle, Kristen Sydlowski '07 added nine digs. The Bison had a hitting percentage of .039 in the match.

The Black Knights now own the best league record (3-0) as well as the best overall record (12-2) in the Patriot League.

The Bison move to 9-7 overall this year and into a third place tie with four other teams in the Patriot League standings.

In their first Patriot League match this season, the Bison swept the Holy Cross Crusaders at the Hart Center in Worcester, Mass. to begin their two-day road trip. With the score at 20-19 in game one, the Bison collected eight straight points and looked poised to draw first blood, but the Crusaders pulled to within three before the Bison clinched the game 30-25.

Bucknell 3
Holy Cross 0

> "Rebounding after this loss is a good test for our team. Coming together as a team and working together to reach this goal is what it's all about for us."
> —Emilie Hardinge '09

This win carried the team through game two, another close affair but one in which the Bison prevailed. In game three the Bison established a 13-9 lead and never looked back, clinching the match 30-21.

Henderson had 12 kills, 13 digs and two service aces in the contest, her fourth career double-double. Groman hit .393 and posted 13 kills for the Orange and Blue while Jennie Smith '07 hit .389 and chipped in with eight kills and five block assists.

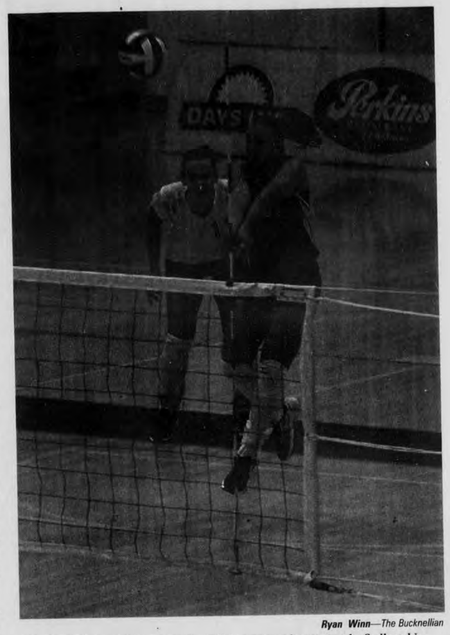
Pitsch and Sydlowski logged some stellar numbers against Holy Cross, the former with 43 assists as well as a career high four service aces, the latter with 21 digs. Allison Brady '07 added to the team's impressive ace total with three of her own.

Henderson was the sole team member to receive an honorable mention for Patriot League Player of the Week. Averaging 3.17 kills per game, Henderson led the Bison with 19 kills.

If any fans are curious about the crazy cheers the bench does both at home and on the road, they can thank Sydlowski and her class year.

"We wanted to come up with something a little more exciting for the bench to do than just shout 'Go team,' so we wrote some new material," Sydlowski said.

The team is on the road once again today and Saturday against Patriot League foes Lehigh and Lafayette.



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Kristen Sydlowski '07 bumps the ball in a recent home match. Sydlowski leads the team in digs and aces, with 279 and 23, respectively.

Masterson makes most of fresh start with Bison

By Barbara Perlman
Sports Editor

Mark Masterson '07 is not any average water polo player with 23 goals, seven assists and two player of the week awards.

As a transfer from University of California-Irvine, Masterson has made a huge impact as a Bison in the year and a half he has worn the orange and blue.

"After a couple years there [at UC Irvine], I became dissatisfied with the large class sizes and lack of college atmosphere," Masterson said. "I decided that I wanted a more traditional college experience...Inside and outside of the classroom, Bucknell exudes the college atmosphere and my biggest regret I have is that I did not come here freshman year."

Despite being a Bison for only a little more than a year, Masterson has emerged as a leader and became "our unanimous captain... as voted by the team [which is impressive] considering that he transferred in from another program as a junior," Head Coach John Zeigler '91 said.

Masterson has continuously demonstrated his leadership this season, as he has started in every possible game. He also leads the team in goals and is third in assists with seven.

"Mark scores big goals at big times," Zeigler said. "He leads the team thus far [in goals]...and has already reached 100 career points [even though this is] just the early part of his second season."

As one of only two seniors on the team, Masterson serves as a role model for his younger teammates.

"Mark brings experience, leadership and a level head to the pool which helps many of our younger players adjust to the collegiate game and big game pressure," Zeigler said.

With his current success Masterson is quick to praise his teammates, attributing much of his achievement to them. He states that without the rest of the team, he not would be as successful.

Under Masterson's leadership, the team has a 6-4 record, facing many top 20 teams.

"A big part of our success so far this year has been great team play," Masterson said. "Every game we have had multiple players step up both on the offensive and defensive ends of the pool."

Masterson has both the drive to win as well as a love for his team that is essential for success. He leads by example, giving his all throughout the year. Over the summer he played for a club team comprised of players who came from as far as Eastern Europe and South Africa. This prepared him for the challenging season to come.

"[I've always been told] that to be a good leader, you must lead by example, so that is what I try and do every day," Masterson said.

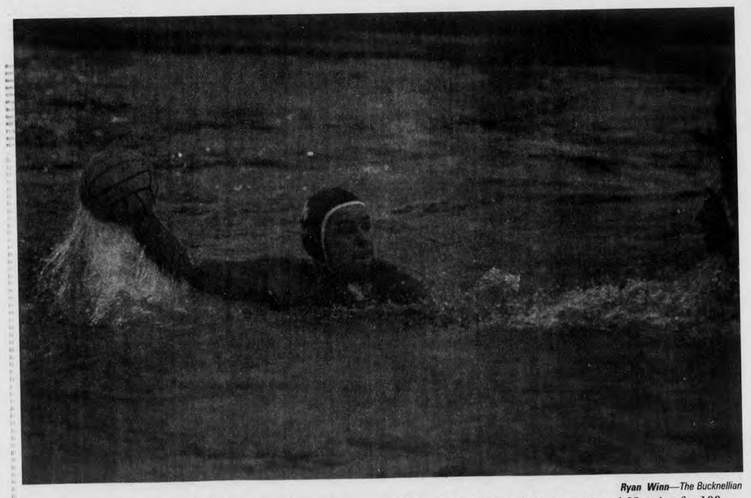
This mentality has really helped, as the entire team continues to give every practice, game and meeting their full effort. The Bison will need to continue this attitude as they carry on their challenging season.

Masterson hopes the team continues to remain consistent.

As a senior, Masterson hopes to go to Australia to play water polo and travel after graduation.

"As of now, my post-Bucknell plans are contingent upon a couple of issues," Masterson said. "Because I transferred here, some of my credits didn't transfer and I may have another year of eligibility left so you may just see me on campus come next fall."

This possibility is not necessarily a bad thing, as Masterson's leadership, skills and enthusiasm are evident both in and out of the pool.



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Mark Masterson '07 winds up to fire the ball. In 42 career games with the Bison, Masterson has 71 goals and 29 assists for 100 points.

Women's tennis shows promise at Quinnipiac

By Kyle Barndollar
Contributing Writer

The women's tennis team competed in the Quinnipiac Invitational this weekend in Hamden, Conn. The very young squad achieved uncharacteristic results, winning two finals on Sunday. Tania Varela '10 was the highlight of the weekend for the Bison, winning a singles title as well as teaming up with Ashley Globerman '09 for a doubles victory.

Varela, a first-year student from Ecuador, defeated Amanda El-Togby from Seton Hall in a tiebreaker for the flight B singles title 3-6, 7-6, (7-1). The win was a very promising step in the young player's career, after the struggles of adjusting from a clay court slowed Varela's progression earlier in the year. Now Varela seems to be on track, and Head Coach Rebecca Helt has high hopes for the first-year.

"I have little doubt that she will be one of the top players in the Patriot League this year," Helt said.

The Bison also performed exceedingly well in doubles play over the weekend. Of the eight duos that made up the semifinal matches in flights A and B, three were from the University, which was more athletes than from any other school at the tournament. Varela and Globerman dropped Seton Hall's El-Tobgy and Iva Gyurgina 8-4 in the semifinal match, and then proceeded to overtake Alice Chen and Pascaline Cette of the University of Maryland Baltimore County (UMBC) 8-1 in the flight A final.

"Winning the A flight doubles final 8-1 says a great deal about the talent of this years' squad," Helt said.

Varela and Globerman are undefeated in doubles play this season.

JoAnna Grossman '09 and Tiffany Card '09 outlasted UMBC's Adriana Fonseca and Cornelia Carapcea 9-7 to advance to the semifinals, where they were knocked off by Monica Myers and Victoria Vasile of Stony Brook 2-8. Carlin Calcaterra '10 and Paulina Gamboa '09 defeated Niki Flach and Sarah Giles-Madden of Army 8-6 to advance to the semifinals, where they were defeated by Chen and Cette of UMBC 3-8.

Gamboa also participated in flight-A singles, falling in a hard fought match to fourth seed Mary Wilson of Quinnipiac in the quarterfinals 4-6, 4-6. Renee Weissend '10 and Kirstyn Sotak '10 each reached the quarterfinals as well, before being knocked out. Weissend was defeated by Liz Dibbs of University of Connecticut 7-6(5), 0-6, (10-12) and Sotak was edged by Bridie Burk of Army, 4-6, 0-6, in the flight D main draw.

"I didn't go into the tournament with a whole lot of expectations, because we are a very young squad. I was very pleased and impressed with our performance last weekend," Helt said.

With the continuing performance and development of this young team, the Bison will contend for Patriot League supremacy the rest of this season and in years to come.

The tennis team will be at home for the next two weekends, today to Sunday and Oct. 7-8, hosting the Bucknell Invitational. They round out their fall season in Hanover, N. H., with the Intercollegiate Tennis Association Regionals Oct. 19-21.

A MATCH MADE IN HEAVEN
THIS MVP IS NEVER WITHOUT HIS MVP.

PATRIOT LEAGUE MOST VALUABLE PLAYER CHARLES LEE &
BUCKNELL'S MOST VALUABLE PAPER, THE BUCKNELLIAN

Take a time out once a week and go one-on-one with The Bucknellian to stay up to date with all of the action happening on campus.

Enclose this form and a check (made out to The Bucknellian) and mail it to:

The Bucknellian, Bucknell University C3952, 701 Moore Avenue, Lewisburg, PA 17837

Name _____ __ ONE YEAR: receive 24 issues each week for the academic year for only $45, a $15 savings!

Address _____

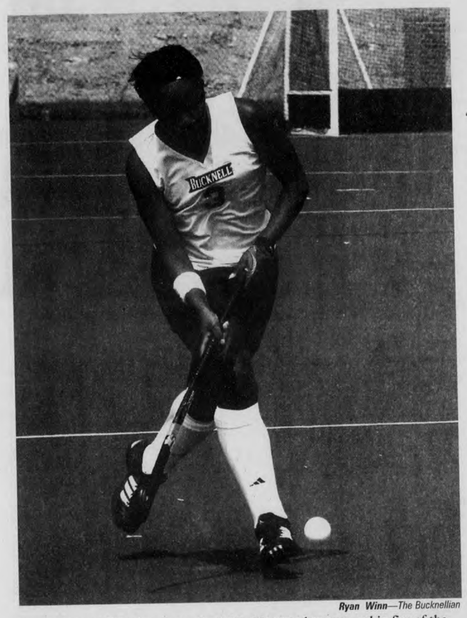
_____

Phone _____ __ ONE SEMESTER: receive 12 issues during the fall or spring semester for $30. Please specify semester: _____

E-mail _____

For more information, contact The Bucknellian at 570-577-1520 or 570-577-1085 or e-mail bucknellian@bucknell.edu.

Field Hockey loses three straight



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Rudo Mawema '09 advances up the field. Mawema has appeared in five of the team's eight games this season and is a transfer from Lindenwood University. The Bison host Lehigh Saturday at 1 p.m.

Georgetown 4
Bucknell 3

By Shannon Pitsch
Staff Writer

The field hockey team learned the importance of execution Saturday, losing to Georgetown University in Washington, D.C. After suffering three straight losses, the Bison dropped to 4-4 and are determined to reestablish the winning streak which characterized their pre-conference play.

The Hoyas began the offense with a goal six minutes into the game. On an assist from Amanda Faust '09, classmate Trina Boyer '08 scored three minutes later to tie the game 1-1.

From there the Bison offense dominated the first half with a diving shot and goal from Katie Urosevich '07 and a second goal from Alex Kyzmir '07. With two minutes left on the half and the goal, assisted by Faust, propelled the team to a 3-1 lead to end the first half.

The Bison defense seemed strong in the first half without senior goalkeeper Emily Groendyke '07, who was unable to play due to a head injury suffered the previous weekend.

Diana Bartley '09 stepped up to the challenge of filling Groendyke's shoes, collecting four saves on the match. Head Coach Heather Lewis was pleased with her performance considering the situation.

At the start of the second half Georgetown's Maggie Farrand scored immediately. In the 54th minute of the game, another Hoya goal was notched on a save from Bartley.

The game remained tied at 3-3 for much of the second half until Georgetown's Lindsay Moramarco scored for the lead. Outshooting the Bison 10-7 the Hoyas overpowered the defense, winning the game 4-3. The win increased Georgetown's season record to 3-5.

"I think all of us are disappointed in the end result at Georgetown," Lewis said. "We jumped out to an early lead and didn't quite carry that momentum through the second half."

Lewis said she was pleased with the first half of play and with the effectiveness of the set pieces.

"I think we've all taken away from this game the fact that we must commit ourselves to 70 minutes of 'Bison Hockey' and put forth the effort and attitude necessary to come out with a good result," Lewis said.

Despite the loss, the Bison are looking ahead to beginning Patriot League competition Saturday.

> "I think we've all taken away from this game the fact that we must commit ourselves to 70 minutes of 'Bison Hockey' and put forth the effort and attitude necessary to come out with a good result."
>
> —Heather Lewis, head coach*

"We're approaching the league season ... with an outlook that everyone is 0-0," Lewis said. "No one has won the league yet and it's up to us to go out and perform at our highest level the next six weeks."

The 4-4 Bison are ranked just behind American University and College of the Holy Cross, which have three losses each.

The Orange and Blue will face Lehigh University at 1 p.m. on Saturday at Graham Field.

"As is the case with any Patriot League contest, the game against Lehigh will be hard fought and will have so much emotion," Lewis said. "I think this team is looking forward to the opportunity Saturday presents against a very good Lehigh team."

GOLF From page B1

80-75), and Loughney, shooting 243 (85-75-83), followed closely behind, finishing 24th and 26th respectively. Emily Chiodo '08 shot rounds of 89-81-87 for a 257.

This was the second tournament of the season for the women's golf team, and their second strong showing after a 13th place finish in an equally competitive field at the Cardinal Classic.

On Sunday, the Bison were paired with a very strong Yale team and a four time Division II National Champion Rollins College squad.

"The experience we had on Sunday [playing with Yale and Rollins College] was great. We learned a lot by watching them; but I think we also realized that we can play just as well as them," Schlang said.

Host team Penn State shot a 54-hole team total of 927, walking away with a 10 shot victory over Yale and Washington, who tied for second.

Off to the best start in team history, the Bison look to continue their success at home Saturday and Sunday in the Bucknell Bison Classic.

Sports is really sweet.

I mean really sweet.

Write for Sports

Contact msaylor@

Men's golf finishes ninth out of 15

By Connie Barko
Staff Writer

The men's golf team had an uphill battle at St. Bonaventure's Keenan Invitational on Sunday and Monday.

"I think we were all a little disappointed with our performance at St. Bonnie's this past weekend," Kyle Moran '07 said. "The course was playing tough in the first round because of the strong winds. It seemed to be swirling all day and it was hard to get something going....Day two was more of the same; we had a very similar performance as a team....The wind was not blowing quite as hard, but it was still difficult."

After finishing in sixth place on Sunday, the squad slid into a final standing of ninth with a total score of 600, two strokes behind the eighth place Canisius College.

The Bison were led by Charlie Waddell '07 who first shot a 76 but improved his performance with a final round of 72. He finished eight over par with 148 overall. His performance earned him 21st in the final standings, tied with Brent Deighan of Ottawa and Jack Wallace of Drexel.

"Today wasn't the best of weekends for the team or for me personally," Waddell said. "We had a good opportunity to continue our roll through the fall and didn't capitalize."

Keita Aoki '08 shot 74-75 and tied for 24th. He was nine over par. Ryan Schneiter '10 had a solid performance of 73-78. Moran and Jeff Pike '10 finished 78-76 and 87-76, respectively.

St. Bonaventure — who shot two 289s during the two day tournament — claimed the number one position for the second consecutive year. They were helped by Bryan Bigley who was the individual winner and earned a first round record of 64 and a final round of 70.

Despite the struggle, the Orange and Blue are optimistic.

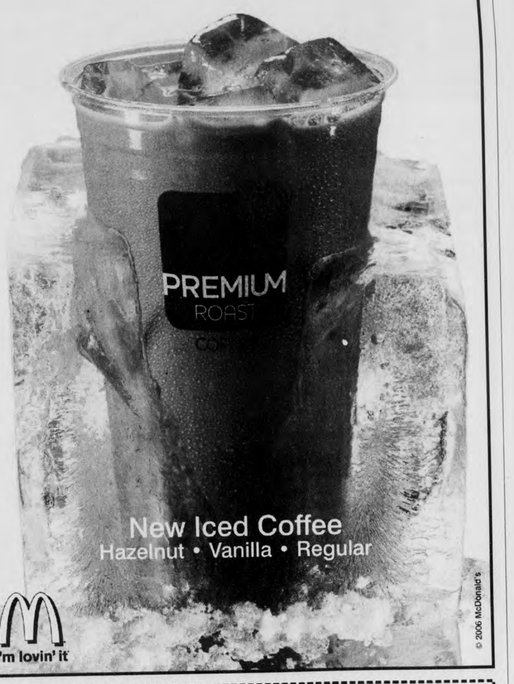
"I think the team mood is still overall very good, and we are confident heading into the next couple of weeks that we can rack up another fall victory," Moran said.

Over the weekend, the Bison have an opportunity to back that up by playing at the Cornell Invitational.

"The result will definitely be better this weekend. I'm very much looking forward to this weekend at Cornell and am looking to have a good finish," Waddell said.

BRYNWOOD Rentals
535 Inc.
In Lewisburg Since 1969
Your search begins..... and ends here.
Professional 24/7 Maintenance Staff
Apartments (furnished & unfurnished)
Houses for professionals students families
Rental Garages Also Available
Office & Retail Space
300—3,000 sq ft
brynwoodrentals.com
611 Market Street, Lewisburg
ph: 570.524.2121 x 3

be cool to yourself



New Iced Coffee
Hazelnut • Vanilla • Regular
i'm lovin' it
© 2006 McDonald's

FREE Medium Iced Coffee
With Purchase of a Sandwich*
(Breakfast or Large Sandwich)
*Excludes Dollar Menu and Snack Wrap®. Large Menu Sandwiches include Big Mac®, Quarter Pounder®† with Cheese, Ranch BLT Club, Classic Premium Chicken Sandwich® and Filet-O-Fish®. Valid only at participating McDonald's® in Southeastern and Northeastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Kent & New Castle counties, Delaware. Current prices and participation based on independent operator decision. Void where prohibited. Valid when product served and may not be valid for custom orders. Limit one coupon per customer per visit. One free item per coupon. Cash value 1/20 of one cent. Price of required purchase is posted on menu board. Prices may vary. Plus tax if applicable. Not valid in conjunction with any other offer, discount, coupon or combo meal. Coupon may not be transferred, copied or duplicated in any way or transmitted via electronic media. †Weight before cooking 4 oz (113.4 grams). ©2006 McDonald's
Expiration Date: October 31, 2006
i'm lovin' it

Football loses more than the game

By Marcus Mateer
Staff Writer

When running the spread option, a team takes certain risks with its players. The quarterbacks and running backs get pounded upon by the defense play after play. This was especially evident against the seventh-ranked Richmond Spiders last Saturday. It was disheartening to see Rashod Bumpers '10 take an Andrew Lair '10 pass and land awkwardly with no contact. Bumpers stumbled out of bounds and collapsed. He had to be helped off the field, his knee badly injured. Lair finished the drive for a score, but the damage was done. Bumpers would be lost for the rest of the year.

The Spiders took control of the game and ran off 41 straight points on their home turf. The final score read 48-21, but the loss was felt more strongly in the training room than on the scoreboard. Not only is Bumpers gone for the year, but Lair too is lost for the season. On an option-keeper, the quarterback was slung to the ground by a massive Richmond defensive lineman, injuring his collarbone.

Richmond 48
Bucknell 21

George Farrand '10, a burgeoning defensive star, also left the game early with a concussion.

Before the injuries, it appeared the Bison could hang with the tough opponents. The driving winds affected the passing game to the point where it appeared the Bison might have a chance.

By stopping the run on Richmond's first two drives, the defense forced the Spiders' quarterback Eric Ward to go to the air. The wind wreaked havoc on his throws and the Bison held the momentum. Against a team that shut out Division I-A Duke 13-0, the Bison took the early lead with an impressive scoring drive.

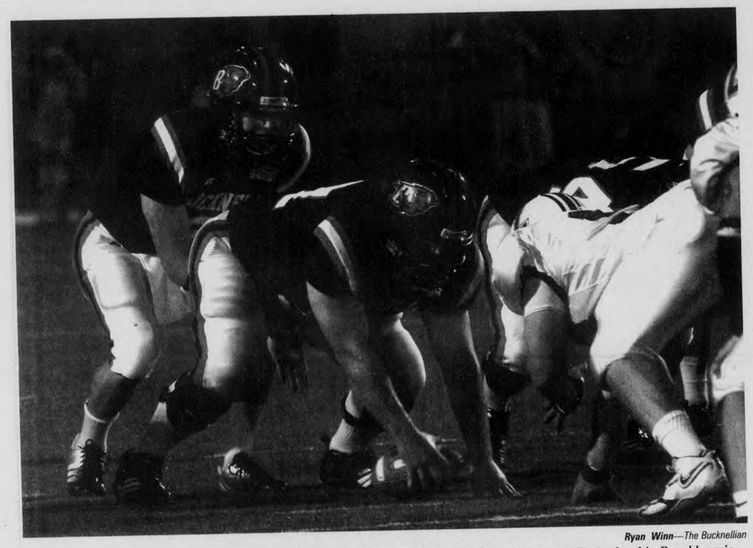
The lead was short-lived. The first play of the next possession, Ward threw an absolute duck into the wind. The pass ended about 15 yards short of its intended mark, but Richmond's Matt Hale adjusted. Hale came back to the ball, broke a tackle and ran 65 yards for the score. The air went out of the defense and the Orange and Blue would not recover.

"They're probably the best team we've faced in a couple years now," Kevin Mullen '09 said. "For a while we held our own. We just got to execute, got to do the little things a little bit better. But you know, we stepped up towards the end and put together a drive. We need to come together against Marist."

Late in the game, Terrance Wilson '08 led the team on two scoring drives. While both sides made substitutions, it was nonetheless an impressive accomplishment against a Richmond squad that surrendered only seven points in the previous two games.

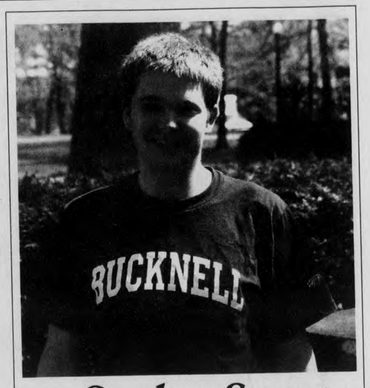
Wilson, who lost out to Lair during preseason, has more experience with the spread option than the first-year player. The junior has not shown the passing ability the Navy transfer exhibited. It will be interesting to see how the team responds to the loss of both Lair and Bumpers at 1 p.m. Satuday in Poughkeepsie, N.Y.

"We're already talking about Marist," Head Coach Tim Landis said. "Obviously we lost Bumpers for the year, and we lost Lair for the year. 'Oh, here we go again; bad luck.' We're not going to say that. We've got seven games left, we're going to fight our tails off. We're going up to Marist and try to get win number three."



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Andrew Lair '10 barks signals in an earlier game this season. The Orange and Blue will play Marist this weekend in Poughkeepsie, N.Y. before returning home for the homecoming game against the University of Pennsylvania.



Saylor Says

By Matthew Saylor
Sports Editor

1. The American League (A.L.) has all four of its playoff teams determined, but the National League (N.L.) only has the New York Mets locked into place. The only things left to be determined in the A.L. are which team will finish with the best overall record, whether the Tigers or Twins will win the Central division and how the first-round match-ups will look. The only certainty is the Tigers and Twins cannot play each other in the opening round.

The National League still has several races yet to be determined. The San Diego Padres are just ahead of the Los Angeles Dodgers for the N.L. West title, while the Dodgers have a slim lead over the Philadelphia Phillies for the right to go to the Wild Card. In the N.L. Central, the St. Louis Cardinals struggle to reach the finish line and both the red-hot Houston Astros and the Cincinnati Reds are going to provide a fight to the finish for the Runnin' Red Birds. The Mets have clinched home-field advantage throughout the N.L. playoffs and await word on who will be their first-round opponent.

2. The Terrell Owens saga took another interesting, and this time frightening, turn with the reports that he allegedly attempted suicide by overdosing on pain medication late Tuesday evening. Owens denied this report on Wednesday, saying he only had a bad reaction to his pain medication, is not depressed and did not attempt to take his life.

Hopefully the media focus on Owens will soon return to the only place it belongs: the football field. It is up to Owens to give the media no reason to focus on his life off the turf.

3. The Bison football team suffered two more tough injuries with starting quarterback Andrew Lair '10 and starting running back Rashod Bumpers '10 joining Paul Forcellini '10 on the injured list for the remainder of the season. Forcellini tore his ACL and MCL in the game against Lafayette earlier this season, while Bumpers injured his ACL against Richmond. Lair also was injured in the Richmond game, suffering a broken collar bone. These were three of the promising newcomers to the Orange and Blue, and we look forward to their returns as soon as possible.

4. The United States struggled greatly in many recent international competitions. In addition to the third place finish of the men's basketball team at the World Championships, the women's basketball team failed to win an international game for the first time since 1994. The Davis Cup team was eliminated before the finals again and the Ryder Cup squad was thoroughly defeated by the European contingent. The United States can no longer win on talent alone, as the talent in every sport is growing all over the world. The differences between other teams and U.S. squads are the other squads practice more than we do and have a much greater team atmosphere. The United States can no longer rely on finding the best individuals, making them work together for a few weeks and expect them to win. If our country is to win again at team competitions, it needs to start by making real teams. It would not be surprising if the United States did not win the most medals at the 2008 Summer Olympics in Beijing, China.

5. The NHL regular season begins on Oct. 4. The league is receiving less and less coverage following the 2004-2005 strike year and its choice to not accept a new television deal with ESPN. The main carrier of NHL games is Versus, formally the Outdoor Life Network (OLN) with NBC airing games on Saturdays in the latter half of the year, along with some playoff games. Many people do not subscribe to OLN and while attendance at games last year was good considering the previous strike year, television viewing of the games continues to dwindle.

6. On Sunday, Brett Favre became the second quarterback in NFL history to throw for 400 or more touchdowns, throwing three against the Detroit Lions to bring his career total to 402. Dan Marino is the all-time record holder, with 420 career touchdown tosses, a number that Favre has a very good shot of reaching this year — even if he is playing with the Green Bay Packers.

7. The big story from No. 1 Ohio State's 28-6 win over Penn State in Columbus, Ohio on Saturday was Joe Paterno, head coach of the Nittany Lions, going to the bathroom. The 79-year-old coach was seen sprinting to the locker room a few times during the game. I think people need to give Joe a break - when you have to go, you have to go. In a related story, Ohio State coaches also felt sick - at their team's inability to play better against a rebuilding Penn State squad.

8. The National League MVP vote will come down to the wire between St. Louis Cardinals first baseman Albert Pujols and his Phillies' counterpart Ryan Howard. Howard leads the majors in home runs and RBIs, but Pujols has a slightly higher average, fewer strikeouts and is a better fielder. The determining factor will most likely be now the two starters lead their respective teams into the postseason. If the Phillies make the playoffs, Howard is all but assured of receiving the award for carrying the team through the second half of the season. If the Cardinals make the playoffs and the Phillies do not, the vote could swing back to Pujols. The Phillies could have a better record than the Cardinals, yet the Cardinals could make the playoffs over the Phillies due to the league's post-season format.

9. Six weeks from today the women's basketball team opens its season with a home game against Hampton. You will not want to miss out on attending any home games. This way you can tell all your friends at the end of the season - when the team hoists the Patriot League Tournament trophy - that you have been behind the team since the first game of the season.

10. The Colgate men's soccer team achieved a national ranking, making it the first Patriot League team to do so since the 2004 season. This is all the more reason to cheer on the Bison when the Red Raiders visit Lewisburg on Saturday afternoon.

This just in...

-Men's Soccer-

The men's soccer team suffered it's first lost since August 29, falling 1-0 to Princeton at Varsity Soccer Field. The loss snaps the Bison's streak of eight consecutive games without a loss, dropping the team's record to 7-2-2 (2-0-0). Joey Kuterbach '08 registered two saves in the loss, which saw him lose his streak of 383 minutes and 30 seconds played without allowing a goal. Nathan LaGrave '10 registered the only shot on goal for the Bison.

WEEKEND SCHEDULE

-Friday

MEN'S AND WOMEN'S CROSS COUNTRY -Paul Short Invitational, 2 p.m., Bethlehem, Pa.
WOMEN'S TENNIS - Bucknell Invitational, 3 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
WOMEN'S VOLLEYBALL - Lehigh, 7 p.m., Bethlehem, Pa.
MEN'S WATER POLO - Princeton, 8 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.

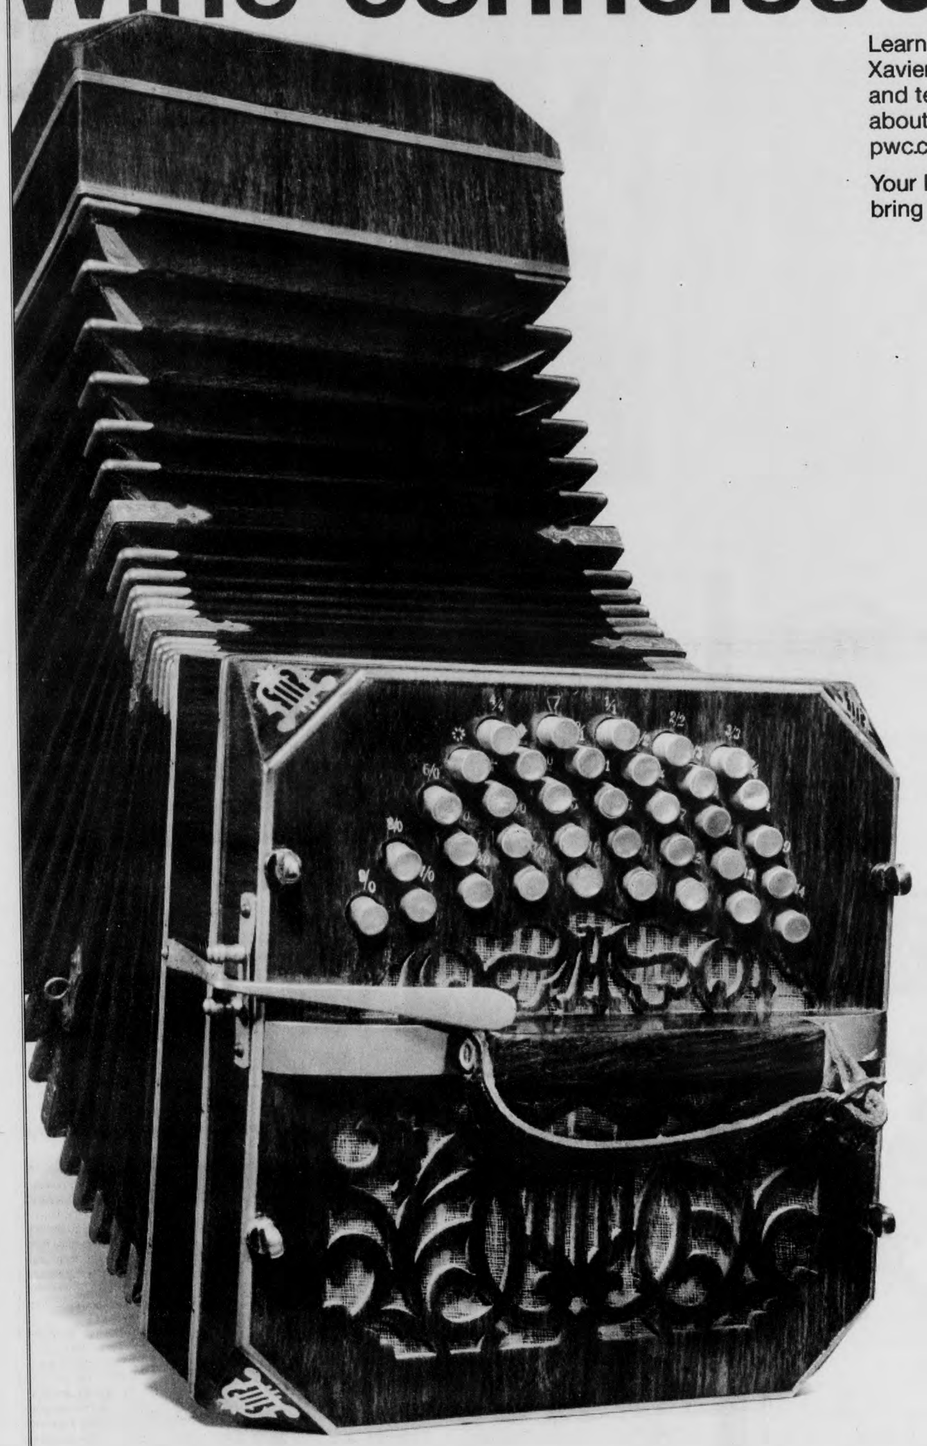
Saturday

WOMEN'S TENNIS - Bucknell Invitational, 9 a.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
FOOTBALL - Marist, 1 p.m., Poughkeepsie, N.Y.
FIELD HOCKEY - Lehigh, 1 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
MEN'S WATER POLO - George Washington, 2 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.; Navy, 8 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
MEN'S SOCCER - Colgate, 4 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
WOMEN'S VOLLEYBALL- Lafayette, 6 p.m., Easton, Pa.
WOMEN'S SOCCER - Colgate, 7 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
WOMEN'S GOLF - Bucknell Bison Classic, All Day, Lewisburg, Pa.
MEN'S GOLF - Cornell Invitational, All Day, Ithaca, N.Y.

Sunday

WOMEN'S TENNIS - Bucknell Invitational, 9 a.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
WOMEN'S GOLF - Bucknell Bison Classic, All Day, Lewisburg, Pa.
MEN'S GOLF - Cornell Invitational, All Day, Ithaca, N.Y.

Gastronomist
Tango dancer*
Wine connoisseur



Learn more about Xavier Flores and tell us more about you. Visit pwc.com/bringit.

Your life. You can bring it with you.

*connectedthinking

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

© 2006 PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP. All rights reserved. "PricewaterhouseCoopers" refers to PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (a Delaware limited liability partnership) or, as the context requires, the PricewaterhouseCoopers global network or other member firms of the network, each of which is a separate and independent legal entity. *connectedthinking is a trademark of PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (US). We are proud to be an Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity Employer.

Two thumbs down for Sandi Thom

Thom's debut album "Smile ... It Confuses People" has a few good songs but lacks musical direction

By Lily Beauvilliers
Arts & Entertainment Editor

❖ CD Review

Sandi Thom creates confusion with more than just her smile on her first album. The Scottish-born pop-rock singer jumbles together strong a cappella songs, folk tunes and pop pieces on her album "Smile ... It Confuses People."

The album opens with two songs definitely worth downloading from iTunes: "When Horsepower Meant What It Said" and "I Wish I Was a Punk Rocker (With Flowers in My Hair)." Thom's strong, mature voice gets the lead role, with claps and background vocals as her main accompaniment.

She eloquently expresses her subject matter — longing for a simpler time — in lines such as "when computers were still scary / and we didn't know everything." The tone of these two songs — folky and acoustic — matches her themes perfectly. Thom's Scottish accent peeks out slightly in her vocals, adding to an overall beautiful tone.

"I Wish I Was a Punk Rocker" contains a slight inconsistency. Thom describes the hippie subculture, sighting dates in the '60s and '70s and paraphernalia like flowers and long hair, but the chorus pins her ideal as a punk rocker instead.

The next track, "Lonely Girl," seems to do a complete 180. Thom's vocals become buried under layers of odd instrumentation — piano, electric guitar, violin and a keyboard-type instrument called a Mellotron.

Thom's mental age also seems to regress, from nostalgic twenty-something to depressed pre-teen. Lines like, "And in the dark she still lingers / like a tear without a soul" push the angst meter practically beyond emo levels.

The rest of the CD contains little else of merit. Thom's singing seems to get weaker with every song until her voice could be mistaken for any pop-rock diva on the market. She almost breaks out again in the last song, "Time," but only manages to sound like a Joni Mitchell imitation.

Thom's subject matter does not improve much either. In "What if I'm Right" she tries to present a perfect relationship. The imagery is practically nonsensical, with phrases like "You'll say I'm thin and bring the washing in," and "When you need to change the light bulb / you won't hand me the chair."

"Castles," which contains pithy revelations such as "It's now that I get to thinking this life's a mystery," is too vague to convey any real meaning other than a deep, underlying angst.

"Smile ... It Confuses People" has a few positive aspects. Some of the songs make good use of the harmonica, getting back to Thom's original folk tone.

The second-to-last song, "The Human Jukebox," recaptures a shadow of Thom's original vocal strength. Country rhythms and percussion meld well with her voice. The subject matter is also original — Thom describes a karaoke singer and the way "he's healing hearts with his soul."

Taken as a whole, Thom's first album disappoints. With only 10 songs running about 30 minutes, this is a weak product. Thom shows some promise for future work, but this is not a chart-topping album.

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Sandi Thom, a Scottish-born singer songwriter, debuts with this album, "Smile ... It Confuses People." Although the first few tracks seem to imply a folk style, Thom changes style several times throughout the album, from rock to pop and even a little emo.

"Turn your Power ON and Add LIFE to your Years!"
MORRISON'S ADVANCED CHIROPRACTIC CARE
Michael D. Morrison D.C.
1205 W Market Street
Lewisburg, PA 17837
Office: 570-523-1221
A Healthy Spine Equals a Healthy YOU!
Bucknell Students may receive a free exam and x-rays (if needed) with mention of this advertisement.

The Blockbuster #1 New York Times Bestseller!
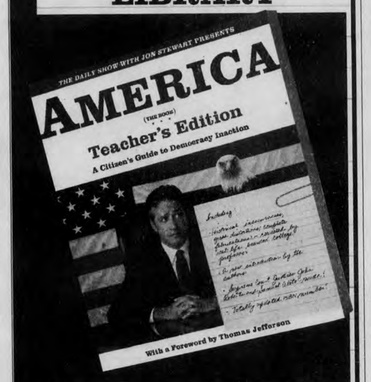
REVISED AND UPDATED FOR YOUR FAKE TEXTBOOK LIBRARY



THE DAILY SHOW WITH JON STEWART PRESENTS AMERICA
(The Book)
Teacher's Edition
A Citizen's Guide to Democracy Inaction
With a Foreword by Thomas Jefferson

• Supreme Court Justices John Roberts and Samuel Alito-nude!
• A new introduction by the authors
• Historical inaccuracies, gross distortions, and complete fabrications-corrected by a real-life bearded college professor
"The devil's own comedic handiwork."
—Janet Maslin, New York Times
Now in paperback | Also available from Hachette Audio
Warner Books | Hachette Book Group USA

Nancy's Nu-Wave Salon
..look your best
10% Discount with Student ID
524-2315
www.nancysnuwave.com
Main Street (Rte 45) - Montandon

Life is calling. How far will you go?
Peace Corps will be on campus Oct. 4th. Come learn more and meet a recruiter and former Peace Corps volunteer.
Peace Corps Information Session
Wednesday, October 4th, 2006
217 Langone Center
6pm - 7pm
Peace Corps volunteers work in 75 countries around the world. To date, 215 Bucknell graduates have served in the Peace Corps.
Life is calling. How far will you go?
www.peacecorps.gov

The Sigmund and Claire Weis Center for the Performing Arts
PRESENTS

Chaucer's The Canterbury Tales
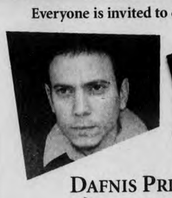
THE AQUILA THEATRE COMPANY
This engagement of Aquila Theatre Company of London is funded through Mid Atlantic Arts Foundation's Mid Atlantic Tours program in partnership with the National Endowment for the Arts Regional Touring Program
Saturday
September 30, 2006
8 p.m.
coming to the Weis Center
MASS ENSEMBLE in concert
Friday, October 6, 8 p.m.
PILOBOLUS dance company
Friday, October 20, 8 p.m.
Bucknell University, Lewisburg, Pennsylvania
Tickets and Information: 570-577-1000
www.bucknell.edu/WeisCenter/

FALL 2006 – FIRST WEDNESDAY SERIES
Everyone is invited to enjoy



JAZZ at Bucknell
DAFNIS PRIETO QUARTET
YOSVANY TERRY, saxophones
MANUEL VALERA, piano
YUNIOR TERRY, bass
DAFNIS PRIETO, drums
8:30 p.m., Wednesday
October 4, 2006
Bucknell Hall
Free Admission
Bucknell Hall is located on Loomis Street between the President's House and Hunt Hall
Bucknell

Faculty poet voyages to Macedonia

Courtesy of Deirdre O'Connor

Girls participate in a traditional dance in Macedonia. Deirdre O'Connor, co-director of the writing program and a poet, visited Macedonia last August.

By Catherine Heverling
Editor-in-Chief

Deirdre O'Connor, co-director of the writing program and the writing center while also being a published poet, did not know what to think when she received a mysterious voice mail message from the State Department asking her to return their call.

When O'Connor returned the call in mid-August, the U.S. Ambassador to Macedonia invited her to an international poetry convention to be held in Macedonia August 21-30. At the convention, O'Connor would be a sort of ambassador herself, informing poets from around the world of the fundamentals and trends of American poetry.

With all expenses paid, O'Connor initially found the offer to be unbelievable.

"It was very unexpected the way I was contacted ... At first I did think it was a joke because I don't get calls from the State Department very often. But it was for real," O'Connor said.

O'Connor was handpicked by the U.S. Ambassador to Macedonia, whose home state is Pennsylvania. The ambassador was looking for a talented Pennsylvanian poet to attend the convention and contacted the editor of a popular anthology in the process. The editor of Commonweal's "Contemporary Poets on Pennsylvania," in which O'Connor's work had been published, immediately suggested her.

Within two weeks, O'Connor boarded a plane in Harrisburg and four connecting flights and more than 20 hours later, she arrived in Skopje, Macedonia.

During her initial days in Skopje, O'Connor did a reading at a bookstore and presented a lecture on current American poetic movements to Macedonian poets and English teachers at a public library.

In the days that followed, she traveled by car to the convention site in Struga, a city near the River Drim (pronounced "dream").

The convention hosted 25-30 international poets, as well 25-30 Macedonian poets. During Struga Poetry Evenings, each poet read one or two original poems in their native languages, which were then translated into Macedonian for local listeners.

Language was a significant barrier for many of the poets, but O'Connor found the experience valuable, nonetheless.

"It was both fascinating to hear so much poetry being spoken in this range of languages and at times difficult," O'Connor said.

In addition to readings in Struga, the poets dispersed into small groups to read in nearby cities and towns. Between readings, O'Connor had the opportunity to taste a bit of Macedonian culture, when she took a boat ride and had a picnic at the Monastery of St. Naum, near the Albanian border.

O'Connor also recalled the sights she saw in Bitola as some of the most memorable.

"We had a reading there," O'Connor said, "but we also met with the mayor and they took us to some really cool places, including an archaeological site."

During the convention and these excursions, O'Connor had the opportunity to meet her contemporaries.

On the way to Bitola, she heard "interesting stories" from the only other English-speaking traveler on the van: renowned art critic and poet Edward Lucie-Smith, friend of famous writers including Sylvia Plath and Ted Hughes.

O'Connor, who is familiar with, but not fluent in French, also conversed with a young Albanian poet from Kosovo. O'Connor gathered through their conversations that the poet, also a pediatrician and activist, had gone to prison after refusing to close her clinic under Milosevic's order.

"When you want to communicate, people can find a way," O'Connor said.

With this philosophy in mind, O'Connor hopes to help some of the talented Macedonians writers she met get their work translated and published in the United States.

In the meantime, O'Connor, who published her first book in 2002, will work to get her latest manuscript "Sky's Coincidence" published within the next year. She also hopes to keep up with her writing as best she can.

"I write whenever I can, which is hard to do when you work a normal job," O'Connor said. "But I have learned how. When I have a free half hour, I multi-task. I can have a poem in the back of my head while I'm doing other things."

In addition, O'Connor will continue to instruct at the Seminar for Younger Poets held every June at the Stadler Center for Poetry. O'Connor understands the importance of having an encouraging voice during your undergraduate years, remembering retired English professor Jack Wheatcroft as her "mentor" and "teacher."

O'Connor has gone on to act similarly for current University students.

"I especially appreciated Deirdre's approach to giving feedback in the Seminar because she clearly prioritized helping the poet to figure out what he or she intended to do in a piece rather than simply imposing her own aesthetic or approach to craft onto that poet's work," said Emily Hurd '07. "I felt that, alongside being an accomplished poet and holding an instructional position, Deirdre always showed an encouraging respect for us as writers and for our poetry."

Courtesy of Deirdre O'Connor

Deirdre O'Connor stands with the U.S. Ambassador to Macedonia and her husband. The Ambassador invited O'Connor to participate in a poetry convention.

'Akeelah and the Bee' a touching, genre-defying PG movie

By Sarah Novello
Writer

❖ Movie Review

Spell "PULCHRITUDE."

Hopefully you are not struggling now that it is written right there, but imagine being 11 years old on ESPN and told to do the same. This is exactly the situation in which Akeelah Anderson finds herself in "Akeelah and the Bee," released on video at the end of August after its premier in April.

Akeelah, played flawlessly by 13-year-old Keke Palmer, has a knack for words—she plays Scrabble on her computer for fun. She does not fit in at her run-down, southern Los Angeles middle school and her family is too distracted by her father's recent death and an unruly brother to appreciate her.

She is not passionate about school by any means. Akeelah skips classes but manages to ace all her spelling tests, inspiring the school principal to threaten her with detentions if she does not represent the school in the district spelling bee.

Akeelah shines competing against students from Beverly Hills and Woodland Hills, Calif. Her high finish in districts qualifies her for the regional spelling bee. Akeelah starts studying with a coach, Dr. Larabee (Laurence Fishburne), to prepare for the contest.

She places third at the regional bee, qualifying for Scripps National Spelling Bee. At their next meeting Larabee says he has nothing else to teach Akeelah.

"You've got word construction down, etymology, memorization techniques. What you need to do now is just focus on the words ... you've got a brain like a sponge; you just sit down and you study," Larabee says.

Akeelah is frustrated by the loss of her coach and loses hope until her mother (Angela Bassett) says, "You know Akeelah, you ain't short on people who want to help you. I bet if you just look around, you got 50,000 coaches." Thanks to the help of her community Akeelah goes on to Scripps to make history.

"Akeelah and the Bee" is extraordinary despite sounding like any inspirational, PG-rated film. Each character is wonderfully developed—everyone is generally likable, motivated and has weaknesses. Akeelah is a special kid but the audience is constantly reminded that she is just a smart 11-year-old girl under a lot of pressure.

Courtesy of imdb.com

Spelling coach Dr. Larabee (Laurence Fishburne) lectures his promising pupil, Akeelah (Keke Palmer). "Akeelah and the Bee" touches on a variety of issues, including race.

The film touches on race, socioeconomic status, pressures on children and how to deal with death, all without the audience really noticing. The story is initially predictable but flows brilliantly. It is realistic, standing out in its genre.

The most outstanding part of "Akeelah and the Bee" is Palmer's acting. She takes on Akeelah's character completely and easily holds her own against Fishburne and Bassett. Palmer's expertise is what makes the film so enjoyable.

Overall, this is a wonderful film. Its PG rating and inspirational story may push it into the "Air Bud" category, but its freshness and believability make it truly worth seeing.

Open mic night another 7th Street success

By Janna Shapiro
Writer

The 7th St. Café played host to the first open mic night of the year on Friday. The café was the usual crowded scene. Instead of students buried in their books and iTunes, a much livelier atmosphere burst from the entrances. Students pushed tables together into large groups, hijacked cuddly corduroy chairs for "row" seating, and crowded into booths. Any fans arriving after 10 o'clock were forced to stand or lean against the bar in the back.

"It's fun to see the talents of other students on campus. It's free and it's tons of fun," Rachel Schassburger '09 said.

Nearing 11 o'clock the chatting quieted as the packed house turned to the two chairs, two mics, two amps and tangled mess of wires that formed the haphazard stage in the back right of the room.

A single Activities and Campus Events (ACE) technician scrambled to coordinate the mics with the amps as one shut off each time he fixed another. The crowd's energy was not affected by the technical difficulties. Screams erupted for Dallas Mellot '08 and Andrew Cole '08 as the pair started off open mic with a shout-out to birthday boy, Chris Moreau '08. Mellot and Cole played two subdued songs followed by Campus Police, a tribute to Moreau's popular band and open mic favorite, The Infernal Duo. Audience members screamed the lyrics behind milkshakes and coffee as the band members sat front row.

The night continued on with audience participation, whirring smoothie blenders and loud applause.

"I got to hear the brilliance of fellow civil engineers! I love the tunage," Brendan O'Neil '09 said.

Three 7th St. baristas stole the show as the fourth act, Calvin Manning '08, Hope Heffner '08 and Ryan Freilino '08, played the accordion, violin and acoustic guitar respectively. They each took turns at vocals.

The trio started the set with an original instrumental piece followed by a touching and pitch perfect rendition of Damien Rice's "Volcano" with Heffner and Freilino harmonizing wonderfully. They ended with an animated performance of Iron and Wine's "Jezabel" sung by Manning. ACE promptly offered the trio a future gig at the student show case.

"Now we have to come up with a name," said Heffner.

Announcing the Fall concert: Kanye West

One of the biggest names in rap will be the biggest concert to come to the University in recent memory

Courtesy of Reuters

Rap artist Kanye West performs during a private concert at the Nokia Theatre in New York City. West was nominated for eight grammy awards in 2006 and has received a total of six. He is headlining the Fall Fest concert.

By Kimberly Kane
Arts & Entertainment Editor

Kanye West, easily the biggest name to come to campus in several years, is expected to draw the entire student body to the Fall Fest concert on Oct. 21 at Sojka Pavilion.

Since the semester began, rumors circulated about the event. Most students scoffed at the possibility of having such a huge star performing at the University.

"Unbelievable," said John Kimball '07, Bucknell Student Government (BSG) vice president of finances. "That's the word people are using."

Kimball and other members of BSG were more involved than ever this year helping the Concert Committee put the show together. The BSG Appropriations Committee gave extra money to the Concert Committee to secure West.

"We usually have a set budget," said Kari Conrad, associate dean of students and advisor to the Concert Committee. "And we try to draw students with the best act we can get. This year we had the additional support from BSG."

The support was necessary to bring an artist of West's popularity to the University.

West performed with the Rolling Stones Wednesday at the Meadowlands in East Rutherford, N.J.

"It's amazing to have someone of Kanye's magnitude in such a small venue," said Alessandro Zanelli '07, Concert Committee chair of production. "He should be selling out arenas with 20,000 seats but he will be playing the 3,500-person Sojka Pavilion."

The Concert Committee is excited to have West because it shows the student body it is dedicated to serving the campus and exploring genres. Some students worried the committee would not invite hip-hop or rap groups back to campus after students' lukewarm response to the Jurassic 5 performance in 2005.

"Having such a huge rap artist was never in our reach before. Kanye is in a whole other league," said Lauren Brian '07, Concert Committee chair of marketing.

"We want to get the whole school excited: not just freshmen and sophomores who always go to the concerts, but juniors and seniors as well," Kimball said.

"It's especially great for the seniors," Zanelli said. "They have seen a lot of concerts at Bucknell. Now they will get to see a big, sold-out show."

Securing West was a big task for the Concert Committee, but the work is far from over.

"There are a lot of things that go into the concert that people don't really see," Conrad said. "[The Concert Committee] has to take care of transportation, hotels, set up, catering, running or production."

Tickets are $30 for University students and go on sale at noon on Oct. 2. Tickets will be available to the general public for $40 at 9 a.m. on Oct. 5.

Students can buy up to eight tickets and with another person's ID, an additional ticket for each ID.

With six Grammys under his belt, West is a powerful force in the music world. He started as a producer working with artists including Jay-Z, Alicia Keys and Ludacris and was well-known before he made his musical debut with "The College Dropout" in 2004.

The album features one of West's best known songs, "Jesus Walks." After suffering major injuries in a car accident and recovering quickly, West became a born-again Christian.

His religious influences are obvious in lyrics such as "God show me the way because the Devil trying to break me down (Jesus walks with me) / The only thing that I pray is that my feet don't fail me now." The song was nominated for Song of the Year at the 2005 Grammys and won the award for Best Rap Song.

West's success continued in 2005 with "Late Registration." He was nominated for eight Grammy awards in 2006, including Album of the Year and Best Rap Album. West won the award for Best Rap Song for "Diamonds from Sierra Leone" and Best Rap Solo Performance for "Gold Digger."

"Late Registration" also spawned the single "Heard 'Em Say," a collaboration with Maroon 5's Adam Levine. The album also contains several skits and spoken tracks between songs. Some skits focus on "Broke Phi Broke," a fictional fraternity that chants "Don't spend no money / ain't got no clothes / ain't got no cars / ain't got no hos."

West is as well-known for his beliefs as his music. His sharp lyrics are often politically charged. He is outspoken about the plight of Africans and civil rights for blacks and gays. He gained notoriety during a Hurricane Katrina benefit concert aired on NBC when he said, "George Bush does not care about black people," according to www.MSNBC.com.

West has a knack for getting attention through his music and his political beliefs. The energy and passion that made him a national superstar will create an electric atmosphere in Sojka Pavilion.

'Continuum' showcases Mayer's new musical maturity

By Kate Bernhardt
Writer

❖ CD Review

Pop/rock artist John Mayer released "Continuum," his third album as a solo musician, this month. For those of you disappointed by his recent collaboration- in "Try!," brace yourselves: the 12 tracks on "Continuum" incorporate the new blues sounds of Mayer with the sexy vocals, creative lyrics and heart-felt guitar solos evident in past albums. The album establishes a more musically mature and modest Mayer.

Mayer produced "Continuum" on his own, but the album features appearances from several other musicians including Ben Harper, Maroon 5's James Valentine, Charlie Hunter, Alicia Keys, Willie Weeks and Roy Hargrove.

As in "Try!," Mayer strays from the pop role he acquired from hit songs like "Your Body Is a Wonderland" ("Room for Squares," 2001) and "Daughters" ("Heavier Things," 2003). Perhaps it was his collaboration with Steve Jordan (drummer) and Pino Palladino (bassist) in "Try!" that helped release Mayer's inner rocker, which is heavily influenced by Stevie Ray Vaughn and Jimi Hendrix.

"If it wasn't for the Trio, 'Continuum' would have been less accessible. It let me settle up with my needs as a musician, and get to a point somewhere between the Trio record and 'Room For Squares'... a really good place to be," Mayer said according to www.johnmayor.com.

Two of the John Mayer Trio's tracks appear on "Continuum:" "Vultures" and "Gravity." "Vultures" is identical to the one featured in "Try!" but "Gravity" adapts a soulful sound on "Continuum," including organ chords in the background and a gospel choir behind Mayer at the end of the song.

"Continuum" marks a cynical point in Mayer's life. Darker themes of romantic frustration, social failures and self-disillusionment make the album both heartfelt and powerful. The single 28-year-old male expresses immense growth as a musician since his first album in 2001.

While maintaining his sexy falsetto vocal tracks, as well as his jazzy runs and haunting harmonies, Mayer explores deeper realms of emotional crisis with new instruments and slower tempos.

Nearly half of the songs featured in "Continuum" stem from romantic disappointment. Most are reflective, intimate expressions of pain and heartache offering little hope for the future.

"Slow Dancing in a Burning Room" describes a failed and destructive relationship using the imagery of a passionate expression in a deadly setting. Its melodic harmony and blues chords nearly trump its poetic beauty. "Dreaming With a Broken Heart" portrays a similarly powerful story of betrayal—as does "I Don't Trust Myself (With Loving You)"—which focuses the song on piano rather than guitar.

For less-pessimistic fans, Mayer's "In Repair" and "I'm Gonna Find Another You" end with a sense of optimism not found among the other love songs. "In Repair" marks a musical hallmark of "Continuum" deeply rooted in the intense emotional expression of the album.

"In Repair" opens with slow-paced drums and organs, complemented by dark images like shadows, corners and midnight. But after the refrain, "things turn green again" and the images change to "walking in the park" and "birds dancing." Mayer closes the song with "I'm in repair; I'm not together, but I'm getting there."

Though Mayer has not achieved all his musical aspirations, songs like "In Repair" prove that Mayer has many great musical accomplishments in store for his future.

Romance was not the only topic on Mayer's mind when writing "Continuum": "Belief" and "Waiting on the World to Change" offer powerful insight on the current state of political affairs, as well as Mayer's frustration with the image of his generation.

He sings, "Me and my friends, we're all misunderstood / They say we stand for nothing and there's no way we ever could." The instrumental solo of "Waiting on the World to Change" includes both piano and guitar and echoes "Clarity" ("Heavier Things," 2003).

"Belief" expresses a similar frustration combined with doubt and confusion concerning social relations. Mayer sings, "We're never gonna' win the world / We're never gonna' stop the war / We're never gonna beat this if belief is what we're fighting for."

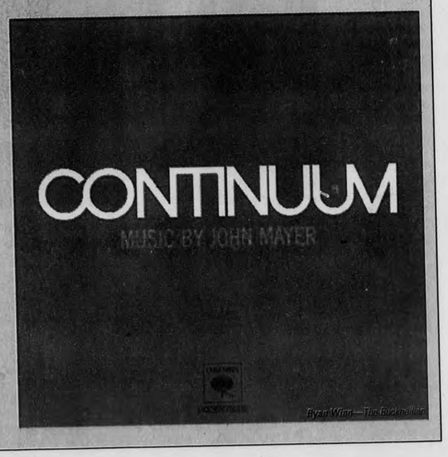
As minor chords echo the unsettling metaphors like "the heaviest sword," "chemical weapons" and "punching underwater," Mayer portrays a disillusioned youth calling for political and social change.

The seventh track, titled "Stop This Train" echoes the longing for childhood expressed in the song "1983" from "Room for Squares." Its folk-like guitar sound calls to mind "Why Georgia," another song from that album, but the third verse features a soothing guitar solo behind the lyrics. And unlike the earlier songs, "Stop This Train" ends with a feeling of closure and acceptance of growing older.

Mayer imparts more wisdom on his audience in "Heart of Life." With an opening guitar solo reminiscent of "Free Bird," the song addresses romantic betrayal. Mayer sings, "Bad news never had good timing." But as the power guitar solos imitate cries for help, the message of the song develops; Mayer sings, "No it won't all go the way it should / But I know the heart of life is good."

"Continuum" also includes a cover of Hendrix's "Bold as Love," proving Mayer's dedication to his new sound. By imitating rock legends, Mayer embraces and celebrates the past hits of revered musicians like Hendrix. In spite of those influences, Mayer creates a unique sound, blending blues and rock elements with his modest, introspective tone.

"Continuum" highlights Mayer's new capabilities. It is no wonder Mayer already has two hit albums under his belt. Still, in a track on this album, Mayer sings, "I could be wrong, I could be ready." "Continuum" reflects the musical talents of an artist far from wrong and more than ready for success. Fans hope that many more hit albums follow this one, as Mayer continues to establish himself as a reputable musician of the 21st century.



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

friday's bucknellian

special homecoming issue
read selected vintage articles in every section

Friday
October 6, 2006
Bucknell University
Lewisburg, PA
Vol. CXXXVIII,
No. 6

Admissions reconsiders early decision policies

By Ashley Elizabeth Hook
Contributing Writer

The admissions department is currently reevaluating the University's application process because numerous top-ranking schools recently announced the termination of their early decision admissions policies.

Harvard, Yale and Princeton stated they feel early decision deadlines place extensive and unnecessary pressure on high school students and should be abolished.

The overriding logic behind this new philosophy asserts many well-qualified students require extensive financial aid to afford the tuition at these prestigious institutions. As a result, they are unable to apply for the first pool of applications. They need to weigh their scholarship and loan offers carefully before making their final selections.

Some feel the process of admitting students through early decision programs discriminates against financially disadvantaged applicants

See ADMISSIONS page A4

Condoleeza Rice comes to campus

Reuters Photo Archive

Secretary of State Condoleeza Rice will be speaking at the Weis Center on Friday, Oct. 13 at 2:45 p.m. She will hold a question-and-answer session after her remarks. Visit the University website for more information.

University hosts congressional debate

By Jeremy O'Sullivan
Contributing Writer

In preparation for an election that could turn the control of the U.S. House of Representatives to the Democrats, incumbent Republican Don Sherwood and Democratic opponent Chris Carney faced-off in a debate for Pennsylvania's 10th Congressional District on Wednesday evening at the University's packed Trout Auditorium.

Sherwood opened the debate by boasting his flawless conservative voting record of lowering taxes, supporting pro-life legislation, and his continued fight for benefits for veterans. Carney, in his opening speech, deviated from focusing on typical controversial political issues and focused on values.

"The people of the 10th district need a representative they can be proud of," Carney said, clearly in reference to Sherwood's confessed five year affair with a 29 year old women.

Although Sherwood apologized publicly following the scandal's emergence, he apologized again to the crowd.

"I'm glad he owned up to it," one resident of Lewisburg commented. But to the majority of the crowd, his apology was to no avail. Carney's oratory performance was charming and kept a steady focus on the issue of character. Although mostly political concerns arose in the discussion of the debate, Carney often led the discussion back to the issue of values to pin-down his opponent who struggled to play defense to Carney's political hardball.

"Eight years ago Mr. Sherwood ran on the issues of values and then goes to Washington and behaves like he did," Carney said following the debate. Carney also said that despite the fact that the 10th district is known to lean more conservatively, he feels confident that he possesses the values to lead the district as a Democrat.

Despite the fact that much of the debate focused on the issue of values, many of the district's constituents, as well as many members of the University, attended the debate for reasons of broader political concerns affecting the individual.

"The Republican Party has imposed a greater burden on myself and my family," said Robertoa Reed '07, referring to the Republican party's $14 billion tax cut, some of which had formerly supplied money for student loans.

Bringing the issue to Sherwood, he said that "he helped to increase the Pell Grant ceiling," and that the actual legislative change was only a difference in interest rates.

"We've kept the taxes down so the economy can grow and when [a student is] looking for a job in the future there will be more opportunity," Sherwood said.

Some students felt that Carney preformed better than Sherwood.

"I thought it went really well. Carney's answers were really solid compared to [the answers of]Sherwood, who dodged questions. Carney has a solid set of ideas to bring to Congress next fall," said Andrew Cole '08 vice president of communications of the College Democrats.

Read more about the candidates on page A4.

University to re-institute honorary degrees

By Genna Jerrard
Contributing Writer

After a 20-year waiting period, the Honorary Degrees Committee of the Faculty and the Trustees approved the renewal of the process of nominating and considering honorary degree recipients for the 2007 commencement ceremony.

The honorary degree "is one of the highest awards the University gives," Chief Communications Officer Pete Mackey said.

The Office of the Provost added to Mackey's definition and said, "honorary degrees are awarded in order to recognize individuals whose work exemplifies the qualities of intellect, character and creativity most cherished by the University."

The degree committee pays particular attention to those whose celebrated contributions have not been formally recognized outside their field.

The Board's decision to award these degrees was announced this summer to students, faculty, staff, alumni and parents. The class of 2007 was given the opportunity to nominate individuals in the University community whom they deemed most deserving.

"The Office of the Provost is responsible for making recommendations to the President and Board of Trustees as to the individual that should receive the honorary degree," Mackey said. "The voting, review and scheduling process is detailed and time-consuming and has begun with the candidates received by the nomination deadline, with special focus on the candidates the class of 2007 put forward."

According to Professor of English Michael Payne, until the program's temporary termination in the 1980s, the last honorary degree was given to the famous historian E.P. Thompson, head of a movement known as European Nuclear Disarmament.

Payne said Thompson was promoting a movement that was not yet British and United States policy. Tension arose among the committee members and Thompson never accepted the award.

Payne is very pleased at the reinstating of the honorary degree program.

"We are an excellent

See DEGREE page A2

Mice, roaches and odd odors plague hall

By Catherine Heverling
Editor-in-Chief

When Ashley Shamansky '07 crawled into her bed on Sept. 20, she did not expect to have company.

Shamansky, a resident of Trax basement, spotted a mouse crawling on her headboard at around 10 p.m.

The mouse, killed by a spring trap about 45 minutes later, was the first of three captured on the hall by custodians and one of several spotted by residents.

Even after the mouse was caught, Shamansky, who has a serious aversion to mice, would not sleep in her room.

"I was afraid to get in my bed because of my fear that there were more. Where there's one, there's many," Shamansky said.

She was right.

Another hall resident found a mouse in her bed. About an hour and a half later, another mouse ran from one room into the room of Rebecca Wilson '08. Wilson and her hallmates captured the mouse using two cups.

"And then it died. I think we gave it a heart attack," Wilson said.

Mike Patterson, Director of Facility Services , said he could not remember any other incidents involving mice on campus.

"But we have had some problems with squirrels getting in through openings or holes in the buildings," Patterson said.

After Facilities patched up a hole in the floorboard of Shamansky's room, she began sleeping in her bed again. A live trap and spring trap were added to her room and several glue strips were placed throughout the hall.

Kim Unruh '08, a resident of the hall, recognized facilities' efforts to resolve the problem.

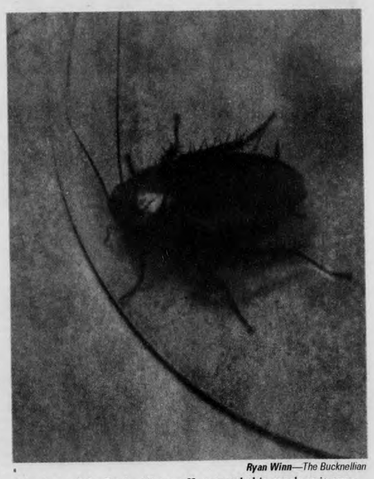
"In regards to the mice, I believe that the University has responded quickly; however, I feel that with paying $40,000 to go here, mice should be a non-issue," Unruh said.

According to Patterson and several Trax basement residents, no other mice have been spotted since the incident.

But roaches and beetles in the Roberts-Trax-Kress (RTK) quad have been a persistent problem.

In addition to mice hunting, students living in Trax basement have captured several other crit-

See MICE page A3



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Members of the Bucknellian staff captured this roach as it scurried across the floor of the newsroom, located in the basement of Roberts Hall. Pests have posed a problem in the Roberts-Trax-Kress quad.

INSIDE THIS ISSUE

OPINIONS
Students should to get to know the real world before becoming a part of it.
A6

FEATURES
Get a recap of what happened at Project Runway Bucknell and meet the designers who went home with the prizes.
A10

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT
A&E contributing writer Angela Tchou uncovers the hidden country influence in rock music.
B8

SPORTS
Women's tennis had a successful weekend at the Bucknell Invitational until rain cancelled matches.
B2

Public Safety Log

Wednesday, September 27

ALARM-BURGLAR—Swartz Hall: Unknown cause.

THEFT— Smith Hall: iPod taken from room.

DISORDERLY CONDUCT— The Mods: Driver used foul language to Public Safety.

MOTOR VEHICLE ACCIDENT—Loomis St.: A student's vehicle mirror scratched another student vehicle as she was making a turn off Loomis Street. Public Safety located the operator of the parked car and insurance information was exchanged.

Thursday, September 28

ALARM-FIRE—Vedder Hall: Fire alarm activation caused by burnt food.

ARREST-WARRANT—Elaine Langone Center: Assisted Pa. State Constable in serving a warrant.

Friday, September 29

ALARM-FIRE—Vedder Hall: Fire alarm activation caused by burnt food.

THEFT—Larison Hall: Bicycle taken from the bicycle rack.

DISORDERLY CONDUCT—Sigma Alpha Mu fraternity: Unknown person(s) entered the fraternity and urinated on a radiator.

CRIMINAL TRESPASS—Fieldhouse: A male entered the Fieldhouse without authorization.

Saturday, September 30

ALARM-FIRE—The Mods: Fire alarm activation caused by burnt food.

Sunday, October 1

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—Kappa Delta Rho Fraternity: Student cited for underage consumption. Report filed.

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—Larison Hall: Student cited for underage consumption. Report filed.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Roberts Hall: Unknown male dumped a trash can in the stairwell and tore papers off the wall. Under investigation.

THEFT—Swartz Hall: Bicycle was moved from the bicycle rack outside of Swartz Hall to McDonnell Hall.

HEAT DETECTOR—Swartz Hall: RA Cooking in her apartment.

INTRUSION ALARM—Uptown: No apparent cause.

Monday, October 2

RAPE—Residence Hall: Under Investigation.

ALARM-FIRE—The Mods: Fire alarm activation caused by burnt popcorn.

SUSPICIOUS PERSON—Dent Drive: Student reported an unknown male in a vehicle stopped to question her as she was walking across Dent Drive .

Tuesday, October 3

THEFT—RAC center: Student reported that his bike was stolen. Owner called a short time later and reported the bike recovered.

Honorary degrees to be awarded at commencement after a 20-year hiatus

DEGREES From page A1

University and should be in a position of recognizing extraordinary people," Payne said.

He said the award is extremely beneficial for the University because "it is as much of an honor for the University as it is for the person who receives it."

After the nomination, materials were distributed to faculty and trustee committees and designated student representatives in late August. These groups discussed nominees during the September Trustee retreat for the 2006–2007 academic year, according to the office of the Provost.

It said the final vote on the specific nominations will occur no later than the Nov. Trustee meeting.

Mackey praised the board's decision to reinstate the award.

"It is an important way to communicate the prestige and character of the institution, to expose Bucknell students to outstanding individuals and to recognize individuals who deserve such a singular honor," Mackey said.

Student opinions seem positive as well.

"I think it is an excellent thing to bring back, especially because it honors those members of the community who have made such positive contributions," Nicole Fellows '10 said. "It gives everyone an incentive to work to look to their example."

"It is an important way to communicate the prestige and character of the institution, to expose Bucknell students to outstanding individuals and to recognize individuals who deserve such a singular honor."

— Pete Mackey,
Chief Communications Officer

Students weigh voter registration options

Students can vote in state of permanent residence or at school

By Emilie Linsenmeyer
Contributing Writer

University students have the right to vote in Union County elections; whether they choose to exercise this right is another matter.

The 18-24 age bracket features the lowest voter participation in Pennsylvania and in the country.

Republican Lynn Swann will challenge the incumbent Democratic governor Edward Rendell in the upcoming Nov. 7 election.

Republican incumbent Rick Santorum is engaged in a tight race with Democrat Robert Casey in the senatorial election. Races such as this have swayed some students' decisions of where to vote.

"I'm voting in Pennsylvania instead of at home in Connecticut because I want to vote in a close race where my vote will make a difference," Jonathan Salmans '10 said.

Political organizations on campus encourage students to register by the Tuesday deadline. The College Democrats held a voter registration table in the Elaine Langone Center Mall and currently have a voter registration link on their Web site.

The Conservatives Club showed a debate between the senatorial candidates and provided members with voter registration forms. Despite the voter recruitment, many students want to vote in their home districts.

"I care more about local issues currently facing my hometown than the local issues here in Union County," Chris Stonesifer '09 said.

Students have trouble understanding why they should relinquish voting rights in their home states when they have not been in Lewisburg for very long.

"I'm not voting in Union County because I've only been here a month and I don't really know what's up in terms of everything," Zach Etzel '10 said.

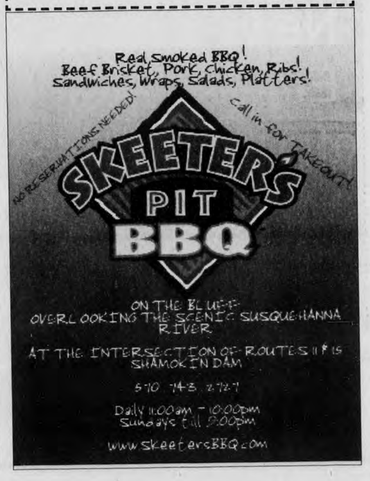
Students 18 or older who have been American citizens for a minimum of one month have the right to vote in the county where they attend school. If a student previously registered at home, he or she may vote via absentee ballot in his or her home district.

Another option is to fill out a new application to vote in Union County, which would void a student's previous registration. If a student changed residence on campus he or she must re-register to vote, since this is considered a change of address.

A student attempting to vote twice during a single election day could face severe legal penalties.

Election Day is quickly approaching and students must decide soon to submit absentee ballot applications to home counties or voter registration applications in Union County. For those interested in voting in Union County who are not registered, applications are available online at www.votespa.com. The polling place is the Weis Center for the Performing Arts, open 7 a.m. to 8 p.m. on Nov. 7.

Igniting Creative Ideas
On Fire Promotions
by trautman associates, inc.
promotional products · fundraising items
embroidered & screenprinted caps & apparel
awards · trophies · business gifts
800-538-8009
Lewisburg Showroom 434 Market 570-522-8009
www.tapromoproducts.com
www.onfirepromotions.com
Bring in this ad for one FREE SCREEN!!!
GOOD ON ANY APPAREL ORDER
(minimum 36 pieces)



What are you doing on your fall break?
TKE is running from Bucknell to Washington D.C. for the 3rd Annual Ronald Reagan Run for Alzheimer's

If you'd like to help Tau Kappa Epsilon fight Alzheimer's disease, contact Brad Bentzen (bbentzen@bucknell.edu, 914-588-3764) or Bobby Blakemore (rblakemo@bucknell.edu, 908-295-2137) and ask about sponsoring a runner.
Donations benefit the Reagan Institute Research Fund
Lewisburg to D.C. on foot?
NO PROBLEM!

Residents deal with insect infestation

MICE From page A1

ters during their residency.

"I've seen grasshoppers, spiders and even a toad on our hall, so the bug thing isn't as big an issue," Isabel Junkin '08 said.

Kelli Bowers '07, a former resident of Kress basement, said she had heard of some hallmates having problems with roaches and opted to do her homework in a friend's room after finding one on her desk last semester.

Beth Ann Zarko '07, a current resident of Trax basement, said she has seen roaches, water bugs and centipedes on her hall, but as a former resident of Roberts Hall where she witnessed "huge cockroaches," she is no stranger to the problem.

Neither are the Bucknellian editors, who find at least one roach a week, among other critters, during production hours in the newsroom, located in the basement of Roberts Hall.

Emily Thiel '07 spotted a snake slithering outside the Bucknellian office on Sept. 8.

"It was a thin, brown snake about a foot and a half long," Thiel said. "It was crawling along the wall by the staircase in Roberts basement."

While snakes might be an unusual sighting on campus, Daniel Remley, director of Housing and Residential Life and assistant dean of students, said roaches have been a problem in the RTK quad for years.

"It's something that happens infrequently, but seasonally," Remley said. "Historically we've had more issues in RTK because they're older buildings."

Since the problem is chronic, there are permanent measures set to resolve it. Routine maintenance checks are done by facilities, but there is no foolproof way to prevent the roaches from infiltrating buildings with "ground floor accessibility," Remley said.

While facilities provides support when a problem is reported, students can help prevent roaches from visiting their rooms as well.

"Roaches are attracted to open food sources and can be carried into building with boxes and paper bags," Patterson said. "The best defense is to keep food in closed containers and rooms as clean as possible."

When an incident is reported, facilities does their best to respond immediately, as they did in the case of the mice.

"As soon as we were made aware of the situation, we contacted the company that does our pest control on campus," Patterson said. "None of our people are trained in pest control so we're going to use the experts. Typically, their procedures work."

Because the results have not been apparent, some students do not believe that the exterminators are solving the problem.

Junkin thought that the exterminators' visit might have been a "hall myth."

"The beetles have been everywhere—in the hall, in our rooms and in the bathrooms. I pick them up in a cup and throw them outside," Junkin said.

While all the students on the hall seem to have encountered the pest problem in one form or another, many were unaware of the problem during the housing selection process.

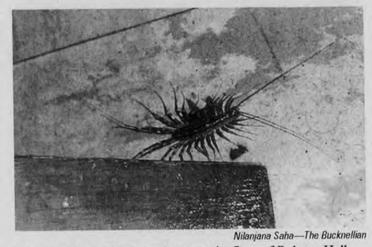
"I was surprised when I killed three cockroaches in my room the day after I moved in," Unruh said.

Two former residents of Trax basement have moved out. One left because her room exhibited a strange odor of an unknown origin.

"We're going to have to some destructive exploration. It may be related to a drain line, but we will have to do more investigation," Patterson said.

Facilities is committed to continuing their maintenance of the RTK quad and residents of the Trax basement plan to continue with their own pest control methods.

"We've caught plenty of cockroaches and centipedes. I killed five in one night once. It was like we had a collection," Shamansky said.



Nilanjana Saha—The Bucknellian

An unwanted resident crawls across the floor of Roberts Hall basement.

Job opportunities increase for college graduates

Seniors weigh decision between entering the work force or continuing their education

By Abhay Agarwal
Writer

Employers around the country are increasing entry-level hiring opportunities, leading to growing prospects for top-draw positions and lucrative pay packages for recent college graduates.

CollegeGrad.com, one of the leading entry-level job Web sites on the Internet, recently posted an all-time record number of entry-level jobs in September, reflecting this upward trend.

Pamela Keiser, senior associate director of the career development center (CDC), said this phenomenon is based on the nation's economic trends. A steady economic growth leads to a spurt in the number of job openings and an overall decrease in the number of applicants towards higher education.

During most years the percentage of the University's graduating class directly identifying itself as employed ranges from 65–70 percent, whereas 20–25 percent of the graduating class pursues postgraduate studies.

The National Association of Colleges and Employers (NACE) mentioned employers' plans to increase college hiring by 13.8 percent in the summer issue of their seasonal Salary Survey. The report states more than one-fifth of employers would increase their starting salaries to compete for new hires.

The big decision to choose between graduate school and getting a job does not depend only on the student's willingness to do so.

Katy Vertigan '05 said law school happened to her by a fluke, but she is pleased with her decision.

"My decision to go to law school was mainly based on practical concerns," Vertigan said. "I didn't really see a whole lot out there that I could do with a Bachelor of Arts in international relations/French which is what I studied at Bucknell, and I knew I didn't want to teach which is the only real option I saw that would come from going into a master's or Ph.D. program."

Keiser said many jobs are available for liberal arts students. The individual's profile offered to potential employers makes the real difference.

She also said students' career paths and goals do not always remain the same.

"It is always good to have long-term goals, but a career path is like a work in progress; evolving with life and changing with available opportunities and current situations," Keiser said.

Internships and networking are key components of a job search. Interning with potential employers over the summer helps land a future job. Subsenior Jahman Ndaw is part of a dual-degree program in computer science engineering and mathematics and will look toward the job market after he graduates.

"I interned with PPL last summer which made a big difference to me and that is a big step towards a permanent job in the long run," Ndaw said.

The CDC organizes networking opportunities with parents and alumni throughout the year, one of them being the new Externship program for sophomores, scheduled to take place toward the end of winter break.

Keiser said other important aspects employers look at when hiring are academic records, leadership experience and interest in the company.

Some employers choose to grant Tuition Remission Benefit to certain employees, providing financial support for them to attend classes at educational institutions while working full time with the organization. This allows students to continue their education without spending more money or taking loans.

Elena Gregorio '05 is currently obtaining an elementary education certificate from Shippensburg University and soon hopes to be a teacher.

"I graduated with a music major from Bucknell, but during my first year after Bucknell I wasn't able to find a satisfying job in any area in which I had experience, so I started to expand my horizons and think of what field I could delve into that both held my interests and had 'real world' practicality," Gregorio said. "Teaching has always been something I've had in the back of my mind, so I decided to act on it."

News Briefs

Gunman kills five Amish schoolgirls

A 32-year-old gunman killed five Amish schoolgirls, critically wounded another five, and killed himself in Lancaster County, Pa. on Monday. The gunman was identified as Charles Carl Roberts IV, a milk truck driver with a wife and three young children. He went to the Amish schoolhouse after dropping off his children at school. Roberts allowed all the adults and boys to leave and then bound 10 girls who were from 6 to 13 years old. When the authorities closed in, Roberts shot the girls at close range before killing himself. He mentioned in his suicide notes that he was haunted by the death of his prematurely born daughter, Elise, in 1997. According to CNN.com, Roberts wrote to his wife that the death "changed [his] life forever." Roberts also claimed that he molested two of his female relatives 20 years ago, when they were 3 to 5 years old. He said that he dreamt of doing it again. His statement has not been confirmed by police or family. This has been the third school shooting in the past week.

Jetliner traveling to Turkey hijacked

On Tuesday, a jetliner carrying 113 people traveling from Albania to Turkey was forced to land in southern Italy by a Turkish hijacker. After landing, the hijacker surrendered and let the passengers go unharmed. He was identified as Hakan Ekinci, a convert to Christianity who left the army and fled to Albania. There have been numerous speculations as to Ekinci's motivations. According to The Washington Post, an Italian security official believed Ekinci had a message for Pope Benedict XVI. "The hijacker was seeking to evade military service in his native Turkey," Turkish Transport Minister Binali Yildirim said. After the plane was seized, the captain alerted Italian air traffic controllers and asked to land in Brindisi. Two Italian military jets escorted the plane down to the ground. Officials have reason to believe that Ekinci was not working alone.

Businessman flies to space

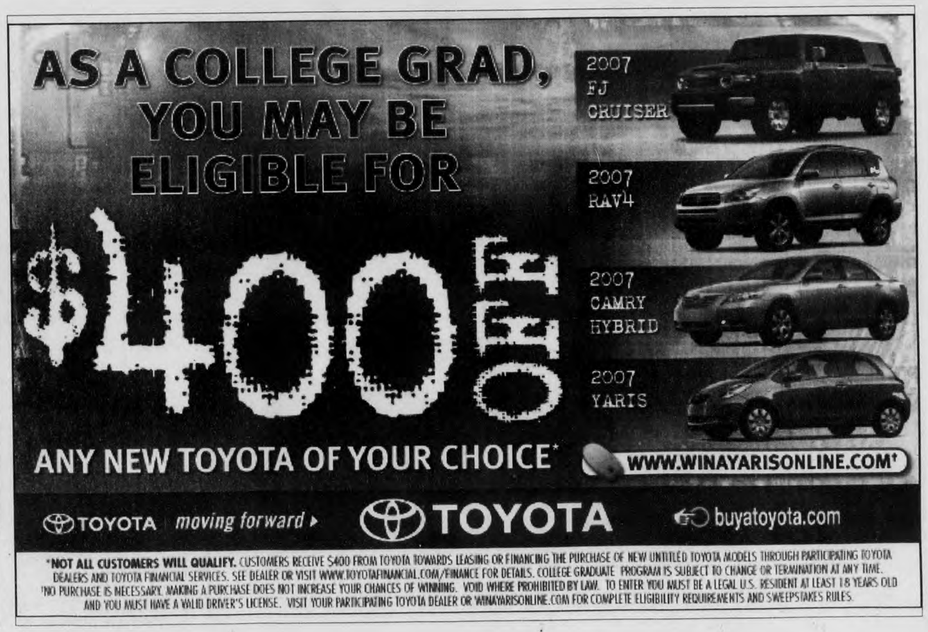
Alan Watts, a London businessman, traded in his 2 million frequent flyer miles to fly to space. According to CNN.com, Watts will be one of the first 1000 people to travel on a space tourism program in 2009 with Virgin Galactic, which is an offshoot of Britain's Virgin Atlantic Airline. He is the managing director of an electrical engineering firm and has flown on over 30 Virgin Atlantic flights. "The businessman will have three days of training before boarding the spacecraft," said CNN.com. There are test flights planned for early next year.

NASA discovers 16 possible planets

With help from the Hubble Space Telescope, NASA scientists have discovered 16 possible planets deep within the Milky Way, leading to speculation that the galaxy contains billions of other planets. As of Wednesday, the majority of the new planets have been introduced as "candidates," except for two that fit the characteristics of planets. Team leader Kailash Sahu told The Washington Post, "The chances are good that some, even all, of the 16 will ultimately meet all the criteria to be called planets." Five of the possible planets orbit their suns so closely that they make it around in less than one Earth day. The discovery supports NASA's hypothesis that there are millions more of these Jupiter-sized planets throughout the galaxy. "Our discovery ... gives very strong evidence that planets are as abundant in other parts of the galaxy as they are in our solar neighborhood," Sahu said.

Write for News
Email etu001 @

Nancy's Nu-Wave Salon
look your best
10% Discount with Student ID
524-2315
www.nancysnuwave.com
Main Street (Rte 45) - Mantandon



AS A COLLEGE GRAD, YOU MAY BE ELIGIBLE FOR $400 OFF
2007 FJ CRUISER
2007 RAV4
2007 CAMRY HYBRID
2007 YARIS
ANY NEW TOYOTA OF YOUR CHOICE*
WWW.WINAYARISONLINE.COM*
TOYOTA moving forward
TOYOTA
buyatoyota.com
*NOT ALL CUSTOMERS WILL QUALIFY. CUSTOMERS RECEIVE $400 FROM TOYOTA TOWARDS LEASING OR FINANCING THE PURCHASE OF NEW UNTITLED TOYOTA MODELS THROUGH PARTICIPATING TOYOTA DEALERS AND TOYOTA FINANCIAL SERVICES. SEE DEALER OR VISIT WWW.TOYOTAFINANCIAL.COM/FINANCE FOR DETAILS. COLLEGE GRADUATE PROGRAM IS SUBJECT TO CHANGE OR TERMINATION AT ANY TIME. 'NO PURCHASE IS NECESSARY. MAKING A PURCHASE DOES NOT INCREASE YOUR CHANCES OF WINNING. VOID WHERE PROHIBITED BY LAW. TO ENTER YOU MUST BE A LEGAL U.S. RESIDENT AT LEAST 18 YEARS OLD AND YOU MUST HAVE A VALID DRIVER'S LICENSE. VISIT YOUR PARTICIPATING TOYOTA DEALER OR WINAYARISONLINE.COM FOR COMPLETE ELIGIBILITY REQUIREMENTS AND SWEEPSTAKES RULES.

news | 1977

Graduates in past years follow divergent paths

By John Eckes
Appeared November 11, 1977

If you have no idea what you plan to do upon graduation, you may be interested in knowing what graduates of recent classes have tended to do after leaving Bucknell. The Office of Career Planning and Placement compiles this type of information.

Every year, Ray Irwin, director of Career Planning and Placement, sends out a student follow-up form to those students who have just graduated. The survey asks several questions, with a few that deal specifically with how graduates currently stand with regard to job opportunities, graduate school placement, and other alternatives open to a college graduate.

Irwin provided statistics gained from the surveys of the classes of 1972 through 1976. He explained that is still too early to compile statistics for the class of 1977, since the percentage of returns has not reached a high enough proportion to provide a valid picture of what last year's senior class is doing.

Of the respondents from that class of 1976, 59 percent replied they are planned to accept or had accepted an offer of employment.

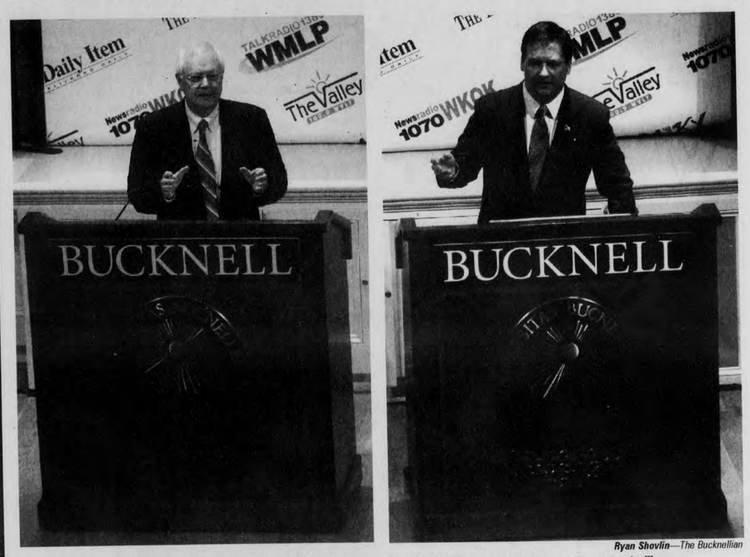
However, for the classes of 1976 and 1975, there is some interesting data that is still fairly recent. For the class of 1975, there was a 60 percent response rate. Of the respondents from that class of 1976, 59 percent replied they are planned to accept or had accepted an offer of employment. For the class of 1975, 53 percent responded in this way.

From the class of 1976, an additional 32 percent replied that they planned to enter or had entered graduate-professional school. The figure for the class of 1975 was 43 percent. Finally, one percent of the respondents from both the class of 1976 and 1975 answered that they planned to enter or had already entered military service.

For the five years from 1972 to 1976, the response rates to the various questions seems to be fairly stable. The only trend that might appear to be emerging is a decrease in the number of Bucknell graduates going on to graduate school, and a corresponding increase in those going directly into the job market. Those entering military service have been a consistently low percentage of their graduating class, never rising above three percent of the total since 1972.

A closer look at the candidates...



Ryan Shovlin—The Bucknellian

Republican Rep. Don Sherwood (left) and Democrat Chris Carney had their first debate of the election season in Trout Auditorium Wednesday night. Sherwood is a veteran of the U.S. Army and Carney is a lieutenant commander of the Navy Reserves.

By Alexandra Campbell-Ferrari
Staff Writer

The Nov. 7 election is drawing near. While you may have heard the candidate and incumbent's names, what else do you really know about them?

Chris Carney is the Democratic candidate for the Congressional seat of the 10th electoral district. Carney grew up in Iowa. According to www.carneyforcongress.com, he attended Cornell College in Mount Vernon, Iowa, and graduated with a double major in environmental science and U.S. diplomatic history. Upon graduation, Carney attended the University of Wyoming for graduate studies. It was here that he met his wife, Jennifer.

Carney decided to pursue a career in higher education after a period of teaching at the University of Wyoming. He and his family moved to northeastern Pennsylvania where Carney was invited to teach at Pennsylvania State University in Scranton. He is currently an associate professor at Penn State and teaches classes in U.S. foreign policy, American government and U.S. security policy.

Carney has served as a lieutenant commander of the Navy Reserves and senior terrorism and intelligence advisor at the Pentagon.

Carney has taken a stand in several issues particularly protecting America, tax relief and fiscal responsibility for the middle class. He also believes in empowering small businesses, fixing healthcare, protecting the second amendment, ensuring medical freedom and effective education reform.

If you are interested in learning more about the Carney campaign visit www.carneyforcongress.com.

Representative Don Sherwood is the Republican incumbent in the 10th district. He was elected to his fourth term in office in November 2004. Sherwood attended Dartmouth College in 1963 and graduated with a degree in Economics. He served in the Army as a first lieutenant and on the Tunkannock Area School Board for 22 years.

Sherwood was first elected in November 1998. He currently sits on the House Appropriations Committee, which is responsible for writing the laws funding the departments, agencies and programs of the federal government. He serves as the vice chairman of the subcommittee on foreign operations. Sherwood is a member of the Subcommittee on Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education, and the Subcommittee on the Interior.

During his tenure in office, Sherwood has helped to provide funding for environmental reclamation projects, highways, hospitals, military industries and other institutions that provide jobs for the people of the 10th electoral district. Sherwood was a leader in reforming Medicare laws.

If you are interested in reading more on Sherwood visit www.house.gov/sherwood/.

ADMISSIONS From page A1

from making a commitment by November.

In the aftermath of this announcement the University decided to review its own admission policy.

"We are conducting a thorough analysis of all our current practices and policies," said Kurt Thiede, vice president for enrollment management and dean of admissions. "We would like to present an admissions process that is as meaningful as possible, resulting in good decisions within a structure that meets everyone's needs."

Carol Gadd, associate director of admissions, expressed uncertainty as to how the University will proceed in the future, clearly stating the admissions office will make every attempt to ensure the fairness of its methods.

"Early decision, as far as I know, will continue to be part of Bucknell's process for this year. We already have some early decision applications on file," Gadd said. "[Eliminating early decision] may or may not be part of a larger conversation that will take place as we review our reading and decision-making process later this fall."

As Thiede said, the early decision program was designed to benefit students who selected their schools early in the fall. He also said the University recognizes the merits of creating a graduating class of students which is comprised of applicants from both the early and regular decision pools.

"Although the strength of the early decision applicant pool in any given year might support an increase in offers of admissions to these candidates, we believe that the current reality of enrolling 42 percent of the entering first-year class via early decision is as high as we should go at Bucknell," Thiede said.

Despite the allegations of causing anxiety, numerous current students expressed their satisfaction with their decisions to apply early.

Star Haupt '09 said she was confident in selecting the University as her first choice and feels early decision helped minimize her stress level, not maximize it.

"Applying early decision didn't limit my college search process," Haupt said. "I still had my pile of backup school applications ready, but most of my attention went to applying to Bucknell. Applying early decision allowed me to relax near the end of my senior year of high school, and gave me more time to plan for school."

Abbie Dearman '10 concurred with Haupt's sentiment and said she was relieved to complete the application process early.

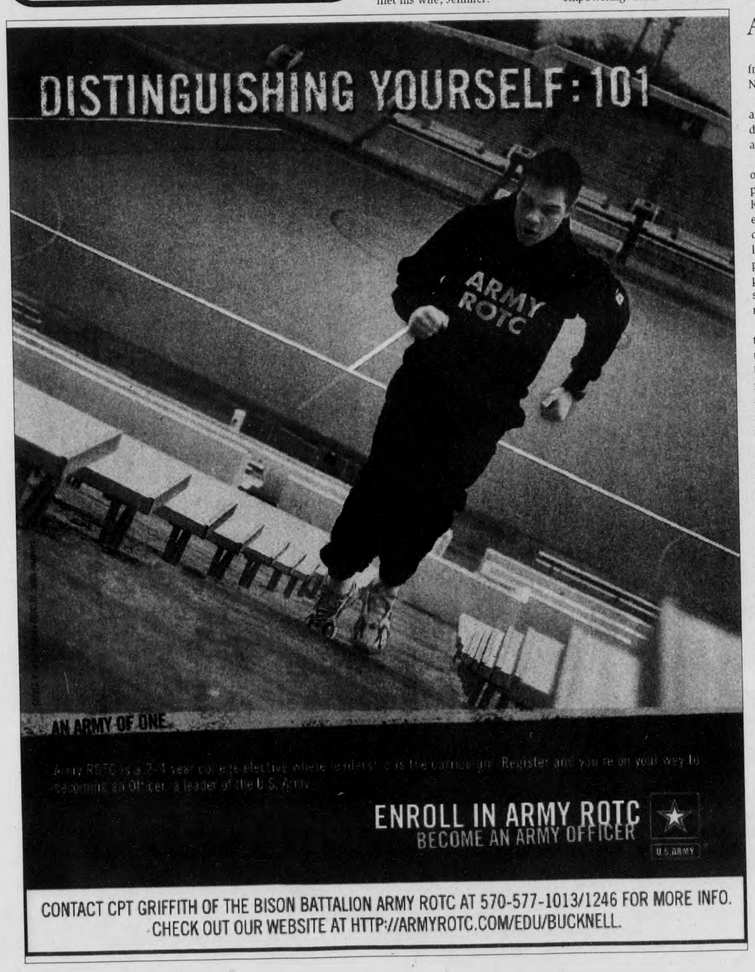
"All of the expectations I had [for Bucknell] have been fulfilled," Dearman said. Dearman remains pleased with her decision because she was sure of her choice.

Karl Baumle '10, another early decision applicant, explained his feelings on the early decision policy.

"I would encourage a student to apply early decision if and only if their intuition tells them that the school is where they belong," Baumle said. "Only having to fill out one application was certainly an advantage that relieved the stress that haunts students who apply to as many as 17 schools."

Colleges and universities around the nation will watch the effects of the new policies of Ivy League schools, and use this information to improve their own systems of admissions.

"There are lots of opinions and much speculation about the motivations for and against following Harvard's lead," Gadd said.



DISTINGUISHING YOURSELF: 101
ARMY ROTC
AN ARMY OF ONE
ENROLL IN ARMY ROTC
BECOME AN ARMY OFFICER
U.S. ARMY
CONTACT CPT GRIFFITH OF THE BISON BATTALION ARMY ROTC AT 570-577-1013/1246 FOR MORE INFO.
CHECK OUT OUR WEBSITE AT HTTP://ARMYROTC.COM/EDU/BUCKNELL.

The Bucknellian

We're still here. And always will be.

Meet the Bucknellian editorial board for the fall semester. Back row: Julia Fuchs '09, Ellyn Ercolano '09, Rina Van Orden '08, Catie Heverling '07, Jamie Jacobson '08, Brian Mulligan '09, Evan Unger '09; Third row: Barbara Perlman '09, Nilanjana Saha '09, Lily Beauvilliers '09, Michelle Laxer '09, Michael Dippery '08, Hallie Stebbins '08, Drew Larson '08; Second row: Juliana Su '09, Kat Conti '08, Greg Hamilton '08, Brianna DelValle '10, Ryan Winn '08; Lying down: Matt Saylor '08. Not pictured: Kimberly Kane '08, Jared Napolitano '08.

Subscribe now-- in time for our upcoming "vintage supplement," containing articles and pictures from archives dating back to 1897!

Enclose this form and a check (made out to The Bucknellian) and mail it to:

The Bucknellian, Bucknell University C3952, 701 Moore Avenue, Lewisburg, PA 17837

Name _____

Address _____

_____

Phone _____

E-mail _____

__ ONE YEAR: receive 24 issues each week for the academic year for only $45, a $15 savings!

__ ONE SEMESTER: receive 12 issues during the fall or spring semester for $30. Please specify semester: _____

For more information contact The Bucknellian at 570-577-1520 or bucknellian@bucknell.edu

The Bucknellian
Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue
Volume 138, Number 6
C-3952 Bucknell University
Lewisburg, Pa. 17837
(570) 577-1520
bucknellian@bucknell.edu
http://www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Editor-in-Chief
Catherine Heverling '07

Associate Editor of Content
Jamie Jacobson '08

Associate Editor of Layout
Rina Van Orden '08

Business Manager
Jared Napolitano '08

Senior Editor
Drew Larson '08

News Editors
Evan Unger '09
Nilanjana Saha '09
Michelle Laxer '09

Opinions Editors
Hallie Stebbins '08
Michael Dippery '08

Sports Editors
Matthew Saylor '08
Barbara Perlman '09
Brian Mulligan '08

Features Editors
Julia Fuchs '09
Brianna DelValle '10

Arts & Entertainment Editors
Kimberly Kane '08
Lily Beauvilliers '09

Photography Editors
Ryan Winn '08
Ellyn Ercolano '09

Chief Copy Editors
Kathleen Conti '08
Greg Hamilton '08

Advertising Managers
Meredith Reighard '07
Kat Wallis '07
Katie Casteel '08
Emily Senko '08

Office Manager
Kate Wood '07

Cartoonist
Juliana Su '09

Adviser
James F. Lee

Op-Ed Policy

The editorials of The Bucknellian reflect the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the editor-in-chief. All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

Letters to the editor must be received by noon on the Tuesday before publication. Letters may not be longer than 600 words and the Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny or edit any letter to the editor. Letters must contain the writer's name and phone number (used for verification purposes and not to be printed). Mail or e-mail letters using the addresses above.

Publishing Information

The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester entirely by Bucknell students. All published material is chosen by the paper's Editorial Board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its adviser, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

Subscription Information

Subscriptions are available for $45 per year or $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian Subscriptions, Bucknell University, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, Pa. 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

Members of the local community may pick up a complimentary issue each week, with the understanding of one free issue per person. If you would like more for a nominal fee, contact the print office.

Advertising Policy

The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements if deemed offensive, illegal or in bad taste. Advertisements reflect the opinion of the advertiser and not necessarily that of The Bucknellian. For advertising rates and information, please contact the advertising department at (570) 577-1085.

Copyright © 2006

The Bucknellian
Editorial

Strive for meaning not money

Take a good look at these two pages. Do you notice anything unusual?

Each week, The Bucknellian dedicates two pages to the opinions of the campus community. And each week, it appears that the number of opinions on campus decreases.

Take a moment to read the editorials pulled from 1987's first issue on page A7. These articles were printed when The Bucknellian's opinions section had four pages and seven articles—addressing everything from institutional racism and the Reagan administration to apathy on campus (although having a student to write the article counts for something).

Have our standards declined?

We think so, considering this week's two-page spread sustained by Opinions Editor Michael Dippery.

What we find most discouraging is not our lack of writers, but rather the lack of concern from students. Out of 3,500 students, is it really possible that only one had an opinion this week—about anything?

It's obvious that what most people on this campus are concerned about is the future. Students spend their time shaping themselves and their resumes to fit that profile of the perfect entry-level employee.

But what if that's not what it's all about? What if one day, six months from now, a year from now, ten years from now, you're in the job you thought you wanted and you realize it's not where you want to be?

Students should not forget that college is not just about finding the perfect job; it's about finding yourself.

The time to do that is now. Discover where your interests lie—not the highest salaries. Educate yourselves about policies, as well as investing. It may not seem important to you now what's going on in Malaysia or Hong Kong. But 10 or 20 years down the road when that shoe factory you invested in gets closed down, you'll wonder why you didn't worry about child labor laws back in college.

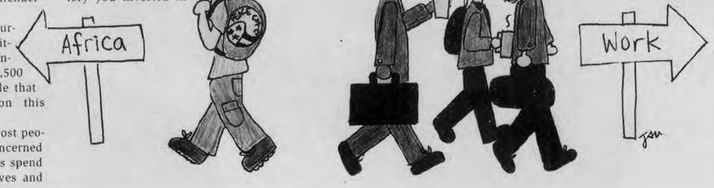
This is not to say that we should ditch our bags in reality and make a pit stop in a world of "fun in the sun." Clearly, working toward a profession is a logical and respectable thing to do. Just be sure there isn't something else that you're looking for first.

We're not asking for a revolution here, just a little bit of thinking outside of the bubble. There are students on this campus who have camped out on the quad to raise money for Habitat for Humanity. There are students who volunteer regularly at local soup kitchens.

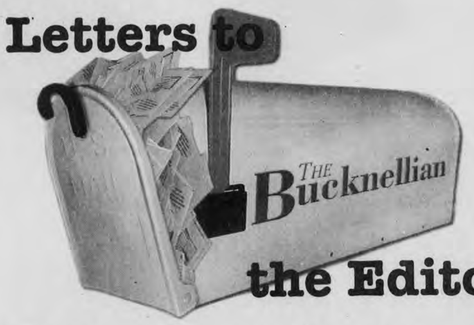
Instead of running up and down Wall Street, frantically searching for a desk behind which you can trade money, consider giving a little something to the world.

Open yourself up to the possibility of Teach for America, the Peace Corps or one of the other non-profit organizations that prepare you for the real world while instilling certain values. Travel. It just seems logical that before we can become functioning members of the "real world," we should know a thing or two about it first.

Two nights in a Taiwanese village without running water and you'll think twice the next time you're writing out your Christmas list. The world is a big place and there is a lot of work to be done. And the depleting ozone doesn't care about your $300 jeans.



Letters to the Editor



Alumnus speaks out about diversity plans

To the Editor:

As a graduate of the University and the executive responsible for diversity at the company where I work, I have been following the University's efforts to become more inclusive with great interest. I was gratified to see so much of the Sept. 15 issue of The Bucknellian devoted to the topic. While I certainly do not profess to be a diversity expert—I'm not sure anyone can truly make that claim—after reading the commentary in The Bucknellian, I want to offer three observations of my own in the hope of advancing my alma mater's efforts to embrace diversity.

1. Diversity is not about numbers. It is all too easy to reduce diversity to a mathematical equation. An unintended consequence of this approach can be to artificially limit diversity. For instance, 51 percent of Americans are female. Arguably, then, 51 percent of any U.S. college's students should be female. In point of fact, the national average of college-enrolled women is 57 percent. A slavish devotion to statistics could have artificially depressed the opportunities available to women, as it can for other groups. (Interestingly, while only 47 percent of the applicants for the University's class of 2010 were women, 51 percent of those offered admission were female.)

While I am not suggesting that statistics be ignored, it is important that members of the majority not come to think of diversity as something that is "finished" when a numerical goal is reached. The composition of our society is ever changing, as is (or should be) the make-up of the University's student body.

2. Inclusiveness does not mean assimilation. One of the more difficult concepts to grasp is the notion of including everyone in all aspects of society while retaining differences. Often there is a tendency among the majority to view integration as "making them like us," operating under the well-intended, but usually mistaken, belief minorities aspire to be more like the majority.

Employing the "Golden Rule" so many of us were taught as children, members of the majority frequently decide embracing diversity means treating others the same way members of the majority wish to be treated, ignoring different traditions and cultural practices. The real aspiration is for all individuals to be treated with respect and have the same opportunities as members of the majority. The "Platinum Rule" teaches us to treat others as they wish to be treated. This distinction is significant.

3. Guard against subtle discrimination. Make no mistake, discrimination still exists within the United States. While progress has been made and the blatant discriminatory acts so prevalent prior to the Civil Rights Movement have declined in frequency, biases remain. Consciously or not, the majority often holds minorities to a higher standard than they do their white, male peers. Minorities can be made to feel as though they represent their entire race, not themselves as individuals. This is something the majority simply does not experience, and should not be instituted upon others.

Embracing diversity can be intellectually and emotionally exhausting. It is rarely as simple as treating everyone equally. Understanding other cultures and being sensitive to differences requires much more effort than maintaining the status quo. It is indisputably worth the commitment, not only because it is the right thing to do, but because a diverse environment attracts the best and brightest, many of whom just happen to be members of a minority.

Sincerely,

Frank Miles '78

P.S. In case you are wondering about my frame of reference, I am a 50-year-old white male.

University to emphasize good sportsmanship

Dear Campus Community,

On behalf of our coaches, staff and student-athletes, I wish to thank you for the tremendous energy and enthusiasm you bring to each and every one of our athletic contests! Your dedicated support has created an energetic and positive atmosphere for our home games, as well as a distinctive "home-court" advantage that showcases our "school spirit" at the University.

The University and the other member institutions of the Patriot League ask for your help to keep your support of our teams positive and cheer with positive encouragement. It has been observed at some athletics contests across the League that spectators have moved from an atmosphere of enthusiasm to win the game to one of how to intimidate and degrade opposing players and visiting teams.

Our Bison teams thrive upon the positive enthusiasm and energy you bring in supporting our home contests. Please help us remind those around you of our expectations for good sporting conduct and comportment. Not only is this a priority at the University and in the Patriot League, but the NCAA playing rules demand your good sporting conduct. Help us support our Bison teams the right way—the Bucknell way!

With this in mind, the Department of Athletics is pleased to announce a new initiative aimed at reminding fans about the importance of comportment and appropriate conduct while supporting the Bison. You will begin to see components of the Department-wide campaign—BISON GOOD SPORTS!—at many of our venues and on our publications in the coming weeks.

We hope that you will continue to join our players, coaches and staff through the BISON GOOD SPORTS campaign to help all spectators find creative and ingenious ways to positively support our student-athletes. Thank you for your loud and loyal support. Go Bison!

'ray Bucknell!

John P. Hardt
Director of Athletics & Recreation

"Freedom of the press, if it means anything at all, means the freedom to criticize and oppose."

— Eric Arthur Blair

Share your opinion.
E-mail hstebbin@

Hefty workloads a hindrance to young students' educations

Excessive homework damages children's desire to learn and grow

By Michael Dippery
Opinions Editor

According to CNN.com, a recent study by the National Education Association (NEA) asserts children find it harder and harder to complete daily homework assignments because they do not have enough time or cannot find anyone to help.

This study comes at a time when schools are pushing more demanding schedules and workloads upon students. Much of the increased workload comes as schools struggle to cover material required for standardized tests.

Some teachers criticize the fact that many school assignments, such as massive research projects for fifth-graders, are simply beyond the abilities of students—and sometimes even parents.

The NEA study raises an important question: is more—and harder—homework the way to help kids learn? At first glance, it may seem like pushing kids harder better prepares them for life. How can forcing a student to take a close look at his or her studies possibly hinder his or her learning?

Such a workload hinders students' educations in numerous ways.

There are a couple ways students typically try to understand new material. Some go to school, do the required work and develop an adequate, if superficial, understanding of the material. Others go the extra mile and try to understand every facet of a new topic, investigating and experimenting with the material on their own.

These are the kids you see reading science books in their free time, playing with chemistry sets or trying to figure out just what makes a curveball curve.

A demanding workload damages a student's desire to learn. When a student thinks of learning as work, he or she is less likely to be excited about school.

Unfortunately, a demanding workload prevents students from going the extra mile to deeply investigate material. When students spend their evenings struggling to complete homework correctly and on time, they do not have time to investigate the world around them—something crucial to a child's intellectual growth.

A demanding workload damages a student's desire to learn. When a student thinks of learning as work, he or she is less likely to be excited about school. This problem is compounded in college, where much learning takes place outside the classroom. Developing a true appreciation for learning is crucial to success later in life.

Finally, the study raises interesting questions about the necessity of some homework assignments in the first place. How many of us remember spending hours toiling over seemingly-pointless projects like board games or assignments that had more of a basis in art? Did they really teach us a whole lot about math and science or literature and language?

There is no doubt that homework is necessary to push students' intellectual boundaries, but teachers should take care selecting assignments that complement in-class activities to find a careful balance between stimulating students' intellectual curiosity and drowning them in course material.

Art teacher's firing reinforces negative images in children

Conservative morals should not trump a classical education

By Michael Dippery
Opinions Editor

Sydney McGee, an art teacher in Texas, is out of a job after taking her fifth-grade students on a tour of the Dallas Museum of Art, thanks to a few exhibits of nude artwork.

The school-sanctioned trip was supposed to be an educational experience, but after one student's parent complained, McGee was suspended and the district is actively working to hire a replacement.

This incident in one of our nation's most conservative states raises a host of issues, the first being the wisdom of firing a passionate teacher who only wanted to expose her students to a classical education. The second issue is the impression of the human form we give our children, and the consequences of those images.

From an early age, children are taught to view nudity as bad. Being seen naked is shameful. This leaves a clear impression on the minds of children: the human body is something to be ashamed of.

From an early age, children are taught to view nudity as bad. Being seen naked is shameful.

This leads to self-image problems later in life. Children are not taught to be proud of their image, yet they are bombarded with images of human forms in the media, leading them to only admire a rare subset of human body types.

The art world in particular is not a place where these negative ideas of image should be reinforced. Throughout history, the human form has been held in high regard. Greek artists had no compunction about displaying the aesthetic qualities of the human body, and even classical Christian artists often employed the unclothed body in their work.

The time has come for Americans to stop instilling a sense of shame in our children's minds. There is nothing shameful about the human body, especially as it appears in classical artwork. It is more important for our children to receive well-rounded classical educations than be sheltered from the real world.

I only hope that the superintendent of Ms. McGee's school district realizes the shamefulness of his own act and reinstalls her as an art teacher. The world needs dedicated educators like Ms. McGee, and getting rid of her is doing the students of that district an enormous disservice.

My Favorite Mistake

If you want it done right, you should let someone else do it

By Michael Dippery
Opinions Editor

Raise your hand if you like to mess around with non-functional computer equipment. Yeah, didn't think so. It's not a popular activity, but when printers run out of ink, someone has to do it. Last week, it turned out I was that someone, much to my displeasure.

The laser printer in the Bucknellian newsroom ran out of toner. Being the thoughtful gentleman I am, I took it upon myself to replace the cartridge.

Big mistake. I happened to choose a damaged toner cartridge. I am not sure how toner cartridges work, but I am relatively certain the toner is supposed to stay inside the casing. There is probably a little gizmo that keeps it from spilling out when it's not supposed to.

I handled it like a ticking time bomb or some kind of deformed baby. As I neared the maw of the printer, I realized I had no idea how to actually install the new toner.

Well in this case that gizmo was broken, because as soon as I freed the cartridge from its plastic sheath I found myself sprinkled with black fairy dust.

The floor and printer got it pretty bad, too, but at least they didn't come out of it looking like coal miners. For anyone interested, laser printer toner actually wipes off pretty easily with soap and water, and it does not stain clothes—although I imagine this would have been a different story had I heated myself with a laser beam first.

After cleaning up the toner mess and properly packaging the broken cartridge for recycling, I decided to try my chances with another one. I was pretty nervous, but this one came out of the packaging fully intact. I breathed a sigh of relief.

Now I just had to get it from my hands into the printer in a safe, secure manner.

I handled it like a ticking time bomb or some kind of deformed baby. As I neared the maw of the printer, I realized I had no idea how to actually install the new toner. Someone else removed the old one, so I couldn't just reverse the process used to remove it.

Then I had a brainstorm: the box must have some instructions!

I was elated when I found directions composed of four pictures. Pictures are simple, right? Not in this case, because the directions only specified how to remove the toner cartridge from the box, not how to actually install it.

Long-story short, I figured out how to install it with the aid of a physics major and now the printer is working properly again. I regret stepping up to the plate and trying to install it in the first place. Hewlett-Packard robbed me of about 30 precious minutes of my time during which I could have enjoyed some much-needed shut-eye.

Sometimes the best solution to a problem is to let some other poor sucker do it for you.

opinion 1984

Senior reflects about the beaten path, in search of getting it together

By Andy Sangimino
Appeared February 10, 1984

People attempt to think through their problems in different ways. Some people pray, others seek the ears of a confidante, still others run until their bodies, and then their minds will take them no further. I write. I am at once creator, critic, and audience for an essay that attempts to clarify so many wild and wreckless perceptions (are they misperceptions?). I stumbled across this essay, which I wrote for myself during my sophomore year, when sifting through old school papers. Having rediscovered it, I thought I might share it with you.

What are we doing here at Bucknell University? We are thirty two hundred strong, neatly nestled in rolling Pennsylvania acreage. Ours is a world where time is measured in terms of classes and achievement in terms of grading scales. We are both consumers and producers in a self-contained community whose cause is the communication of ideas. Towards what end is this melting pot of millions of dollars, thousands of people, and four precious years of our lives dedicated? As an incoming freshman I as under the impression that one's college years was a time to get it together. After three semesters, thirty-three spiral notebooks, and three hundred and thirty three bisonburgers, I find myself asking my other self… just what is "it" that I am allegedly getting together? Do I not first have to find it?

As I look around me, it seems I am not the only one who has begun his earnest search for identity. Until a few weeks ago, my brother was among the many freshman designed as decidedly undecided. He now is an undecidedly decided economics major entertaining thoughts of computer science, law and medical school. My roommate is a former computer science engineer currently majoring in international relations, and studying Japanese. As for me, I am an accounting major who has recently discovered that his interests gravitate toward "liberal arts" also, specifically English. I intend to major in both majors. Everywhere and around me, musical majors seems to be the game that everyone is playing. Our academic pursuits are but on example of our constant state of experimentation and change. The same could be said for our I inter and intra-personal endeavors. Independents are rushing as brothers deactivate. This semester's conservatives were last semester's radicals. We are all scrambling about seeking an answer… Is the grass really greener on the other side?

Despite all of the questions and conflicts we encounter, we can never legitimately complain about the life of a college student. Only one out of every three people enjoy a college education in our country, whose citizens are among the best educated on our planet. WE are parasites of both our parents and our society. We are money -sucking leeches of the most unproductive kind. We have taken ourselves out of the economic mainstream to ponder life's great questions, and to hopefully grow up a little. Never again will we be afforded so much freedom and so little responsibility.

So here we are, trying to get together what we have no yet found. Maybe we are a little confused because for so long we have been fed the illusion that our teenage years were when we should have "found ourselves." Perhaps we are frustrated when the answers to many crucial questions seem so evasive. A professor by the name of Aristotle once told his student:

"… it is the mark of an educated man to look for precision in each class of things just so far as the nature of the subject admits."

This is something we should keep in mind as we attempt to answer questions like… What type of individual do I want to become? What do I want to do with my life?

If we have no found what are looking for, at least we cannot fault ourselves for lack of effort. Through our experiences of experimentation we define, refine and redefine our goals, our dreams and ourselves. The possibilities for us as individuals are limited only by our vision. It is this vision, not factual knowledge, or job security, or graduate school admittance that is the paramount concern of this or any other true university. Through exposure to our peers, our profs and ourselves, through lectures, literature and conversation, our perspectives are stretched in all directions.

Ah, it is beginning to make sense. As we seek "it" we are getting it together. Henry David Thoreau once wrote: " It is easier to discover another such a new world as Columbus did, than to go within one fold of that which appear to know so well…"

He was right.

Bucknellian cares

By the Spring Staff of 1984
Appeared February 10, 1984

Yes, The Bucknellian is publishing for the spring semester. Some poor fool stepped forward to assume the role of editor; partly to keep The Bucknellian in operation and partly to resolve (or compound) my own philosophical turmoil.

Many Bucknellians were absorbed into the three-piece suit corporate world since the day their SAT scores arrived in the mail and they discovered they could attend a "competitive college." Monetary tunnel vision, coupled with apathetic myopia, hinders the questioning outlook normally representative of youth.

This trend toward "thinking beyond their years" has aged some of us quickly. Blind acceptance of an imperfect world and the subliminally nagging idea that Bucknell is a highly reputable trade school come together to produce a student body that does not give a damn about much beyond books, grades and drunken Friday nights that allow them to forget about books and grades for a while.

There is no excuse for not caring about our present environment. Parents no longer buffer out the world; at the same time, food, clothing and shelter come in a package deal. Your sole responsibility at a university is to think — and to care and respond to the world presented to us.

The Bucknellian performs two functions on campus — it reports campus news and involves non-apathetic people, either through discussion over its pages and/or direct involvement — and it attempts to reach the "corporate-bent" student while reaffirming that somewhere at Bucknell University somebody gives a damn.

Mer Cares

Dear Mer:

Before I came to college, my mother and I were super close. She was one of my best friends and we always told each other everything. But now that it has been a month into my freshman year, she still calls me constantly to catch up and know all about my life and my friends and what I do. While I love my mother dearly, most of my friends talk to their parents every now and then. I would even be alright with talking to her every couple days or every week but she calls me every single day. I have a life and it is difficult having to talk to my mother all the time when I'm busy or want to do things with my friends. I have a lot of homework and extracurricular activities and just want to spend time with my friends and not talk to my mother ALL the time. Why does she keep calling me and what can I say to her without hurting her?

—Crazed Daughter

Dear Crazed Daughter:

Many of us experience a variation of this after moving away to college. It is quite common for parents to have a hard time letting go. The trick is to make the transition as painless as possible for them. Let me explain what parents go through when their children leave for college.

Going away to college represents your first step toward adulthood, and usually both the child and the parents find the separation difficult. You need to show your mother that while you are happy on your own, you still need her love and guidance.

Next time she calls or if you return home soon, have a talk with her about how you still consider her one of your close friends. She needs know you still rely on her, but you must also assert your independence. Choices are now up to you, and so are the friends you make and the work you choose to do for your classes.

You may still need her for hard decisions and I'm sure she would be happy to help out, but it is not healthy for her to call you every day to check up on you and hear about the day's gossip. She may be your best friend at the moment, but she needs to give you space so you can grow into an adult who is not completely dependent on her.

Without her role as your protector and primary caretaker, your mother may feel left out and worried about your ability to be on your own at college.

Being a good parent means devoting your life to educating and teaching your children, promoting a pleasant and safe venture into the outside world. Your mother needs to realize that in order for you to grow up and be a successful adult, you need to pull away from your parents' control and concerns.

According to an article prepared by the staff at the New York University Child Study Center, "Adjusting to being on the outside can be difficult when parents are no longer needed in the same ways. Even though students may have been somewhat independent while still under their care, supervision and roof, once in college parents are less privy to every aspect of their child's life; they no longer know the details of their son's or daughter's whereabouts and are not able to pass judgment on all their friends."

It is unhealthy for your mother to know your every move; you should share your life with her, but only to a certain extent.

It is important to stay close to your family while at college, after you graduate and when you get a job, but you need to draw the boundaries. It is solely up to you to do so—not your mother.

Love,
Mer

Please send questions regarding any topic to marc001@bucknell.edu with subject line reading "advice" or you may send a letter via campus mail to box number C1099. I look forward to hearing from you!

RHA renews recycling initiative

By Rajaa Qadri
Writer

Recycling is one of the key steps in reducing waste in our environment. Unfortunately, most people do not realize that.

Most communities lack the incentive to push recycling. According to a report in USA Today, American citizens currently recycle 21 percent of the plastic bottles compared with the 37 percent recycled in 1995.

The University has paid considerable attention to the importance of recycling on campus and is committed to promoting it among students. The University has been recycling as far back as most can remember, and attained success in the 1990s with recycling rates exceeding state goals.

Recycling is now mandatory in residential halls. To ensure everyone enthusiastically recycles, the University has put recycling bins for plastic, glass and paper in every hall. Each resident is expected to take out recycling materials from their dorm rooms to the hallway recycling bins. Every week a different resident has to transport recyclables from their dorm hallways to the brown sheds outside of the buildings.

The University has also created the student recycling monitors, who make rounds in various dormitories and make sure every student is playing his or her part in recycling. The recycling monitors also work with Facilities to improve recycling programs on campus.

"We make every effort to publicize recycling on campus, usually through presentations, newspaper, posters and recycling competition," said Hyun Young Kho '09, one of the recycling monitors. "Our main goal is to encourage students to play their part in recycling for the betterment of everyone. We try to maintain an ongoing discussion with the students about what materials can be placed in the recycling bins."

The monitors have the power to punish people who do not recycle.

"Generally, if the students don't do their recycling duty, they are fined, but we are pretty flexible about it, as the point is not to fine them but promote the importance of recycling and get the students into the habit of recycling in their daily lives," Kho said.

Though the University has tried to recycle efficiently, it is still ranked 39th among the 45 schools that participate in the RecycleMania competition. The University is currently striving for improvement.

"I'm really excited that Recycling Monitors and the students have moved forward with recycling on campus," said Liz Yates, residence life coordinator for Larison and Harris Halls. "In the past, recycling was mandatory for first-year students and optional for upper-class students. With the new program, all Bucknell students are expected to recycle in the residence halls. This is something that is definitely overdue."

Yates is positive about the new recycling projects.

"The new program and recycling monitors are a great addition, partly because it is a student based initiative. This program has much potential and will make a difference. I would encourage students to learn about what is and is not recyclable and talk to the recycling coordinator if they have questions," Yates said.

Other than the dormitories, the University has placed clearly-marked recycling containers throughout campus buildings to make disposal of recyclable material convenient for all personnel. Facility custodians collect the recyclables and place them in the nearest brown sheds designated for campus recycling.

There are some general problems the custodians encounter, such as mixed and co-mingled wastes. Students usually mistake pizza boxes for recycling.

Ellyn Ercolano—The Bucknellian

Each residence hall is equipped with clearly labeled recycling bins. Students are assigned to make sure the bins don't overflow and can be fined if they do.

Pizza boxes contain oils and food waste that are undesirable. Also, the boxes from beer cases, cereal and shoes are not corrugated cardboard and are not recyclable. These co-mingled waste materials render the contents of the entire bin unusable, which is a real waste.

We all know the benefits of recycling and how little effort it takes. Being careful and making use of the recycling bins provided by the University can help protect our environment and raise our quality of life.

trends | 1982

Bucknellian relationships: a view From Roberts

By Tricia Hammes and Lauren Moores
Appeared February 11, 1982

The Bucknell relationship—what is it? Is "going out" a dying tradition? Where is the Bucknell couple? These are just a few of the questions that we and our friends have asked ourselves over the last semester.

Coming from high schools where almost everyone "goes steady" and emotional attachments are common and then moving on to an environment where "one-night stands" are the predominant form of interaction between the males and females is a culture shock. College is a time to start new relationships, and yet, for some reasons, anything more than a brief encounter is ridiculed.

It appears that in many cases, guys are more interested in getting the reputation of "stud" than getting to know girls. This "stud" image tends to focus on quantity rather than quality in relationships; people do not really get to know each other.

Relationships, if they can be called that, seem to follow this pattern: boy meets girl, they drink, dance, and then end up either in his or her room, whichever one is available. Admittedly, some girls try to infer a commitment into something the guy did not wish to happen. However, a large majority of guys appear to get their kicks out of leading a girl on, using her, and then, at the first sign that the girl might actually be interested in him as a person, dumping her. It would seem that either the guy likes playing games with the girl's mind or else—is it possible—that he is scared of any kind of relationship? It is next to impossible to get to know the guys on this campus. Even in the situation of "just friends," guys tend to be impossible to know. Perhaps this is because the atmosphere of the University is not conducive to getting to know members of the opposite sex well.

Those serious relationships which do develop tend to reflect the effect of this attitude towards relationships. Because of the scarcity of relationships, those who do have one tend to become possessive. This possessiveness often corrodes the relationship and breeds such emotions as jealousy and bitterness. The whole relationship which should be based on caring turns into one big battleground. All in all, the lack of a happy medium in relationships seems to make relationships a case of use and abuse.

Guys are not the only ones to blame for the lack of middle-of-the-road relationships. As long as girls let guys get away with using them, guys are going to take advantage of the situation. It is also true that a small minority of girls abuse guys, but on the whole, we have found that it is guys who are more abusive.

Then, of course, there is the old myth that women only come to college to find a husband. As far as we could find, there was no truth in this statement. Most girls are not looking for a serious relationship—they enjoy their freedom as much as guys do. Rather, they are just looking for a casual relationship and hope to get to know guys.

With the current situation of male-female relationships at the University, it is hard to believe the rumor that approximately 70 percent of Bucknellians marry other Bucknellians. With the large number of both men and women who get hurt in brief relationships, one would think that they would withdraw from anything which resembles a Bucknell relationship.

However, since a large amount of relationships do develop between Bucknellians, there must be something good there. Perhaps there is potential for the middle-of-the-road Bucknell relationship! If everybody tries to get to know one another and treat each other as people with real emotions rather than pawns in a game, who knows what miracle (in the form of a new, more understanding Bucknell male-female relationship) might occur.

Tell us your darkest secrets

One night...
My husband brought me a dozen roses, took me to my favorite restaurant, and made passionate love to me.
The very next day, I came home to an empty house.
I haven't seen or heard from him since.
Greetings from Walt Disney World
So I emptied our joint account and went to Disney World!

www.postsecret.com

Tell us anything. Funny, bitter, sexy, depressing. Something only you know. This is your chance to get it all off your chest. Design a postcard, write a secret on it, and send it in. Entries will be published at the end of the semester.

Send your secret anonymously to:
The Bucknellian
C-3952

Growing Up '90s Style:

TECHNOLOGY AND SCIENCE

By Melissa Duffy
Contributing Writer

Playstation. MP3s. The Internet. How did we live without them? Our daily lives revolve more and more around the technological advancements readily available. Before the days of iPods, Blackberrys and Razor cell phones, there were Walkmans, agenda books and cell phones the size of bananas—there were the '90s.

It is difficult to imagine a time when "snail mail" was an efficient form of communication or when radio mix-tapes passed as acceptable party mixes. While the compact disc became prevalent in the later '90s, the earlier years produce a visual of women power-walking in spandex to the tunes of Bruce Springsteen on cassette tapes.

"What I appreciate most about the '90s is the rise of MP3s and Napster," Kay Miyoshi '09 said. "I can't imagine still having to depend on the radio or cassettes to listen to my favorite music mixes."

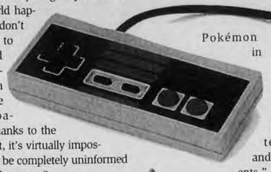
"In the '90s, technology was actually very similar to what it is now, only at a much slower pace," Brian Reisker '09 said. "I remember having to wait what felt like forever to begin a program on my first computer. Early software was so slow that, today, I probably wouldn't even consider something that slow worth using."

The '90s also saw the rising popularity of the personal computer, with the birth of Microsoft Windows 95 and 98. The capacity for computer use expanded rapidly with the creation of the World Wide Web and HTML by Tim Berners-Lee, as well as the subsequent development of Web browsers such as Internet Explorer and Netscape Navigator.

Such browsers put libraries of information at our fingertips, enabling us to self-educate like never before.

Further advancements with IDSN, cable modems, computer modems and DSL accelerated Internet speed and brought opportunity for a decade of dot-coms, ranging from Amazon and eBay to AOL and Yahoo!

"It's so easy to stay connected these days—I can't even remember the early '90s, before I could access the news and my e-mail with the quick touch of a button," Lauren Jaeger '09 said. "Now, if anything important in the world happens, I don't have to depend on television or the newspaper. Thanks to the Internet, it's virtually impossible to be completely uninformed about the news."



Most of us from the '90s generation remember running off the bus and hopping online to share a different type of news—the day's gossip—with friends, exchanging countless "lol's," "brb's" and "ttyl's."

Thanks to the rise of the popular online conversation tool, the English language will never be the same.

New technology advanced beyond simply connecting people. It took monumental steps in saving lives and in beginning to explain the origin of humans. The '90s saw advances in the field of genetics with the cloning of Dolly the sheep, as well as the beginning of the Human Genome Project. Genetically-engineered crops were developed for commercial use and criminal law adopted widespread use of DNA identification of individuals.

Countless electronic toys and gadgets were developed in the '90s. Tamagotchis, the virtual pets whose sleeping, feeding and general living habits tortured teachers and parents of small children across the country, were quite popular.

"I remember Nintendo Gameboys and Pokémon in general being considerable problems for teachers and parents," Adam Hinshaw '09 said. "They were so small you could bring them anywhere, and you would never be bored."

Hand-held video game devices such as Gameboys and other electronics created a dimension of virtual reality that you could access with the touch of a button.

Other sources of the spreading influence of virtual reality included members of the "console wars." Sega, Nintendo and Sony duked it out on birthday lists of little boys everywhere and offered games ranging from Super Mario Bros. and Sonic the Hedgehog to Echo the Dolphin with the mere change of a cartridge or compact disc.

"Anything with two little red buttons and a cross pad for direction, and I'm all over it," Todd Mueller '07 said. "I miss the days of the simple up-down, left-right. Systems today require too much effort to master."

Eli Bowen '09 shared his thoughts on '90s game technology.

"Personally, I liked the computer games that they developed in the '90s," Bowen said. "It was fun to come home from a long day at school and be able to just relax in front of the computer and play Warcraft or something."

Games of the '90s remain popular today since many, such as Warcraft (1994) and Starcraft (1998) are continuously updated.

"I would say that the '90s was simply a decade of developing the ideas of the '80s into the way of life of the [new millennium]," Reisker said. "Looking back, we had computers, but slower; cell phones, but larger; gaming systems, but less sophisticated; as well as more primitive forms of health care compared to today. I'm sure that even within the next couple of years, new developments will change the way we live considerably."

Perhaps in another decade we will look back on the present and wonder how we survived without the things we will have then. Maybe a new form of communication will outdate the e-mail or the instant message, or perhaps we will return to the ways of "snail mail" for the intimacy of personal communication.

Either way, it is certain the '90s offered more than a technological explosion. The '90s expanded our ability to learn and increased our understanding of and communication with one another.

The '90s opened doors across the world through technology, bridging gaps between age, race and location throughout the globe. Regardless of what the future has in store, one thing can be certain—technological advancements of the '90s shaped our world unlike any other decade.

Tattoo invasion on campus

More students choose to "ink" themselves for self-expression

By Janna Shapiro
Writer

Remember those movies you used to watch when you were a kid? You know the ones I am talking about—the movies in which the guy with the tattoo rides a Harley and has a sweet leather jacket, or the villain in the latest super-hero flick has distinctive marks. These tattoos are a mark of their deviance from the norm—almost a bull's-eye—labeling them unique within a homogenous society.

In the modern, global society, not only social misfits are getting inked these days. Getting a tattoo has become a rite of passage into adulthood among college students. Are tattoos becoming more socially acceptable, or are we all rebels?

The growing popularity of tattoos might lead some to rethink their ideas. Are tattoos body mutilation or art? Today's Facebook-using, blog-obsessed youth culture may view tattoos more as a symbol of belonging than one of rebellion.

"We're all at the age where we're gaining independence. It's something we can do for ourselves. I have two," Kira GaNun '07 said.

Tattoos originated in ancient cultures as marks of privilege or royalty. As Western cultures colonized, tattoos became known as the marks of savages.

The 1990s brought a resurgence of tribal and Asian-symbol tattoos among adults. As children of the late '80s and early '90s, we used temporary tattoos for fun. The stigma has clearly lifted. It seems the shift in tattoo perception is a natural progression of society.

Students do not necessarily get tattoos to indicate a tribe. They find value in being in their own group.

"I got my tattoo because I feel that the body can be a canvas upon which to express yourself, whether it be how you dress, how you choose to cut your hair or what piercings and tattoos you have," Jessica Scott '08 said.

Scott believes the decision to get a tattoo should be carefully considered, as you will have it for the rest of your life.

"This was not a 'spur of the moment' decision ... something as permanent as a tattoo should have some personal significance. ... I think that people get tattoos these days due to the sense of individualism it provides them, to commemorate special moments of their lives or to simply live their art," Scott said.

In the modern, global society, not only social misfits are getting inked these days. Getting a tattoo has become a rite of passage into adulthood among college students.

A tattoo may not be a sign of rebellion, but its placement might be. Choosing to have a tattoo on your shoulder blade versus your foot might change public perception of the symbol. The consensus is students have tattoos for their own enjoyment, not to make a statement to society.

Some students disagree.

"I think people focus on sexual connotations when they get a tattoo in a less visible area. They don't get it for its significance, they get it for its sexual appeal," Kelly Hoffman '08 said.

There is, of course, the significance of having a tattoo as a mark of the emotions a person experienced while sitting through pain and buzzing in their ears for hours to get that image forever emblazoned on their skin.

"It was painful, but I can't remember that anymore. The symbol is what is left," GaNun said. "When I look at my tattoo on my foot I remember my year abroad ... it's like a permanent souvenir."

Many hesitate to be branded for this exact reason: permanence. Laser tattoo removal requires several treatments and costs hundreds of dollars. Doctors say the removal can be more painful than the original tattoo. Even after removal, there will always be a faint mark of the beloved Tweety Bird you got when you were drunk.

Tattoos are not only for the freshly-minted 18-year-old.

"I worked with a group of three girls and were all over 40. We just went on a whim," said Shirly Erb, a Seventh Street Café employee. "We all made up our own and went out to dinner afterwards to celebrate with our matching band-aids."

The recent influx of celebrities getting tattoos could be a cause or a consequence of the changing perception of tattoos among youth culture. Celebrities ranging from Angelina Jolie to Eve to Posh Spice to David Beckham have highly-publicized tattoos. Ink has certainly become stylish and trendy.

Another graphic edition brought to you by ...

Love and the Bubble

Ms. O–

I like porn. It gives me new ideas for the bedroom. I think it could add some fun to my relationship. Is it okay to ask my girl to watch porn with me?

-Horny for Porn

If I were in your shoes, I would approach the subject very carefully. It's rather taboo.

Some women find porn downright disgusting as well as a huge turnoff. Porn stars perform very differently from average humans partaking in sexual acts. They typically have physical features that don't belong to most people, namely, the females have much larger breasts and the males have much larger penises. Porn can also put pressure on both genders to perform sexual acts in ways that are not feasible everyday. When a couple watches it together, porn may compound self-image and confidence problems in the bedroom.

Porn is also extremely focused on the sexual aspects of relationships, and while women take interest in sex, many also enjoy the romantic side of things. On some level, porn seems to devalue love and stress only the physical, sexual bonds.

Some women are open to the idea of watching porn with their partners, and may even find pleasure in it. It's almost a form of foreplay and can heighten arousal, as well as the imagination. Some couples may opt to attempt to reenact what they see on-screen. It simply depends on the individuals' preferences and comfort level.

Remember that there are very different levels of porn. Some films are much more graphic than others. There may be a large difference in opinion when it comes to the enjoyment of a more tasteful film involving one couple getting busy as opposed to "Gang Bang 5."

If you are serious about testing the waters, start off by asking your girlfriend if she has ever watched porn. If her response is any version of a disgusted, annoyed or shocked "Ewwww, no," then your best bet is to leave it at that. It's not going to happen.

If her response is a neutral, perhaps a calm, slightly curious "Not really, why?" you have the option to push the discussion a little farther and feel out if it might be something she would be interested in. Ask her opinions on the subject of porn and see where it takes you.

If the reply is "yes," this is your go-ahead to bring up the subject. Once again, start slowly with questions like, "What did you think?" "Do you watch it often?" etc.

If her answers give you the green-light, then ask her if she would be interested.

Her answer may still be no. Even though she engages in this activity on her own time, she may not be comfortable with adding you to the mix. Don't take it personally if she is against the idea. It doesn't mean she doesn't want to be intimate with you, it means that porn is not an outlet that she wants to involve in your collective sex life.

If the two of you agree it is something you are interested in trying, you may want to set parameters as to what kind of films you would and would not watch. It might also be a good idea to try it once, and then see how both of you feel about the situation after the fact.

Keep in mind that just because either of you watch porn, separately or together, it does not mean you are going to be able to perform as the porn stars do. Do not expect your girlfriend to suddenly become a raging sex goddess because you watched one video together.

And if your girlfriend agrees to watch porn with you, please do not start off with "Gang Bang 5." Or anything like it.

-Ms. O

E-mail me your questions at MsOintheBubble@yahoo.com or send them through campus mail to Ms. O, The Bucknellian, C-3952. All authors of questions will remain anonymous.

Are you on top of what's "in" and what's "out"?

Write for Feats!

E-mail jjf018@

Culture Couture Presents:
PROJECT RUNWAY BUCKNELL

By Erica Schiffres
Contributing Writer

On Friday more than 150 University students filed into a dimly lit, high energy arena with pulsating music, where they were greeted by dressed-to-kill peers. No, it was not a frat party. No, it was not a rave, either. It was Project Runway Bucknell.

In Larison Dining Hall, an eager audience sat around a runway stage with a flat screen television backdrop to watch the documentary of six designers—Austin Clemens '07, Nicole Kendrot '09, Tiffany Kim '09, Sara Kurz '09, Flory Perez '07 and Lingchen Sun '09—as they embarked on a highly creative mission. The challenge: "Anything but Clothes." Designers had 30 minutes at Wal-Mart and a $25 budget to buy anything but fabric with which to design and construct a party outfit.

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

The race was on. Kendrot had a preconceived notion, consisting of tarp, duct tape, a trash bag, acrylic paint and a faux flower. Perez, on the other hand, leting her inspiration come while cruising Wal-Mart, had difficulty deciding between a pricey black feather duster and a pasta strainer to accessorize her garment. Pillowcases, shower curtains, tablecloths, laundry bags and tassels were transformed into six original outfits during a stressful 3 hours at the craft center.

After the behind-the-scenes footage finished rolling, techno versions of "I'm Too Sexy," by Right Said Fred and songs by Kelly Clarkson throbbed as the models strutted the runway.

Kurz's model emerged in a flouncy, gold ensemble (a laundry bag-turned-empire dress, cinched mid thigh with gold crisscross straps and matching earrings). Clemens' model debuted in a white foam tube dress, strung together with gold ropes in a self described "fashion forward, roman-themed dress: great for a toga party." And Sun's blue and green halter dress was a big crowd pleaser.

After the catwalk, a handful of well-dressed audience members — who had been handed a slip of paper upon entering the event earlier that night — were called on stage. The audience cheered for the best dressed, who won a seat alongside John Westbrook, assistant professor of French, and Paula Davis-Larson, assistant professor of theater and dance, to judge the contestants. The six designers and their models emerged on stage and were interrogated by the judges about their projects. Sun, for example, explained how she wanted her dress to be different from the competition by making her costume more formal and sophisticated. Kurz used the piping on her pillowcase strategically to cut under her model's chest. From there, a 10-minute intermission was announced while the judges narrowed the six contestants to three.

The final three were Kendrot, Kim and Kurz, who were then asked to choose a designer from amongst those who had been eliminated, to aid them with a secret challenge. Ten minutes, stacks of The Bucknellian and one roll of tape were all the teams were given to create a typical University student outfit. Kurz created Ugg boots, a popped collar and tie; Kendrot, a polo draped around her shoulders, leggings and mini skirt; and Kim, a pleated skirt.

Kendrot placed first, winning a guaranteed place in the annual spring fashion show. Second place went to Kim and third to Kurz.

The event was sponsored by Culture Couture in collaboration with Activities and Campus Events (ACE), the Film Club and Performance Services. Culture Couture hosts an annual spring fashion show and, new this past year, traveled to New York City to enjoy a banquet with alumni employed at Lord and Taylor and Armani.

"The club is innovating and changing so much every year," said Erik Diemer '08, secretary of Culture Couture. This year's Project Runway was the first for Culture Couture.

Judging from the turnout, it will not be the last.

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Flip-flop frenzy this fall

By Ali Burack
Contributing Writer

Once known as the "rubber shoes" worn in public showers to prevent athlete's foot, flip-flops are now a fashion must-have. Flip-flops appear in magazines throughout the year—there are no rules stating when or how to wear them.

There are many categories of flip-flops, ranging from those made of rubber, leather and ribbon to dressy, beaded ones. These varieties appear in all colors: metallics, pastels and old fashioned brown and black. Lauren Teschemacher '08 said the appeal of flip-flops is their ease and comfort.

"A person doesn't have to worry about going out at night and spraining their ankle walking in high heels. Flip-flops are so easy to walk in," Teschemacher said.

According to www.foothealthcare.com, medical research reveals the health problems resulting from wearing flip-flops.

"Flip-flops are dangerous because they don't cover your feet, so when you trip, fall or bump into something, you're more likely to get cut. ... People will miss a step and fall because there's no support, and they'll end up with ankle or foot fractures. It's also not uncommon for people to come in for toenail injuries after wearing flip flops," according to the Web site.

Without the protection of close-toed shoes, feet are constantly stepped on and risk severe injuries from broken glass and other debris on the ground. Nevertheless, students continue to wear flip-flops.

"I know that there is a potential risk that when I go out at night that my feet might get stepped on, but my [flip-flops] are just so comfortable. Plus it beats ruining a nice pair of shoes," said Katherine Dehnel '08.

Flip-flops dominate the footwear scene each season. Students wear flip-flops even in the wintertime, ignoring the freezing temperatures.

"I wear flip-flops when there is snow on the ground," Cordy Elkins '08 said.

University students wear flip-flops with any type of attire. The trend is credited by a December 2000 article in The Washington Post to have begun when England's trendsetter, Prince William, was photographed wearing flip-flops on a chilly day.

People care less about their feet being cold or getting frostbite. They would rather be comfortable, as flip-flops provide their feet with freedom from the confines of close-toed shoes.

While flip-flops provide ease in getting dressed, they also create stress for women who feel the need to spend money on pedicures.

Women believe their revealed toes and feet need to look nice. A flaw is evident in this practice, as costly pedicures are easily ruined during a night of partying at houses with floors covered with mud and dirt. This vicious circle convinces women they constantly need a new pedicure.

Some students trade flip-flops for the comfort of lined boots in late autumn. Every student polled said he or she had at least one pair of Uggs or boots of a similar style—one student had five.

As winter approaches, take note of the footwear on campus. You will find many people in furry boots, along with the select few clinging to their flip-flops, dreading the day it is too frigid to wear them.

Ellyn Ercolano—The Bucknellian

Fashion to spark up the night

Style at the University steps back a decade

By Lauren Kushner
Writer

The '80s are back. From bulky sweaters to cinched waists to leggings, fall fashion 2006 is retrospective of a decade when bold prints ruled the world. Without showing too much skin, fashion today is toying with the art of seduction.

Long, slouchy sweaters are definitely the newest craze. Form-fitting and tight styles are no longer the way to go, as voluminous and oversized shirts have taken over the weekend fashion scene.

Whereas the '60s were a decade of bell bottoms, this year seems exactly the opposite. Skin-tight jeans (without a flair at the bottom) paired with oversized sweaters and a flashy gold or silver belt is probably the most sported look this season.

Fall this year is all about the leggings: leggings under a skirt, leggings cropped to the knee, leggings paired with an oversized sweater. This fashion trend does not need to be simple: leggings can be worn in all colors and have a flashy appeal for a night out on the town. With the approaching colder weather, it is better to be draped in warmth than freezing in scanty apparel.

Skin-tight tank tops are also out this season. Wearing loosely-fitted tops that expose the bust without uncovering those love handles is more flattering. A looser fit elongates the torso, giving the image of height and slenderness. Whether you are sporting a halter top, a tank top or a tube top, you should choose bright colors this season. Black looks tiresome and tedious.

Without showing too much skin, fashion today is toying with the art of seduction.

Wearing vertical stripes or plaid patterns have made a resurgence this year. Most clothes are already over-the-top with oversized collars and buttons; it is almost better to stick to solid colors for nighttime wear. Pinks, greens, blues and even winter whites are safe bets.

"As long as you feel hot in what you are wearing, you are ready to go," Hadley Clark '09 said.

As for accessories, bigger is always better. Remember, wear one oversized accessory. For example, if sporting giant '60s style hoop earrings, you should not wear multiple bangle bracelets or an oversized beaded necklace. The trick is to look done up without looking clownish.

When it comes to footwear, pumps are very stylish. Black pumps with brown heels are fashionable, as well as stiletto boots with a slightly reduced heel.

Makeup this season emphasizes one feature of the face: the lips. Dramatic lip liner with bright pink hues is in. Also, natural-looking eyes give off a youthful and uncontrived look. For a more dramatic nighttime effect, resort to smoky eye shadow.

The key to nighttime fashion is enjoying yourself. If you wear something you feel comfortable in, how can you go wrong? Stick to the trends and add a little bit of your own personality, and just go with the flow.

friday's sports
bucknellian
Friday
October 6, 2006
Bucknell University
Lewisburg, PA
Vol. CXXXVIII,
No. 6

Dan Stern—The Bucknellian

By Wes Trowbridge
Contributing Writer

Led by tournament champion Teri Schlang '07, the women's golf team took first place at the Bucknell Bison Classic on Saturday and Sunday, the first team tournament victory in the nine-year history of the program. Schlang's individual tournament title was the second ever by an Orange and Blue female golfer.

Schlang, the team captain and a four-year starter, played the best golf of her career this season and is crucial to the team's early success. Schlang's last three rounds, a 76-75 performance in her win this week and a 75 in the final round last week, are the best three rounds of her collegiate career.

"Winning an individual title has been a goal of mine for the last year, and to have it happen at home made it even more special. To have our team win the same day made Sunday one of the best days of my college career," said Schlang, who was also named the Damon's Bison Athlete of the Week.

It took the balanced play of all five Bison golfers to post rounds of 316-316, maintaining the one stroke lead they established over a very good Lehigh team (317-316).

In a competitive 17-team field, the Bison alone had a day with three golfers shooting in the seventies. On Sunday, Schlang's 75 and a pair of 79's by Amy Loughney '08 and Deirdre Moran '09 propelled the Bison to a narrow victory and a spot in the record books.

Loughney, the Bison's second best finisher, posted a two-day total of 159, joining Schlang in the top 10. Moran finished in 14th place or just two strokes behind Loughney. Kathryn Batchelor '08 and Emily Chiodo '08 both carded 166 for the weekend, tying for 21st place.

Chiodo shot consistent rounds of 83-83, but it was her play on the last three holes Sunday that secured the victory.

"When it mattered the most, [Chiodo] came through for us by paring her last three holes, the toughest on the golf course, to secure our first win by a single shot," Head Coach Kevin Jamieson said.

Off to the best start in program history, the women's golf team has now set or matched team records in three of its last four tournaments. Jamieson attributes the team's unprecedented success to a new practice regiment and the hard work and dedication of his players.

"This win didn't happen overnight; it started about two years ago when we started asking for more out of our players and myself. Our players are tenacious, and this team is one of the hardest-working groups that we have had here in a long time," Jamieson said.

Schlang, the lone senior on the traveling squad, also recognizes the dramatic turnaround the team experienced.

"We used to not be able to break 330 and now we have won a golf tournament. It's a crazy feeling," Schlang said.

The Bison sent out a second team which tied for 13th (349-361) and was led by first-year Leah Antkiewicz's rounds of 87-88.

The women's golf team looks to continue its success at the Rutgers Invitational on Oct. 13-14.

Women's soccer wins six straight

By Joseph Debraggio
Contributing Writer

In the midst of the men's soccer team's unbeaten streak, the women's team proved its prowess against challenging opponents by starting a winning streak of its own. The streak reached a program record of six straight wins.

Bucknell 2
Colgate 1

The Bison defeated Colgate 2-1 Saturday night with goals from Renee Bernardo '09 and captain Shannon Curd '07.

The women rode the big conference win to a 3-1 victory over Cornell on Tuesday. The win over the Big Red catapulted the squad's record to 7-3-1.

"From the team standpoint, the key to our victory was that on and off the field we presented a united front. Every single player on our team played a key role, which makes the win that much sweeter."
—Shannon Curd '07

Thirty seconds after the Bison kicked off against Colgate, Jennifer Dervarics '09 drove the ball and fed Krista Lee Gentile '08, who just missed a goal. That set the tone as the Orange and Blue showed more hustle and determination than their opponents from upstate New York.

The Bison defense played well from the start with goalkeeper Katie Dry '07 commanding the defense.

"Our defense is not just our backline, it is all over the field, starting with the forwards," Bernardo said. "We have a lot of heart this year; no one gives up and we always back each other up."

That attitude contributed to the first goal of the game. Gentile refused to give up on a play and won the Bison a corner kick. Curd took the corner with 15 minutes left in the first half and the ball went to Bernardo, who sent the ball to the upper-left side of the goal for a 1-0 Bison lead.

"We were so close to scoring all game, so when we scored, it gave us so much more confidence to just play our game," Bernardo said.

The confidence Bernardo cited led to good movement from the Orange and Blue. Curd made two nice slide tackles on one play to maintain possession. The back four defenders worked seamlessly, filling space when needed.

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

Katie Dry '07 punts the ball in the game against Cornell. The team prepares to play Lafeyette and Lehigh this weekend.

The offense continued getting good looks with a shot sailing just over the bar and another very dangerous chance with just 14 seconds remaining in the half. The first half came to a close with a Colgate defender saving the ball with her head off the goal line as time expired.

Dry took center stage in the beginning of the second half, making a sliding save off a Colgate breakaway to deny the goal. Colgate's goalkeeper Carly Sousa also made some fine saves early in the second half.

The fans for the Bison made themselves heard in the second half as the game increased in intensity. The team has not defeated Colgate in four years and they were on the verge of a victory when Colgate's Jillian Arnault tapped the ball into the Bison net after a scramble in the box in the 76th minute.

The game looked like it was heading into overtime when Colgate was whistled for a foul with six minutes 53 seconds remaining in regulation. Curd walked up to take the kick and remembered thinking to herself, "just don't hit it over the crossbar." She did not.

Curd's screaming kick went over the Colgate wall and curved towards the upper right corner, giving Colgate's goalkeeper no chance.

"It was just phenomenal and was something that we'll all remember for a long time," Head Coach Ben Landis '96 said.

The Bison weathered the Colgate attack and ended the game with the 2-1 win.

"Beating Colgate on Saturday night was huge," Curd said. "It is the first time that I have been here that we are starting Patriot League play 1-0. Colgate consistently contends for the Patriot League championship, so it is a great feeling to hand them a loss in their first game."

Landis attributes part of the team's success to their execution of their game plan.

"We had an effective strategy going into the game that our players executed perfectly. ... Credit [goes] to the players; they listened to what we had talked about and executed our strategies brilliantly while scoring off one of our attacking corners and a direct free kick," Landis said.

See SOCCER page B2

Equestrian team rides to third place finish

By Connie Barko
Staff Writer

Students seem to know little about the Bison equestrian team (BUET), despite its 30-year history. It is a co-ed club boasting a roster of 28 riders, including a number of students who have never ridden a horse.

Their home is Fox View Farms in Lewisburg, Pa., where members take at least one lesson per week. Showing is optional and newcomers are welcome on the squad.

The Orange and Blue competes in Zone 3, Region 1 of the Intercollegiate Horse Show Association (IHSA). There are six classes in which riders can compete: beginner walk-trot, beginner walk-trot-canter, advanced walk-trot-canter, novice on flat or jumping, intermediate on flat or jumping, and open.

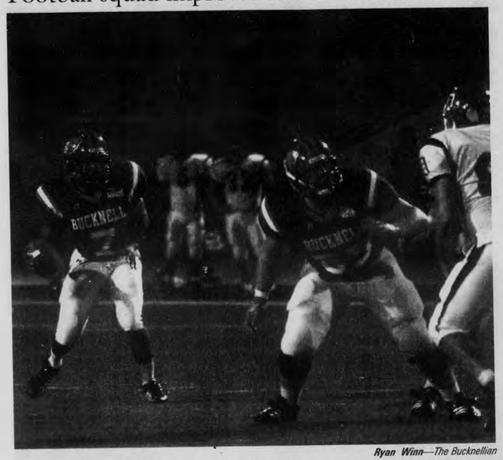
During shows horses are randomly assigned to riders so everyone is on the same playing field. Riders are judged in sections of 10 within each class.

Jessica Seidel '08

See BUET page B3

Bison stampede over Red Foxes

Football squad improves to 3-2 on season with 48-19 win over Marist



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Terrance Wilson '08 drops back to pass earlier this season against Cornell. Wilson injured his shoulder against Marist and is doubtful to play against Penn Saturday.

By Marcus Mateer
Staff Writer

On a third-and-22, the first Bison drive was almost over. Starting quarterback Terrance Wilson '08 was sacked on the previous play, but Head Coach Tim Landis had a little something up his sleeve. A reverse to wide receiver Daniel Zvara '09 caught the Red Foxes flat-footed, and 51 yards and one touchdown later, the rout was on. The Bison scored 28 straight points on the way to a 48-19 stomping of Marist at sold-out Leonidoff Stadium in Poughkeepsie, N.Y.

Bucknell 48
Marist 19

On Marist's homecoming, the Orange and Blue's running game dominated. The Marist Web site, struggling to find the positives in the blowout, bragged the Red Fox pass defense held the Bison to zero pass yards. An impressive accomplishment, unless coupled with the fact that 390 yards were gained on the ground.

Much of the yardage was made in large chunks by a variety of Bison running backs. Slotback Peter Kaufman '08 scored from 12 yards out for the second Bison touchdown. A.J. Kizekai '10, the Patriot League Rookie of the Week, had two long scoring runs of 35 yards each. Corin Erby '08 got into the action late with a 42-yard run for a touchdown.

Fullback Josh DeStefano '08 broke the longest run of his career, a 48-yard blast. He also had a touchdown run from nine yards out. Destefano finished with 101 yards on 10 carries, his second career 100-yard game.

"Marist came out and played a different defense than we were preparing for all week, but it was a similar look that Duquesne played against us," DeStefano said. "Basically, each person on offense went out and took care of their assignments, whether that be blocking, reading the option or running the ball. That allowed us to be successful."

The defense also did its part. The Bison held the home team to 37 yards on the ground and 283 total. Even then, 134 of those yards came on two late drives in garbage time. Marist managed only one meaningful drive, just before halftime. The Red Foxes capped a six-play, 74-yard drive with a 36-yard touchdown pass to slice the halftime lead to 28-7.

Early in the second half, the Bison ended all hope of a Marist homecoming miracle when free safety Stephen Collage '08 came away with an interception. DeStefano's nine-yard run ended the drive and any Red Fox bid for a comeback.

Unfortunately, the injury bug struck again. Wilson went down with a shoulder injury. Backup Marcello Trigg '10 filled in admirably with five carries for 32 yards and a touchdown. With starter Andrew Lair '10 gone for the year, the quarterback position is looking a bit thin. Wilson is doubtful for this week's game against the University of Pennsylvania, but the team remains upbeat.

"Everyone feels good about being 3-2 going into the Penn game," DeStefano remarked. "We know that it is going to take a lot of hard work and preparation to beat a team the caliber of Penn, but it will be a good challenge for our team on homecoming weekend."

The homecoming challenge against the Ivy League Quakers kicks off at 1 p.m. Saturday at Christy Mathewson-Memorial Stadium.

Rain shortens successful tennis weekend

By Kyle Barndollar
Contributing Writer

A successful start to the Bucknell Invitational was spoiled for the women's tennis team over the weekend by inclement weather.

The Bison collected a number of victories in the opening rounds, but rain forced officials to cancel play on Sunday. Rain also postponed play on the first day of the tournament for three hours and forced some of Saturday's play to be completed inside the Gerhard Fieldhouse. The matches missed on Sunday will not be made up.

The Orange and Blue continued their recent impressive play during the first two days of the tournament. Tania Varela '10, named Damon's Bison Athlete of the Week for her outstanding play at the Quinnipiac Invitational, extended her winning streak to five matches. Varela defeated Jaclyn Williamson of Villanova 6-0, 6-4 in her flight A singles match, earning a quarterfinal bye and a spot in the semifinals.

Carlin Calcaterra '10 advanced to the semifinals of the flight B singles after defeating Loyola's Lauren Cassle 6-1, 6-2, and Jen Iosue of Mount Saint Mary's 6-0, 6-2. Ashley Globerman '09 bounced back after a first-match loss to Marist's Cassandra Strange 7-5, 6-0, defeating Kaitlin Hallahan of Mount Saint Mary's in a three set tiebreaker 3-6, 6-3 (10-4) in the flight A back draw.

Camille Simonetti '10 handled Whitney Edmonds of Mount Saint Mary's 6-1, 6-2 in flight C. JoAnna Grossman '09 took down Marist's Emily Zampello 6-4, 6-3, advancing to play teammate Kelly Porter '07, who had a bye in the first round. Grossman would defeat Porter 6-1, 6-0.

Flight D saw three winners for the Bison on Friday, as Tiffany Card '09, Renee Clinton '07 and Kristyn Sotak '10 beat Loyola's Suzanne Lee, Marist's Megan Burgess and Marist's Heather Tellenbach, respectively. Megan Lee '10 fell to Christine Pace from Mount Saint Mary's in a heartbreaker, 6-3, 5-7, (12-10).

Varela and Globerman continued dominating doubles on Saturday. The duo actually defeated teammates Carlin Calcaterra '10 and Paulina Gamboa '09 8-4 in the flight A doubles final, after running through doubles teams from Loyola, Villanova and Toledo. This marks the second week in a row Varela and Globerman have collected a doubles victory, and they are 10-0 on the season as a doubles pair.

"I have never won so many doubles matches in a row," Varela said. "Ashley and I click really well and I think we are going to continue winning."

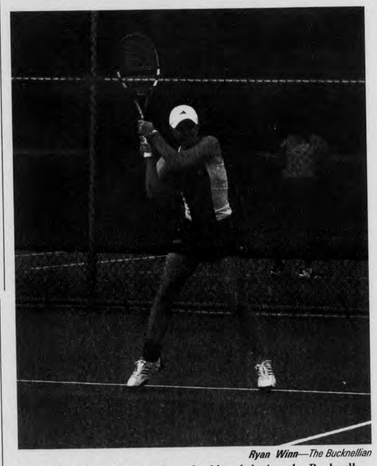
Calcaterra and Gamboa are 5-2 this year.

The duo of Sotak and Renee Weissand '10 reached the semifinals of the flight B doubles competition before falling to Villanova's Daniella Phillis and Lyndsey Lostritto, 8-4.

The Orange and Blue collected seven singles victories on Friday and a total of 12 overall victories (nine doubles) on Saturday. The rain squashed what could have been a very successful final Sunday of an impressive tournament for the Bison.

"We are gaining a lot of confidence as a team," Varela said.

The Bison will remain at home for the Bucknell Invitational over the weekend, before rounding out their fall season at the ITA Regionals Oct. 19-21 in Hanover, N.H.



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Carlin Calcaterra '10 smashes a backhand during the Bucknell Invitational. The women's team won a total of 19 matches over the two days of competition.

Cross country runs alongside best teams in the nation

By Brian Mulligan
Sports Editor

The 33rd Paul Short Invitational gave the men's and women's cross country teams a chance to compete against some of the best Division I teams in the nation. The Bison had a strong showing with the women taking eighth out of 35 teams, while the men's team took ninth out of 42 teams.

No. 13 Princeton, No. 9 Wisconsin and No. 18 Tennessee took the top three spots in the women's 6k race, and the Orange and Blue beat out both Davidson and Costal Carolina, who rounded out the top 10.

"We stuck to our race plan perfectly, with running well as a pack through at least half of the race. We're a very pack-oriented team and that has proven well so far this season," Nicole Falcaro '09 said.

Leanna Nastase '07 led the Bison, finishing 19th overall in a time of 21 minutes 22 seconds, while teammate Erin Cranmer-Hart '08 finished 41st in 21:43. Gillian Nordquist '09 crossed the finish line in 22:18 to take 61st place overall. Falcaro and Christine Totten '08 rounded out the top five for the Orange and Blue, taking 71st and 79th respectively. The women's team had a strong showing against challenging programs, especially when dealing with some mid-season injuries.

"A few bad things happened regarding injuries; however, our depth allowed us to still finish high in the standings," Head Coach Kevin Donner said. "Leanna continues to run great and we also got solid races from Gillian Nordquist and Nicole Falcaro."

The men's team had an impressive performance, finishing behind No. 30 Princeton, while beating out Wayne State. The team placed two runners in the top 20 of the 276 runners participating in the 8k meet. Matt Forys '07 placed 15th overall with a time of 24:43 and Wallace Campbell '08 finished just one place behind Forys in 24:48.

"It was a great experience running against some of the best runners in the East and the country, and to have competed well against them shows that we have a very strong team this year," Forys said.

Andrew Corral '08 was the third Bison to cross the finish line, taking 73rd overall, while classmate Michael Gibney '08 finished the course in 25:39 to take 85th. Joe Foley '09 rounded out the top five scorers for the Orange and Blue, posting a 134th place finish in 26:09.

"This was our best meet in a few years. Our men have been very focused and have been progressing very well," Donner said. "We are excited to continue improving. It is good to have a couple frontrunners in Matt and Wallace."

The team will be back in action Oct. 14 at 10 a.m. in the Lafayette Invitational in Easton, Pa.

"Turn your Power ON and Add LIFE to your Years!"
MORRISON'S ADVANCED CHIROPRACTIC CARE
Michael D. Morrison D.C.
1205 W Market Street
Lewisburg, PA 17837
Office: 570-523-1221
A Healthy Spine Equals a Healthy YOU!
Bucknell Students may receive a free exam and x-rays (if needed) with mention of this advertisement.

Sunset Skating Rink
Adult Night
18 and Up
Wednesday, October 10
7-9:30 P.M.
$4 Admission
$2.50 with School ID
Rt. 11 & 15 Shamokin Dam
743-6060

STSTRAVEL.COM
Join America's #1 Student Tour Operator
CANCUN, ACAPULCO, JAMAICA, BAHAMAS
PUERTO VALLARTA, MAZATLAN, CABO,
SOUTH PADRE FLORIDA, CRUISES
SPRINGBREAK 2007
Sell Trips, Earn Cash & Travel Free
STS STUDENT TRAVEL SERVICES
1-800-648-4849 / www.ststravel.com

Joseph Carroll Salon
Hair Care for the Entire Family
Stop in before September 30 to enter into a raffle to win a free instant hot lather machine or basket of hair care products!
No purchase or service necessary.
431 Market Street, Lewisburg
524-0790
Open Tuesday-Saturday
We accept Walk-Ins when time permits.

Bison tie No. 24 Colgate

Men's soccer strikes early, but Raiders equalize in final minutes

By John Mlodzinski
Staff Writer

The Bison tied No. 24 Colgate 1-1 Saturday in a game that looked promising for an upset at first. Justin Wolf '08 scored 53 seconds into the game, but the Bison could not get on the board again.

Bucknell 1
Colgate 1

The Bison seemed to have control of the momentum in the first half, out-shooting Colgate 7-2. Goalkeeper Joey Kuterbach '08 did not have to make a save in the half.

The Bison's lone goal came when Nathan LaGrave '10 gained possession of the ball and passed to Alex Russo '09. Russo then passed to Wolf, who eluded the Colgate defenders and put the ball past goalkeeper Doug Litvack. It was Wolf's second goal of the season and it made a statement that the Bison were not going to be easy to beat.

"It felt great to score such an important goal for our team and against a tough opponent," Wolf said.

The Bison defense prevented Colgate from getting any scoring chances in the half but the defenders went into the locker room at halftime knowing they needed to keep up the intensity they showed in the first half.

"Although we scored early in the game, we knew it would not be enough to knock off No. 24 Colgate," Wolf said. "At halftime, [Head] Coach [Brendan] Nash made it clear that a one goal lead in the Patriot League was not safe and we needed to continue pressuring Colgate."

In the second half the momentum seemed to shift in favor of Colgate. The Bison were out-shot 5-3 and lost the corner kicks battle 7-0. Kuterbach had a challenging second half making three saves, one of which would have been a goal if Kuterbach did not time his dive just right.

"In the second half Colgate made some adjustments of [its] own and started to put more pressure on our defense," Wolf said.

The defense played very well but it could not prevent Colgate from scoring the tying goal, a header by Eric Anton, with just over eight minutes left in the game. Overall the Bison out-shot Colgate 11-8 while the Raiders led in the corner kicks 9-6.

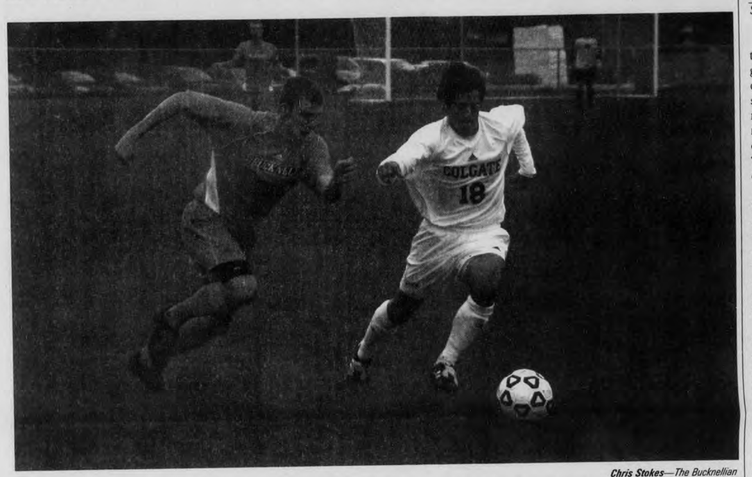
"Unfortunately their hard work would pay off with a late goal, but our team still held strong," Wolf said.

The Bison did not allow the goal to bring them down. They continued playing their hearts out trying to win the game for their fans.

"Many teams are defeated after a late goal as the momentum shifts, but we continued playing hard and had some opportunities of our own to win late in the game and in overtime," Wolf said. "We would have liked to beat Colgate at home and for our fans."

With the tie Colgate remains one of the few undefeated teams in the nation, standing at 6-0-3.

The Orange and Blue, standing at 7-2-3 overall and 2-0-1 in Patriot League play, will hit the road for five of their next six games. They will play at Lafayette Saturday night in Easton, Pa.



Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

Patrick Selwood '10 challenges Colgate's Justin Burny for control of the ball in last weekend's match. Selwood has played in all 12 games this year, starting two.

BUET From page B1

explained the judging.

"They can be looking at you when you are making a mistake, but might not see someone else make a mistake," Seidel said. "It is kind of the luck of whether the judge is looking at you or not."

For each class, a single point rider is designated whose final ranking will contribute to the team's tally at the end of the day. These points accumulate during the year and teams with the highest number of points go on to regionals or nationals.

BUET competed in its first competition of the semester Sunday at Penn State. From a field of 10 schools, BUET placed third overall. Sarah Schubert '10 was the reserve high-point rider, receiving two first places in her class.

"It would have been nice to finish higher, but the show gave us a good indication of where we are now and what we need to work on," captain Rebecca Dillon '08 said. "The first time out is always tough and even more so for us with a new coach and a large number of new girls."

The team's third-place finish is admirable considering the number of high-ranking teams in the region. The Bison squad has to overcome size differences with universities like Penn State and the existence of an equestrian major at colleges like Wilson.

BUET's overall outlook on the semester is relaxed and upbeat. Amy Hofmann '08 described their attitude.

"It's about being around the horses and the team," Hofmann said. "The showing is not meant to be stressful. The goals are to achieve your personal best and learn more about horses."

The team has four more shows before the end of the semester. The Bison's next competition is on Oct. 15 at Penn State. For interested readers, BUET will welcome new members in the spring semester.

SOCCER From page B1

The squad produced a team effort reflected in its gameplay and overall record.

"From the team standpoint, the key to our victory was that on and off the field we presented a united front," Curd said. "Every single player on our team played a key role, which makes the win that much sweeter."

A potential pitfall for the Orange and Blue was Cornell, who they played Tuesday.

"Every non-league game is preparation for the important league games we have left," Curd said.

Landis expressed some concern over the possibility of a letdown following the win over Colgate.

"I hope that we can come off the high of beating Colgate and refocus with the same energy needed to defeat an Ivy League team in Cornell," Landis said.

The Bison did not draw first blood against Cornell, unlike the Bison's previous two games. Cornell scored in the 28th minute with a shot from around 20 yards out.

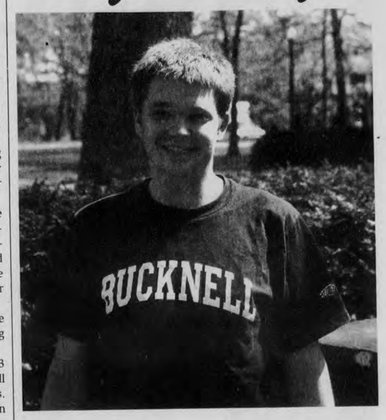
Bucknell 3
Cornell 1

That goal awakened the Bison offense. Just two minutes later a shot from Gentile was saved but the rebound went to Jennifer Margolis '07 who netted the goal and tied the game.

The Bison took the lead off a corner in the 50th minute. Chelsea Brinkman '10 crossed the ball and Dervarics headed the ball into the net for her sixth goal of the season. For the final goal, Molly Linhart '10 scored off a cross with the assists going to Kimberly Cannon '08 and Leah Grimm '09. Dry had four saves on the night.

The Bison look to extend their wining streak this weekend, playing at Lafayette tonight and Lehigh on Sunday.

Saylor Says



By Matthew Saylor
Sports Editor

Every week when I sit down to write "Saylor Says," I have a general idea of what I want to cover from the wide world of sports. I look around at the big-name stories and the smaller stories with a big heart and comment on them to the best of my ability. This week, though, I am unable to do that.

There are too many stories out there that are bigger than sports, and there are too many stories within the sporting world that take away from the games I have loved for my entire life. I have become disenfranchised and now find myself wondering where the good is, or even if there is any good left.

There is so much hate, violence, deceit and sin in the "real world," but the sporting world has always been separate from that for me. What happens on the playing field used to be about putting forth the best possible effort in order to help your team to win.

Then it became a place for athletes—professionals—to earn obscene contracts and endorsement deals. And now it is a place that, with each passing year, becomes less and less immune to the trials and tribulations that face the rest of society.

Instead the sporting world has to answer questions that never should have become a part of the games' equations. Questions like for how many games do you suspend a football player who stomped on a fellow competitor's face. A face that was not protected by a helmet, required 30 stitches and now has blurred vision.

Questions about which athletes are using illegal substances to gain an advantage in the games they play, and if they lied in courts of law to preserve their sorry careers. Questions about the motive of stabbing or killing teammates, looking for reasons other than those teammates received more playing time.

When will the games become games again? When will I turn on ESPN and find out the scores and details of the big game and not have to hear about anything else?

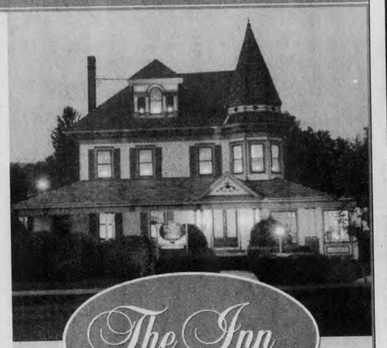
When Louis Armstrong sings about "what a wonderful world" we live in, I wonder if he could still perform such a song today. The things he sings about still exist today, but have become so completely overshadowed by the negatives in the world that it is hard to find them.

For me, the sporting world was that wonderful world, that place where I saw "trees of green," "skies of blue" and "friends shaking hands." It is the green grass of a baseball field, a football spiraling through a blue sky and a basketball player helping an opponent up off of the court. All of that still exists, but has become diminished by the extracurricular shenanigans that are ever-increasing in prevalence.

I need sports to take me away from the troubles of the world and not add to them.

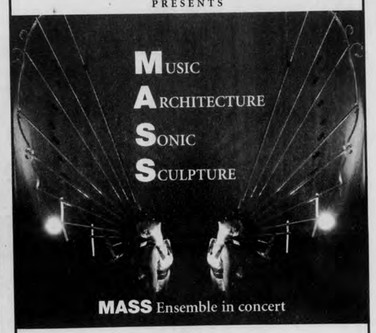
Next week I will write my top-10 column again, and it will be like this column never existed. I wish it did not have to.

Not too long ago, you chose a small college in the middle of cow country. And, wisely, it chose you, too.
Now go ahead and make another good choice.
For dinner.
The Inn at New Berlin is a short, 10-minute drive from the Bucknell campus, on scenic country roads. It's a perfect distraction from writing papers – or grading them.
Students and faculty love our relaxed atmosphere and our award-winning dining, while parents appreciate the luxurious lodging during parents' weekend and graduations. But don't wait till then to discover us!



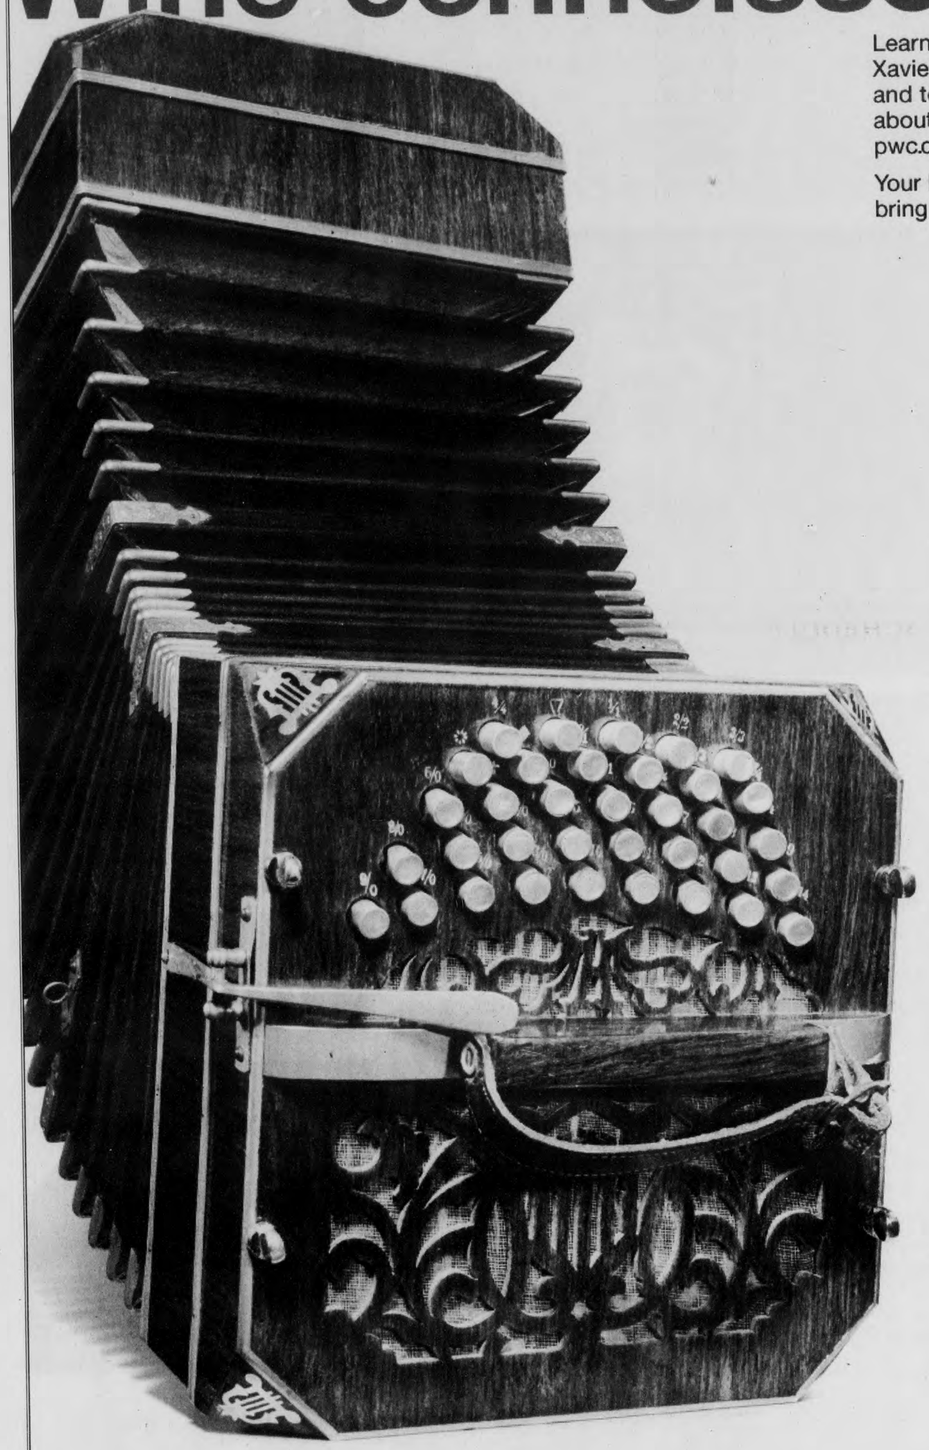
The Inn at New Berlin
Dine. Shop. Stay.
570-966-0321 InnAtNewBerlin.com

The Sigmund and Claire Weis Center for the Performing Arts
PRESENTS



MASS Ensemble in concert
Friday
October 6, 2006
8 p.m.
coming to the Weis Center
PILOBOLUS dance company
Friday, October 20, 8 pm
L'ensemble Pennetier
Saturday, October 28, 8 pm
Bucknell University, Lewisburg, Pennsylvania
Tickets and Information: 570-577-1000
www.bucknell.edu/WeisCenter/

Gastronomist Tango dancer* Wine connoisseur



Learn more about Xavier Flores and tell us more about you. Visit pwc.com/bringit.

Your life. You can bring it with you.

*connectedthinking

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

© 2006 PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP. All rights reserved. "PricewaterhouseCoopers" refers to PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (a Delaware limited liability partnership) or, as the context requires, the PricewaterhouseCoopers global network or other member firms of the network, each of which is a separate and independent legal entity. *connectedthinking is a trademark of PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (US). We are proud to be an Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity Employer.

Men's golf is top Patriot team at invitational

By Jared Napolitano
Business Manager

In the fourth fall event for the men's golf squad, the Bison finished in fifth place at the Cornell Invitational. Charlie Waddell '07 took fourth place individually, finishing 3-over-par.

Rider University won the event which was held at the Robert Trent Jones Golf Course in Ithaca, N.Y. over the weekend.

Despite the fifth-place showing, the Bison proved to be the best Patriot League unit in the 15-team field, finishing ahead of Colgate, Lehigh and Lafayette.

"This weekend was a decent finish, but was actually quite impressive considering [Head] Coach [Jim] Cotner is over in Ireland," Waddell said.

"I'm very proud of the way the team hung in there without having Coach there."

After the first and second rounds, the Bison trailed Rider by 13 strokes.

The Bison were unable to improve their spot on the leader board in the third round and carded a composite 900 score for the weekend, 14 strokes behind Rider (886).

St. Bonaventure took second at 888, followed by host Cornell (892) and Ottawa (897).

Patriot League competitors Colgate, Lehigh and Lafayette finished in 11th through 13th place respectively.

Rahul Desai '08 and Keita Aoki '08 both had strong showings finishing in ties for 14th and 19th respectively.

Chas Wagner '07 ended the tournament tied for 42nd while Kyle Moran '07 finished tied for 47th.

"Overall it seems as though the 18th hole really hurt us," Waddell said. "If you went back and looked at the stats, I bet we played that hole close to 20 over [par] for three rounds."

The Bison will resume play at Patriot League rival Army's Mulekicker Classic at West Point Golf Course in West Point, N.Y.

"I'm looking forward to heading to Army this week to prepare for the Patriot League Championship, which will be held there in the spring," Waddell said.

Water polo wins one, drops pair to ranked teams

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Randy Ang '10 cocks his arm to throw the ball against George Washington. Ang had two assists in the game and has tallied 10 points on the season.

By Ty Clark
Staff Writer

In a weekend of hard-fought league matches, the men's water polo team defeated George Washington 13-8, but fell to No. 14 Princeton 12-9 and No. 10 Navy 11-7.

Bucknell 13
GWU 8

"I am very pleased with where our team stands right now and the direction we are headed," Jason Rechel '08 said. "We did a great job this weekend executing our game plan and playing the types of defensive games that we wanted."

Princeton 12
Bucknell 9

The Bison opened the competition with a match against Princeton, who defeated the Bison in the last tournament. The Orange and Blue quickly grabbed a 2-0 lead. They played an exceptionally even match against the Tigers; the score was knotted at seven after three quarters. Princeton scored five points in the final frame to come away with a 12-9 victory. Mark Masterson '07 led the Bison with five points and goalkeeper Luke Belenky '08 recorded eight saves in the game.

The Bison put an end to their three-game losing streak with a commanding 13-8 win over George Washington.

The Bison led 9-2 at halftime, which allowed Head Coach John Zeigler '91 to substitute every player on the roster. Nine Bison scored, and Rechel and Dan Schultz '09 led the team with four points apiece.

The game against Navy rounded out the competition for the weekend. The first half was dominated by defense. Neither team scored in the first quarter and the Bison took a 3-1 lead into the half. Navy responded with seven goals in the third quarter and held on to win 11-7.

Navy 11
Bucknell 7

"The way we played in the first half against Princeton and the Naval Academy is how we need to play every second of every game," Belenky said.

Coach Zeigler also noted a pattern.

"In three games, we only allowed an average of just over 2 goals per [first] half. In the second half of the three games we averaged 8 goals [given up] per half," Zeigler said. "The hard-nosed press defense that was so successful in each game in the first half softened in the second half, giving each team windows to advance its offense."

Despite the setbacks, the Bison remain competitive in the league. Four of the five conference teams have been nationally ranked this year, and the fifth received points in the voting process.

The Bison will travel to California to play six games over the weekend, including three games against ranked teams, two of which end the tournament.

Belenky sees a larger goal than just gaining experience and correcting mistakes.

"We are looking to make a statement," Belenky said. "When we go to California, we are not just representing the University. We also represent east coast water polo."

Continuing to eye the Southern Championships, which the Orange and Blue will host, Rechel thinks the Bison can make an impression at home as well as across the country.

"If we play our style game and execute defensively for four quarters, I think we can beat anyone on the east coast and would be the team to beat," Rechel said. "The key remains to put together that perfect game in our home pool in front of our fans."

WEEKEND SCHEDULE

Friday

WOMEN'S SOCCER - Lafayette, 7 p.m., Easton, Pa.
MEN'S WATER POLO - Whittier, 3 p.m., Claremont, Calif.; Redlands, 8 p.m., Claremont, Calif.
MEN'S SWIMMING AND DIVING - Blue vs Orange, 6 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
WOMEN'S SWIMMING AND DIVING - Blue vs Orange, 6 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
WOMEN'S VOLLEYBALL - Colgate, 7 p.m., Hamilton, N.Y.

Saturday

FOOTBALL - Penn, 1 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
MEN'S SOCCER - Lafayette, 7 p.m., Easton, Pa.
FIELD HOCKEY - American, 12 p.m., Washington, D.C.
MEN'S WATER POLO - Cal Lutheran, 2 p.m., Claremont, Calif.; Claremont-Mudd-Scripps, 10 p.m., Claremont, Calif.
WOMEN'S TENNIS - Bucknell Invitational, All Day, Lewisburg, Pa.
MEN'S TENNIS - Bucknell Invitational, All Day, Lewisburg, Pa.
MEN'S GOLF- Army Mulekicker Classic, All Day, West Point, N.Y.

Sunday

WOMEN'S SOCCER - Lehigh, 1 p.m., Bethlehem, Pa.
WOMEN'S ROWING - Head of the Genesee, 9:30 a.m., Rochester, N.Y. (Genesee River)
MEN'S WATER POLO - Pepperdine, 4:20 p.m., Malibu, Calif.; UC Davis, 8:20 p.m., Malibu, Calif.
MEN'S GOLF - Army Mulekicker Classic, All Day, West Point, N.Y.
WOMEN'S TENNIS - Bucknell Invitational, All Day, Lewisburg, Pa.
MEN'S TENNIS - Bucknell Invitational, All Day, Lewisburg, Pa.

BRYNWOOD Rentals
535 Inc.
In Lewisburg Since 1969
Your search begins..... and ends here.
Professional 24/7 Maintenance Staff
Apartments (furnished & unfurnished)
Houses for professionals students families
Rental Garages Also Available
Office & Retail Space 300—3,000 sq ft
brynwoodrentals.com
611 Market Street, Lewisburg
ph: 570.524.2121 x 3

Domino's Pizza - A Proud Partner of Bucknell University
LEWISBURG • 524-9000
1722 Market St.
MANIC MONDAY $7.99 LARGE 1-TOPPING PIZZA - DELIVERED!
2xTUESDAY BUY ANY LARGE PIZZA AT REGULAR MENU PRICE & RECEIVE A 2ND OF EQUAL VALUE FOR FREE
WACKY WEDNESDAY BUY ANY LARGE PIZZA AT REGULAR MENU PRICE AND GET ANY SIDE ITEM FOR FREE
TERRIFIC THURSDAYS $4.99 LARGE CHEESE PIZZA
HOT BROWNIES FREE
DOUBLE DEAL $11.99 2 MEDIUMS $18.99 2 LARGES
CHICKEN SPECIAL $17.99 1 MEDIUM 1-TOPPING, 1- ORDER OF CHICKEN BREAD, 1- ORDER OF CHICKEN KICKERS & ONE 2-LITRE OF COKE.
CARRY-OUT DEAL BUY ANY PIZZA AT REGULAR MENU PRICE & RECEIVE A 2ND OF EQUAL VALUE FOR FREE
CALL TODAY! 1.800.DOMINOS (1.800.366.4467)

VILLANOVA UNIVERSITY
Master's in ENGLISH
Attend an information session on Tuesday, October 17th at 4:30 p.m. at Villanova's Graduate Open House.
- A distinguished graduate faculty with Ph.D.'s from the nation's top universities
- A curriculum that balances historical and theoretical approaches to literature
- Challenging, dynamic courses conducted as small seminars
- Opportunities for gaining undergraduate teaching experience while working with graduate faculty mentors

VILLANOVA UNIVERSITY
For more information call 610.519.4645 or visit www.gradenglish.villanova.edu

Field hockey falls to Lehigh

Loss marks fourth straight for Bison who look to rebound at American

By Shannon Pitsch
Staff Writer

The field hockey team started off Patriot League competition with a 3-1 loss to Lehigh Saturday afternoon at Graham Field. The Bison, currently at 4-5 (0-1) for the season, now rank fourth in the conference.

Lehigh 3
Bucknell 1

Lehigh started off the game strong, completing a penalty corner to take the lead 1-0. One minute later, the Bison's consistent offensive threat Amanda Faust '09 scored off a direct penalty corner, assisted by Alex Kyzmir '07 and Stephanie Graf '09.

For the remainder of the first half the Bison dominated the opposition offensively, led by three shots on goal each from Chyncia Smith '08 and Faust. Despite out-shooting Lehigh 8-4 and holding the advantage in penalty corners 6-4, the score remained tied at the end of the half.

The second half proved troublesome for the Orange and Blue, with the Mountain Hawks tapping in a ball after it rebounded off the right goal post in the 48th minute, bringing the score to 2-1. With a balanced offensive line and a defense led by goalkeeper Emily Groendyke '07 with five saves, the Bison continued fighting to try to tie the game.

"What we continue to focus on is every goal we set is still in front of us and that there is so much hockey left to play."
—Heather Lewis, head coach

"When we got down 2-1 near the end of the game, we had a number of great opportunities to tie the score—we never quit playing hard," Head Coach Heather Lewis said. "The risk of playing that attacking style of hockey is that you're susceptible to a counter-attack."

In the last five minutes of the game the Bison's hope for a tie ended with a third goal from the Mountain Hawks. Out-shooting the Orange and Blue 6-1 in the second half, Lehigh maintained the advantage for the remainder of the game. The win improved Lehigh's record to 3-6.

"I think in this game we demonstrated our resiliency to come back from goal deficits and put our opponents under pressure," Lewis said. "We compete in a tough game and to have successful results, you have to be opportunistic on the attacking end. That has and will continue to be our focus the remainder of the season."

Despite the recent string of losses the Bison outscore their opposition by an average of 3.1 to 2.2 goals per game. With four weeks of conference play left, the Bison remain confident their offensive capabilities will help them achieve a playoff berth for November.

"What we continue to focus on is every goal we set is still in front of us and that there is so much hockey left to play," Lewis said. "We're focusing on getting better each day and look forward to competing against a team of such national caliber in American University."

The Bison continue Patriot League competition facing American at noon Saturday in Washington, D.C. The Eagles enter the game with a record of 8-4, ranking them 15th nationally.

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

Emily Groendyke '07 attempts to make a diving stop. Groendyke has a .740 save percentage on the season and posted a total of 39 saves over eight games.

Volleyball splits Patriot League competitions

By Ellis Hudes
Staff Writer

The volleyball team suffered two tough losses, falling 3-0 to Lafayette on Saturday and Temple on Tuesday after defeated Lehigh 3-1 on Friday. The Bison's record fell to 10-9 and 2-2 in Patriot League play, behind American, Army and Lafayette in the standings.

The Bison lost to Temple 31-29 in the all-important first game in Philadelphia. The Owls (10-8) took the last two games 30-15 and 30-20 to complete the sweep.

Temple 3
Bucknell 0

Jenna Henderson '08 spearheaded the Bison's offensive with 10 kills and a .320 hitting percentage, while Sarah Groman '07 had seven kills and two block assists. Kristen Sydlowski '07 added 19 digs for the Orange and Blue defense and Shannon Pitsch '09 had two service aces and seven digs to go along with her team-high 11 assists.

The Bison fell 3-0 to the Lafayette Leopards in Easton, Pa. competing at the Kirby Sports Center. The win moved the Leopards to 9-5 overall and 3-1 in Patriot League play.

Lafayette 3
Bucknell 0

Lafayette swept through the first game with a 30-12 win, stunning the Orange and Blue. The Bison were much more competitive in the second game, matching the home team's play until the final stages, as the Leopards sneaked by 30-27. In the third game Lafayette pounced early and established a cushion propelling them to a 30-21 win. The Bison offense struggled, as Henderson, one of the team's best outside hitters was not available for the game.

"Without Jenna in the lineup, we need more contributions from that position and better consistency in translating what we've done in practice to game time situations," Head Coach Cindy Opalski said.

It was an opportunity for other players to gain valuable experience. Jennifer Rupp '10 saw extended match play and had a career-best 10 digs. Pitsch had a stellar performance with 20 assists and 10 digs. Veterans also contributed, with Jennie Smith '07 adding a team-high seven kills and hitting .462 for the match while Sydlowski recorded four service aces and 21 digs.

Bucknell 3
Lehigh 1

The team fared better against Lehigh at the Leeman-Turner Arena in Bethlehem, Pa. where they sealed a 3-1 victory over the Mountain Hawks.

The Bison won the first game 30-22 before Lehigh leveled the match by winning the second game by the same score. After a tight 32-30 contest won by the Bison, they finished off the match with a solid 30-19 score line.

Emilie Hardinge '09, Liz Hazuka '09 and Groman led a balanced offensive attack with 11 kills apiece. Jennie Smith performed consistently, adding eight kills while hitting an errorless .421 for the match. Pitsch and Sydlowski helped fill up the statistics sheet against Lehigh, the former with 44 assists and the latter adding 32 digs.

Lehigh has yet to win a game this season, but the team would not take this match lightly.

"They have had a really tough season with four nationally ranked teams on their schedule. They've got some talented young players and so we needed to maintain a high level of play," Opalski said.

The Bison have an opportunity to rebound, traveling to play Colgate at 7 tonight in Hamilton, N.Y.

Summer Breeze Stables
Est. 1973
10 minutes from Campus
Riding Lessons for all levels
Certified Professional Trainer
Large indoor and Outdoor Arenas
Boarding, Training and Showing
Call 570-412-0771 for an appointment

DOES YOUR CAR NEED SERVICED?
Our Service Department has $25,000 in new upgrades, including a new alignment rack, brake lathe, tire machine, and hundreds of hours of training for the techs. We now offer shuttle service to and from work or home. We have become a complete service center that can perform any work on any model, from an oil change to engine replacement.
Lewisburg Ford Oil Change w/Multi-Point Inspection $19.95 Excludes Diesels. Must present coupon at time of service. Expires 12/31/06.
Lewisburg Ford Oil Change/Tire Rotation w/Multi-Point Inspection $34.95 Must present coupon at time of service. Expires 12/31/06.
Lewisburg Ford
2265 Old Turnpike Rd. (Route 45 West)
Across From Brookpark Farm
Call Today! (570) 524-7267
Visit us on the web at www.lewisburgford.com

COLDWELL BANKER
PENN ONE REAL ESTATE
Thank You, Bucknell!!
For thirty years of calling Bucknell and Lewisburg home.
Susan Warner-Mills, Sales Associate
Competence, Integrity, Service
524-7500; swm@coldwellbanker.com

Nancy's Nu-Wave Salon
...look your best
Sept/Oct Special
One Hour Massage $35
Main Street (Rte 45) Montondon
524-2315
www.nancysnuwave.com

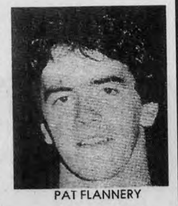
CatmanDo
Handyman Services
Specializing in small home repair jobs:
Custom Carpentry
Painting
Light construction
Greg H Mathias
570-524-4724
Free Estimates Fully insured

sports 1980

By Keith Lawrence
Appeared March 14, 1980

No one, not even the Amazing Kreskin when he was here, could foresee the impact that these three students and their teammates would have on the Bucknell student body, faculty and community when they arrived on campus nearly four years ago.

The mere thought of uprooting the academia from the library before 11 p.m. for any reason, especially for a basketball game, was pure tomfoolery.



PAT FLANNERY

But now that the magic dust of victory which, for the past two seasons floated around this campus, has settled, one can see through hindsight how desperate these scholars were to vacate their cubicles.

The adage of "everyone loves a winner" was never more in evidence than at Bucknell as fervent students consistently flocked to Davis Gym to see Bob Barry '80, Pat Flannery '80, Steve Sigl '80 and the rest of the Bison team work their basketball wizardry on yet another mesmerized visitor.

However, amidst all the success and acclaim which they have deservedly received, these three seniors have not forgotten the leaner times from their freshman and sophomore years.

"I remember when I would see guys coming out of the weight room right in the middle of the game," Barry recalled.

Indeed, things did not always go smoothly for them. In fact, it took nearly a month for roommates Barry and Flannery to iron out their dormitory differences.

The situation was much the same at the gym as the upperclassmen acted with hostility and animosity toward their new teammates.

As Flannery recounted, "We were the first class of recruits for Coach Woollum, (Coach Jim Valvano had left Bucknell two years earlier for Iona College, where he has since built the Gaels into a national power) and he was trying to build a new program. Some of the players who were left from the Valvano era felt as if they should play but that they were being phased out of the program. There were exceptions, though, with Steve Oristaglio being the most notable."

What resulted from the situation was verbal taunting, on-court fighting and a distinct split between the freshmen and upperclassmen. The tension was not eased any when Barry was inserted in the starting lineup at the beginning of the season nor when Flannery and Sigl replaced two juniors later on that year...

arts & media 1975

the bucknell concert committee presents....
BILLY JOEL
★"Best new male artist 1974"-Cashbox
★"Fast developing into an important artist"-New York Times
★"Pianist-singer Billy Joel has put together an ultra-slick show" -Philadelphia Evening Bulletin
★"His distinctive vocals and style are reminicient of Dylan, making him a sure-shot for super stardom"-Cashbox
Wednesday, February 26 8:45
Tickets $5.00
UC Info Desk
No smoking, no liquor, no blankets in Davis Gym.
Produced by the Bucknell Concert Committee.

Joel's "hard-hitting" sounds rock Davis

By Bob Grabowski
Appeared Feb. 28, 1975

All the odds were against it. Down in the Bucknellian office I read the smelliest lot of promotional horse manure on Billy Joel that anyone would care to handle.

And for months I had heard the tumbling piano notes on Billy Joel's records tumble the same way at every playing, until my eyes felt like the bouncing ball in those old cartoons. And that fuzzy picture on the album "Piano Man" evoked the image of an apish Elton John playing upside down on the keyboards.

All the odds were against my writing a good review on this man; try as I might, I could not maintain the critic's open mind. But I had missed one thing: the words.

Those perceptive, hard-hitting words make clear who and what Billy Joel is, and when he appeared on the stage I was entranced. He infused his words and music with a terrific vitality never to be found in the recordings.

I cannot say that I liked him instantly, though, even though I was entranced. Singing through a hooked nose and curled lips in a low nasal manner, he almost snarled, which smacked of arrogance. I even suspected that Davis Gym and the old piano he was playing on might be the cause of his snarl—another uppity star. It became apparent what Joel was saying with that snarl: "There's a lot of sh*t going down these days. Let's get down to the nitty gritty."

This attitude prevailed through the performance. Unlike "America," Joel spoke to his audience; he was almost back on his bar stool, rapping with the patrons and taking their requests. Joel often answered words hurled at him from the audience; at one point he accidentally hit the opening card of Elton John's "Benny and the Jets" (between songs Joel played around on the keys while talking) and at the audience's urging continued, his band picking it up, while the audience took over as the audience on the recording. When he had finished the opening chords of the song, Joel stopped, remarking "Elton John doesn't do any of my stuff—why should I do his?"

"Piano Man" was one of the first songs he played, reasoning that that was what everybody wanted to hear, and that he might as well "get it out of the way and get on to other things." He chided the success of his 45 and mimicked a super [disc jockey] promoting it, and then an emcee in Las Vegas introducing him years later as "The Piano Man."

Joel's band was likewise excellent. Several of the songs have an unbelievably rapid pace, but the band stuck right with their leader and the beat. Joel often looked over at his drummer and laughed and bobbed his head in time. On the other side of the stage, the organ and the saxophone player would be jumping around with a joyous grin above his flying beard.

Joel's piano technique is another story. His hands simply float along the keyboard while his fingers flick down at precisely the right moments.

His words were of key importance, and because the sound system was in perfect balance, one could hear them well. Contributing to the moods and patterns of each song, the lights were artistically synchronized. Thus the concert was also polished technically.

After the tumultuous ending of his powerful song "Captain Jack," Joel bowed and shook the hands of many admirers below. His words and music had spoken for him. The hands he clasped said, even more than "good show," "good man!"

Now Open !!
Herwig's of Lewisburg
Authentic Austrian Cuisine
Herwig's
Open Monday thru Saturday
11:45 AM-7:00 PM (last seating)
406 Market Street
(Across from Campus Theatre)
www.herwigsoflewisburg.com
Wilkommen!

Villager GMAC Real Estate
521 N. Derr Dr. Lewisburg, PA 17837
570-523-3244
CALL US FOR THE LARGEST SELECTION OF RENTALS IN TOWN
1-5 Bedroom Units
Houses or Apartments for 2007/2008 and 2008/2009
A few choice units for 06/07 left!
Call Linda or Duska or e-mail us at linda-treese@villagerrealty.com or duska_rishel@yahoo.com for a complete list of our rentals.

A Bucknell Tradition Since 1968
bull run inn
Open 7 days a week:
Mon. Sat. 11:30 a.m.—2 a.m. and Sunday 11:30 a.m. – midnight
605 Market St., downtown Lewisburg
ph: (570) 524-2572
www.bullruninn.com
(check for current features and events)
Trick or Treat
Halloween Pop Quiz (21 & over)
- Halloween Trivia Questions -
Tues, Oct. 31 @ 9 p.m.
Costume Contests between rounds:
Best Costume Contest—$50 gift card
Pre-Carved Pumpkin Contest—$25 gift card
Mummy Contest—$15 gift card
- Halloween themed specials -
SUNDAY BRUNCH 11:30 a.m.—2 p.m.
Monday Night Football @ 9 p.m.
drawings & specials

Student Events at Homecoming Weekend
OCTOBER 6-8 2006

October 6, 2006
7 – 10 p.m. Outdoor Extravaganza with Lewis Black
Sojka Lawn (Rain location: Gerhard Fieldhouse). Dont miss this field party filled with lots of food, campfires (smores!) and entertainment by comedian Lewis Black. Bucknell's student a capella groups, and the "We Brake for Nobody" comedy routine will perform the opening acts.

October 7, 2006
11:30 a.m. – 1 p.m. Carnival of Yesterday (Pre-Game)
Football Practice Field. Visit the carnival on your way to the football game to play games, and win prizes. Also enjoy yummy carnival treats such as caramel apples, funnel cake and cotton candy. All events at the carnival are FREE.

1 p.m Bucknell Football Game — Bucknell vs. Penn
Christy Mathewson-Memorial Stadium. Bring your orange and blue spirit gear, and cheer for the Bison! Meet your Senior Class Homecoming Hosts and Hostesses, and the new athletic Hall of Fame inductees. Please refer to the Campus Box Office information for ticket purchases.

3 p.m. – 5 p.m. Carnival of Yesterday (Post-Game)
Football Practice Field. Visit the carnival on your way back from the football game to play games, and win prizes. Also enjoy yummy carnival treats such as caramel apples, funnel cakes and cotton candy. Enjoy a special performance by the Latino Dance Corner at 4 p.m. All events at the carnival are FREE.

9:15 p.m. Ventriloquist: Lynn Trefzger
The Bison, ELC. Lynn Trefzger is a ventriloquist/comedienne with a trunk full of zany characters that have accompanied her to stages throughout the country. She has performed with artists including Jeff Foxworthy, Ray Romano, Smothers Brothers, Tim McGraw and Faith Hill.

10 p.m. E-baby Slam Poet
7th Street Café. Blending a unique fusion of rap and poetry, Washington DC native E-Baby is considered to be a poet that paints pictures with words, and gives silence a voice.

October 8, 2006
10 a.m. – noon Student and Alumni Farewell Brunch
Bostwick Cafeteria, ELC, First Floor. Bring your friends, and celebrate the end of Homecoming Weekend with fellow Bucknellians of yesterday and today. Choose from a variety of items, pay at the door.

Yesterday. Tomorrow. Now. Bucknell
Office of Alumni Relations • Bucknell University, Lewisburg, PA 17837 • alumni@bucknell.edu

Kanye's coming to Bucknell ... and A&E gets to write about it.
email kkane@

BOSTON UNIVERSITY INTERNATIONAL PROGRAMS
This is B.U.
This could be you.
AUSTRALIA
BELIZE
ECUADOR
ENGLAND
FRANCE
GERMANY
IRELAND
ISRAEL
ITALY
MEXICO
NEW ZEALAND
NIGER
SPAIN
SWITZERLAND
U.S.A.
INTERNSHIPS
LANGUAGE
LIBERAL ARTS
SCIENCE
ENGINEERING
www.bu.edu/abroad
Financial aid is available
BOSTON UNIVERSITY INTERNATIONAL PROGRAMS
232 Bay State Road
Boston, MA 02215
617-353-9888
abroad@bu.edu

Country twang in your rock tunes?

Rock 'n' roll may be king, but country sounds creep into rock bands from the Replacements to the Beatles banjo

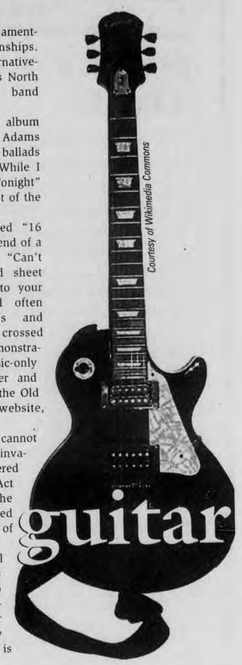
vs.



guitar

Courtesy of Wikimedia Commons

By Angela Tchou
Contributing Writer

❖ A&E Opinion

Where I am from, country music and southern rock are not just genres—they are lifestyles. "Dime-store cowboys" walk around town attempting to emulate their favorite radio cowboys. School let out early the day Johnny Cash died.

The funny thing is, where you are from, it is not much different.

Country music may be the most abhorred genre above the Mason-Dixon line. Many people are loath to admit they even live in the same country as Nashville. Most people do not realize the genre is incredibly invasive, and many non-country bands cannot avoid it in their own work.

Take Wilco for example. Trend-following teenagers who attempt to garner any hipster-credibility need to own at least one Wilco album. What most may not know about the band is Jeff Tweedy, Wilco's primary songwriter, formerly belonged to a group heavily influeneed by country music, Uncle Tupelo.

Uncle Tupelo was the 1980s alternative-country poster child. The group may have been filed under the spliced alternative category, but its twangy, guitar-picking tracks were more country than contemporary. Sometimes taking political stands regarding nuclear war and the conditions of coalmines, the band seemed to channel Doc & Merle Watson and the Nitty Gritty Dirt Band.

Members of sororities and fraternities who love Dave Matthews Band may find the live recording and performances of "Crash Into Me" charming, especially when Matthews sings, "I'll be your Dixie chicken, if you'll be my Tennessee Lamb / And we will walk together down in Dixie Land."

Matthews borrows the lines from an older song heavy with references to southern whiskey and Dixie. Little Feat, a noted 1970s band, wrote this lyric as a chorus for the twangy-guitar ditty called "Dixie Chicken." It was later covered by Garth Brooks (who, appropriately, went through a rock phase as Chris Gaines, singing rock songs and covering "Hard Luck Woman" by KISS).

Even quintessential rock bands hold roots in country music. The Replacements lived every connotation of the words "rock 'n' roll." Known for their forays with sex, drugs and teenage violence, the band would often show up to gigs too drunk to play their own songs, reverting to covers of their favorite music instead, according to the CD jacket for their album "Don't You Know Who I Think I Was."

The band's music slowly became tainted by country music. Their early work was more punk and Beatles-influenced, but quieter country-tinged songs such as "Achin' to Be" and "I'll Be You" catapulted The Replacements into a new genre and made them forerunners for what would be known as the alternative country scene.

Cheap Trick covered "In the Street," originally by 1970s power-pop group Big Star, as the theme song for "That '70s Show." Elliott Smith covered Big Star's alternative country ballad "Thirteen" for the recent indie film "Thumbsucker."

Rival artists Rhett Miller and Ryan Adams can flaunt themselves as rock 'n' roll stars. Miller originally played (and still plays) with the country bar band Old 97s, lamenting broken relationships. Adams first sang alternative-country songs with his North Carolinian band Whiskeytown.

On Whiskeytown's album "Faithless Street," Adams sings broken-hearted ballads such as "Excuse Me While I Break My Own Heart Tonight" and "Here's to the Rest of the World."

On a track named "16 Days" he mourns the end of a relationship, singing, "Can't sleep when the bed sheet fights its way back to your side." Fights would often ensue if Old 97s and Whiskeytown ever crossed paths, a physical demonstration of the now music-only rivalry between Miller and Adams, according to the Old 97s website, www.old97s.com.

Even the British cannot avoid the southern invasion. The Beatles covered Buck Owen's "Act Naturally," and the Proclaimers covered Roger Miller's "King of the Road."

Much of musical history has its roots in southern sound. So next time you pontificate about your hatred for country music, remember: it is your country too.

University alum co-produces independent film 'Half Nelson'

By Sarah Novello
Writer

❖ Movie Review

Some University students graduate with a degree but with little direction. For Jeremy Walker '00 the story is different.

Walker works for a small, politically- and socially-minded New York-based independent film company called "Think Film," which recently co-produced the film "Half Nelson" playing at the Campus Theatre this week.

Starring Ryan Gosling, "Half Nelson" is the story of Dan Dunne, a poor-but-brilliant drug-addicted teacher. His goal is to change the life of one of his inner-city middle school students. Drey (Shareeka Epps) is a student struggling at home ever since her brother's arrest. After Drey discovers Dunne's addiction, the pair form an unlikely but necessary friendship that ends up saving them both.

The film is concerned with change and whether or not it is inevitable and desired. As Dunne says, "We're always changing, and it's important to know that there are some changes you can't control, but there are others you can."

"Half Nelson" undoubtedly shines in the acting category. Gosling truly becomes Dunne. He received much praise for this portrayal, and Walker realizes the power and truth that Gosling brings to the film.

"Somehow, despite all his faults, we are really endeared to Dan Dunne," Walker said. "That's just everything that Gosling brought to the script. Everything feels really spontaneous … we recognize so many true moments of humanity in Ryan Gosling's performance."

Epps also shines in this film. Discovered through a casting call in Brooklyn, she had no problem matching Gosling's level of acting.

"She's got a lot of potential," Walker said. "She's brilliant."

"Half Nelson" is not a "mainstream" film, but it managed to gain the attention and praise of high-end movie reviewers because of Gosling's name and his acting.

"Half Nelson" does not live up to the amazing reviews it has received, and does what many independent films do: not enough. It is a natural, realistic film as messy and untidy as reality, but it does not capture the audience. We are given a glimpse of Dunne's life, but it is not interesting enough to fill 106 minutes. The film is very slow-paced and the minimal soundtrack adds to the general feel of an empty plot.

Jazz and wrestling connoisseurs may recognize the term "half nelson"; the film was named for both the Miles Davis song and the wrestling hold. An opponent held in a half nelson has his own force used against him. The writers, Ryan Fleck and Anna Boden, listened to a lot of Davis' music while writing the script. Both "half nelsons" are metaphors for Dunne's struggles.

Walker's production company met Fleck and Boden at the Sundance Film Festival, where the project started. The writers are a young filmmaking team. They live together and write together. Fleck officially directed, but Boden was a constant force in editing and producing the film.

"Creatively, they really shaped the whole film together," Walker said.

The film sprung from the writers' lives since "they were living in an era where they felt that they couldn't personally evoke a lot of change," Walker said.

Overall, this film is far from a failure, and the young filmmakers aspire to collaborate on future projects. The main disappointment of "Half Nelson" is that it does not live up to Kevin Smith's claim that it is "one of the ten best [films] I've seen in a decade," as Smith said according to www.canmag.com. It does not stand out from other independent films.

Courtesy of imdb.com

Dan Dunne (Ryan Gosling) and his student, Drey (Shareeka Epps) armwrestle during class. Dunne and Drey become unlikely friends through shared misfortunes in the film "Half Nelson."

New lostprophets music almost lost beneath conventional image

By Kimberly Kane
Arts & Entertainment Editor

❖ CD Review

Do not be fooled by the generic packaging of "Liberation Transmission," the third full-length album from lostprophets. It may look like every other CD on the shelf, but the latest from the Welsh rockers has hidden depths worth exploration.

At first glance, the band heavily relies on an overdone image. Take one look at their Web site or MySpace page and it is easy to disregard lostprophets.

Their combination of couture, skinny ties and makeup is trendy, but may turn listeners away.

The album begins by playing right into the listeners' expectations. A weak drumbeat and screeching guitars start off "Everyday Combat." Ian Watkins provides vocals, and prefers screaming.

The short phrases fit well with the song, but they are far from interesting. "Bar Fight / weeknight / you don't look right / poor mite, no bite," shouts Watkins over a messy collaboration of drums and guitar. As the song progresses, it gets easier to stomach, as Watkins' screaming fades into more tolerable vocals.

The next song, "A Town Called Hypocrisy," is the second single. Musically, it is similar to "Everyday Combat," but the lyrics take off in another direction. Lostprophets leave bar fights behind in favor of "Can you save this broken boy / and put the pieces back as one / though he has all his toys / he is never having fun." This ambiguous image threatens to ruin the rest of the album.

The bands members seem unable to decide if they are hard-edged, stylized singers or composers of sincere songs that invoke emotions. Thankfully, around the fourth track they get a better hold on their sound.

"Rooftops (A Liberation Broadcast)," was the album's first single, and it is easy to see why. It is the catchiest song on the album, combining a chorus of "Standing on the rooftops / everybody scream your heart out" with sincere lyrics such as "All the love I've met / I have no regrets / If it all ends now, I'm set."

The album becomes more varied and a little more experimental as the songs progress. The album continues with "Can't Catch Tomorrow (Good Shoes Won't Save You Now.)" The lyrics are sad and reflective, and Watkins' vocal talent is showcased in this song. Despite the reflective nature of the song, it still has a fast pace and maintains the rock feel.

Lostprophets could easily get lost in the shuffle as one of countless bands in the shadow of Fall Out Boy and Panic! At the Disco.

Like many other popular bands, their song titles are cheesy and have little to do with the songs, from "Can't Stop, Gotta Date with Hate" to "Always All Ways (Apologies, Glances & Messed Up Chances)."

The song "For All These Times Kid, For All These Times" relies on familiar beats, but for the first time, lostprophets ventures into playful lyrics like "Lipgloss lies / doin the time / never gonna miss what I left behind." They may not make much sense, but "lipgloss lies" is an unforgettable phrase.

"Everybody's Screaming!!!" captures the youthful essence that the rest of the album tries to suppress. An anthem of teenage angst, the song makes the band sound surprisingly naïve and appeals to younger fans.

When lostprophets embraces its pop style and stops fighting it, its music becomes much more enjoyable.

The band is trying to project an image, which its appearance, album cover and first few songs support. But when they settle into clever lyrics and sincere melodies, they are much better.

After the identity crisis passes in the first few songs, the rest of the album is full of compelling lyrics, heartfelt vocals and songs you will want to listen to over and over again.

Inpulse sings up a talented storm

By Lindsay Carter
Senior Writer

❖ Concert Review

Students who went to the Bison Saturday night got more than the chips and soda they came to purchase. Two a cappella groups took over the newly-renovated stage in the Bison at 8:30 p.m., presenting energy and talent to an animated crowd.

Following their performance at Tunes at Noon Friday, Beyond Unison started Saturday night off right with a rendition of Natasha Bedingfield's "Unwritten." Alex Numeroff '07 sang the solo.

Jon Backhaus '07 had the solo for Better Than Ezra's "Good."

Will Hellmuth '09 sang Eve 6's "Inside Out." Sophomore Zaf Kamar's solo in Carbon Leaf's "What About Everything?" followed. Kerry Flanigan '09 played a crucial role in both "Inside Out" and "What About Everything?"

Beyond Unison also performed Third Eye Blind's "Jumper" before ending with a medley based on Sublime's "What I Got," which was particularly entertaining. The group makes up their own lyrics apropos for the University, which change from one performance to the next.

Even though a significant portion of the a cappella group was off campus during this performance, Beyond Unison did not fail to impress the crowd.

InPulse, a four-part all-male a cappella vocal band, arrived at the Bison looking like students who came for food or to watch a game on the TV, but they had greater plans.

This was the second time they performed at the University in less than a year, and they expressed how grateful they were to be back. This was the last stop on their 21-day tour during which they performed all over the country in a variety of venues, including sold-out 3,000-seat auditoriums.

Students got out of their seats to clap and dance to this song, which contained the improvised lyrics, "Take me to those Bucknell ladies every night."

The band began their performance with Michael Jackson's "The Way You Make Me Feel." The voice parts of Matt McDonald, baritone, and Gabe Koxlien, tenor, were supported by the nonstop creative and impressive percussive inventions of Steve Howe, as well as the low "mooing" bass from Marcus Hanson.

The percussion and bass parts sounded as though they came from instruments rather than vocal cords.

McDonald, from Australia, fittingly had the solo in the song "Land Down Under," by Men at Work. Their next song was "True" by Ryan Cabrera. InPulse went from Cabrera's ballad to "old school country music" with Garth Brooks's "The River."

The group also performed Cyndi Lauper's "Time After Time," Gavin DeGraw's "I Don't Wanna Be" and Rascal Flatts's "Bless the Broken Road."

InPulse's confidence in front of the crowd emanates energy and appeal. Because of the breadth of their repertoire, they make every song new and exciting, demonstrating their skill with different kinds of music.

InPulse performed a song of their own entitled "These Are the Top Five Reasons Why We're Not a Boy-Band." Audience members who attended last year's performance laughed as they introduced the song, since they knew the comedy that lay ahead.

Some lyrics explained they are different from bands like 'NSync and the Backstreet Boys because their "man" Howe replaces synthesizers and other percussion instruments. They added funny lyrics such as "You won't see us mackin' on Britney Spears / Or checking into rehab after drinking too many beers" and ended with "The number one reason is 'We won't dance,'" while exaggerating typical dance moves of popular boy bands.

After the show students discovered another reason why InPulse is not a boy band—the group is extremely down-to-earth and wanted to get to know the fans, including the members of Beyond Unison.

"What really set them apart was their friendly and approachable natures," Backhaus said. "They stayed after the show and talked shop with the crowd and Beyond Unison and were really enthusiastic about our opening for them. That personally meant a lot to us."

At one point, Howe, the newest member of the band, was the only performer onstage, taking the audience "on a ride" through his repertoire of sounds. He captivated students with the range, speed and skill of his beatboxing and percussive sounds, adding in bass and "making it funky" in ways that do not sound human, inciting the crowd to dance and gasp simultaneously.

"My favorite part of the show was the two beat-boxing showcases, first with the vocal percussionist, and then when they battled," Backhaus said. "It was fun, people loved it and it sounded amazing."

Attention then turned to Hanson, a 6'6" "Montana guy" whose role was to perform bass sounds. Hanson does not usually sing lead parts or actual words, and a cappella groups do not usually cover Johnny Cash, but both of these occurred on Saturday night; he performed a medley of three Cash songs.

When Hanson sang "Walk the Line," Koxlien told the students to say "Lower, Marcus" after the refrain. Hanson usually only lowers the notes twice, but he lowered the notes three times this night and the crowd was astonished by his range.

Koxlien then asked, "Wanna come on a vocal jam with InPulse?" to which the crowd naturally agreed. InPulse began performing John Mayer's "Your Body is a Wonderland," but went in a different direction. Koxlien announced, "We're gonna go back in time to that movie 8 Mile and Steve and Matty are gonna do a drum-thing battle." There was no clear winner, but the battle made the crowd wonder why McDonald had not shared the percussive duty all night.

This percussive battle turned into Vanilla Ice's "Ice Ice Baby," performed by Hanson, who improvised with the lyrics, "Bucknell, kick it one time boy." Then Howe and McDonald went crazy on a "drum solo" before going right back into John Mayer as if they had never deviated from this soft ballad.

Queen's "Fat Bottomed Girls" proved a crowd-pleaser as the final song of the night. Students got out of their seats to clap and dance to this song, which contained the improvised lyrics, "Take me to those Bucknell ladies every night." The band interrupted themselves in the middle of this song as well, but this time they sang "Baby Got Back" by Sir Mix-A-Lot, inspiring laughs and screams before reverting to Queen again.

"InPulse had a diverse repertoire that covered songs not usually performed a cappella," Backhaus said. "Their show came with all the professional flourishes and polish that one would expect from a group of their caliber. Their harmonies were tight and their sound was clear and polished."

Audience members who were not singers also loved every minute of the performance.

"InPulse's energy, humor and talent created an unforgettable performance," Katherine Morgan '08 said. "They're so impressive because they seem to do more with their voices than some bands do even with instruments."

No, that was not your cell phone vibrating on your table in the Bison; the sheer vocal power of InPulse was strong enough to shake things. When else will you see friends dancing their soda and burrito bowls over to the cashier? InPulse brought captivating talent and energy to the Bison, and University students anticipate the group's next performance.

Beyond Unison— from Tunes at Noon to the Bison

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Beyond Unison sang for the well-attended Tunes at Noon performance last Friday in front of the Langone Center. On Saturday, they opened for the a cappella group Inpulse in the Bison.

Ellyn Ercolano—The Bucknellian

Inpulse, a four-member a cappella group, performing in the Bison on Saturday. Although they remained seated most of the concert, Inpulse broke into dance during a song about boy bands.

Lewis Black headlines tonight's festivities

By Megan Malloy
Contributing Writer

Kicking off Homecoming weekend is the Outdoor Extravaganza from 7-10 tonight. We Brake for Nobody, Beyond Unison, The Bison Chips, Two Past Midnight and The Silhouettes will perform on the Sojka lawn and open for Lewis Black.

Black is best known for his role on Comedy Central's "The Daily Show." His segment 'Back in Black' is a commentary, usually a rant regarding recent news and cultural phenomena.

Students are eager for Black's appearance on campus because he is such an important comedic figure.

"I'm excited to see Lewis Black live and in person, as opposed to just watching his short segment," Nina Baker '08 said.

Along with his television fame he is also a producer, actor and writer. In 1977 Black earned a master's in Fine Arts from the Yale School of Drama and was trained in theatre and as a playwright.

He worked as the Associate Artistic Director of the West Bank Café Downstairs Theatre Bar in Hell's Kitchen, New York City. There he collaborated with another writer and wrote hundreds of one-act plays.

Black introduced his plays before they began, and it was from here that his stand-up act began. He eventually left his job in New York City and began working in television and in some plays according to en.wikipedia.org.

His comedic style is intimidating at times. On "The Daily Show," he sits forward, arms crossed on the table, and speaks directly to the camera and viewers. His topics are usually about the absurdities of the world and his issues with contemporary life. His language is characterized by sarcasm, profanity, shouting and his trademark angry finger-shaking toward the audience.

Black's recent accomplishments include a special stand-up special, "Black on Broadway," on HBO. He is developing his own show, "Red State Diaries," on Comedy Central. His show, slated to air later in the year, will feature him on the road to visit all of the red states.

He performed at the Warner Theatre in Washington, D.C., for HBO's special, "Red, White, and Screwed," on April 21. He recently appeared in the summer comedy "Accepted" and he is in the upcoming Robin Williams film, "Man of the Year."

"[We are] pretty excited for the opportunity to open for such a big-time comedian. It's like the Vedder 'sculpture' opening for the Statue of Liberty," said Brenna Lemieux '07, member of We Brake For Nobody.

We Brake For Nobody's improv style is different from Black's aggressive brand of comedy, but the group respects his talent as a comedian.

Black's appearance tonight is the forerunner of an exhilarating semester.

"I couldn't believe [Black] was coming to campus. I can't wait to see what he is going to say," Ashley Noerr '08 said.

CUSTOMIZED SKINCARE
FOR THE TREATMENT OF ACNE

Each of these product lines allow us to meet the individual needs of our patients.

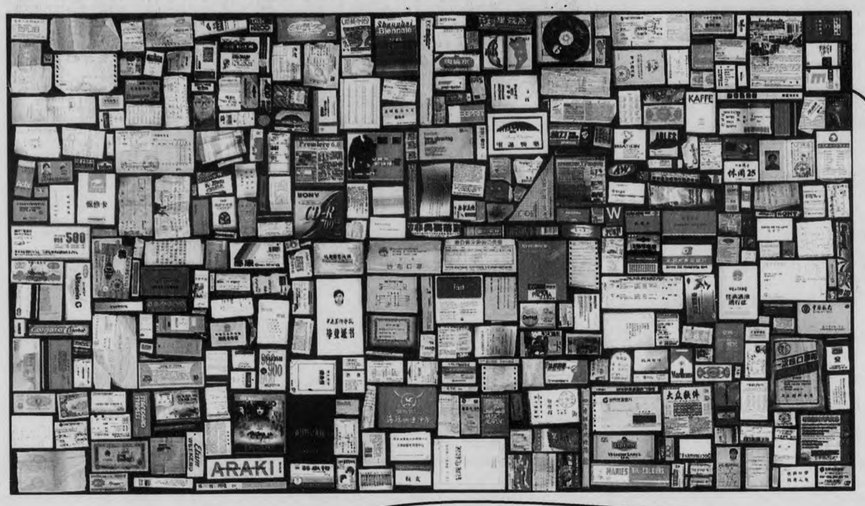
OBAGI La Roche Posay SkinCeuticals

- Vitamin Supplements
  Healthy Skin provides internal skin care by enhancing the body's natural ability to provide nutrients.
- Blue Light Treatments
  This special blue light simply and painlessly kills bacteria in your skin.
- Intense Pulsed Light
  This treatment offers improvement in pore size and acne scars.
- Chemical Peels
  Refines skins' texture and simulates skins natural renewal process.
- Microdermabrasion
  Gently exfoliates the skin and leaves a smoother texture, promoting the growth of healthy new skin cells.

CENTER FOR SKIN HEALTH
Ernest Normyle, M.D., FACS
210 BPM Road de Lorraine • (570) 524-2777 • www.drnormyle.com

New exhibit at Samek—'Misleading Trails'

Follow the trail—err, squiggly line—from each picture in Samek Art Gallery's new exhibit to the caption!



Courtesy of Xiaoze Xie

"December 2001, L.T.," painted by Xiaoze Xie, associate professor of art, depicts a stack of newspapers in a Chinese library exactly as Xie found them.

Courtesy of Chambers Fine Art, New York

Hong Hao created "My Things No. 8" by scanning papers he found in his pockets and organizing them in a one-to-one ratio.

Courtesy of Vernon Fisher

Vernon Fisher's pieces such as "End" (pictured here) often feature text and elements of collage, questioning the meanings of different symbols.

By Lily Beauvilliers
Arts & Entertainment Editor

Located on the fourth floor of the Elaine Langone Center, the Edward and Marthann Samek Art Gallery suffers from an "out of sight, out of mind" mentality—students do not hear about fascinating exhibits located right above their heads while dining at the Bostwick Cafeteria.

The best way to remedy this ignorance? Visit the gallery before Nov. 19. The rewarding exhibit entitled "Misleading Trails" awaits you.

The "Misleading Trails" opening-night lecture was given yesterday. Another talk by exhibit artist Vernon Fisher, a professor at the University of Northern Texas, will occur at 5 p.m. on Nov. 7.

In addition to the exhibit, the Project Room will host an installation by Elizabeth King entitled "Impossible to Freeze the Moment of Regard." Stop-frame films and the objects used in them, including a humanoid sculpture called "Pupil," will be on display.

To any student who wants to break out of the Bucknell bubble: this exhibit is for you.

"Bucknell students will be able to view artists from far away, some prominent artists of our time," said Dan Mills, director of the Samek Art Gallery and one of the artists on display. "Part of Samek's mission is to create programming that brings the world to Bucknell and looks at international trends."

The exhibit certainly achieves its goal. Artists Enrique Chagoya, Xiaoze Xie, Hai Bo, Hong Hao, Ai WeiWei, Vernon Fisher and Dan Mills offer a synthesis of art based out of the United States and Beijing, China.

Mills and Xie, associate professor of art, formed the exhibit.

"They created the show as an off-shoot of another show that happened here and in China a few years ago," Nancy Cleaver, a Samek staff member, said.

That show, entitled "Regeneration: Contemporary Chinese Art from China and the U.S.," closes in Virginia next month after touring eight venues in China and the United States.

Xie described the birth of "Misleading Trails" in the exhibit catalogue.

"Dan Mills and I were talking. ... Our discussion turned to the artists in the show and we soon discovered that there was no lack of paralleling or interconnected concepts between Chinese and American contemporary art," Xie said. "We then came up with the idea to organize an international traveling exhibition to develop communications and exchange among artists from both countries."

The pieces in the exhibit cannot be categorized under one heading. Each artist uses multiple genres such as photography, painting and sculpture to explore a variety of different themes, including communication, colonialism and war. The exhibit is grouped so pieces containing similar themes will be near each other, spatially connecting the works of different artists.

"The pieces are often conceptually related but physically different," Mills said.

Several of the works explore how we understand our world. Xie's photo-realistic paintings of stacks of newspapers such as "Chinese Library No. 28" look at the overwhelming abundance of information available in print.

Fisher's painting "End" elaborates on the same theme, but deals with the meaning of symbols such as words and images by juxtaposing an altered dictionary page, an image of a beach sunset and a cartoon.

"Vernon Fisher subverts images and languages that appear articulate at first, but actually become difficult to comprehend," Mills said.

"End" was acquired for the University by the Samek Art Gallery for possible display in the Ellen Clarke Bertrand Library.

Artists in "Misleading Trails" explore the way humans organize the world around them. In two striking pieces, "My Things No. 7" and "My Things No. 8," Hao scanned common items from his daily life (book-binding in the former and objects from his pockets in the latter) and arranged them compactly on large canvases exactly to scale.

The resulting aesthetic clutter looks like a harrowing "I Spy"-style tableau, but without anything particular to search for; the viewer notices only the arrangement of objects.

Of particular relevance to modern society are the pieces dealing with concepts of war and imperialism. Mills's piece "His World View," created in 2004, depicts a projection of the world in which the United States has been greatly exaggerated. Every other country has been shrunk to the periphery and covered with targets.

Chagoya does the same in paintings like "Road Map I (World)," in which a huge United States is pictured harboring a tank topped with an image of Jesus.

Mills encourages students, staff and members of the community to come to the exhibit.

"We are art advocates," Mills said.

"We are trying to further the arts as an integral part of life."

Groups are invited to visit the gallery, hold meetings there or otherwise request to use it as a setting.

The gallery is open 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday to Wednesday and Friday, 11 a.m. to 8 p.m. Thursday and 1-5 p.m. Saturday and Sunday. Additional appointments are available by calling (570) 577-3792.

Admission to the gallery is free, so escape the bubble and see "Misleading Trails" as soon as you can.

end (end), n. [ML. & AS. ende; akin to G. ende, Goth. andeis; basic sense, "the opposite boundary or extremity"], 1. a limit or limiting part; boundary; point of beginning or stopping. 2. the last part of anything; final point; finish; completion, conc[illegible] exist; death or destruction [illegible] nner of this. 4. while this [illegible] aling to some 5. can this [illegible] ly be the end? 6. months of rumors, w[illegible]perings in dark places. 7. then smoke appearing along the horizon, specks of grey ash drifting from the sky. 8. everywhere acts of sudden intensity; the ceremony of innocence lost. 9. barbarians at the gate. 10. 11. 12.

The Bucknellian

October 13, 2006

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

Volume 138, Number 7 | Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue | www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Homecoming recap

Students and alums feasted on s'mores, sang along with a capella groups and laughed at Lewis Black last Friday on Sojka Lawn.
See page A10

Rice cancels visit

By Evan Unger
News Editor

Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice canceled her discussion at the University scheduled for today because of recent world events.

On Monday morning, the Office of Communications received word Rice would not be able to attend the discussion and quickly sent out an e-mail to the campus community, alumni, parents and the media.

"The president regrets for the University community that we are not able to host a public conversation with Secretary Rice at this time. We hope the visit can occur sometime soon," Chief Communications Officer Pete Mackey said.

The likely cause of Rice's cancellation is the current situation in North Korea. Kim Jong-Il, the leader of North Korea, announced the government successfully tested a nuclear device on Monday.

"The world does not stand still. In this case, the responsibilities to her duties called," Mackey said.

The University re-extended its invitation to Rice to speak on campus.

"We were working hard on being prepared for her visit. If the situation arises, we will be equally determined to make a successful opportunity for discussion," Mackey said.

Originally, the invitation was secured through people who know Rice and are friends of the University who "expressed that this is a good place to visit," Mackey said.

Mackey praised the over-

See RICE page A2

Health Services offers HPV vaccine

By Jeremy O'Sullivan
Contributing Writer

The Student Health Center now offers the vaccine Gardasil to prevent the cervical cancer-causing human papillomavirus (HPV).

Last year alone cervical cancer claimed nearly 10,000 women's lives, according to Don Stechschulte, director of Student Health Services. The vaccine is a crucial medical breakthrough—hopefully a precursor to future vaccines preventing cancer.

According to information distributed by Merck, HPV is a common virus affecting both females and males. Most types of HPV are harmless, do not cause any symptoms and go away on their own. Some types cause cervical cancer and genital warts, according to information distributed at the Student Health Center.

Because HPV may not show symptoms you probably will not know if you have the virus. Most women are diagnosed with HPV as a result of abnormal Pap tests. If detected early many cervical pre-cancers related to HPV can be treated successfully.

Stechschulte emphasized the importance of the vaccine.

"Gardasil is a vaccine that can actually prevent this cancer," Stechschulte said.

The vaccination process consists of three injections given over several months: the first dose, then the second dose two months later and the final dose after six months.

The University's student health insurance plan covers the costly vaccination, but

See HPV page A4

Theatre department to perform banned play uncensored

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

"Spring Awakening" opens Friday, Oct. 27 in the Harvey Powers Theatre. The production of the play has been banned for over a century due to its sexual contents.

By Kimberly Kane
Arts & Entertainment Editor

The department of theatre and dance will perform "Spring Awakening" Oct. 27-30 in the Harvey M. Powers Theatre. The play has been banned and censored since its creation in 1891 and will be performed uncensored.

The drama focuses on adolescent sexuality and the repressive nature of society. While it may not sound like a performance to which you would take your parents for Parents' Weekend, the relationship between parents and children is at the heart of the play. The theatre department hopes to spark discussion.

"The play is a children's tragedy," said Robert Gainer, associate professor of theatre. "They suffer in a world of repression."

Jean Peterson, associate professor of English, served as the dramaturge for "Spring Awakening." A dramaturge is a research resource, or a scholar of drama, who provides background for the play.

"I'm there to address elements that might confuse the actors or directors," Peterson said.

Written before World War I, the play deals with issues playwright Frank Wedekind thought would be prominent in the coming years. It is still strikingly relevant and relatable.

"It really deals with things we've all experienced," said Will Winner '08, who plays Moritz Stiefel. "Everyone has encounters with sex while growing up."

"Spring Awakening" also comments on the other stresses of adolescence, including the high expectations of adults. In one scene a group of boys playfully dart across the stage engrossed in a game of "tag."

See SPRING page A9

Vandals destroy 800-year-old tree slice

By Ahmed Kodouda
Contributing Writer

An unknown number of unauthorized persons entered the Biology Building and destroyed a slice of an 800-year-old redwood tree during Homecoming Weekend.

The four-foot diameter slice of the redwood, a part of the University's biology department since the 1930s, was rolled from its location on the fourth floor of the Biology Building to the elevator. Upon its arrival to the elevator, the stress on the timeworn slice caused it to shatter into pieces.

In a letter sent to the Bucknellian, Professor of Biology Warren G. Abrahamson expressed his sadness the incident caused him.

"It appears that the goal was to steal our four-feet-diameter redwood slice. We were left with Humpty Dumpty and have spent a portion of today piecing our valuable teaching illustration together. For years, our greenhouse tours have begun with the story of our redwood, which is also provided in a graphic attached to the wall of the greenhouse lobby," Abrahamson said.

Abrahamson gave background information on the history the tree witnessed.

"The damaged slice of redwood came from a tree that began life about 1220-1230 during the Dark Ages of Europe. Our tree had reached a height nearly three times that of our Biology Building by 1431 when Joan of Arc was burned at the stake," Abrahamson said.

Currently, the crime is classified as criminal mischief. Public Safety took photos and began investigating but the case will probably remain open. Public Safety has yet to

See TREE page A2

'Eyes Wide Open' visits campus

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

"Eyes Wide Open Across Pennsylvania" exhibit in the LC's Center Room featured 127 pairs of combat boots memorializing the U.S. soldiers from the state. AFSC, an international social justice organization, originally created the program to illustrate the lives lost in the war in Iraq. The national exhibit presently displays more than 2,700 pairs of combat boots.

Israeli soldiers share war experiences

By Nilanjana Saha
News Editor

The Israeli focus has always been on peace, three Israeli soldiers emphasized in an open forum on Wednesday.

Dan Amiga, Yael Bartur and Assia Avera have recently finished their tour of duty in Israel and are now traveling through United States speaking at various colleges through a program called "Israel at Heart."

"There are a lot of misconceptions about Israel. We are just here to tell you our personal stories and share our experiences," Amiga said.

All three soldiers were drafted at the age of 18, as military service is mandatory for both men and women in Israel.

"In the U.S., parents ask their kids about what they want to study in college. In Israel, parents ask their kids about what they want to do in the army," Amiga said.

According to Amiga, although the draft is problematic, Israeli Defense Force (IDF) tries to ease things by preparing children early on through the education system.

"The army is an integrated part of Israeli lives," Amiga said.

Bartur, who worked as a correspondent between foreign agencies and IDF, described being a woman in the army. She said that although there are a lot of combat units for women, only a few coed units exist. Because IDF drafts women along with men, having a woman in the army is not an uncommon scenario.

Although joining the army comes with being Israeli, Amiga recalls the beginning of his training as an intimidating experience.

"You walk in with your designer jeans and your Tommy Hilfiger shirt and you walk out wearing army uniform, with people shouting in your face," Amiga said.

Responding to a question about patriotism and how it affects army life, Amiga said, "Patriotism has nothing to do with joining the army; it just exists."

Comparing the Israeli and American cultures, all three said that both Israel and the United States share the same values about democracy, freedom and equal rights. According to Amiga, diplomatic efforts with Hezbollah have proven worthless.

"We were always aware that Hezbollah had support from Iran but did not know to

See ISRAEL page A2

INSIDE THIS ISSUE

OPINIONS

Open discussion promotes sexual health and well-being.

A6

NEWS

Members of the University community don their "Gay? Fine by Me" shirts. Turn to A5 for a list of National Coming Out Day supporters.

A5

NEWS

Sojka Visiting Poet Cornelius Eady gave a poignant reading Tuesday night at Bucknell Hall.

A3

Public Safety Log

Thursday, October 5

ALARM-FIRE—The Mods: Fire alarm activation caused by burnt food.

Saturday, October 7

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—Smith Hall: Underage student cited and transported to Evangelical Community Hospital E.R. for medical treatment.

DRUG VIOLATION—Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity: Drug paraphernalia confiscated. Under investigation.

VEHICLE ACCIDENT—Phi Psi: No injuries.

THEFT—Christy Mathewson-Memorial Stadium: Caramel apples taken from Dining Services.

ALARM-FIRE—Harris Hall: Fire alarm activation caused by cooking.

SUSPICIOUS PERSON—Roberts Hall: Person entering first floor window of Roberts.

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—Physical Plant: Visitor cited for public intoxication.

VANDALISM—O'Leary Center: Tree and plant damage.

Sunday, October 8

PROPERTY DAMAGE—Harris Hall: Poster altered on the 3rd floor.

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—Hunt Hall: Student cited for underage consumption.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Smith Hall: Intoxicated student received a head injury falling down the steps at Smith Hall. Individual transported by ambulance to Evangelical Community Hospital.

MOTOR VEHICLE VIOLATION—Smoketown Road and Rt. 15: While driving on Rt. 15 a non BU student was forced off of the road by an unknown person driving a red sports vehicle.

T.W.F.E—Roberts Hall: Unknown individuals removed two fire extinguishers from the basement of Roberts Hall and discharged them outside the building.

THEFT—Swartz Hall: A student reported that his bicycle was taken from the stairwell of Swartz Hall. Upon investigation, it was determined that an RA placed it in the basement.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Bucknell Hall: Unknown person(s) broke a window in the door of Bucknell Hall.

THEFT—St. George Street: Driver's license and money taken from a student's purse.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—St. George Street in front of Larison Hall: Student reported barbecue sauce had been thrown on her vehicle.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Biology Building: Tree section sitting outside of the 4th floor elevator was damaged.

Monday, October 9

FIRE ALARM – The Mods: False alarm, unknown cause.

INSTITUTIONAL VANDALISM – Coleman Hall: Employee reported there is a broken window and damaged projector in room 21.

THEFT – Carey House Parking Lot: Student reported that items were removed from her car.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF – Sigma Chi Parking Lot: Student reported that his mirror was broken on his car while parked in the rear lot.

INFORMATION RECEIVED – Kress Hall: Possible harassment.

FIRE ALARM – The Mods: False alarm caused by cooking.

Tuesday, October 10

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF – Farm Lot: Large rock thrown through a student's car window.

THEFT – 7th Street House: Wallet removed from student's room.

THEFT OF SERVICES – Physical Plant: Illegal dumping of garbage.

ALARM-FIRE – McDonnell Hall: False alarm caused by cooking.

Soldiers attempt to clear misconceptions about Israel

Ellyn Ercolano—The Bucknellian

Assia Avera, Dan Amiga and Yael Bartur spoke about the recent Israeli conflict. These three soldiers are traveling with an organization called "Israel at heart," sharing their experiences as Israelis.

ISRAEL From page A1

what extent. We knew money and weapons were coming into Lebanon via Syria, but we were focusing more on Iran itself and were occupied with internal issues," Amiga said. Amiga also expressed concerns over the possibility of Iran acquiring nuclear weapons and changing the balance of power.

Avera, however, had a slightly different story to share. This Ethiopian native recalls making a 600 mile trek through Sudan to the Holy Land, under a massive relocation project run by the Israeli government to bring the Ethiopian Jews to Israel under a mission called Operation Moses.

Avera spoke about his childhood in a rural village, surrounded by farm animals and without any access to electricity.

"Israel, the Holy Land, was only a rumor," Avera said. "But I always felt a strong connection nonetheless."

Avera served in a combat unit after having gone through a year of training. "A child accepts that he is going to join the army. For me, it was a privilege to be able to give back to a country that has given me so much," Avera said.

Bartur described the recent conflict with Hezbollah as surreal.

"Half the country was under rocket fire," Bartur said. As the civilians were moving down south to get away from rockets, journalists and soldiers were heading up to the northern part of Israel.

"For a while, you could only see tanks and cameras near the northern border," Bartur said.

Bartur discussed her hopes for the future of Israel.

"We always hope that our children won't have to go through the same things we are going through, like our parents once hoped for us," Bartur said. But she also said that in order for that to happen, a lot of change has to take place. Israel is letting go of a lot of dreams by handing out peace to the Palestinians.

"We hope that in the future, the Palestinians can let go of their plans for destruction, and focus more on the internal issues and we can possibly live side by side quietly and peacefully," Bartur said. "The situation is much more complicated than just the oppressor and the oppressed."

The three soldiers said that because Israel is such a small country, every little occurance is a much more personal one. Referring to the recent kidnapping of the Israeli solders, Bartur said that it is almost as if everyone knew them personally.

"They have become a part of everyone's families," Bartur said.

All three soldiers agreed that a war was unwanted, but a lot of people volunteered because Israel was under attack and they felt the threat.

Jordan Franklin '09, who organized the event said that he was pleased with the turnout. "I could not hope for better. There are a lot of misconception about Israel that we need to clear up. I hope to have more delegations like this one come speak to the campus in the future," Franklin said.

TREE From page A1

name a suspect. With the lack of an eyewitness, it will be hard for the police to find a solid lead in the case.

"Public Safety will not invest a whole lot of time and effort since we don't have a starting point," said Jason Friedberg, director of Public Safety.

With several computer labs, the Biology Building is accessible to anyone throughout the day. The building also has research facilities that students utilize late at night.

The University and the Biology Department took precautionary measures after the incident. The redwood trunk is now screwed onto a piece of plywood mounted securely on the wall.

"We're not going to start locking the building because one or two people have done some nasty things to us. We're not going to shut it down and not allow students to use the computer facilities. We hope the current generation of students and staff think that this kind of thing is valuable and it ought to stay in perpetuity," Abrahamson said.

Along with the damage to the redwood trunk, fliers were torn down and benches were damaged.

"In the elevator, there were pieces of wood, which I really didn't think too much of because there are always experiments going on in the building. But when the doors opened onto the fourth floor, there were numerous pieces that I didn't even count. I immediately went downstairs and called Public Safety," said Juliann Mull, custodian of the Biology Building.

The trunk was glued back into its original form. Fortunately, the damage is not as visible after the reconstruction of the broken pieces.

"I know that most Bucknellians are not this way, but it bothers me that someone can be so self-centered to act in this manner. Unfortunately, our slice of a once regal giant redwood that has illustrated tree growth and longevity to Bucknell students for over 70 years was unable to survive Homecoming 2006," Abrahamson said.

Compared to last year, the frequency of vandalism has remained the same but the cases have been larger.

Friedberg denied there was a link between previous incidents of campus vandalism.

"I wouldn't even surmise that there is a connection with the Sig Ep vandalism," Friedberg said in reference to the vandalism incident that occurred Sept. 14.

RICE From page A1

whelming response of students, faculty, staff and community members to her planned visit. Rice would have been one of the most powerful figures to visit the campus in at least the last 40 years.

Rice's cancellation saddened many students.

"I was really disappointed when I read the e-mail stating that the Secretary of State wasn't coming; however, I understand that she has important responsibilities serving our great nation, and I hope that she will consider a future visit," James Nelson '08 said.

Dominic Rupprecht '07 offered a similar opinion.

"I'm obviously disappointed that she wasn't able to come, although I suspect North Korea is probably more important than Bucknell, and I hope that Bucknell will continue to pursue speakers of her caliber from both sides of the political aisle," Rupprecht said.

Write for News Email etu001 @

Nancy's Nu-Wave Salon
...took your best
10% Discount with Student ID
524-2315
Main Street (Rte 45) - Mostandon

AS A COLLEGE GRAD, YOU MAY BE ELIGIBLE FOR
$400 OFF
ANY NEW TOYOTA OF YOUR CHOICE*
2007 FJ CRUISER
2007 RAV4
2007 CAMRY HYBRID
2007 YARIS
WWW.WINAYARISONLINE.COM*
TOYOTA moving forward
TOYOTA
buyatoyota.com
*NOT ALL CUSTOMERS WILL QUALIFY. CUSTOMERS RECEIVE $400 FROM TOYOTA TOWARDS LEASING OR FINANCING THE PURCHASE OF NEW UNTITLED TOYOTA MODELS THROUGH PARTICIPATING TOYOTA DEALERS AND TOYOTA FINANCIAL SERVICES. SEE DEALER OR VISIT WWW.TOYOTAFINANCIAL.COM/FINANCE FOR DETAILS. COLLEGE GRADUATE PROGRAM IS SUBJECT TO CHANGE OR TERMINATION AT ANY TIME. NO PURCHASE IS NECESSARY. MAKING A PURCHASE DOES NOT INCREASE YOUR CHANCES OF WINNING. VOID WHERE PROHIBITED BY LAW. TO ENTER YOU MUST BE A LEGAL U.S. RESIDENT AT LEAST 18 YEARS OLD AND YOU MUST HAVE A VALID DRIVER'S LICENSE. VISIT YOUR PARTICIPATING TOYOTA DEALER OR WINAYARISONLINE.COM FOR COMPLETE ELIGIBILITY REQUIREMENTS AND SWEEPSTAKES RULES.

Sojka Visiting Poet promotes social change through writing

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Cornelius Eady, this year's Sojka Visiting Poet, speaks about the need for politics in poems. Eady is a recipient of Rockefeller and Guggenheim fellowships and a National Book Award finalist.

By Catherine Heverling
Editor-in-Chief

There is a need for political poems in today's world, said Cornelius Eady, this year's Sandra & Gary Sojka Visiting Poet.

As part of his two-day residency, Eady, director of the creative writing program at the University of Notre Dame, read and spoke to the University community about his writing. The poet also said he uses his work as a tool for change.

"Human experience is political. [... You] need to find space in your poetry to do that too," Eady said. "Are these poems the best in the world? No, but they are serving a purpose."

While Eady is modest about his success, he earned several awards and accomplished many feats during his career.

Eady was recognized as a National Book Award finalist and received fellowships including those awarded by the Rockefeller and Guggenheim foundations. Eady's book of poetry, "Running Man," was set to music on stage. Another collection, "Brutal Imagination," was adapted for the theatre.

"Brutal Imagination" deals with the 1994 Susan Smith case in which Smith drowned her two sons by letting her car roll into a lake. Smith, in an attempt to escape prosecution, blamed the deaths on a black man who did not exist. Eady followed the case closely and granted this fictional character a voice in his poems.

See EADYpage A9

Connolley and Fairchild face off in debate

Candidates for the State Legislature of the 85th Electoral District argue future of Pennsylvania

By Alexandra Campbell-Ferrari
Staff Writer

Steve Connolley and Russ Fairchild, the candidates for the State Legislature of the 85th Electoral District, participated in a debate at 7 p.m. Wednesday at Lewisburg Area High School.

The League of Women Voters, a nonpartisan organization, sponsored the event. The moderator said the league intended for the debate to give candidates an opportunity to express their opinions and answer questions from their constituents.

A coin toss indicated Steve Connolley would open first.

Connolley said he was dissatisfied with business in Harrisburg, Pa. and desired reform. He emphasized his efforts to hit each and every door in the 85th Electoral District. He said people expressed concerns about integrity, fiscal responsibility, health care, education, agriculture and the economy—all issues he intends to address upon election.

Fairchild emphasized his 18 years of experience in office. He spoke about the beauty and opportunities present in Pennsylvania, such as high life expectancies, low crime, low unemployment, beautiful landscapes and gaming areas and two distinguished universities: Bucknell and the University of Pennsylvania. He is determined to preserve and maintain these achievements.

The first question the candidates answered was to indicate their top-three legislative priorities. Fairchild's were completing the construction of the Central Susquehanna thruway, fostering strong business while increasing the availability of jobs and reforming property tax.

Fairchild pointed out the benefits of finishing the thruway as soon as possible, such as safer and more efficient traffic flow.

Connolley advocated his reform agenda: property tax reform, health care reform and bringing integrity back into the state legislature. He said voters must be able to trust those in office.

"You will come first. There will be constant opportunities for dialogue," Connolley said.

> "I heard that if you can order a sandwich at Sheetz, then you can use these voting machines."
>
> —Steve Connolley,
> Candidate for the State Legislature

The next question addressed the candidates' intentions to ensure available and adequate health care to all Pennsylvanians. Fairchild focused on the need to reform liability. Out of those doctors who are educated in Pennsylvania only 7 percent stay in the state because of liability costs. Connolley addressed the need to reform the entire health care system.

He said you can tweak the current health care policy, but these tweaks are not enough to secure health care for each Pennsylvanian. He said every day people must choose which prescription they are going to fill, and this should not be the case.

Connolley and Fairchild were asked about their strategies for keeping students in Pennsylvania. Connolley supports the growth and development of small businesses. He said we should work with companies in the Union County and Snyder County areas rather than bringing in businesses from out of state. Businesses brought into the state are granted attractive tax breaks and tend to leave after the tax breaks expire.

Fairchild acknowledged certain reforms necessary to encourage the growth of small business. He said 95 percent of small businesses fail within five years of existence. His proposed reforms included a reduction in the corporate net income tax and liability reform, which would help lower the price of health care.

Agriculture was another topic of discussion. Fairchild already passed legislation to ensure agriculture laws are enforced uniformly across the state.

"Farming is a business, not a tourist attraction," Fairchild said.

He is committed to doing all he can to keep people working on farms.

Connolley said family farmers have trouble making ends meet. He is committed to supporting the agricultural community.

Connolley and Fairchild agreed on funding education.

"We should not base the education system on gambling," Fairchild said.

Connolley concurred.

"We want to avoid dependency on gambling as put forth in Act 72," Connolley said. Act 72 links gambling and education.

Regarding opinions on abortion, Fairchild supports the prohibition of abortion in Pennsylvania except in cases of rape and danger to the mother. Ultimately it will be the decision of the federal government and Supreme Court as to the future of abortion, Fairchild said.

Connolley said he is a Roman Catholic and believes life begins at conception, but he also said political representatives need to separate their personal beliefs from existing laws and desires of their constituency.

Connolley and Fairchild addressed the safety of the new Diebold electronic voting machines.

Fairchild said each county chose these new machines in response to the Help America Vote Act of 2002 (HAVA). Handicapped individuals can use these machines without the assistance of another person.

Connolley praised the new machines but said a paper trail is needed to verify each and every individual's vote was counted.

"I heard that if you can order a sandwich at Sheetz, then you can use these voting machines," Connolley said.

The final question was if the candidates were in favor of reducing the size of the state legislature. Connolley argued reducing the size of the House limits the accessibility of voters to representatives. There are currently about 61,000 voters per district. The Senate serves as a smaller group. Connolley strongly believes the job of the House is to represent the people and a greater number of representatives is necessary.

Fairchild agreed. He said people want the chance to speak to representatives and the existence of the House gives them that opportunity.

News Briefs

Ban nominated as Secretary General

On Monday, the United Nations Security Council officially nominated Ban Ki-Moon to succeed Kofi Annon as secretary general. Ban, 62, is the current prime minister of South Korea.

According to The New York Times, the General Assembly "is responsible for appointing a new secretary general on receiving the choice of the Security Council." Ban will need a simple majority from the General Assembly to replace Annon. No nominee from the Council has been rejected by the Assembly.

After serving two five-year terms, current Secretary General Kofi Annon is set to retire on Dec. 31. He has ensured a smooth transition and has expressed his "highest respect for Ban," said The New York Times.

As secretary general, Ban plans to focus on guaranteeing human rights. He has also campaigned as a reformer and as a "harmonizer and bridge-builder," reported The New York Times.

13-year-old charged with assault

A 13-year-old seventh grader of Joplin, Mo. opened fire in his middle school Monday morning. The boy, whose name has not been revealed, came to school masked and armed with an assault rifle.

After a confrontation with administration, he fired one round at the ceiling before leaving after his gun jammed. There were no injuries.

The boy's duffel bag contained a layout of his school, unidentified chemicals, and bomb-making instructions.

According to CNN.com, the boy "was charged with first-degree assault, armed criminal action, and making terrorist threats." A motive is unknown and the administration said the boy was never a disciplinary problem. This has been the fourth school shooting in less than two weeks.

Pitcher dies in plane crash

A Wednesday afternoon plane crash into a high-rise apartment building in Manhattan's Upper East Side left New York Yankees pitcher Cory Lidle, 34, and his flight instructor dead. No residents of the apartment were injured.

The Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) told CNN.com, "There was a mayday from the pilot involving a problem with fuel before the aircraft crashed." A definite cause has not yet been determined.

The plane was a Cirrus SR-20, registered to Lidle. He leaves behind a wife and a 6-year-old son. He pitched one and one third innings during the Yankees' game on Saturday. This was the last year of his contract.

Gadahn charged with treason

Adam Gadahn, a 28-year-old Californian, became the first American in 50 years to be charged with treason. He appeared in numerous al-Qaeda propaganda videos and was accused of giving "material support" to terrorists.

According to The Washington Post, he "gave al-Qaeda aid and comfort ... with intent to betray the United States." Officials told The Washington Post Gadahn was added to the FBI's list of "Most Wanted Terrorists." If convicted, he could be sentenced to death.

It is believed he is currently living in Pakistan. He appeared in an al-Qaeda video on the eve of the fourth anniversary of Sept. 11 and went by the name "Azzam the American."

WE'RE LOOKING FOR A FEW EXCEPTIONAL STUDENTS.
At Quinnipiac University School of Law, you'll find everything you need to succeed. From a challenging yet supportive academic environment to faculty members who will become intellectual colleagues. From live-client clinics to real-world externships. Plus annual merit scholarships ranging from $3,000 to full tuition. For more information, visit law.quinnipiac.edu or call 1-800-462-1944.
• Outstanding faculty
• Rigorous academic programs
• Six concentrations
• Extensive experiential learning opportunities
• Student faculty ratio 15:1
Criminal | Dispute Resolution | Family | Health | Intellectual Property | Tax
Quinnipiac University School of Law
Hamden, Connecticut

R U Right 4 Me ?
Ivy League grad school in a young, hip city seeks students looking to specialize in the field of education. Must bring diverse experiences and want to make a difference in the lives of others.
Are you the one?
Meet me at the graduate school fair on your campus.
Graduate School of Education
PennGSE
For details, please visit:
http://www.gse.upenn.edu/admissions_financial/events.php

Homecoming hosts and hostesses greet alumni

Outstanding seniors served as ambassadors of student body

Ellyn Ercolano—The Bucknellian

Homecoming hosts and hostesses pose from left to right, Jenna Camann, Adam Weinberg, John Kimball, Anna Wakulchik, Ben Portman, J. T. Dean, Molly Lewis and Cynthia Koncick.

EMILIE LINSENMEYER
Contributing Writer

Continuing a 37-year tradition, eight seniors were chosen to represent their class and act as ambassadors of the student body during Homecoming Weekend.

J. T. Dean, John Kimball, Ben Portman, Adam Weinberg, Jenna Camann, Cynthia Koncick, Molly Lewis and Anna Wakulchik were chosen as Homecoming Hosts and Hostesses for their commitment to service, academic achievement, leadership in extracurricular activities and loyalty to the University.

The hosts and hostesses had dinner with the Executive Committee of the Alumni Board and regional alumni representatives on Oct. 5, and on Friday morning they had breakfast with the entire Alumni Board.

Kimball said the interaction with alumni was very valuable.

"I'm a fourth-generation Bucknellian stemming from my brother, [class of] '03, to my great-grandparents, so being selected as a Homecoming Host was a tremendous honor due to my heritage at Bucknell," Kimball said. "It was interesting and insightful talking to an alumna from 1945 who was in the same sorority as my grandmother or alumni who played tennis with my dad at Bucknell."

The hosts and hostesses attended the Carnival of Yesterday before the football game on Saturday, and mingled with alumni in an informal atmosphere. During halftime the students were honored for their dedication to the University.

The hosts and hostesses were all touched by the experience and valued the opportunity to take part in this tradition.

"We had the opportunity to meet so many wonderful alumni and truly appreciate how much it takes to put on such a large event," Portman said. "The opportunity to be recognized at the football game and to be included in so many formal events opened my eyes to the lasting impact Bucknell has on its alums, and while I am certainly not excited to graduate, it was comforting to see how welcoming the University is to alums of all ages."

Camann thoroughly enjoyed the experience.

"The weekend provided fun entertainment from a cappella groups to leadership dinners to athletic events, and it was one of the best weekends I have had at Bucknell. I learned how proud people are to call themselves Bucknellians and how lucky we all are as students to be a part of its magic," Camann said.

After the game the hosts and hostesses attended a reception for the Christy Mathewson Committee of 1,000. According to the University Web site, this event honored the University's benefactors who donated $1,000 or more over the past fiscal year.

Koncick was elated to be involved.

"Because of my involvement with Student Calling and already having the wonderful experience of speaking with enthusiastic alumni, it was a tremendous honor to be chosen to speak with them and thank them in person for their personal support and Bucknell spirit," Koncick said.

Wakulchik was impressed by the spirit she saw at the football game.

"Walking off of the football field at halftime, I looked around. I looked at the faces of Bucknellians of the past and of the present—and of the future—and realized that no matter how much time has passed or how far away Lewisburg may seem, we Bucknellians know that our real success lies in these people," Wakulchik said.

Saturday night the hosts and hostesses attended a dinner with Pat Flannery '80, head coach of the men's basketball team.

The process for choosing a host and hostesses includes several steps to ensure the best representatives are identified.

First, students are nominated by any member of the University community. If a candidate wishes to accept this nomination he or she must fill out a form detailing extracurricular involvement and write a paragraph explaining why he or she wishes to hold the position. The faculty narrows the group down to eight men and eight women and the campus votes on the remaining candidates.

The hosts and hostesses are extremely accomplished. Their involvement spans academics, Greek life, sports, the arts, on-campus jobs, clubs and community service, to name a few.

"I was very honored to be selected and it was a terrific culminating experience ... [for] all the commitments I have had around campus," Dean said.

HPV From page A1

many insurance companies do not include the vaccine in their coverage plans. For those not covered by the student insurance plan or another plan covering the cost, the price of the vaccination is about $120-$130 per injection.

The vaccine was released on June 26, and the University community is fortunate to have access to the vaccine in such a timely fashion.

"We try to stay up to date," Nurse Manager Jacqueline Miller said.

Miller said easy access to the vaccine is important because students will be able to protect themselves.

"We're already stocked and have seen a number of patients concerned with the vaccination," Miller said.

Bucknellian Correction

The article, "Students weight voter registration options" in the Oct. 6 edition of The Bucknellian, incorrectly named the Weis Center as the only place students can vote. Depending on students' campus residence, students are assigned to vote at either the Weis Center or the polling station located in the Donald L. Heiter Community Center in Lewisburg. For more information, contact the Lewisburg Election Office at 570-524-8603.

Recycle this paper

Summer Breeze Stables
Est. 1973
10 minutes from Campus
Riding Lessons for all levels
Certified Professional Trainer
Large indoor and Outdoor Arenas
Boarding, Training and Showing
Call 570-412-0771 for an appointment

DOES YOUR CAR NEED SERVICED?
Our Service Department has $25,000 in new upgrades, including a new alignment rack, brake lathe, tire machine, and hundreds of hours of training for the techs. We now offer shuttle service to and from work or home. We have become a complete service center that can perform any work on any model, from an oil change to engine replacement.
Lewisburg Ford Oil Change w/Multi-Point Inspection $19.95
Lewisburg Ford Oil Change/Tire Rotation w/Multi-Point Inspection $34.95
Lewisburg Ford
2265 Old Turnpike Rd. (Route 45 West) Across From Brookpark Farm
Call Today! (570) 524-7267
Visit us on the web at www.lewisburgford.com

COLDWELL BANKER
PENN ONE REAL ESTATE
Thank You, Bucknell!!
For thirty years of calling Bucknell and Lewisburg home.
Susan Warner-Mills, Sales Associate
Competence, Integrity, Service
524-7500; swm@coldwellbanker.com

Nancy's Nu-Wave Salon
look your best
October Special
Free Paraffin Dip with Pedicure or Manicure
Main Street (Rte 45) Montandon
524-2315
www.nancysnuwave.com

CatmanDo
Handyman Services
Specializing in small home repair jobs:
Custom Carpentry
Painting
Light construction
Greg H Mathias
570-524-4724
Free Estimates Fully insured

Igniting Creative Ideas
On Fire Promotions
by trautman associates, inc.
promotional products · fundraising items
embroidered & screenprinted caps & apparel
awards · trophies · business gifts
800-538-8009
Lewisburg Showroom 434 Market 570-522-8009
www.onfirepromotions.com
Bring in this ad for one FREE SCREEN!!!
GOOD ON ANY APPAREL ORDER
(minimum 36 pieces)

Create Color with Clear Vision LOGICS.
The choice for clean, clear, pure tone color. Haircolor with maximum versatility.
Infinite creativity.
Call for an appointment today.
Joseph Carroll Salon
HAIR CARE FOR THE ENTIRE FAMILY
431 Market Street, Lewisburg
524-0790
Open Tuesday-Saturday Walk-ins when time permits
www.matrix.com SALON BEAUTIFUL ENJOY! MATRIX

6th Annual National Coming Out Day Support List

President's Office
Brian Mitchell
Maryjane Mitchell

Office of the Provost
Susan Conway
Mary A. DeCredico
Lois Huffines
Robert M. Midkiff
Kathy Owens
James Rice

University Vice Presidents
Sam Lundquist
Charles Pollock
David Surgala
Kurt Thiede

General Counsel Office
Linda Bennett
Wayne Bromfield

College of Arts and Sciences
Tom Cassidy
Elaine Garrett
Margaret Kastner
Christopher J. Zappe

College of Engineering
Angela Fritzges
Diane Goodling
Marie Jacob
Karen Marosi

Administrative Services
Adrienne Beaver
Ruta Karelis
Keith Pletcher
Mary Scoma

Bucknell Bookstore
Vicki Benion
Carol Fisher
Marlene Wertz

Bucknell Dining
Theresa Brobst
Glenda D'Urso
Roberta Earnest
Shirley Erb
Lynn Guisewite
Charlene Hartley
Lori Masser
Kate Stilin
Tish Trawitz

Campus Activities & Programs
Kari Conrad
Gretchen Heuges
Carrie Ingoldsby
Sara LaPorte
Ginnie Moore

Career Development Center
Megan Adams
Sarah Bell
Carole Bourgeacq-Hardt
Laura Denbow
Emily Dietrich
Erin M. Fellin, J.D.
Missy Gutkowski
Catherine McGinnis
Christine Sabas

Chaplains & Religious Life
Rabbi Serena Fujita
Linda Godfrey
Reverend Ian Oliver

Communications
Kathryn Kopchik
Ryan LeBreton
Gigi Marino
Sharon Poff
Roberta Sims

Community Health Promotion
Tracy Shaynak

Department of Art & Art History
Tulu Bayar
Kate Bowen
Janice Mann
Rosalyn Richards
Roger Rothman

Department of Athletics & Recreation
Sally Anderson
Amanda Backus
Dan Burt
Errol Carter
Kevin Donner
Barb Dugan
Kathaleen Fedorjaka
Terrie Grieb
John Hardt
Stephen Kish
Andria Laurence
Monique LeBlanc
Heather Lewis
Kelly McAree
Michael McFarland
Brendan Nash
Todd Newcomb
Cynthia Opalski
Timothy Pavlechko
Heather Rakosik
Joe Santorine
Brian Scorsone
Jess Spadafora
Pualani Spurlock
Angie Stackhouse
Kate Strum
Kelley Tiesi
Mario Wilson
John Zeigler

Department of Biology
Warren Abrahamson
Elizabeth Capaldi
Mitchell Chernin
Donald Dearborn
Ken Field
Sandy Field
Mary Howe
Stephen Jordan
Matthew McTammany
Marie Pizzorno
DeeAnn Reeder
Mark Spiro
Emily Stowe-Evans
Kate Toner

Department of Chemical Engineering
Jeff Csernica
Erin Jablonski
William King
Nancy Lamay
James Maneval
Tim Raymond
Margot Vigeant

Department of Chemistry
Dee Casteel
Karen Castle
Charles Clapp
Katherine Hicks
Molly McGuire
David Rovnyak
Timothy Strein
James Swan

Department of Civil and Environmental Engineering
Matthew Higgins
T. Michael Toole

Department of Classics
Christopher Chinn
Kevin Daly
Janet Jones
Stephanie Larson

Department of Computer Science
Steve Guattery
Xiannong Meng
Patricia Wenner
Rick Zaccone

Department of East Asian Studies
Elizabeth Armstrong
Erik Lofgren
James Orr
Anne Pusey
Jamie Pusey
Martha Shaunessy

Department of Economics
Nina Banks
David Kristjanson-Gural
Michael Moohr
Jean Shackelford

Department of Education
Nate Althouse
Amy Carney
Abe Feuerstein
Sara Fry
Rosaria Gabriele
Sue-Ellen Henry
Lynn Hoffman
Sarah MacKenzie
Katharyn Nottis
Libby Vesilind

Department of Electrical Engineering
Susan Baish
David Kelley

Department of English
Chris Camuto
Glynis Carr
Michael Drexler
Eric Faden
Sherri Geller
Claudia Mazur
Ghislaine McDayter
Ron Mohring
Saundra Morris
Marilyn Mumford, Emeritia
Michael Payne
Jean Peterson
Harriet Pollack
Meenakshi Ponnuswami
John Rickard
Robert Rosenberg
Virginia Zimmerman

Department of Foreign Language Programs
Philippe Dubois
Katherine Faull
Susan Fischer
Renee Gosson
Gundolf Graml
Angele Kingue
Bernhard Kuhn
James Lavine
Madhu Malik
Helen Morris-Keitel
Ludmila Lavine
Ruth Robenolt
Thibaut Schilt
Allison Stedman
John Westbrook
Slava Yastremski

Department of Geography
Duane Griffin
Ben Marsh
Karen Morin
Adrian Mulligan
Paul Susman

Department of Geology
Chris Daniel
Mary Beth Gray
Ellen Herman
Carl Kirby
Pat McLaughlin
Jeffrey Trop

Department of History
John Enyeart
James Goodale
Leslie Patrick
Ann Tlusty
Martha Verbrugge

Department of Management
Douglas Allen
Jordi Comas
Jamie Hendry
Tammy Hiller
Ranga Murthy
Paul Shrivastava
Nancy Weida

Department of Mathematics
Lynn Breyfogle
Emily Dryden
George Exner
Peter McNamara
Allen Schweinsberg
Karl Voss
Richard Weida

Department of Mechanical Engineering
Keith Buffinton
Tom Rich

Department of Music
Jackson Hill
Martha Hill
Bill Kenny
Georgia Newlin
Christopher Para
Kay Payn
William Payn
Annie Randall
Lois Svard

Department of Philosophy
Gillian Barker
Sheila Lintott
Gary Steiner

Department of Physics and Astronomy
Jason Donev
Ned Ladd
David Schoepf
Ben Vollmayr-Lee
Katharina Vollmayr-Lee

Department of Political Science
Douglas Hecock
Robin Jacobson
Michael James
Amy McCready
Scott Meinke
David Mitchell
John Peeler
Gregory Sanjian

Department of Psychology
Chris Boyatzis
Kim Daubman
David Evans
William Flack
Eugenia Gerdes
Peter Judge
Kevin Myers
J.T. Ptacek
Arthur Shapiro
T. Joel Wade

Department of Religion
Maria Antonaccio
Gerald Wang Cooke, Emeritus
Eric Mazur
Karline McLain
Stephanie Snyder
Doug Sturm, Emeritus
Rivka Ulmer
Carol White

Department of Sociology & Anthropology
Deborah Abowitz
Tony Butto
Elizabeth Durden
Michelle Johnson
Carl Milofsky
Yvonne Roadarmel, Retired
Marc Schloss
Ned Searles
Matthew Silberman

Department of Theatre & Dance
Paula Davis-Larson
Chris Fry
Bob Gainer
Gary Grant
Heath Hansum
Er-dong Hu
Kelly Knox
Elaine Williams

Program of Biomedical Engineering
Donna M. Ebenstein
Joseph Tranquillo

Program of Comparative Humanities
John C. Hunter

Program of Environmental Studies
Peter Wilshusen

Program of International Relations
Stephen Stamos
Emek Ucarer

Program for Women's & Gender Studies
Sharon Chanley
Coralynn Davis
Susan A. Reed

Development & Alumni Relations
Ann Benvenuto
Ann DiStefano
Mark Elliott
Angela Estes
Karen Flanagan
Kathy Graham
Michelle Imm
Shelby McClintock
Tracy Meckstroth
Rhonda Miller
Molly O'Brien
Elizabeth Richer
Rick Rosenberg
Scott Rosevear
Mary Ann Stanton

Facilities
Vicky Golder
Joseph Guaghan

Finance Office
Susan Brundage
Lori Wilson

Human Resources
Cindy Bilger
Kelley Hassenplug
Marcia Hoffman
Lisa Sanford
Lisa Verge

Information Services & Resources
Jey Bailey
Bill Burkholder
George Casper
Jennifer Clarke
Keelan Cleary
Doris Dysinger
Meredith Field
Rob Guissanie
Leslie Harris
Bud Hiller
Candice Hinckley
Martha Holland
Rita Malick
Isabella O'Neill
Jamie Piperberg
Don Rea
Melissa E. Rycroft
Lona Sholly
Jason Snyder
Gene Spencer
Barbara Stockland
James Van Fleet
Mary Ann Williard

International Student Services
Paula Cogan

Multicultural Student Services
Lori Benner
Jessica Hess

Office of Admissions
Lindsay Buntman
Barbara Cassels
Mark Davies
David duKor-Jackson
Christine Findlay
Pamela Glass
Gayle Pollock
Jim Shaynak
Brad Ward

Office of Housing & Residential Life
Kyle Audette
Lynn Pierson
Mike Purcell
Jenni Rach
Daniel Remley
Joanne Rishel
Nate Sorber
Liz Yates

Office of International Education
Marguerite Castelnau-Santorine
Julia Kisner
Danielle Ross
Traci Sebastian
Debra Wilson

Office of LGBT Awareness
Fran McDaniel

Office of Service Learning
Janice Butler

Office of the Deans of Students
Amy Badal
Gerald Commerford
Karen Landis
Chip Marrara

Office of the Registrar
Dennis Hopple

Planning & Institutional Research
Chris Ellis
Patty Johnston
Jerry Rackoff

Psychological Services
Eric Affsprung
Renee Cardone
Nancy Grant
Arlyne Hoyt
Linda Locher

Public Safety
Jason Friedberg
Dawn Hubbard
Kathy Kron
James Middleton
Selena Mull
Joe Snyder

Reservation, Information, and Conference Services
Jeanne Hafer
Judy Mickanis
Arris Moser
Madeline Prah
Pat Ringkamp

Residential College Program
Kelly Finley

Samek Art Gallery
Dan Mills
Cindy Peltier

Spanish Department
Manuel Delgado
Elisabeth Guerrero
Alice Poust

Stadler Center for Poetry
Andrew Ciotola
Shara McCallum

Strategy Implementation
Mark Dillard

Student Health Services
Jane Haile
Cynthia Koons
Jacqueline Miller
Paula Shaw
Don Stechschulte
Bob Thomas
Elaine Ulrich
Rozalyn Yannaccone

Weis Center for the Performing Arts
Bill Boswell
Jamie Brouse
Dale Hourland
Doris Mack
David Mazza
Iris Rifkin-Gainer

Women's Resource Center
Micheala Denny
Paula Harrison

Writing Center
Margaret Cronin
Loren Gustafson
Jennifer Hansum
Sabrina Kirby
Deirdre O'Connor
Steven Styers

The Bucknellian
Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue
Volume 138, Number 7
C-3952 Bucknell University
Lewisburg, Pa. 17837
(570) 577-1520
bucknellian@bucknell.edu
http://www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Editor-in-Chief
Catherine Heverling '07

Associate Editor of Content
Jamie Jacobson '08

Associate Editor of Layout
Rina Van Orden '08

Business Manager
Jared Napolitano '08

Senior Editor
Drew Larson '08

News Editors
Evan Unger '09
Nilanjana Saha '09
Michelle Laxer '09

Opinions Editors
Hallie Stebbins '08
Michael Dippery '08

Sports Editors
Matthew Saylor '08
Barbara Perlman '09
Brian Mulligan '08

Features Editors
Julia Fuchs '09
Brianna DelValle '10

Arts & Entertainment Editors
Kimberly Kane '08
Lily Beauvilliers '09

Photography Editors
Ryan Winn '08
Ellyn Ercolano '09

Chief Copy Editors
Kathleen Conti '08
Greg Hamilton '08

Advertising Managers
Meredith Reighard '07
Kat Wallis '07
Katie Casteel '08
Emily Senko '08

Office Manager
Kate Wood '07

Cartoonist
Juliana Su '09

Adviser
James F. Lee

Op-Ed Policy
The editorials of The Bucknellian reflect the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the editor-in-chief. All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

Letters to the editor must be received by noon on the Tuesday before publication. Letters may not be longer than 600 words and the Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny or edit any letter to the editor. Letters must contain the writer's name and phone number (used for verification purposes and not to be printed). Mail or e-mail letters using the addresses above.

Publishing Information
The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester entirely by Bucknell students. All published material is chosen by the paper's Editorial Board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its adviser, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

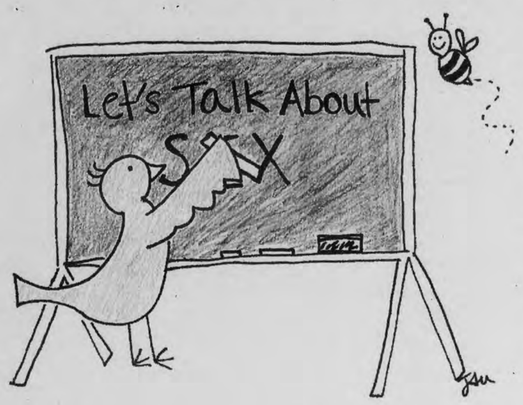
Subscription Information
Subscriptions are available for $45 per year or $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian Subscriptions, Bucknell University, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, Pa. 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

Members of the local community may pick up a complimentary issue each week, with the understanding of one free issue per person. If you would like more for a nominal fee, contact the print office.

Advertising Policy
The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements if deemed offensive, illegal or in bad taste. Advertisements reflect the opinion of the advertiser and not necessarily that of The Bucknellian. For advertising rates and information, please contact the advertising department at (570) 577-1085. Copyright © 2006 The Bucknellian

The Bucknellian
Editorial

Discussion promotes sexual health



Some of you may have noticed the newest edition to our features section that could be deemed by some as "risqué" or "inappropriate."

We disagree.

The Ms. O column is an innovative outlet through which students can express their concerns and clear up any sexual misconceptions. A survey conducted by the Journal of Sex Research determined that 90 percent of college students are sexually active. Clearly, sex is a topic students have an interest in; so why not talk about it?

There seems to be a momentum growing in terms of sexual awareness. A small percentage of colleges now offer the new HPV vaccine, Gardasil, and our University is one of them. Gardasil aids in the prevention of cervical cancer, as well as genital warts.

The University recognizes a need for sexual health and well-being among college students.

But sexual health and well-being is something that cannot be achieved through a quick shot in the arm.

Sexually transmitted diseases are not the only problems that can result from lack of knowledge about sexual relationships. Sometimes ignorance results in discrimination against certain groups.

On page A5, The Bucknellian has printed the names of the faculty and staff members at the University who support National Coming Out Day. While at first glance this may just seem like a long list of names on a page, it represents an attitude of sexual awareness and growing acceptance of the lesbian and gay community. What it really represents is a healthy dialogue among members of the University community.

On Parents Weekend, the University theater department hopes to inspire dialogue among families as well. The department will perform "Spring Awakening," a play that had been banned and censored for more than a century for its controversial content.

Many students—and many parents—might be intimidated by the idea of watching a racy scene alongside their family members. The production of this play at the University is a bold statement and an invitation for a discussion between parents and students.

The Bucknellian encourages these conversations. Ms. O offers the possibility that sex doesn't have to be taboo. Nearly all of college students are legal adults and capable of making mature and informed decisions. This column addresses the decisions they must face.

We applaud the members of the University who promote frank and open discussion about sexual issues.

Whether it is by lending an ear to a friend with relationship problems, getting tested for STDs or wearing your "Gay? Fine by Me" shirt, we encourage students to consider their own sexuality and respect others' as well.

The Bucknellian will not be published next Friday, Oct. 20 due to Fall Break. The next issue will come out on Oct. 27.

"Great minds discuss ideas; Average minds discuss events; Small minds discuss people."
— Eleanor Roosevelt

Write for Opinions

E-mail hstebbin@

Letters to the Editor

Thanks for a successful Senior Kickoff Dinner

To the Editor:

The Senior Kickoff Dinner that took place on Oct. 5 was a huge success. This event served two major functions: 1. to emphasize the importance of networking for seniors with or without a current job offer, and 2. to review the reasons for giving back to the University which has provided us with so many opportunities these last four years, and will continue to do so long after we graduate.

When I asked some of my friends if they were attending this dinner, I heard a lot of negative responses.

Some thought the dinner was a ploy to get them to give hundreds of dollars to the Annual Fund before they even had a job.

Some thought they would be pressured to donate money as soon as they came in the door.

Others just flat out told me they have paid their debt in tuition money.

What this dinner showed the attendees is the University is and will continue helping them succeed financially after graduation. Chris Springer '96 used his own personal experience to convey the Career Development Center is a resource we can and should continue to use for decades after graduation. He made me realize the period of four years in college is miniscule when compared to the span of time we will spend in the work force, and despite the short amount of time we spend here, the University will support us throughout our entire careers.

Mary Ann Stanton '89 gave an emotional talk about her experience with financial aid, which an astounding 50 percent of current students receive. She echoed Springer's words, but added we must feel a responsibility to make the campus experience just as great as and even better than it was when we completed our degrees here. You can get a degree anywhere, but this University is special, and that is why we are here.

This dinner emphasized the importance of each student's continuing relationship with our campus.

When we gain so much, it is hard not to feel we should give back. You can give to any academic department, religious groups, athletic teams, student organizations or anything else in which you may have been involved. You do not have to give a lot. All we ask is for your spare change.

Seniors, let's join together and give future students the best college experience possible. We do not ask for much. When you buy your $1.35 coffee or $4.00 café milkshake, remember that it's all you have to give to make this University better.

Sincerely,

Mandy Hart '07
Senior Gift Drive Executive Committee Chair

Campus community's apathy towards vandalism appalling

By Victoria Bucek
Contributing Writer

No one would ever accuse the University of being overly diverse, but the campus community is generally accepting of diversity. So when offensive slurs appeared on campus, students were shocked.

Surely this was the result of drunken pranks. What else could it have been? Surely such hate does not inhabit our student body.

Is this graffiti an unwise act of impulse or does it express an underlying current?

Authorities are doing everything they can to find the culprits and have repeatedly requested information or tips related to this crime. Why is no one stepping up to help? Does no one know, or is no one willing to tell?

Recent experiences have me leaning towards the latter. A poster was recently covered in offensive graffiti. Since it was only a poster the owner merely covered up the ruined section, but passersby shook their heads at the message of hate. I was shocked.

How can someone walk around harboring such a level of hate?

If I was filled with that much hate, I believe I would explode. It must be an awful weight to carry.

The Allport Scale of Discrimination is a range of increasing levels of prejudice. It defines the level of intolerance a certain majority holds for a minority group.

Authorities are doing everything they can to find the culprits. Why is no one stepping up to help? Does no one know, or is no one willing to tell?

The Allport Scale has five levels, according to wikipedia.org.

Level One: Antilocution, the verbal abuse of a minority group by the majority. Ethnic jokes, racial slurs and derogatory nicknames fall into this category. This "hate speech" is often seen as harmless by the group using it.

Level Two: Avoidance, group. Discrimination often involves the withholding of some or all the rights of the minority group. It is the first stage in which the prejudice is conscious.

Level Four: Physical Attack, which includes the harassment of members of the minority group, vandalization, destruction of property and assault.

Level Five: Extermination, or an attempt to wipe out an entire group of people. Ethnic cleansing is a prime example of extermination.

Based on this scale, the graffiti on campus is at level four. Level four. Classic examples of level four prejudices are lynching, gay bashing and pogroms—organized riots or violent attacks targeting a specific group, according to www.wikipedia.com. Are students on this campus really at that level?

There seems to be a big difference in our minds between using spray paint to write offensive words and killing someone, but according to the Allport Scale, there is almost no escalation required.

I hope at least a few readers agree with me that this is really disturbing.

The only way to prevent more vandalization and stop escalation is to punish the culprits. To do that, Public Safety needs help. If you know anything, please contact Public Safety.

Hate is not a joke. Ask yourself this question: is it worth someone's life?

Rice skips out on University talk

Rogue Korean state more exciting

By Michael Dippery
Opinions Editor

Dear Diary,

I was so excited last week when I found out Condoleezza Rice was coming to the University. I know she wasn't here to see me specifically, but I was still pretty happy. She was giving me a chance to win her heart—for good—and I wasn't about to blow it.

But now she's going to North Korea. It's not fair. North Korea gets all the diplomats. I mean, for being so reclusive, North Korea sure sees a lot more ambassadors than I do.

Why is that? I mean, I'm a cool guy. OK, so I don't have nuclear weapons, but who cares? It's not like North Korea has an arsenal. Between you and me, North Korea is no Russia. Not even a Pakistan, in my mind. Come on—at least Pakistan's test wasn't a dud.

And look at Israel. No one even knows if Israel has a nuclear arsenal, and Rice spent a weekend in Israel not too long ago. What does a guy have to do to get a little attention from the Secretary of State? Back in the old days, it was a lot easier. All a guy needed was a Gatling gun or maybe some mustard gas.

If I only had some nuclear material—then I'd at least be in the running. Look at Iran. All Iran is doing is refining uranium, and even Iran captured Rice's attention. Israel is so angry about it that it may preemptively strike Iran if things get any worse.

Sometimes I feel I have to test my own nuclear device to get attention from political leaders. You know—just something that will generate a seismic event large enough to get Rice's attention.

But I could never do that. I could never be one of them—the nuclear club. They're so elite. No, I'm just one man. One simple man. I don't even know how to build a trigger.

I hope Rice makes it back here—she is missing out on a fun weekend—but I don't really expect to see her ever again.

Bottled water should not be only option

Removing tap water from Bison a ridiculous idea

By Hallie Stebbins
Opinions Editor

Water. It is simple: drink eight to 10 glasses a day to optimize your level of health. Easy, huh? Great, now just give me $12 and enjoy your water. Before I even begin to tell you what I am talking about, let me take a minute to tell a sad, but true story.

This year, as most of us are aware, the administration had the Bison renovated. During the first week of school I searched for the refrigerator previously holding Dasani bottled water, but could not find it. I went to the soda dispenser and, to my absolute delight, saw a "water" tab underneath the fruit punch. Overflowing with joy because the University finally offered free tap water in addition to expensive bottled water I proceeded to the cashier to pay for my sandwich and my 10-cent cup.

The next afternoon, after I got my wrap, I went over to the soda dispenser to get my water. I was surprised to see that it was removed from the machine. I looked around and over my shoulder glimpsed the Dasani refrigerator with that enticing "Water - $1.25" sign taped to the door. Oh well, I suppose the Bison's "tap water" option was just too logical to be left. I guess the University just cannot get by without forcing me to pay $1.25 for water. The labor required to physically remove my free water option was completely worth robbing me of my money.

The next afternoon I decided to try a sub, or a "hoagie," as some Pennsylvanians (incorrectly) call it. There is a separate soda machine next to this station. I approached the soda dispenser and saw a "water" tab, again under the fruit punch. I smiled slyly, convinced that I was "beating the system." I figured that if I wanted to get free water, I would just continue to get it from this particular dispenser. Ingenious, huh?

Let me just reiterate for a moment: the University paid somebody to remove the free water option on not just one, but all of the Bison's soda dispensers.

And yet, the following morning, this water tab too was slain. Let me just reiterate for a moment: the University paid somebody to remove the free water option on not just one, but all of the Bison's soda dispensers.

This may not seem like a big deal to most of us; after all, what do we care if our parents pay for bottled water or not? Well, as is evident by this article, I care. I care the University went out of its way to remove the option of drinking tap water during lunch. It seems quite sneaky—on the level of asking for a cup of water at a movie theatre and being directed to a water fountain, two-inch tall cup in hand.

Yes, it is true I can bring my own cup to the Bison and use the water fountain. Fundamentally, I understand I can still drink water for free if I'd like to. It bothers me the University cared enough to make it difficult to get water for those of us who would rather not drink water "purified" with a filter that doesn't seem to have been washed in months.

On some level, this is funny, and I am sure most of you are thinking "big deal." For you guys, next time you buy a bottle of water, just think that you could have spent that money on one-third of a Café Mocha from 7th Street Café.

College does not live up to fairytale standards

College experience is not built on idle daydreams

By Daylin Oakes
Contributing Writer

I came to college with a very romanticized idea of what the whole undergraduate experience would be like. It was a simple view straight out of Fitzgerald's Princeton, the "Dead Poets Society," "Good Will Hunting" and "Legally Blonde." I imagined college would be this idyllic experience on a beautiful campus, with challenging courses one always managed to struggle through.

There would be intimidating professors with tragically-brilliant backgrounds, and shy, cute boys with glasses whom one could smile at shyly between shelves of dusty, old books in the corners of a library. My dorm room would be dismal, my shower cold and my mind taken up with ancient authors and texts.

There would be parties and beer and fraternity boys reminiscent of "Animal House;" but I would ignore them as I squinted at my laptop punching out term papers late into the night. And if that became too boring, I could always get a makeover from my roommate, end up the drunken Cinderella and be forced to fight off the rich prince of the school. He would want to sweep me off in his private jet and show me his castle in Scotland. Of course, the cute, "glasses" boy from the library could really be Superman, so it's a tough call to make.

Now that I'm here, and starting my sophomore year, I'm finally thinking my pop-culture based outlook might be in need of a few changes.

Either way, actually passing classes, getting an education and eventually making a career for myself were not weighing on my mind all that much. Now that I'm starting my sophomore year, I'm finally thinking my pop culture-based outlook might be in need of a few changes. It occurred to me recently I might not be anywhere near as pretty as Reese Witherspoon or as brilliant as Matt Damon, nor am I as witty as Elizabeth Bennett, as downtrodden as Jane Eyre or as ambitious as Becky Sharp. I certainly doubt any of the boys here are royalty in disguise. (Though if you are, please let me know.) I do not like all of my classes, my professors are only inspiring a few days a semester and the leaves on the quad do not stay red and gold forever. Even the drunken parties are mostly just messy and irritating and living on caffeine is certainly not as exhilarating as I imagined. Very little is really thrilling, and I can't think why I thought it would be.

If I knew my daydreams were going to stay daydreams, why did I keep dreaming them? Now that I've discovered college to be the staid experience it is, why haven't I stopped watching movies or enjoying my escapism? Instead, I've just moved my musings ahead a few years to graduate school, where I will spend my time reading over rare volumes or bartending my way through law school. I think about how I might clerk afternoons in a poorly-lit bookstore or take off and backpack around Europe. Maybe I'll meet Mr. Tall-Dark-and-Handsome at the café where I waitress or in the park where I jog. It is even possible he will whisk me off to explore ancient ruins when I discover the clues to a hidden treasure while writing my thesis. Dr. and Dr. Famous Archeologist sounds very nice indeed. I wonder how many more years of school a Ph.HD takes...

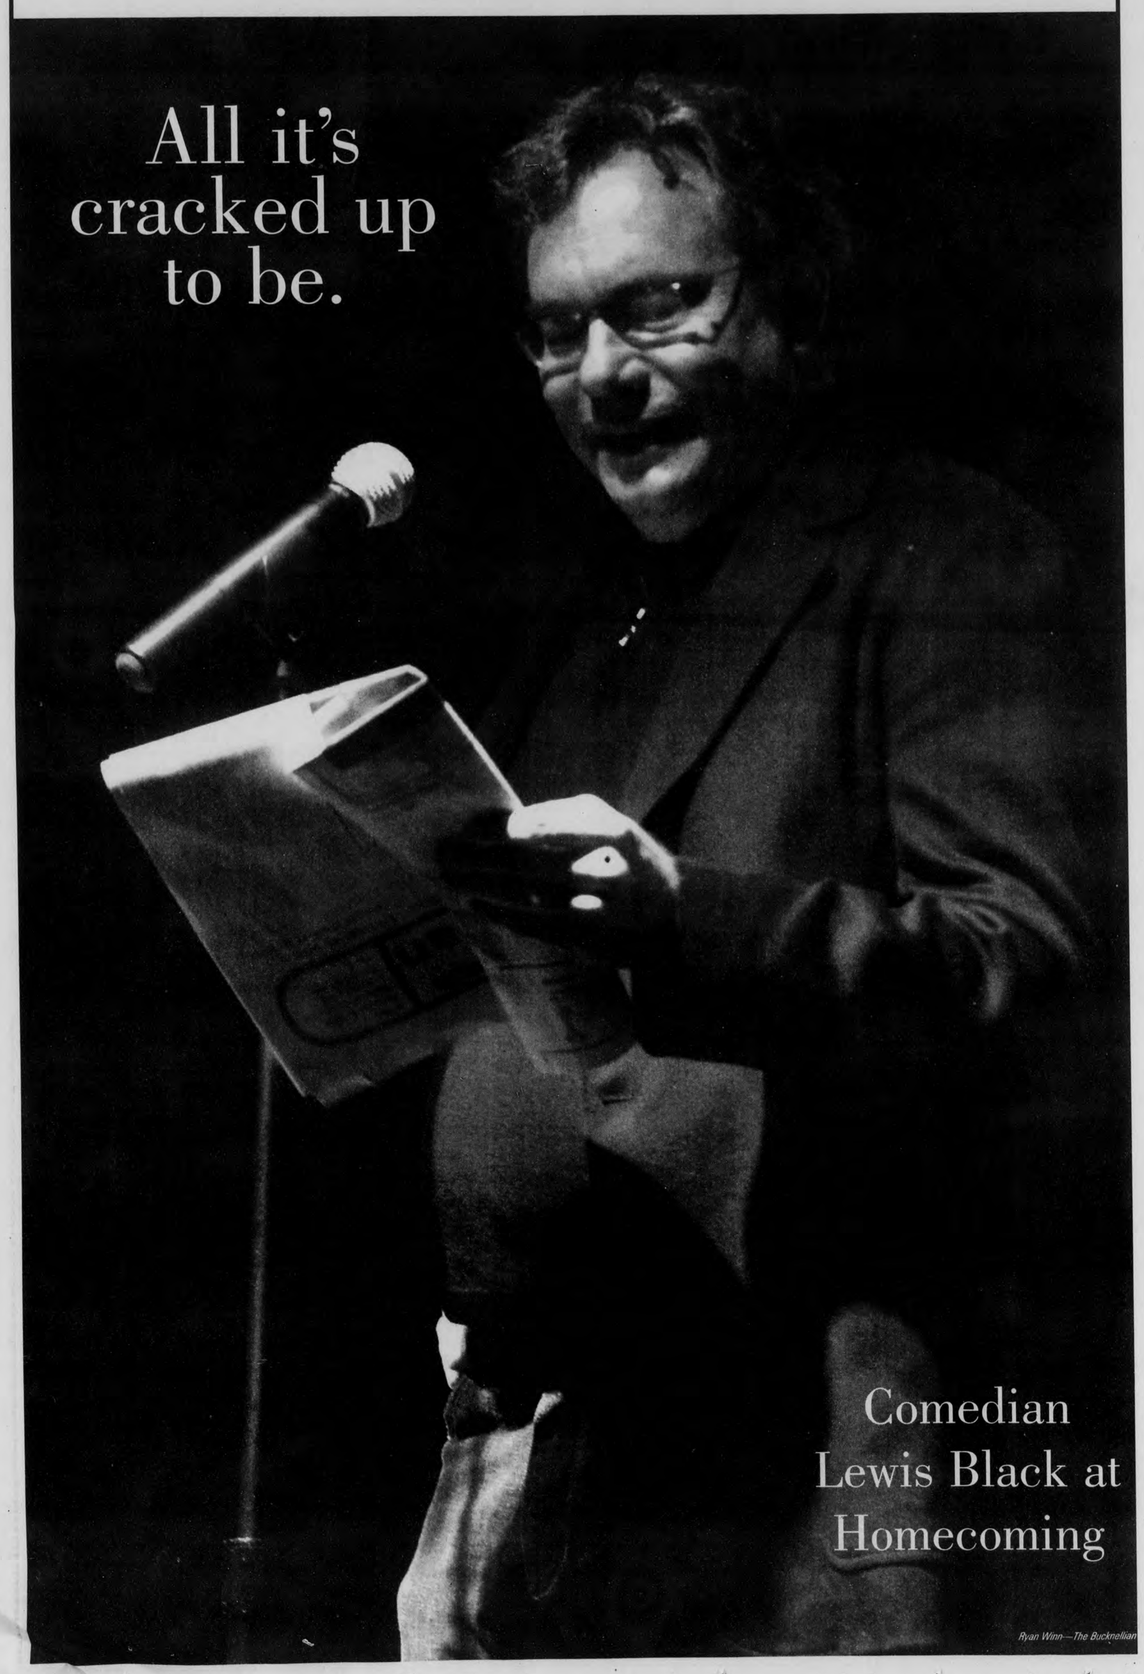
Looking to advertise within the Bucknell Community?

Contact our advertising department now if you would like your ad to appear in our upcoming vintage issue or holiday issue.

Contact The Bucknellian Business Department today to get an Advertising Guide by calling 570-577-1085 or e-mailing bucknellianads@bucknell.edu.

The Bucknellian

All it's cracked up to be.



Comedian Lewis Black at Homecoming

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Criminal cops and questionable villians

Scorsese challenges audiences to reconsider notions of good and evil in graphic new film "The Departed"

By Caitlin Kinger
Contributing Writer

❖ Movie Review

The Departed," the latest film from Martin Scorsese, is a tragic tale of crime, love, betrayal and redemption. Jack Nicholson offers a brilliant performance of Irish mob boss Frank Costello in this remake of the 2002 Hong Kong hit "Infernal Affairs."

"I don't want to become a product of my environment. I want my environment to become a product of me," growls Costello in the opening.

Costello sends his young protégé Colin Sullivan (Matt Damon), whom he recruited as a boy, into training for the Boston State Police. Billy Costigan (Leonardo DiCaprio), a man with a history of assault and a family tied to Costello, is at the same academy as Sullivan. Both gain very different roles in the Special Investigations Unit: Sullivan rises in power in the organization as a staff sergeant while Costigan becomes an undercover agent sent to infiltrate Costello's inner circle.

After a brutal interrogation by Costello and Mr. French (Ray Winstone), Costigan convinces them he is not a cop and joins the Irish mafia. Costigan quickly sees the deceit and brutality occurring in South Boston. He realizes how far his life spiraled out of his reach. His life, drug habit and identity are all beyond his control.

Sullivan plays the antagonistic role in this tale. Calculating, deceptive and in control of everything—overseeing all operations in his unit involving Costigan—except his identity, Sullivan tries every way he can to aid his "dad" Costello.

Costigan and Sullivan are perfect foils for each other. Both play the part of the mole (or "rat," as Costello says) for the opposing organizations. Both seek the identity of their counterpart, and while they share only a few scenes the tension is high between the two.

Caught in the middle of the two men is the compassionate therapist Madolyn (Vera Farmiga). She is engaged to Sullivan but becomes involved with Costigan after their therapist-patient relationship ends. For much of the movie these characters are unaware of just how far the love triangle extends.

Every actor becomes his character. You see and feel the pain in DiCaprio's eyes as you see his world fall apart around him. You feel a deep contempt for Sullivan's every move. Jack Nicholson steals every one of his scenes. Whether he is making snide comments to priests or is elbow deep in blood, you sense the evil coming from eyes. He makes Costello both wicked and likeable at the same time.

The supporting cast is filled with A-list stars and they all perform up to their reputations. Martin Sheen plays Costigan's boss Queenan with the grace of a father figure and is completely believable as a man who is broken by the responsibility he has for his young officer's life.

Mark Wahlberg steals the spotlight as Sergeant Dignam. While a deeply-flawed character who says what is on his mind and does not care who he offends, Dignam shows compassion to those with whom he works. Queenan and Dignam are the only two who know Costigan's identity in the unit and perhaps the only two he can trust.

Scorsese keeps the level of suspense running high throughout the movie. Even in parts that drag, the film is so finely-crafted that small things keep you on the edge of your seat, from a dark alley to the vibration of a cell phone.

The pace moves very quickly and it is best to pay close attention early in the movie. Some situations seem too coincidental but Scorsese pulls it off very well. His movies are well-known for their heavy violence and language and "The Departed" is no exception. Loud and brutal throughout, the majority of the violence occurs in the movie's final, shocking and explosive third act.

"The Departed" will lead you to question who exactly the good and bad guys are. You will ask yourself: what holds people to allegiances and friendships and how easily can those ties be broken?

Costello summarizes the movie best in this line: "When I was your age, they would say you could become cops or criminals. What I'm saying is this: when you're facing a loaded gun, what's the difference?"

Courtesy of imdb.com

Colin Sullivan (Matt Damon) and Billy Costigan (Leonardo DiCaprio) encounter each other on the streets of Boston. Scenes between the enemies are few but full of tension.

"Spring Awakening" a controversial play choice

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

Controversial sexual scenes, like this one showing homosexual love, characterize Frank Wedekind's expressionist play "Spring Awakening." The graphic themes, including masturbation, rape and death, are expected to generate discussion both on campus and in the community.

SPRING From page A1

Suddenly, the game is over and the boys abandon their fun to do homework.

"We can't think of anything without homework getting in the way," says George Litschnitz, played by Craig Dwyer '10.

The play focuses on contrasting opposites, such as freedom and restriction, knowledge and ignorance and society and nature. It contrasts very serious content with viciously funny dialogue, as the children provide sharp criticism of the parents and teachers who rule their lives.

"The play is serious but it's also naïve," Scott Van Pelt '10 said.

"Spring Awakening" encompasses an enormous range of stories that are intertwined.

"It really runs the gamut of emotions," Jon Ginn '07 said. "From hilarious to tragic, it has a stunning scope."

Ginn plays Melchior Gabor, a brilliant student whose best friend is the worst student in the school. Shira Gasarch '07 assists with publicity in the theatre department and hopes many University students will see the play, with or without their parents.

"It seems like a heavy play, but the plot is very easy to understand," Gasarch said. "Any student can relate to what's going on onstage."

Gasarch compared the play's dialogue to conversations she overhears in the Ellen Clarke Bertrand Library.

"It's kids talking about sex and who they hooked up with and what they're afraid of, just like we do," Gasarch said.

Sexual exploration is an issue not often brought to the stage, especially at a school with a small theatre department.

"You'd be hard-pressed to find a school that's willing to put on this play uncensored," Winner said.

The drama includes scenes of masturbation, rape and death, which force the actors to be very vulnerable on stage.

"You really see the courage of the actors," Peterson said. "But you also see their intelligence. They really understand the play."

The sexual scenes are graphic and raw but also have artistic merit.

"It's not sensationalism or shock for shock's sake; rather, it's the journey of a handful of misguided children whose society has failed them," said Andrew Nogasky '07, who plays the Masked Man.

Many members of the cast thought the University was an appropriate venue for the show. "Bucknell students are very tolerant and accepting. I think they'll appreciate and understand the play," Van Pelt said.

Jakob Schaeffer '10 also commented on the implications of performing "Spring Awakening" at a college.

"In college, you have a lot more sexual freedom than ever before. You're making your own choices," Schaeffer said.

The play explores homosexuality. Schaeffer pointed out the culture of homophobia is rampant on many college campuses.

"Spring Awakening" is often described as an expressionist play, which is reflected in the construction of the stage. The theatre department built a raked stage which projects into the seats. As the actors dash around the minimalist wooden platforms, it appears they will fall off at any second. It is entirely safe but provides a thrilling element for the audience.

"It's kind of a daredevil play to do here," Van Pelt said.

From the content to the stage, "Spring Awakening" is designed to make the audience uneasy but also explore important issues.

"We hope to provoke a lot of conversation," Ginn said.

Visiting poet addresses stereotypes in his work

EADY From page A3

"It was a great 'what if?' situation. I would think, 'what's happening on this day? What is he thinking today?'" Eady said.

But Eady believes "Brutal Imagination" is much more than a creative narrative. He sees it as "close to a satire" because it addresses the stereotype of the young black man present in America, Eady said.

"It is a character that exists in the American psyche ... that's most brutal to me. For so many people, this guy does exist ... it's not a stretch," said Tameka Cage, visiting assistant professor of English.

Eady read excerpts from "Brutal Imagination" as well as poems from his unpublished memoirs Tuesday night at Bucknell Hall. Students and faculty members filled nearly every seat.

Shara McCallum, director of the Stadler Center for Poetry, who was a fellow at one of Eady's first workshops, introduced Eady and recognized him as one of her first mentors. She also praised Eady's work, calling it a "tour de force" containing "sparse language" and "aptly-timed metaphors."

During his reading, Eady paired careful language with his powerful voice, proving he is not only a poet but also a performer. When Eady spoke into the microphone to read his poem "The Law," which describes the life of the black man within Smith's psyche, he both read and acted.

"I'm black," Eady said loudly, his head shaking vigorously. "Which means I mustn't slow down. I float in forces I can't always control."

The poet's voice softened as he read the final stanza.

"But I'm also a mother, which is why I hope I'm as good as my word," Eady said.

Several professors assigned "Brutal Imagination" as part of their coursework. Many students arrived toting a copy of the book and lined up for a book signing after the event.

Students found it beneficial to hear the voice of an author they only read about in their classes.

"We had a discussion in class about his book, but we still had a lot of unanswered questions. I really enjoyed his reading and it was such a great opportunity to actually meet him," Kirsten Elzer '07 said.

Eady was the 12th annual poet to visit the University as a Sojka Visiting Poet. The program was established in 1995 through funds provided by former University president Gary Sojka and his wife, Sandra.

The purpose of the program is to provide students with a closer look at the writing process through an accomplished poet's reading, visit to a poetry workshop and discussion with aspiring writers.

Slam poet E-Baby performs at Seventh Street Café

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

E-Baby performed his poetry to a captivated Seventh Street audience last Saturday. His themes ranged from the subway to the bedroom.

LEWIS BLACK

Homecoming '06

Comedian mixes laughter and politics on Sojka Lawn

By Kimberly Kane
Arts & Entertainment Editor

A large crowd of students and alumni gave comedian Lewis Black a warm welcome on a frosty Friday night. Black brought his brand of irreverent comedy to the stage on Sojka Lawn as part of the Homecoming Outdoor Extravaganza.

Black's first rule: "Shut up. You're not helping me by yelling things."

He complained about the brisk autumn air and said he was not used to doing shows outside. Black admitted the University was beautiful, but said he could not care less about nature.

"When I look at the ocean I get an ear infection. When I see the woods, I see Lyme disease," Black said.

Even though it is in "the middle of nowhere," Black said he would choose Lewisburg over Los Angeles any day.

He suggested instead of going to Los Angeles, you should just get a pencil, sharpen it and jam it into your eye.

Black said it was a tough year for comedy in some ways. In other ways, it was easy.

"Mel Gibson," Black said, and laughter rippled through the crowd. "See, I don't even have to tell a joke." Then he said "Michael Jackson," which elicited laughter and groans. "You know someone is nuts if you look at them and you feel creepy," Black said.

Then Black's act became much more political. His bitter criticism of the government has been the main part of his act for the past few years.

"It wasn't always like this," Black said. "I used to do jokes about the weather."

President George W. Bush and his administration were the butt of many of Black's jokes.

"People want to build a 700-mile wall on the Mexican border," Black said. "These people can't build a levee in New Orleans; how are they going to pull that off?"

Lewis criticized young Republicans as well.

"How can you be conservative in college? This is the only time it's okay to be crazy. If you're that conservative now, in forty years you'll be a Nazi."

Republicans were not Black's only targets. He also criticized the bipartisan bickering taking place in the government. He offered advice to University students: "You don't have to be a Democrat or Republican right now. On either side, there's no inspiration. If you need a team that badly, join a bowling league," Black said.

Much older than the average college student, Black has an uncanny ability to connect with the college generation. He encouraged students not only to pursue their dreams but to live without fear.

"The terrorists aren't coming to Lewisburg," Black said. "You have other things to worry about—like being bored to death."

Black also admitted the depressing nature of his material and ended the show on a lighter note, reading headlines about sexual misadventures and circus accidents. Like the rest of his jokes, the news stories made the crowd laugh and took the edge off his comedy.

A host of talented performers preceded Black. The Silhouettes started the show with Jimmy Eat World's "Work." They followed it with a rendition of Queen's "Bohemian Rhapsody," which sounded great with a feminine touch. Sarah Friedman '09 concluded the performance with a solo in Guster's "Demons."

Beyond Unison followed the Silhouettes. The group brought its usual mix of talent and fun to the stage. They started with Fountains of Wayne's "Stacy's Mom." A soloist was flanked by Kerry Flanigan '09 and Laura Householder '08, who provided not only beautiful harmonies but also dance moves to make the crowd laugh.

Jon Backhaus '07 joked the next song was "a new one" before starting Sublime's "What I Got." A staple at most Beyond Unison performances, "What I Got" mixes the Sublime song with music from Beck, Sugar Ray, Rob Base and original lyrics.

They continued with Neve's "3 Years," featuring soloist Alexandra Nurneroff '07, and finished with Carbon Leaf's "What About Everything." Flanigan once again showcased her vocals with male soloist Zaf Kamar '09.

Two Past Midnight followed with a repertoire of both fun and impressive songs. Janine Merolla '08 lent her vocals to Michelle Branch's "Breathe." The group followed with a fan favorite, the hauntingly beautiful "And So It Goes" by Billy Joel.

Two Past Midnight ended its set with Three Dog Night's "Joy to the World." Sarah Collins '09 began the song, followed by Cynthia Koncick '07 and Andy Kummer '08.

The song's variety of soloists made each verse more entertaining than the last.

"There was a huge crowd and we were really excited," Koncick said. "The audience was very interactive."

Koncick was also a Homecoming Hostess and said many visiting alumni were eager for the performances.

"There were a lot of members of the alumni board who had meetings all day, and this was a great way for them to relax and meet students," Koncick said.

The Bison Chips gave the final a cappella performance of the evening. They began with "Runaround Sue." Rob Thomas '08 was featured in the next song, Lonestar's "Walking in Memphis," followed by "Love the One You're With." Before their traditional closer, "Coney Island Baby," Jonathan Schwartz '08 treated the audience with beatboxing.

The format switched from musical entertainment to comedy as We Brake For Nobody took the stage. With several new members and a short time to perform, the improv group made the crowd laugh with games like Three's Company, Party Quirks and Innocent Bystander.

Since the crowd was so large and spread out it was hard for the group to hear suggestions and connect with the audience.

"It's a tough format," said Brenna Lemieux '07, a member of We Brake For Nobody. "But it's a fun setting and it's great to feed off the audience's energy."

Rory Albanese, producer of the Daily Show's "Black in Back" segments that made Lewis Black a star, also opened for Black with a stand-up routine. Albanese had a very young, relaxed style. Dressed in a hooded sweatshirt, Albanese wondered why the event had to be outside and when he saw the fires joked, "I feel like this is some kind of pagan ritual."

Albanese also commented on Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice's planned visit to the campus.

"How did that happen? What is on her 'to-do' list: fix Iraq, figure out the Korea thing, stop in Lewisburg?" Albanese said.

The subjects of his jokes ranged from iPods to New York City to "Top Gun."

Then, giving a preview of Black's politically-charged act, Albanese talked about terrorism.

"Not all Middle Easterners are terrorists. But they are all snake charmers. It's a fact. It's on Wikipedia. Well, that's because I put it on there," Albanese said.

Cordy Elkins '08 enjoyed the performance as well as the festival atmosphere, which was complete with "s'mores," chili, bread bowls, hot chocolate and bonfires.

"It was so nice to have it outside because people could just hang out in big groups," Elkins said. "And it was cold, but the fire pits and bread bowls were great."

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

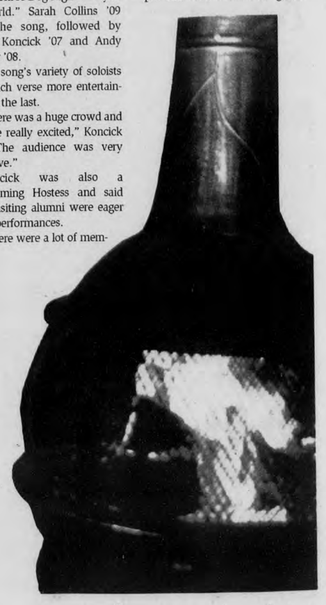
"It was so nice to have it outside because people could just hang out in big groups. And it was cold, but the fire pits and bread bowls were great."
—Cordy Elkins '08



The Bucknellian
October 13, 2006
Sports
Volume 138, Number 7 Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Helping Hands

Features offers opportunities to lend a helping hand outside the 'bubble.'

See page B10

Volleyball claims pair of victories

Following wins over Colgate and St. Francis (Pa.), Bison start seven game homestand versus Patriot League

By Ellis Hudes
Staff Writer

The Orange and Blue, playing at home for the first time in nearly a month, outlasted the St. Francis (Pa.) Red Flash 3-1 Tuesday night in front of a small but rowdy Davis Gym crowd. They swept Colgate 3-0 in Hamilton, N.Y. Friday night end a long road trip. These wins move the Bison to 12-9 overall this season, including a respectable 4-1 home record.

All four games in the match against St. Francis were very competitive. It was difficult to decide which team had the momentum.

Bucknell 3 St. Francis 1

The Bison found another gear in the late stages of the first two games, winning 30-28 and 30-27. On match point in game two, there was a spectacular display of defensive prowess. Players from both teams scrambled to extend the rally. The fans were on the edge of their seats during the memorable exchange, which the Orange and Blue eventually won.

It looked like the Bison would sweep the third match, but St. Francis capitalized on sloppy errors towards the end to force a fourth game with a 30-27 win.

The Bison thwarted St. Francis' chances of a comeback by cleaning up their mistakes and playing more efficient volleyball to clinch the match 30-25. They took better care of the ball in the final game, hitting .333 compared to St. Francis's .140 hitting percentage.

The team kept its composure throughout the contest and showed maturity by not dwelling on individual errors.

"Our blocking up front and ability to handle returns of service were the two key statistics which turned the match in our favor," Head Coach Cynthia Opalski said.

Jenna Henderson '08 posted her sixth career double-double against St. Francis with 19 kills and 13 digs. She was named Patriot League Player of the Week for her outstanding play the week before against Temple and Colgate, averaging 5.50 kills per game, including a career-best 23 kills against the Red Raiders. Henderson averaged 2.67 digs per game and hit a team-best .333 in that span.

Both Sarah Groman '07 and Jennie Smith '07 added 10 kills and played great defense for the Orange and Blue with a combined nine blocked shots. Shannon Pitsch '09 fueled the offense with 42 assists while Kristen Sydlowski '07 hustled her way to a team-best 23 digs.

"That was some of our best team playing all season—we really got to show the depth of our team and some freshmen got valuable playing time."
—Jennie Smith '07

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

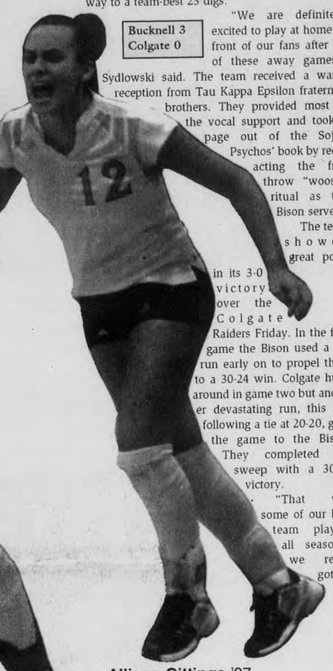
Jenna Henderson '08



Allison Gittings '07

Rachel Freeman '10

Bucknell 3 Colgate 0

"We are definitely excited to play at home in front of our fans after all of these away games," Sydlowski said. The team received a warm reception from Tau Kappa Epsilon fraternity brothers. They provided most of the vocal support and took a page out of the Sojka Psychos' book by reenacting the free throw "woosh" ritual as the Bison served.

The team showed great poise in its 3-0 victory over the Colgate Raiders Friday. In the first game the Bison used a 9-0 run early on to propel them to a 30-24 win. Colgate hung around in game two but another devastating run, this one following a tie at 20-20, gave the game to the Bison. They completed the sweep with a 30-21 victory.

"That was some of our best team playing all season—we really got to show the depth of our team and some freshmen got valuable playing time," Smith said.

Henderson's performance was outstanding with 23 kills and 10 digs. Groman added 10 kills, three block assists and hit .500. Amanda Grossman '07 had eight kills and a .467 hitting percentage. Emilie Hardinge '09 added another eight kills.

Pitsch posted an impressive 50 assists and six digs. Sydlowski and Rachel Freeman '10 anchored the defensive effort with a combined 30 digs.

The Bison continue their home stand today and Saturday against Patriot League foes Navy and American, respectively.

Waddell '07 wins Army Mulekicker Fall Classic

Men's golf places third, will head to Lehigh Invitational Sunday

By Wes Trowbridge
Writer

Charlie Waddell '07 picked up his first victory of the fall over the weekend, leading the men's golf team to tie for third place in a competitive 14-team field at the Army Mulekicker Fall Classic.

Waddell has four top-five finishes in five tournaments this fall and was vital to the team's early success. He shot rounds of 71-70 and defeated Seth Hirschhorn of Rutgers in a three-hole playoff to capture the tournament title that eluded him in two second-place finishes earlier this fall.

"After a couple of close calls, it feels good to get the first win of the year," said Waddell, who was named Patriot League Golfer of the Month for September.

The other two victories of Waddell's career came in the 2005 and 2006 Patriot League Championships. When he competes for his third straight Patriot League individual title this spring he will be in familiar territory, as it will be hosted by Army.

As the Orange and Blue are the defending Patriot League champions, Head Coach Jim Cotner hopes Waddell's experience will elevate the play of the entire team the next time they visit West Point Golf Course.

"Having won the past two Patriot League individual titles I know his top priority for the spring season will be to repeat as team champions," Cotner said.

The Bison shot rounds of 307-298 securing a third-place tie with Army and continuing their undefeated streak against Patriot League competition.

"So far our freshmen have stepped up to the challenge of playing Division I golf and have contributed in many of our tournaments."
—Jim Cotner, head coach*

The squad picked up their third top-three finish in five tournaments, including first place at the Colgate Invitational.

Keita Aoki '08 stepped up for the Bison this season with two top-five finishes, on his way to securing the number two spot in the lineup. Aoki was the only other Bison golfer to join Waddell in the top 20, firing rounds of 77-75 to finish in a tie for 18th place.

Thanks to their depth the Bison started 10 different golfers this season, including all four first-year students. Cotner attributes the team's success to Waddell's outstanding play as well as the talented group of freshman.

"So far our freshmen have stepped up to the challenge of playing Division I golf and have contributed in many of our tournaments," Cotner said.

Two first-years played at Army over the weekend. Andrew Cohen '10, who tied for 27th, posted a 36-hole score of 154 including a 74 in the final round, the second-lowest round of the day for a Bison golfer behind Waddell. First-year Brian Bartow's shot rounds of 79-79.

Patrick Yingling '07, the only other senior who made the trip to Army carded a 36-hole score of 162.

Rutgers won the team title with a score of 592, 13 strokes ahead of the Bison.

The team looks to stay undefeated in the Patriot League at the Don Mershon Invitational Sunday and Monday at Lehigh in Bethlehem, Pa.

Women's crew golden at the Genesee

By Rob Blakemore
Staff Writer

The women's crew team came away from its first weekend of fall racing with a gold-medal performance at the Head of the Genesee Sunday.

The varsity four was the only boat competing as it prepared for the prestigious Head of the Charles Regatta on Oct. 21. This was the first action the team saw after its home opener against Lehigh was canceled.

The boat was crewed by stroke-Kelly Henkler '09, 3-Page Kannor '09, 2-Caitlin Doolin '09, bow-Whittney Henry '09 and coxswain-Katie Kessler '10.

Their combined efforts put the Bison across the line in 18 minutes 30.34 seconds, which gave them a one-second victory over Syracuse. It was also good for a 45-second victory over Patriot League rival Colgate.

Sunday marked the first sophomore effort for the bow pair of Doolin and Henry, who were the stern pair of the women's lightweight eight that battled to a 6th place finish at the National Championships last spring. It was also the first appearance in the Orange and Blue for Kessler, a member of the second recruited class.

It takes a lot of individual preparation during the summer to race at a high level this early in the fall season and there are still a few kinks to work out.

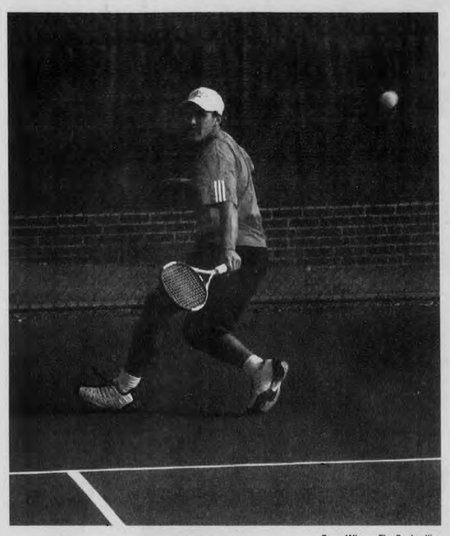
"We are improving," Henkler said. "We have had some problems with technique getting sloppy. On Saturday it held together and we were able to finish with a good sprint."

The Bison will stay on campus over Fall Break for their first training camp and to compete at the Navy Day Regatta in Philadelphia.

"It's definitely an awesome feeling to be back on the water and racing with my teammates again," Doolin said. Hopefully this excitement will be infectious as the Bison look to improve on their record-breaking spring season.

Men's tennis hosts Bucknell Invitational

Orange and Blue finish up fall season at home, tallying a total of 17 wins against tough competition



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Ryan Sandburg '09 hits a backhand during the Bucknell Invitational. Sandburg won two of his singles matches and two of his doubles matches with Jonathan Brenner '09 this past weekend.

By Kyle Barndollar
Contributing Writer

The men's tennis team wrapped up its final home tournament of the fall season over the weekend at the Bucknell Invitational.

It was a solid performance for the Bison, collecting 17 victories against talented competition from the University of Maryland Baltimore County (UMBC), University of Connecticut and Quinnipiac.

Zach Hascoe '10 collected three victories Saturday, defeating Christian Malerba of UConn 6-0, 7-5 and Quinnipiac's Mike Racioppo 6-3, 3-6 (10-6) in the Flight 4 singles. In Flight 3 doubles, Hascoe and teammate Daniel Bednarek '09 downed Nate Carvalho and Joel Gamoran of Connecticut 8-1.

The duo defeated UMBC's Mehrban Iranshad and Chris Meyer 8-4 in the second round before falling to John Hughes and Charles Feldman of Quinnipiac 6-8. Bednarek also collected a singles victory 6-0, 6-2 over Quinnipiac's Tom Curren on Saturday, contributing to eight singles victories for the Bison on day two.

Ryan Sandburg '09 bounced back after a second-round tiebreaker loss to Stephano Salvatore of Quinnipiac 2-6, 6-3 (9-11), defeating Connecticut's Joey Michaels 6-4, 6-2 in Flight 2.

Flight 1 saw Ira Reibeisen '08 win twice, over Andrew Chan of Quinnipiac 6-2, 6-2 and over UConn's Ben Schueler 6-2, 6-0. Reibeisen teamed up with Ben Young '08 to capture two wins in Flight 1 doubles. After falling to Quinnipiac's Salvatore and Goldy Sherrill 7-9, Young and Reibeisen beat Schueler and Joe Goldstein of Connecticut 8-3, then UMBC's Irfan Shamasdin and Dave Jackson 9-8(5). Young also defeated Jeff Klar of UConn on Saturday, 6-0, 6-3 in Flight 7.

> "We are working the hardest I've seen since being a part of the team, and I am trying to push people to continue this trend. The opportunities for this team are limitless."
> —Ira Reibeisen '08*

Benjamin Rosenstock '09 defeated Tom Cook of Connecticut 6-2, 4-6 (10-7) in his only match of the tournament, while Sidharth Makkar '09 knocked off Connecticut's Aaron Ridchinsky 6-4, 1-6 (11-9).

On Sunday, Sandburg and Jonathan Brenner '09 collect a default victory 3-0 over Curren and Chan of Quinnipiac, and then defeated UConn's Michaels and Christian Malerba 8-4.

"The remainder of the season is dependent on how hard the team works," Reibeisen said. "We have a great team with a ton of potential".

The Bison will compete in two more tournaments this fall. Over the weekend they will be in Hamden, Conn. for the Quinnipiac Invitational, and then on Oct. 19-21 they will travel to Philadelphia, Pa. for the ITA Regionals.

The team will then begin training for its spring season, which opens Feb. 2 at Duquesne University.

"I think we're all going to go into it with a good amount of confidence due to the success that we had this fall" Bednarek said.

The Bison can only hope that their hard work will continue to pay off through the end of the fall season and into the spring.

"We are working the hardest I've seen since being a part of the team, and I am trying to push people to continue this trend," Reibeisen said. "The opportunities for this team are limitless."

Bison's seven-game winning streak ends

By Joseph Debraggio
Writer

The women's soccer team split two games on the road, defeating Lafayette 2-0 on Friday and then losing its first game since September to Lehigh 1-0 on Sunday. The team's record drops to 8-4-1 on the year with a 2-1 record in league play.

The first half of the Lafayette game was a close contest, ending 0-0. Fifty-four minutes into the game Jennifer Dervarics '09 found herself with the ball at the top of the box. Dervarics fed Krista Lee Gentile '08, who blasted the ball into the upper right corner of the net to break the deadlock.

Bucknell 2
Lafayette 0

It was Gentile's sixth goal of the year, tying her for the team lead.

That tie for team lead did not last long, as Dervarics regained the top scorer position with her seventh goal of the season in the 79th minute. Dervarics slotted a penalty kick home to seal the game for the Bison.

"I think our offense production this year has been very good," Dervarics said. "As a team, we are allowing less goals against us, which takes pressure off of the offense to score. Also, a variety of players are stepping up and finishing their chances, making each player an offensive threat."

The Orange and Blue scored 25 times this season and 10 different players have at least one goal.

"It was great to play a strong second half and score two goals to secure a 2-0 win over a tough and physical Lafayette team on the road. To earn three points on the road was important for us," Head Coach Ben Landis '96 said.

The Bison brought their seven game winning streak to Bethlehem, Pa. to play Lehigh, also 2-0 in league play. In the 27th minute Lehigh took a 1-0 lead thanks to a powerful low shot by Gina Lewandowski.

Despite pressure from the Bison, including a shot missed off the crossbar from Chelsea McGorry '10, the Mountain Hawks would not relinquish their lead and the game ended 1-0.

Bison goalkeeper Katie Dry '07 had four saves on the day along with two saves she had in the Lafayette game.

The game ended the Orange and Blue's winning streak that started against St. Francis (Pa.) on Sept. 13.

"Our team came out flat the first half and didn't take care of the ball," Dervarics said. "We had a few decent scoring chances but didn't manage to get out shots on frame."

Lehigh 1
Bucknell 0

Fatigue may have played a part in the loss.

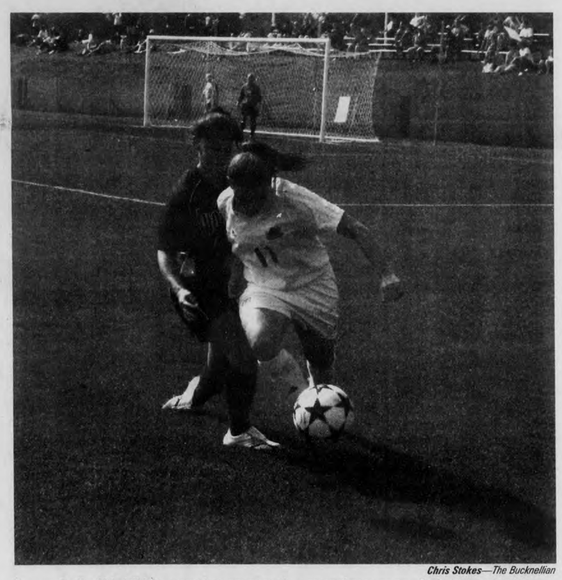
"We were not as sharp as we could have been against Lehigh. I think we were a little tired, physically and mentally, as Lehigh was our fourth game in eight days," Landis said.

Dervarics admits losing to a league rival may affect the Bison's ability to host the Patriot League tournament.

"But we are still in control of our own fate when it comes to making the tournament," Dervarics said. "We don't need to depend on other teams to win or lose at this point. As long as we win most of our remaining league games, this loss shouldn't significantly affect our quest for the league title."

"We want to play our full potential heading into November," Landis said.

The Bison host American at 3 p.m. Saturday on Varsity Soccer Field.



Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

Lauren Stoller '10 dribbles around an opponent in a recent home game. Stoller has started in every game as a member of the Orange and Blue's strong defense. The Bison host Patriot League rival American University Saturday at 3 p.m.

Villager GMAC Real Estate
521 N. Derr Dr. Lewisburg, PA 17837
570-523-3244

CALL US FOR THE LARGEST SELECTION OF RENTALS IN TOWN
1-5 Bedroom Units
Houses or Apartments for 2007/2008 and 2008/2009

A few choice units for 06/07 left!

Call Linda or Duska
or e-mail us at linda-treese@villagerrealty.com or duska_rishel@yahoo.com for a complete list of our rentals.

BRYNWOOD 535 Inc. Rentals
In Lewisburg Since 1969
Your search begins..... and ends here.
Professional 24/7 Maintenance Staff
Apartments (furnished & unfurnished)
Houses for professionals students families
Rental Garages Also Available
Office & Retail Space
300—3,000 sq ft
brynwoodrentals.com
611 Market Street, Lewisburg
ph: 570.524.2121 x 3

Football loses to Penn in valiant effort

By Marcus Mateer
Staff Writer

The football team fell to the University of Pennsylvania 34-24 on Homecoming Saturday in a contest where the score was closer than the game itself. The Bison were outgained 445 yards to 217 yards. First-time starter Marcello Trigg '10 did an admirable job as quarterback, but it was simply not enough for a win. The Bison fell to 3-3 on the season, while Penn improved to 3-1.

Penn 34
Bucknell 24

For the first time since the 2004 Penn game, the Bison had more passing yards than rushing yards. With Andrew Lair '10 and Terrance Wilson '08 both gone for the season with broken collarbones, Trigg was thrust into the role of starting quarterback.

Trigg, who passed for over 7,000 yards in high school, showed promise early during the Bison's first possession. He hit Daniel Zvara '09 for 22 yards to set up a touchdown dive of five yards by A.J. Kizekai '10.

Just as at Richmond, the early lead for the underdog Bison did not last long. During the first play on the ensuing drive, Penn quarterback Robert Irvin hit Braden Lepisto for a 72-yard score. On the next Quaker drive Irvin capped a seven-play, 72-yard drive with a 28-yard touchdown pass.

> "I thought we played well at the beginning of the game. I thought we played well late. It was the middle 20 minutes where we struggled."
> —Tim Landis, head coach*

"I don't think it was miscommunication; we just didn't cover [them] very well," Head Coach Tim Landis said about the long passes that Penn completed. "I would like to say we blew a coverage, but we are struggling right now at the safety spot. We got interchangeable guys back there with some injuries, but that is not an excuse. We just didn't react to the football."

Penn had a 21-7 lead at halftime. The Orange and Blue cut it to 21-10 on their first drive of the second half. The Quakers answered with a field goal. Jason Davis '10 fumbled the kickoff and Penn turned the turnover into another three points for a 27-10 lead.

After the visitors tacked on a touchdown early in the fourth quarter, the Bison managed a small rally. Defensive end Todd Rinaldo '09 picked up a fumble and rumbled to the four-yard line, allowing Kevin Mullen '09 to punch it in.

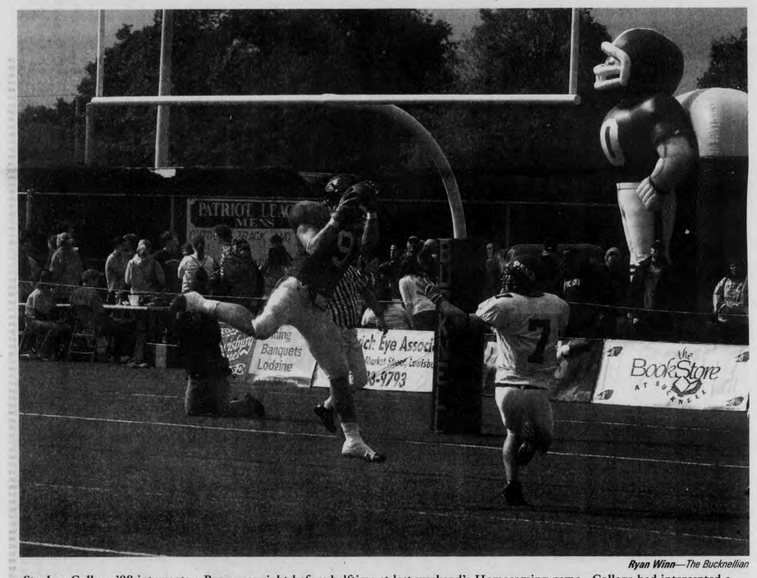
The Bison defense then forced a three-and-out. The snap for the punt was dropped, as was the punter at the Penn 14-yard line. Trigg hit Peter Kaufman '07 for the first passing touchdown of the 2006 campaign, and the lead was shaved to 34-24.

On the onside kick, the football caromed off a Bison player at the 44-yard line and into the arms of the home team. The ball needed to travel one additional yard before being touched for the kicking team to recover. Penn took over and ran out the clock.

"I thought we played well at the beginning of the game," Landis said. "I thought we played well late. It was the middle 20 minutes where we struggled."

Trigg ended the day with 125 yards of passing and a touchdown. For the first time this season, the Bison offense was held to under 100 yards rushing with 92 yards. The Penn defense clamped down on the second-ranked rushing offense in the country. The real surprise came from the strength of Trigg's arm. When forced to pass, he hit the open man, giving hope for the upcoming weeks.

The next opponent for the Orange and Blue is Georgetown. Kickoff is at 1 p.m. on Saturday at the Multi-Sport Field in Washington. D.C. The Hoyas are coming off a 28-3 loss to Lehigh, and the Bison have an excellent chance to climb above .500 again.



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Stephen Collage '08 intercepts a Penn pass right before halftime at last weekend's Homecoming game. Collage had intercepted a pass earlier in the game and leads the team with three interceptions for the year. The football team will travel to Washington D.C. tomorrow to battle the Georgetown Hoyas.

Swim teams prepare for coming season

By Barbara Perlman
Sports Editor

The men's and women's swimming and diving teams hit the pool for the Blue versus Orange meet on Friday.

While not an official meet, the Blue versus Orange meet is "a chance for everyone to get a little taste of what [a] dual meet will be like," Nikki Woodward '07 said. "It's a great way for the men's and women's teams to show support for one another and to get people mentally ready for the meets to come."

This practice is important for both teams, who look to incorporate several new teammates and a new head coach, Dan Schinnerer.

The consensus is the new head coach will be one of the team's strengths.

"With changes in [the] coaching staff, our program has been raised to an entirely new level," Katherine Munson '07 said. "We are being challenged like never before, and for the most part we have successfully met these challenges."

Schinnerer, a recent Yale graduate, will draw on his experience as an assistant coach for the revered Michigan Wolverines. At Michigan, Schinnerer worked under the renowned coaches Jon Urbanchek and Bob Bowman, who both sent swimmers to the Olympics. He looks to emulate their success at the University.

The teams lost many key members to graduation, including All-Patriot League swimmers Mary Krakowski '06 and Lectie Altman '06, who helped the team capture its fourth straight Patriot League Championship in the 2006 season.

The men were hit harder, losing Adam Freeman '06, Todd Bauer '06, Mark Kretzer '06 and William Schilling '06, and return no Patriot League Champions.

Both the men and women will return many top swimmers, including Rebecca Scheffter '07, Matt Crandell '07 and Woodward.

The Orange and Blue added depth and talent to their roster.

"One key strength to our team this year is the addition of a large freshman class," Woodward said. "With the breadth of talent they bring and the existing depth of our returning swimmers and divers, this year's team is ready for anything."

The men's and women's swim teams look to continue to hold their own throughout the season.

"Our obvious goal for the end of the year is to win Patriots," said Munson.

The Bison have even loftier objectives, as they hope to compete on a higher level than the Patriot League.

"This team is arguably the best that we have ever seen [and] there is a lot of potential to 'make waves' outside of the Patriot League," Munson said. "We don't want to be limited to inter-league success; [we want to] compete and win against more competitive teams outside of the league and help make Bucknell a nationally-recognized competitor."

The Orange and Blue begin their season at 1 p.m. Oct. 28 at Patriot League rival Holy Cross.

> "One key strength to our team this year is the addition of a large freshman class. With the breadth of talent they bring and the existing depth of our returning swimmers and divers, this year's team is ready for anything."
> —Nikki Woodward '07*

Domino's Pizza - A Proud Partner of Bucknell University
LEWISBURG • 524-9000
1722 Market St.
MANIC MONDAY $7.99 LARGE 1-TOPPING PIZZA - DELIVERED!
2xTUESDAY BUY ANY LARGE PIZZA AT REGULAR MENU PRICE & RECEIVE A 2ND OF EQUAL VALUE FOR FREE
WACKY WEDNESDAY BUY ANY LARGE PIZZA AT REGULAR MENU PRICE AND GET ANY SIDE ITEM FOR FREE
TERRIFIC THURSDAYS $4.99 LARGE CHEESE PIZZA
HOT BROWNIES FREE
DOUBLE DEAL $11.99 2 MEDIUMS $13.99 2 LARGES
CHICKEN SPECIAL $17.99
CARRY-OUT DEAL BUY ANY PIZZA AT REGULAR MENU PRICE & RECEIVE A 2ND OF EQUAL VALUE FOR FREE
CALL TODAY! 1.800.DOMINOS (1.800.366.4467)

ACNE?
TAKE CONTROL OF YOUR ACNE...NOW!
Blue Light Treatments Are:
*Simple
*Affordable
*Effective- They Work!
Bucknell Students Only...
Call before December 1st for a FREE consultation and receive a FREE Blue Light Treatment ($175.00)
CENTER FOR SKIN HEALTH
Ernest Normington, M.D., FACS
210 JPM Road in Lewisburg (570) 524-7777 www.drnormington.com

Men's water polo wins four of five matches

By Ty Clark
Staff Writer

Away from the friendly confines of the Kinney Natatorium, the men's water polo team compiled a 4-1 record in a weekend of tough competition in California.

"This trip was exactly what we needed at this point in the season and resulted in several firsts for the Bison program," said Head Coach John Zeigler '91. "Although we have competed at the Claremont Convergence frequently in the past, this year marks the first time we have won out all our games at this event."

Sean Robinson '07 agrees.

"It was nice to take a step back from league play and play five non conference games where we could improve on our offensive and defensive systems," Robinson said.

The three days of competition began with a strong 11-3 win over seventh-ranked (Division III) Whittier. Although the match was close through three quarters, the Bison finished with an impressive 6-0 fourth quarter.

Bucknell 11
Whittier 3

Mark Masterson '07 became the first Bison since 2001 to score six goals in a contest. Robinson tallied four points on one goal and three assists, and Jason Rechel '08, en route to the CWPA Player of the Week award, scored four points with two goals and two assists.

"It took us about three quarters to get going," said Masterson, "but once we did, everything was clicking right and we put the game away pretty quickly."

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Jason Rechel '08 winds up for a shot in a recent game. Rechel tallied 13 goals and six assists and was named CWPA Player of the Week.

The Bison then defeated a very tough No. 19 (D-I) Redlands squad 8-7, thanks to a strong effort in goal by Luke Belenky '08. Belenky, who came close to matching his career high with nine saves, made a critical stop down the stretch.

Bucknell 8
Redlands 7

Rechel tallied four goals and an assist, while Robinson added four points again (two goals, two assists) and Kyle Roslyn '08 contributed a goal and two assists.

"We were to come back after being down in the fourth quarter by two and ended up winning by one," Robinson said, "which served as big momentum builder for our upcoming league games, since we have not finished games particularly well this year."

Following the match, the Bison took on No. 4 (D-III) Cal-Lutheran, and, for the second consecutive match, Rechel scored four goals as the Bison rolled 16-7. Scoring nine first-half goals, the Bison led by six at the half. Along with Rechel, Masterson paced the team with five points on three goals and two assists.

Bucknell 16
Cal-Lutheran 7

The Bison went on to compile a perfect record in the Convergence by winning 12-4 against No. 9 (D-III) Claremont-Mudd-Scripps. Masterson, Rechel and Roslyn all scored twice to lead the Bison's balanced attack.

Bucknell 12
Claremont-MS 4

Masterson assisted on four other goals to equal his six-point career high. On the defensive side, Roslyn set a career mark with five steals, and Robinson, for the second straight game, stole three.

Robinson saw the importance of the defense, which held an opponent to four goals for the fifth time this season.

"Our defensive play is going to lead us to success in the upcoming weeks," Robinson said. "We haven't been able to put together a strong defensive effort throughout all four quarters of a game yet this year but we are coming close. How well we practice in the next few weeks will be very important for us, because we are on the edge of tying all the strings together."

For the fifth and final game of the weekend, the Bison traveled to No. 13 Pepperdine, where they fell, 11-8.

"We came out a little flat and slow in this game but we were still able to hold Pepperdine to a tie game going into the 4th quarter," Robinson said. "The strong defensive effort was the key to our success in this game but we were unable to close it out."

Pepperdine 11
Bucknell 8

Masterson tallied four goals in the game, giving him 15 goals, nine assists, and six steals for the weekend. Gabriel Heiber '09 scored twice while Robinson and Rechel scored once apiece to help the cause. The Bison defense recorded 15 steals, led by Chet Eimstad '10 with three.

Rechel's 13 goals and six assists merited the CWPA Player of the Week award. The team returned to Lewisburg with an 11-7 record. And even though the loss was hard, Masterson still saw the good in the weekend.

"It was a successful weekend and we gained valuable experience that will be needed coming down the stretch here in the season. This weekend we have our four biggest games of the season so far, which are critical to our seeding at Southern Championships, so we need to come out and play our game," Masterson said.

Zeigler also stressed the importance of the next weekend.

"We will look to use the overall success of the trip to fuel us into our final round of league competition," Zeigler said. "The Bison will face a hard test this weekend as we must face all league opponents away, Navy and Princeton at their pools and also two games at Hopkins and GW in different style pools. It's hard to believe, but two weeks after that finds us competing for a Southern Championship here at Bucknell, October 27-29."

"The 4 league games we have Friday through Tuesday are crucial. We know what we need to do and we are ready to show up and take care of business," Robinson said.

WEEKEND SCHEDULE

Friday

MEN'S WATER POLO - Johns Hopkins, 8 p.m., Baltimore, Md.
MEN'S TENNIS - Quinnipiac Invitational, TBA, Hamden, Conn.
WOMEN'S GOLF - Rutgers Invitational, All Day, Piscataway, N.J.
WOMEN'S VOLLEYBALL - Navy, 7 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.

Saturday

MEN'S AND WOMEN'S CROSS COUNTRY - Lafayette Invitational, 10 a.m., Easton, Pa.;
NCAA Pre-National Championships, 11 a.m., Terre Haute, Ind.
ROWING - Navy Day Regatta, 11:45 a.m., Philadelphia, Pa. (Schuylkill River)
FIELD HOCKEY - Colgate, 12 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
MEN'S WATER POLO - Navy, 12 p.m., Annapolis, Md.; George Washington, 7 p.m., Washington, D.C.
FOOTBALL - Georgetown, 1 p.m., Washington, D.C.
WOMEN'S VOLLEYBALL - American, 7 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
WOMEN'S SOCCER - American, 3 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
MEN'S SOCCER - Lehigh, 7 p.m., Bethlehem, Pa.
MEN'S TENNIS - Quinnipiac Invitational, All Day, Hamden, Conn.
WOMEN'S GOLF - Rutgers Invitational, All Day, Piscataway, N.J.

Sunday

MEN'S GOLF - Lehigh Invitational, All Day, Bethlehem, Pa.
MEN'S TENNIS - Quinnipiac Invitational, All Day, Hamden, Conn.

Real Smoked BBQ!
Beef Brisket, Pork, Chicken Ribs!
Sandwiches, Wraps, Salads, Platters!
NO RESERVATIONS NEEDED! Call in for TAKEOUT!
SKEETER'S PIT BBQ
ON THE BLUFF
OVERLOOKING THE SCENIC SUSQUEHANNA RIVER
AT THE INTERSECTION OF ROUTES 11 & 15
SHAMOKIN DAM
570.743.2727
Daily 11:00am - 10:00pm
Sundays till 8:00pm
www.SkeetersBBQ.com

DISTINGUISHING YOURSELF: 101
ARMY ROTC
AN ARMY OF ONE.
Army ROTC is a 2-4 year college elective where students like you can learn the skills to succeed in life. Register for ROTC as you begin your way to becoming an Officer & a leader of the U.S. Army.
ENROLL IN ARMY ROTC
BECOME AN ARMY OFFICER
U.S. ARMY
CONTACT CPT GRIFFITH OF THE BISON BATTALION ARMY ROTC AT 570-577-1013/1246 FOR MORE INFO.
CHECK OUT OUR WEBSITE AT HTTP://ARMYROTC.COM/EDU/BUCKNELL.

A Bucknell Tradition Since 1968
bull run inn
Open 7 days a week:
Mon. – Sat. 11:30 a.m.—2 a.m.
and Sunday 11:30 a.m. midnight
605 Market St., downtown Lewisburg
ph: (570) 524-2572
www.bullruninn.com
(check for current features and events)
Trick or Treat
Halloween Pop Quiz (21 & over)
- Halloween Trivia Questions -
Tues, Oct. 31 @ 9 p.m.
Costume Contests between rounds:
Best Costume Contest—$50 gift card
Pre-Carved Pumpkin Contest—$25 gift card
Mummy Contest $15 gift card
- Halloween themed specials -
SUNDAY BRUNCH 11:30 a.m.—2 p.m.
Monday Night Football @ 9 p.m.
drawings & specials

Men's soccer fails to find back of the net

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

Kevin Holmes '08 and a Red Raider fight for control of the ball in a Patriot League match-up. The Orange and Blue have a 7-3-4 record and will continue conference play tomorrow night at Lehigh.

By John Mlodzinski
Staff Writer

The men's soccer team fell to Lafayette 1-0 on Saturday and tied the New Jersey Institute of Technology (NJIT) 0-0 on Tuesday.

Lafayette 1
Bucknell 0

With 27 seconds left in the game, Scott Hawkins of Lafayette scored the lone goal. His header, off of a pass from Steve Ference, found the back of the net to give the Leopards the win. The Bison's best opportunity to score came when Nathan LaGrave '10, was able to break free from the Lafayette defense and was approached the goal unchallenged. One Lafayette defender was able to get back in time to make a tackle and prevent any damage.

The team felt like the game had gotten away from them and that Lafayette's goal should never have happened.

"The Lafayette goal was very disappointing, and was surprising to everyone on the field. However, in the final 10 minutes of the game Lafayette put us under immense pressure, and they had three or four excellent scoring chances," Joey Kuterbach '08 said.

"The team realized, somehow, we let the Lafayette game slip away after controlling the first half," Head Coach Brendan Nash said.

The Bison tied NJIT despite taking a season high 21 shots. The Bison, who are now 0-2-2 in their last four matches, currently stand at 7-3-4. Although there were no goals scored, each team certainly had their opportunities. NJIT and the Orange and Blue combined for a total of 33 shots. Alex Russo '09 led both teams with seven shots.

"Going into the NJIT game, our team needed to handle the opponent's pressure better, and be able to control possession," Kuterbach said

Bucknell 0
NJIT 0

The Bison had multiple opportunities to win the game, taking six shots in the overtime periods, but were unable to convert the scoring opportunities to goals. Corey Curnutte '08 nearly scored when NJIT goalkeeper Josh Osit blocked a free kick by Conor O'Brien '10 and failed to cover the rebound.

Curnutte was allowed a good look at the net, but the shot went left and the score remained tied. The Bison had another opportunity to win the game when a shot by Russo slipped past Osit, but an NJIT defender was there to prevent the ball from reaching the net.

"If we continue to play like we did tonight, I think we will find that final finishing quality against Lehigh that we lacked tonight."
—Joey Kuterbach '08

Nash, although disappointed, was pleased with his team's overall effort.

"I feel we played closer to a full game, but just could not find a way to score. Therefore we played another game without getting the result we wanted," Nash said.

Kuterbach picked up his fifth shutout of the year and made eight saves in the match. He has not allowed more than one goal in any game this entire season.

Although the Bison were not able to pick up the win, the team played very well.

"I think our performance tonight was an improvement from Saturday – we were able to move the ball and hold possession more throughout the entire game," Kuterbach said.

The team looks to turn things around on Saturday, when they travel to Lehigh to face the Mountain Hawks.

"If we continue to play like we did tonight, I think we will find that final finishing quality against Lehigh that we lacked tonight," Kuterbach said.

Saylor Says

By Matthew Saylor
Sports Editor

1. The American League Championship Series started on Tuesday with the Oakland Athletics playing host to the Detroit Tigers. Unfortunately, neither team received as much press as the New York Yankees, the team the Tigers eliminated in the divisional round of the playoffs. Yankees Manager Joe Torre is in his 11th season with the team, having led them to the postseason all 11 years and to four World Series titles. The last of those World Series championships was in 2000, and the six-year drought is unacceptable to the "Boss," George Steinbrenner, owner of the Yankees.

Steinbrenner spent Monday meeting with General Manager Brian Cashman, a major supporter of Torre, about the future of the clubhouse leader. Apparently Cashman convinced the Boss to keep Torre, who announced on Tuesday he will return for the final year of his $7 million contract in 2007. The question now is whether or not Torre will be a lame-duck manager for the year. The Yankees could very well go through the same process this time next year.

It may be impossible to imagine how Steinbrenner could have fired a manager who has been as successful as Torre, but remember the Boss spent around $1,000,000,000 in player salaries over the past six seasons and has no ring to show for it. The Washington Nationals, Chicago Cubs, San Francisco Giants and Texas Rangers are all searching for new managers.

2. The National League Championship Series features the New York Mets and St. Louis Cardinals, two teams that entered the playoffs with less than stellar Septembers. That did not matter, as they dispatched the Dodgers and Padres, respectively, with relative ease. If the Mets win this series they will be the favorite team to win the World Series, while if the Cardinals win, the team representing the American League will be the favorite.

3. The Chicago Bears and Indianapolis Colts are the only two undefeated teams remaining in the NFL following five weeks of play. The Colts barely managed to win some games, while the Bears dominated their opponents, outscoring them by an average of 24 points per game. Indy has its bye week this week, while Chicago will travel to Arizona on Monday night.

4. The Eagles established themselves as the team to beat right now in the NFC East, following their 38-24 win over the Dallas Cowboys. The Cowboys look to even the season matchup when Philly travels to Dallas on Christmas Day. Terrell Owens should want nothing more than a win as his present.

5. If you are staying on campus for Fall Break, be sure to check out the women's volleyball, soccer and field hockey teams in action. You know you will not do homework.

6. San Antonio Express-News reported Charles Lee '06 played well in his training camp stint thus far with the Spurs. The team returned from its trip to France earlier this week and continues its preseason schedule against other NBA squads. Look for increased playing time for Lee as the Spurs' coaching staff tries to determine what its opening day roster will look like.

7. In other Spurs news, it appears Tony Parker and Eva Longoria are still together, fighting through problems they acknowledged having. I hope they stay together, because if Lee makes the team, he could have the chance to meet some of the other Desperate Housewives.

8. The Pittsburgh Steelers better start turning things around soon, as the fans of the defending Super Bowl champions are starting to get a little restless.

9. Looking for something to do Saturday afternoon? Go to www.bucknellbison.com and listen to Doug Birdsong and George Burman call the Bison football game at Georgetown. All five of the team's remaining games are against conference opponents, including home matches against Fordham and Colgate.

10. The Tigers and Mets will meet in the World Series. The winner? There will be dancing in the streets of Motown.

Not too long ago, you chose a small college in the middle of cow country. And, wisely, it chose you, too.
Now go ahead and make another good choice.
For dinner.
The Inn at New Berlin is a short, 10-minute drive from the Bucknell campus, on scenic country roads. It's a perfect distraction from writing papers – or grading them.
Students and faculty love our relaxed atmosphere and our award-winning dining, while parents appreciate the luxurious lodging during parents' weekend and graduations. But don't wait till then to discover us!
The Inn at New Berlin
Dine. Shop. Stay.
570-966-0321 InnAtNewBerlin.com

The Sigmund and Claire Weis Center for the Performing Arts
PRESENTS
Pilobolus
Friday
October 20, 2006
8 p.m.
coming to the Weis Center
L'ensemble Pennetier
Saturday, October 28, 8 p.m.
Frederick Moyer, piano
Friday, November 10, 8 p.m.
Bucknell University, Lewisburg, Pennsylvania
Tickets and Information: 570-577-1000
www.bucknell.edu/WeisCenter/

Women's tennis prepares for final fall event

By Connie Barko
Staff Writer

The women's tennis team won 14 matches at the three-day Bucknell Invitational. The Bison competed against the University of Connecticut, Quinnipiac University and University of Maryland Baltimore County (UMBC).

Despite challenges off the court, the team had an excellent showing.

"I think it was a hard week for the whole team because of midterms and a lot of tournaments in a row. I am proud of everything we have accomplished, and we got some good wins," Tania Varela '10 said.

The weekend's top performers included Varela, named Patriot League Player of the Month for September. She defeated Gabby Pasternak of Quinnipiac 6-2, 6-2 in Flight 1 singles, her seventh straight victory on Friday. This improved her overall record to 17-3. JoAnna Grossman '09 defeated Quinnipiac's Shawna Sarson 6-1, 6-1 in Flight 6 singles.

On the second day of competition Paulina Gamboa '09 earned two consecutive victories in Flight 3 against Quinnipiac's Amanda Petruzzi 6-2, 6-2 and Joy Adewumi of UMBC 6-3, 6-3. Varela toppled Cornelia Carapcea of UMBC 6-0, 6-1 in the second round and UConn's Christine Burek 7-5, 6-1 in the third.

Saturday's matches included an excellent showing from the squad's first-year athletes. In the second round of Flight 7 Renee Weissend '10 beat Nikki Adams from Quinnipiac 6-4, 7-5. She also defeated Alison Koch from UConn 6-4, 6-3. Carlin Calcaterra '10 earned a third-round win against Quinnipiac's Kasey Rosenberger 6-0, 6-0. Kirstyn Sotak '10 defeated Danielle Rodriguez in the third round, 7-6(6), 6-2.

In Saturday's doubles matches Gamboa and Calcaterra won 8-2 against Joy Adewumi and Barbara Couto of UMBC. Weissand and Sotak overcame UConn's Jessica Porter and Alison Campitiello of Connecticut 8-4.

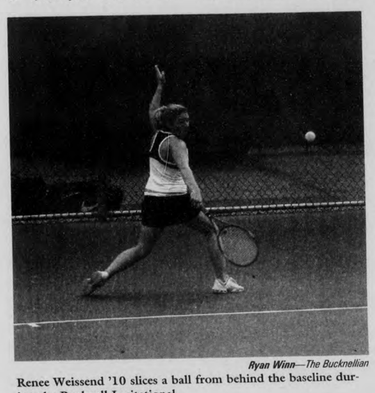
Gamboa and Calcaterra continued their winning streak with two more victories in doubles play on Sunday, which improved their record to 8-2.

"I was happy that I was able to come back and win four matches after losing the first two," Calcaterra said. "I was even happier to share in our team's success. It's always a good feeling to cheer on teammates to victory, which a lot of people were able to achieve this weekend."

Gamboa and Calcaterra won in the second round against Amanda Petruzzi and Danielle Rodriguez of Quinnipiac 8-1 and in the third round over UConn's Liz Dibbs and Christine Burek 8-5, which gave them the Flight 2 doubles title.

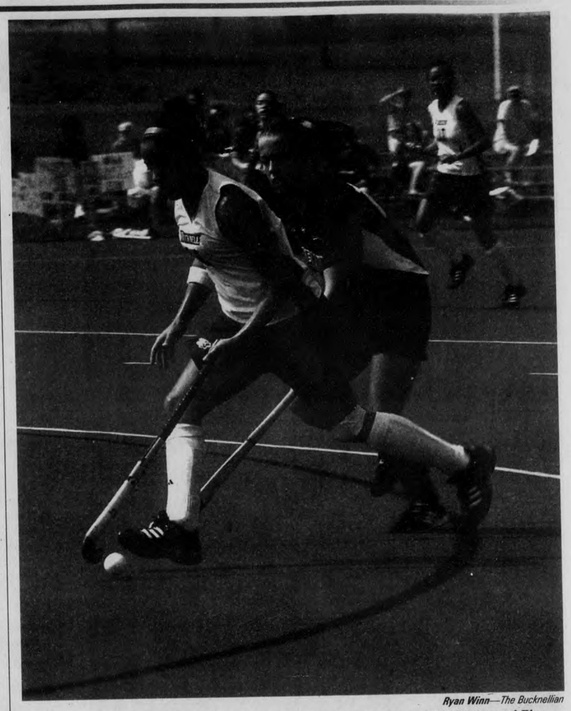
The team will conclude its fall season Oct. 19- 21 at the ITA Regionals in Hanover, N.H.

"Our fall season is over now," Calcaterra said. "but our real season is in the spring. I want more than anything for our team to win Patriot Leagues and go to the NCAA championships. Personally, I want to do anything I can that contributes to the fulfillment of that goal."



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Renee Weissend '10 slices a ball from behind the baseline during the Bucknell Invitational.



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Alex Gomez '10 maneuvers around an opponent in a recent home game. The Orange and Blue look to get back in the win column after a series of disappointing losses. The Bison will host Colgate on Saturday and Cornell on Monday.

Field hockey battles American

By Shannon Pitsch
Staff Writer

Ranked 15th nationally, American University defeated the field hockey team on Saturday in Washington, D.C.

American 2
Bucknell 0

The 2-0 loss brought the Bison to 4-6 on the season while improving the Eagles to 9-4.

American scored just nine minutes into the game, but the Bison defense held the strong offense of the Eagles to one goal for the majority of the game.

"We went in to our game with American with a specific game plan in place, and we did a great job of it," Head Coach Heather Lewis said. "Our goal was to contain four key players in a system designed to limit the number of shots American would get."

The Bison's balanced defense led by Alex Kyzmir '07 limited American to seven shots on goal. Goalkeeper Emily Groendyke '07 contributed with five saves.

"I thought our defensive unit did an outstanding job of limiting American's scoring chances," Lewis said. "I thought Alex was outstanding in limiting the two-time reigning Offensive Player of the Year to only one shot, and I thought we played with so much effort, energy, courage and heart. I was proud of our effort [but] disappointed in the end result."

While the Bison's defense restricted American's offensive power, the Orange and Blue offense was limited to four shots.

Late in the second half, trailing 0-1, an offense led by Katie Urosevich '07 and Amanda Faust '09 strived to be more aggressive. With multiple opportunities to score in the second half, a tie seemed imminent. But at 68 minutes, American secured the victory with a goal by Jesika Pufnock.

Three ties currently exist in the Patriot League, with undefeated American and Holy Cross sharing first place, Lehigh and Lafayette at 1-1, and the Bison and Colgate winless in conference play.

The Orange and Blue will get a chance to move from that position when they play rival Colgate Saturday at home.

Lewis is enthusiastic about the game.

"Our focus is to always take this season 'one game at a time,' and we're no different this week," Lewis said. "Our entire week of preparation will be in anticipation of another closely-contested Patriot League battle with Colgate. Both teams will be focused on gaining ground in the Patriot League race and I anticipate a tremendous battle on Saturday afternoon."

The third Patriot League game of the year will take place at 12 p.m Saturday on Graham Field.

Integrating Faith and Reason at the University of St. Thomas
School of Law

With a quality of life ranked #1 in the country in 2005 by the Princeton Review, our nationally-recognized mentor externship program, our commitment to community service and our distinguished faculty, it is time to consider the University of St. Thomas for your law degree.

Visit us at the Bucknell University
Graduate & Professional School Fair
Wednesday, Oct. 18
4 p.m. - 6 p.m.
Elaine Langone Center, Terrace Room

Apply online by December 31, 2006 and pay no application fee!

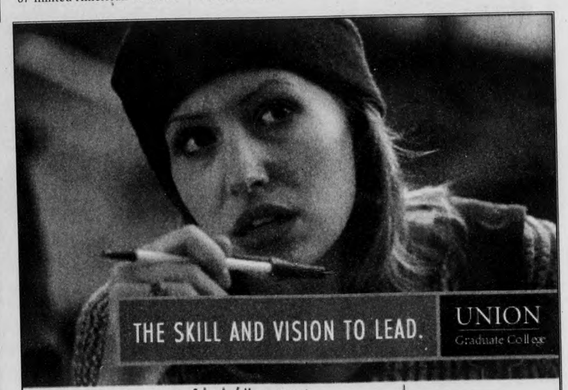
For more information or to schedule a campus visit:
(651) 962-4895 • (800) 328-6819, Ext. 2-4895
lawschool@stthomas.edu • www.stthomas.edu/law

University of St. Thomas
Minnesota



For more information and directions:
Visit
www.uniongraduatecollege.edu
Or contact
Erin Callahan
Director of Student Recruitment
tel. 518.388.8754
info@uniongraduatecollege.edu

School of Management
School of Management MBA MBA in Healthcare Management
Six Sigma Certificate Program
Management & Leadership Human Resource Management
Healthcare Management Finance

School of Engineering & Computer Science
Master of Mechanical Engineering Electrical Engineering
Computer Science Engineering Management

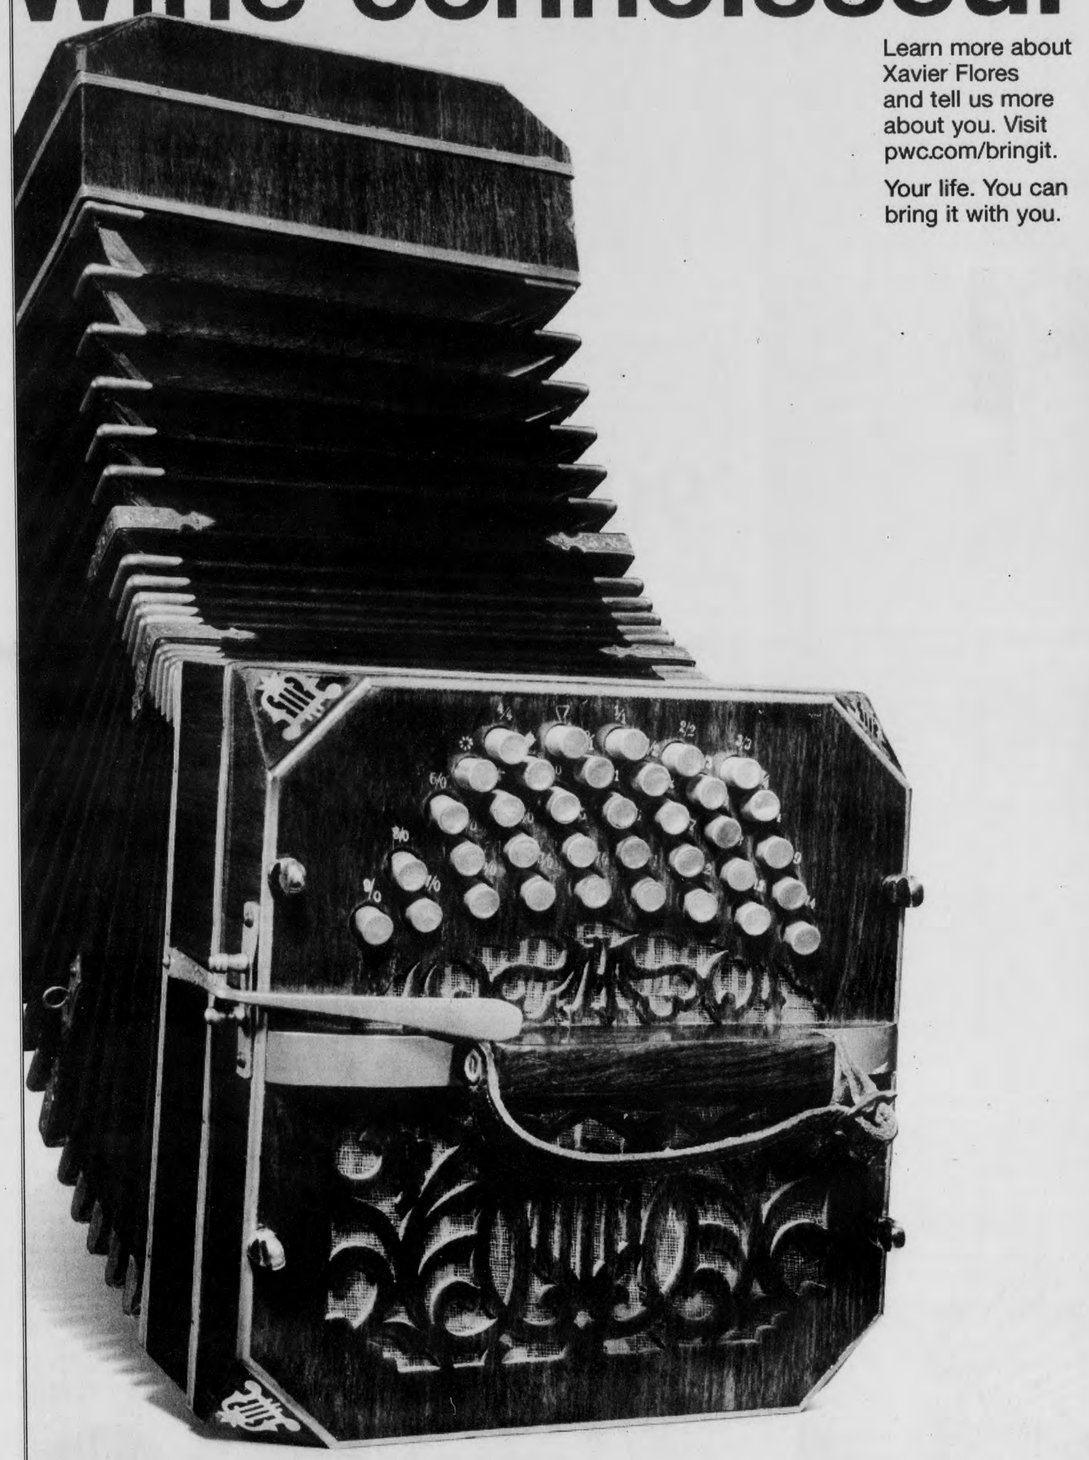
School of Education
Master of Science for Teachers Master of Arts in Teaching

Bucknell University
GRADUATE & PROFESSIONAL SCHOOL FAIR
Wednesday, October 18
4:00pm - 6:00 pm
Terrace Room
Elaine Langone Center

Gastronomist
Tango dancer*
Wine connoisseur

Learn more about Xavier Flores and tell us more about you. Visit pwc.com/bringit.

Your life. You can bring it with you.



*connectedthinking

PricewaterhouseCoopers

© 2006 PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP. All rights reserved. "PricewaterhouseCoopers" refers to PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (a Delaware limited liability partnership) or, as the context requires, the PricewaterhouseCoopers global network or other member firms of the network, each of which is a separate and independent legal entity. *connectedthinking is a trademark of PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (US). We are proud to be an Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity Employer.

Mer Cares

Dear Mer:

I have always had self-esteem issues, but ever since entering college it's gotten so much worse. I don't like my body, but no matter what I seem to do, nothing can make me feel better about myself. I avoid all the bad food in the cafeteria and I never snack. My schedule has been so incredibly hectic that I cannot seem to make time to go the gym to work out, and when I do finally find some time all I want to do is sleep. I look in the mirror and all I see is a fat reflection staring right back at me. Whenever I look around I see all these perfect guys and girls who seem to be able to eat everything and still look, well, perfect. Is there anything I can do to make me stop hating myself?

—Mirrors Are Evil

Dear Mirrors Are Evil:

First of all, stop beating yourself up about how you look. And second, nobody is perfect.

While some may seem "perfect," I guarantee you all people see something they do not like about themselves. Maybe you do not notice the slight belly protruding over their jeans or those big thigh muscles hiding beneath a skirt.

Millions of people all over the world have weight problems and self-esteem issues resulting from a skewed body image. I congratulate you on taking the first step towards overcoming the way you see your body. By avoiding unhealthy foods during meals you are already halfway there.

Snacking is also a good thing to avoid, but do not completely deprive yourself of cookies or pizza. Not allowing yourself to eat what you want to eat is dangerous because you set yourself up for a binge consisting of copious amounts of junk food.

You need to moderate your portions and the time you spend eating. If you are always in your room studying, perhaps it would be beneficial to go to the library to do work so you are not tempted by the food in your room. An additional perk to doing your work at the library is homework will get done quicker without distractions and you will have more time to do things like go to the gym.

Create a schedule of how much time you are willing to devote to schoolwork, activities and clubs. Add at least one or two days devoted to athletics during the week, whether they are on the weekend or when you have a little time between classes.

I know it is hard to get into the habit of going to the gym, but if you start getting to bed early, you may develop a better sleep schedule and your body will feel regenerated every day. This will make it easier to wake up and work out.

Try to do some homework on the weekends—tough to do, but it will help create more time to go to the gym during the week.

Join a club or intramural sport that plays games once or twice a week. This is a fun alternative to the gym that does not involve hours on a treadmill or elliptical but still gives a great workout. Getting a little exercise will raise your endorphins and get you pumped up. You will feel more at ease with your body and once you are comfortable with it, the way you see yourself will start to change.

Do not isolate yourself from your friends by thinking they are more "perfect" than you. There are plenty of super-skinny people who look in the mirror every day and do not see that image. They feel the same way you do. You just need to feel more comfortable with your body, and once you are happy with the way you look everything else will kick in.

You will find time to go to the gym because it makes you happy to maintain a healthy lifestyle. Exercise to feel good and improve your health—NOT just to lose weight.

Start loving yourself; otherwise you will go down a path of eating disorders and unhappiness, never seeing your body the way you should see it.

Love,
Mer

Please send questions regarding any topic to marc001@bucknell.edu with subject line reading "advice" or you may send a letter via campus mail to box number C1099. I look forward to hearing from you!

Get it off your chest!
Send your secrets to
The Bucknellian!
Create a postcard and mail it to C3952

Cruising the single's lane

Coping with relationship breakups in a smooth transition to college life

By Rajaa Qadri
Contributing Writer

Your college years are considered the best years of your life. It is the most exciting, challenging and fun time. You learn a little bit about what living in the real world is like. You make your own decisions, and no one tells you what time to go to bed.

Students usually consider being away from home a blessing and cherish their freedom, but they cannot totally cut themselves off from their families, friends and most importantly, relationships from home.

Sometimes, long distance relationships do not last long, as the absence of a partner can force a person to think of moving on. It is easy for some to end relationships, as this is the time of life when people want to explore and learn. For others, it is not as simple. Relationships involve emotional bonding and when feelings are hurt, students feel rejected and depressed.

"I didn't want to break up with my boyfriend when I came to Bucknell. But, with time we both realized that we are away from each other and things will not work out. I regret that I have hurt him, but I think it is for the best, as he gets a chance to meet new people and so will I," Yulan Li '10 said.

The stress associated with breakups is the most difficult.

"My boyfriend and I mutually decided to break up without any hard feelings. But still, it hurt me very much, and I passed through a hard time getting over him," Li said. "For a week I couldn't concentrate on my work. I am glad that I am fine now and have been able to move on, but I know people for whom it's not as easy to just let go."

Emotional hurt is more painful than physical, and it affects everything you do.

"Breaking up with a girlfriend or boyfriend from a high school romance can be doubly difficult for a first-year student," said Eric H. Affsprung, associate director of Psychological Services. "First, of course, it is painful because it is a real loss … [and] it is often even more painful because that relationship helps us to feel less frightened about making the transition to college. [High-school relationships] make us feel better about ourselves at a time when we are often feeling very unsure of ourselves, and helps us to feel that we are still connected to home and to a time in our lives (i.e., high school) when we may have felt better about ourselves."

… Ending relationships while beginning college is just as difficult and painful for students because such relationships provide a sense of security for first-year students.

Affsprung said ending relationships while beginning college is just as difficult and painful for students because such relationships provide a sense of security for first-year students.

If you are passing through a breakup with your sweetheart and feeling depressed, do not worry; you are not alone. According to an April 2005 New York Times article by Dan Hurley, up to 50% of marriages end in divorce, and long gone are the stories of high school sweethearts living happily ever after.

I am not trying to be cynical, but breakups are a simple fact of life we need to face. Though it does not get any easier, here are a few measures you can take to help the process of moving on.

First of all, give yourself realistic time to get over it. There are no shortcuts when the relationship mattered to you. Make serious efforts to get involved in projects and activities. Talk to your friends about the breakup, but talk to them about other things too.

Even if you do not want to, forcing yourself to get out and concentrate on other things will get you on the right track to feeling like yourself again.

According to The People's Media Company, replacing one relationship with another is never the answer. If you are going to look for another relationship while you are still hanging on the last one, chances are you will mess up both of them and feel guilty in the long run. See the new person as a clean slate, and allow the relationship to unfold with no connections to your past.

On the other hand, if you are the one breaking up, you should always be honest. Tell your partner the reason and be straightforward. Try not to pick a fight, since the only reason we pick fights is to ease the guilt. Get straight to the point and do not make your partner suffer more than necessary.

Breaking up is never easy. You will have good days and bad days. Take it one day at a time and do not beat yourself up if you have an overly emotional day—you are only human.

'90s style: Growing up Politics

The Final Installment

By Melissa Duffy
Contributing Writer

The World Trade Organization. NAFTA. Monica Lewinsky.

Before the '90s, such terminology was meaningless. In spite of the lighthearted sentiment typically associated with the period, the '90s were a time of both growth and turmoil on American and international fronts.

Ideologically, the United States led an anti-communist battle abroad, while Europe and Asia dealt with their own clashes between socialist, communist and conservative philosophies. Many nations overseas embraced the welfare state and American citizens protested for and against the United States' policies and activities in intergovernmental organizations (IGOs).

The reunification of Germany in 1990 and the subsequent end of the Soviet Union in 1991 provided ample opportunity for IGOs such as the United Nations to rise to prominence and act as door-openers for the foundation of similar organizations. The formation of the European Union in 1992, the birth of the North American Free Trade Association (NAFTA) in 1994, and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade's renewal and the creation of the World Trade Organization in 1995 rapidly progressed the spread of capitalism and economic interdependency. This would become a characteristically '90s trend of globalization.

"The collapse of the Soviet Union renewed hope for many that international politics could be guided by multilateral institutions, mutually accepted norms and international law," said David Mitchell, assistant professor of political science and international relations. "The 1990s saw concerted efforts by many actors in the international community, notably the advanced industrialized countries, to increase the degree and scope of integration."

Scott Meinke, assistant professor of political science, offered his comments regarding international affairs of the '90s.

"At least from the U.S. perspective, the conflicts that emerged [in the wake] of the Cold War … generally defined the most important issues of the decade (e.g., Yugoslavia)," Meinke said.

In cases such as the genocide in Bosnia and the surrounding militant relations of Serbia with other Yugoslavian provinces, American-backed IGOs such as the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) furthered America's involvement in international policy, peacemaking and under-the-table warmaking, according to www.wikipedia.com.

Following the collapse of the USSR, the United States was widely recognized as the world's only remaining superpower, a position that prompted the global watchdog-like stances seen in the case of Yugoslavia.

These stances, reflected in the administrations of former presidents George H.W. Bush and Bill Clinton, "had a decidedly mixed legacy," said John Peeler, professor of political science.

Both Bush and Clinton had some success.

"Bush 'I' … expelled Sadaam from Kuwait, building a strong coalition to do so … [and] the Clinton administration had success in ending the Balkan wars, although the subsequent situation is not ideal," Peeler said.

Both situations contributed to further entrenchment in and domination over numerous IGOs.

The United States also suffered international embarrassment in the '90s.

"Clinton and Bush 'I' shared responsibility for the fiasco in Somalia: Bush put our forces in there with an impossible mission, and Clinton had to pull them out in humiliating circumstances," Peeler said.

Such failures resulted in a wide array of effects beyond international embarrassment.

"Clinton's biggest regret would have been his inaction in relation to the genocide in Rwanda," Kim Jackson '09 said. "That inaction was, in part, the result of U.S. embarrassment over failure the in Somalia."

The mistake of military involvement in difficult, if not impossible, circumstances not only echoed conceptual errors of Vietnam, but foreshadowed similar mistakes in Iraq.

"[In the '90s] the U.S. was figuring out how to behave in a world where we have overwhelmingly more military power than the rest of the world combined, but do not have such dominance economically and politically," Peeler said.

On the home front, "the largest issues were arguably economic growth and recovery, free trade and the new economy, welfare reform and government accountability and fiscal responsibility," Meinke said.

During the '90s the United States enjoyed a period of economic prosperity, the result of booming technology, fiscal compromise between political parties and, arguably, the trickle-down policies of '80s "Reaganomics."

"The '90s were a time where Clinton essentially co-opted traditional Republican policies, balancing the budget for the first time in decades and 'ending welfare as we know it,'" Peeler said.

While the success of Clinton's policies are debated by Democrats and Republicans as either works of genius or merely the result of former president Ronald Reagan's economic reforms, both sides agree the decade was among the most prosperous in recent history.

Outside of the economic realm the roles and compositions of the executive and legislative branches faced alteration in '90s culture and technology. While unreflective in his personal opinion, Meinke recognized the Monica Lewinsky scandal and the following Clinton impeachment typified '90s politics.

"The scandal, investigation and impeachment did reflect the interaction of a number of important political factors in the 1990s: the rise of the internet and cable news as well as talk radio, the newly defined polarization within the House [of Representatives] and the conflict between a popular minority-party president and an ascendant congressional minority," Meinke said. "The emergence of an enduring (if narrow) Republican majority coalition of the 1990s … obviously had enormous effects on the politics of the 1990s and 2000s."

In spite of the many '90s successes, failures and policies whose effects have yet to be felt, the decade shared something with every other decade of American politics, in varying degrees.

"The thing I remember most is just being patriotic, always flying an American flag and listening to patriotic songs on the Fourth of July," Lauren Jaeger '09 said.

As the United States passes the threshold into the uncertain future the 2000s hold, it is this enduring pride of being American onto which we must hold.

The impact of the past on the present indicates a need for prudent, intelligent and well-informed decisions on the part of the American public. Will we continue with our policies as watchdog to the world? Will we yield further to the globalization of our economic policies?

As upcoming elections grow near, it is with a mindful eye toward the future of the United States as an individual nation and international actor that we, as responsible citizens, must make our decisions. Only time will tell the complete impact of the last decade on the future of America— but one thing can be certain: politics of the '90s have left a lasting impression on politics all over the world that shall be felt in future decades.

Bill Clinton and Monica Lewinsky made international headlines in the '90s after a scandal in the White House revealed a sexual relationship between the President and his intern.

Bursting the 'bubble' myth

By Janna Shapiro
Writer

There seem to be two pervading, yet conflicting, visions students have of their college experience at the University. One involves independence from the parental unit back at home and a chance to expand their mind to new ideas in the world. These students want to learn how people and society work in this ever-globalizing world, so they can interact within it and even innovate it when they graduate. These students want to reassess their preconceived notions of the world, which is why some students study abroad.

On the other hand, the Bucknell "bubble" is a phenomena on campus that many of students associate with the University. Some students view it as a horrible frustration and injustice in their educations. Others envision it with endearment and consider it the reason that the University is the close campus it is. Regardless of your inclinations, you cannot deny the presence of the "bubble."

In general, students do not question this notion of apathy. The question then becomes whether the "bubble" is a welcome and necessary part of the college experience. It could be a break from life before we have to go into the real world. It could even be our way of getting our horrific amounts of assignments accomplished without distraction. Under some circumstances it could be the bond that holds our tight-knit community together with relative ease.

"I think it depends on the person, and I think it is very comforting to be away from some of the stuff that is going on, so it makes it easy to stay sheltered," said Julia Miller '08.

Some feel this sheltered environment severely hinders our learning experience. It may even cultivate an indifferent outlook on world happenings as normal and acceptable.

"I told a friend that I was going to spend the summer working for the House Minority Leader," Megan McWhinney '07 said. "He replied, 'But you're not black.'"

This could be a funny anecdote, but the reality of it might be embarrassing for a school that ranks 29th in the nation among liberal arts Universities.

[The "bubble"] could be a break from life before we have to go into the real world. It could even be our way of getting our horrific amounts of assignments accomplished without distraction.

"I believe that the average student's knowledge (or lack thereof) of current events is embarrassing," McWhinney said. "Schools justify teaching history with hopes that students will apply those lessons to the present, but that knowledge is useless if the students ignore the world around them."

The University administration uses the Bucknell "bubble" as a tool. The residential life manual states, "The Dean expressed that reasoning for freshmen to not have cars is in order to keep them in the Bucknell 'bubble' so that they may integrate themselves more deeply into the Bucknell community."

"You could say Bucknell is like a haven, separated from the reality and harshness of the real world," Chris Guskey '07 said. "You have to deal with the real world eventually, and isn't that what college is suppose to prepare you for, not to shelter you from it."

In an informal survey conducted around campus, students were asked about their knowledge of current events. For instance, when asked whether students were aware that U.S. Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice had planned to visit and no longer will, or about Kanye West's performance was taking place, the answer was a resounding "yes."

"Personally, I believe that the Bucknell community has knowledge of current events occurring outside the 'bubble,'" said P.J. Hubert '08. "However, we share the mentality that these topics won't affect us that much … after all, it feels awfully isolated being stuck out in rural Pennsylvania."

When asked to speculate why Rice might not attend, the majority of students' answers were not connected to North Korea's recent nuclear tests. A few examples are: "Her busy schedule came up," even "President Bush having her on a 'tight leash'" was suggested. The most common answer was that she "probably had more important things to do." These answers might suggest that University students are not only unaware of world events, but they assume their elected representatives will take care of them without worry. True, Rice was appointed, not elected. The point stands either way.

So, the question becomes whether or not we are really concerned about a new nuclear power in the world headed by a decidedly aggressive leader.

"Students are ignorant about current events for a few reasons," said Brian Shassian '08. "Nobody is going to pay for a subscription to a newspaper. Not many people pay $300 for cable. Students sometimes are just angry that we have no affect because nobody does what we want."

Perhaps some old-fashioned student protests or more available free news sources could solve these issues. Or perhaps there never was student involvement in political affairs at the University. Either way, it certainly forces one to wonder what the University looked like in the student protesting hay-day of the 1960s and 1970s.

Is this just a state of the University, or a prevailing issue in the United States?

"People at Bucknell move from a bubble at home to a bubble here. I'm from a bubble," said Anna Riker '08.

Regardless of your reaction to the concept of the "Bucknell Bubble," Alex Tuller '08 suggests we remain light-hearted through these questions.

Some students such as junior Alex Tuller prefer to stay optimistic about the Bucknell 'bubble.'

"I like bubbles!" Tuller said.

In support of the bubble or in opposition to it, he came to the right school.

Who do you recognize?

Have you been keeping up with the outsiders who are breaking into the "bubble"? To the left, Democrat Chris Carney, a House of Representatives candidate for the 10th Congressional District, speaks on campus during his recent visit. To the right, Ed Concert headliner Kanye West holds an MTV Music Award.

Ryan Shovlin—The Bucknellian

When preppiness takes over

By Ali Burack
Contributing Writer

"Preppy is not a trend, it's a LIFESTYLE … it can never go out of fashion," according to a poster on www.urbandictionary.com.

Being preppy is not just about what you wear but how you live. The term preppy was "traditionally used to describe the characteristics of white Anglo-Saxon protestants (WASPs) who attend or attended major private, secondary university-preparatory schools commonly associated with New England and the northeastern United States.

These characteristics include particular subcultural speech, vocabulary, accent, dress, mannerisms, etiquette and life view," according to www.wikipedia.org. University students echo the idea of preppiness transcending clothing style.

"Preppiness is a lifestyle, but wanting to looking preppy shows up everywhere. It is adopted in many forms, such as the stereotypical polo shirt, but dressing preppy doesn't make you preppy; preppy is more than what you wear," Courtney Carter '08 said.

The "Official Preppy Handbook" by Lisa Birnbach addresses this stereotype. According to Columbia News Service, Birnbach wrote the book as a humorous account mocking the "traditional dress code that reflected much of the late 1970s and early '80s fashion." In today's society, some preps consider it to be their bible.

The preppy handbook outlines preppiness as a lifestyle, but recently people have had some misconceptions about preppiness, associating it solely with what someone wears.

According to another poster on urbandictionary.com, "A true preppy is someone who: wears, but is not limited to, Polo, Lilly, Brooks Brothers, Lacoste, LL Bean (i.e., duck boots), ribbon belts, prints (i.e., cords with embroidered whales, palm trees, etc.), sweaters tied around the neck, collar always popped, looks neat and put together. Hair ribbons or ribbon headbands, pearls and other classic jewelry pull the look together. Preppies are partial to monogrammed and engraved items." This definition can apply to many students in the University community.

People are slaves to the fashion industry, and since preppy is "in" now, people do not mind that it takes work to be preppy. Being preppy requires you to be in mint condition, properly groomed and put-together from head to toe.

The Web site www.collegeprowler.com, dedicated to evaluating college campuses, endorses this belief, stating, "Bucknell is an extremely preppy campus. Both girls and guys sport polo shirts. (Some even flip the collars up to further prepify their look)."

The University's association with this trend is evident on campus. When walking into fraternity parties, Bostwick Cafeteria, the academic quad and the Ellen Clarke Bertrand Library you will notice many collared T-shirts, popped collars, monogrammed items, ribbons and in general a clean appearance.

Cordy Elkins '08, a student who attended a prep school, recognizes the extreme preppiness on campus.

"I went to prep school and I'm still not as preppy as most kids here," Elkins said.

Since the '80s the preppy style was dormant, but its reappearance in mainstream fashion is evident in collections of Kate Spade, Anna Sui, Michael Kors, Marc Jacobs and even in the more youthful lines of Ben Sherman and Penguin.

These designers incorporate bright colors, sun dresses and ribbons into their clothing. In the summer girls deck themselves in little sun dresses and flip-flops, with a sweater tied around their shoulders, and boys sport khakis and polo shirts.

People are slaves to the fashion industry, and since preppy is "in" now, people do not mind that it takes work to be preppy. Being preppy requires you to be in mint condition, properly groomed and put-together from head to toe.

"Being preppy is so cute, so why would I do anything different? It works for me," Elkins said.

She, like so many others, abide by this fad. Preppiness is not for everyone, but people have come to appreciate the preppy look.

Another tantalizing edition brought to you by ...

Ms. Love and the Bubble

Dear Ms. O,

My boyfriend likes to have sex in risky places. The first few times it was fun, but now it makes me more and more uncomfortable. It seems like that's the only way he enjoys himself now. How can I convince him to bring it back to the bedroom?

- Missing the Mattress

Dear Missing the Mattress,

While heating things up in a public place can be especially erotic and exciting every once in a while, sex in such locations should not become the primary focus of any healthy sexual relationship.

This form of exhibitionism can be fun, but your guy should be enjoying his time with you, not whichever new spot you two get busy in.

Sex is a personal bond shared between two people and isn't really meant to be exposed to the rest of the world. So perhaps your boyfriend needs a little reminding that it's really just about the two of you.

Start off by offering some subtle hints. Remind him of how sex was before the risky locations came into play.

Say something like, "It was so nice when we could just take our time and enjoy each other. We didn't have to worry about rushing through it or getting caught. I loved being alone with you and being able to feel comfortable."

Entice him with ideas of things you can do in the bedroom that you just don't have time for in public places. Spending a little extra time on foreplay never hurts.

Try suggesting the two of you spend the evening alone together in one of your rooms and get reacquainted with what it's like to take your time pleasing each other in a relaxed and secure setting.

He may be worried that you're getting bored in the bedroom, so he's trying to make sex more exciting. Give him some encouragement and come up with ideas of new things to try both of you feel comfortable with. Most guys want to make sure you're just as satisfied with your sex life as they are.

If dropping hints and proposing other ideas doesn't seem to get through to your guy, just tell him flat out that it makes you uncomfortable. Once you explain your predicament he'll most likely be prepared to accommodate your misgivings.

If he doesn't respect your feelings on the subject, he doesn't respect you and is not worth your time.

Once your sex life reverts to being centered in the bedroom, don't forget about those few fun experiences in precarious locations. Every now and then it can spice things up, and if your guy is really into it, it'll be a nice surprise for him when you volunteer the idea. Just don't let it get out of control again.

And don't get caught.

~Ms. O

E-mail me your questions at MsOintheBubble@yahoo.com or send them through campus mail to Ms. O, The Bucknellian, C-3952. All authors of questions will remain anonymous.

If it's serious, it's news ...
If it makes you sweat, it's sports
...
If it's fun, it's Feats!

Write for Feats!

E-mail jjf018@

"Turn your Power ON and Add LIFE to your Years!"

Michael D. Morrison D.C.
1205 W Market Street
Lewisburg, PA 17837
Office: 570-523-1221

MORRISON'S ADVANCED CHIROPRACTIC CARE

A Healthy Spine Equals a Healthy YOU!

Bucknell Students may receive a free exam and x-rays (if needed) with mention of this advertisement.

Features

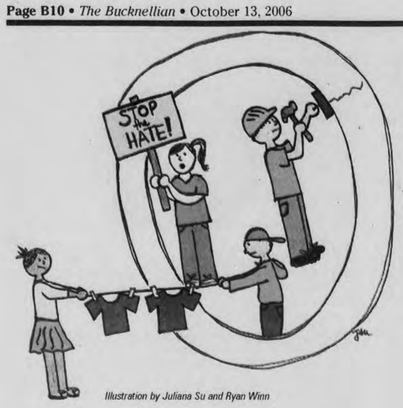

Illustration by Juliana Su and Ryan Winn

Reaching outside 'the Bubble'

Students promote tolerance in Stop the Hate rally

By Stephanie Quinn
Contributing Writer

Voices raised in song, clusters of pale blue Sigma Alpha Epsilon T-shirts printed with the slogan "We don't rebuild, we reload" and scores of guttering candles twinkled in the warm October twilight during the Unity Jam Stop the Hate Rally on Monday in Hufnagle Park.

Marchers congregated in front of Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity at 6:45 p.m. and, sending up chants of "stop the hate" and "no more hate" into the darkening sky, proceeded across campus to a small outdoor amphitheater on the fringe of downtown Lewisburg.

The event, co-sponsored by Multicultural Student Services and the Muslim Students Association, the event featured assorted speakers and local and campus-based musical performers, who took the microphone in turns before packed rows of huddled students and activists.

Bucknellian Archives

Members of the community gather for the Unity Jam Stop the Hate Rally on Monday night. The annual event featured speakers and musical performances promoting tolerance.

Kris Cooper '07 said he heard about marches in class but never personally experienced the power and oneness that comes with group solidarity for a common cause.

Marchers walked several blocks past lit shops and restaurants on Market Street bearing white candles, singing "We Shall Overcome" to the rhythm of clapped hands and slapped thighs.

"Tolerance was raised as more of an issue this year, partly in response to the recent vandalism of the Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity house," said Lauren Perez '09, a member of the Social Justice Student Committee. "But the annual rally itself is part of a national effort, launched in the aftermath of the 1998 hate killings of James Byrd and Matthew Shepard, to combat the use of hatred and intimidation to ostracize individuals because of their race, religion, sexual orientation, gender or other quality."

Byrd, a 49-year-old black man living in Texas, was beaten, chained to a truck and dragged over the ground to death after accepting a ride from three white men.

Shepard was a first-year political science student at the University of Wyoming when two men he met in a bar robbed and severely beat him before tying him to a fence and leaving him to die.

Shepard made no secret of his homosexuality and his sexual orientation was widely believed to have motivated his murderers. The two men were not charged with a hate crime because, under federal and Wyoming state law, it was not clear whether crimes perpetrated on the basis of sexual orientation qualified as hate crimes.

Within the walls of the Bucknell "bubble," colorful signs bearing "Stop the Hate" and students wearing "World AIDS Day" T-shirts were reminders that many University students possess compassion and are activists.

Monday's speakers cited dialogue as crucial to the eradication of intolerance in a community where, as one speaker said, a lot of people think hate is somewhere else.

"As a general campus, I don't think people care that much [about tolerance]," Stefanie Hurowitz '10 said.

Hurowitz said her fellow members of the Social Justice Residential College are more aware than most University students of persisting problems of discrimination and group intimidation on campus and in the world.

Some might wonder how the community's efforts to exterminate bigotry compare to those made by celebrities, heads of state and leaders of aid organizations concerning long-awaited ends to war, poverty or famine.

Despite massive press campaigns like "Make Poverty History" and "Live Aid," nothing has succeeded at ridding the world of its ills.

Were students really helping to stop hate, strolling in quaint Lewisburg among classmates on a pleasant autumn evening?

"We are," Palwasha Siddiqi '10 said, speaking at the rally about the suppression of women in her native Afghanistan. "If you don't struggle, you don't show that we are against hate."

Siddiqi did not characterize intolerance as a major issue at the University.

"The people here are very friendly," Siddiqi said. "I first came here in June, and it's even hard for me to miss home. They are giving me more than a family's love."

Whether or not ralliers made a significant dent in the hatred of the foreign, the "sinful" or those viewed as inferior, many of those that participated left the column of marchers with a powerful sense of unity believing someday, we as citizens of the world really would overcome.

Fighting violence with the Clothesline Project

By Nilanjana Saha
News Editor

A bright yellow T-shirt hanging in the show case by the women's resource center reads "He made it seem so natural. What is so natural about molestation?" Drawn in blood red paint, the question stands prominent among a bunch of fliers that share the same case.

It is just one example of the hundreds of T-shirts that have been gathered by the Clothesline Project over the years. In accordance with domestic violence awareness month, every October the Women's Resource Center has held a week-long display of T-shirts in the L.C. mall to spread awareness about violence committed against women.

"Acts of violence against women know no boundaries," said Micheala Denny, director of the Women's Resource Center.

The Clothesline Project began in 1990 with 31 shirts displayed as part of a rally to transform statistics into a visually conspicuous method of communication for women, many of whom have experienced some form of violence, to speak out and share their experiences.

According to www.clotheslineproject.org, there are about 500 independent projects nationwide, with about 50,000 T-shirts.

"It is giving women a voice while making others aware of how people are affected by violence," Brianna Evans '07 said.

The Women's Resource Center held four two-hour-long workshops for anyone interested in making these shirts. But they also give students the option of designing T-shirts on their own and dropping them off to be displayed.

"Sometimes it is a really personal experience. Writing it down is difficult for some," Evans said.

According to Denny, the project draws attention to crimes against women by allowing people to realize that the victimized women are not always strangers. Because the T-shirts are made by people from the campus and local community, it becomes a much more personal issue.

Women often are forced to remain silent about their experiences of abuse or sexual assault.

"We as a community need to stand up and not allow acts of violence in our community to remain secret. This is true for those who have been victims and those that want to support victims," Denny said.

There are no specific criteria for designing the T-shirts. They can essentially carry any messages pertaining to violence. In the past, the T-shirts conveyed anything from poems to statistics to messages describing personal experiences.

"Some reflect great pain and others support and protest against violence. Each of them is touching in their own unique way," Denny said.

This year photos of past projects will be displayed along with the T-shirts. Evans believes in a campus setting, violence against women is an issue needing more exposure.

"One in four women is a victim of sexual assault. In a college environment, where there are extreme social events, it is important for women and also men to be aware of what can happen," Evans said.

Denny agreed there is an increasing need for the campus community to be aware of this issue.

"Although Bucknell strives to create a safe environment for all of its community members, acts of violence still do occur in both the public and private realms. Oftentimes these incidents go unreported and therefore unknown to the community," Denny said.

The T-shirts and photos will be on display Oct. 18-26 in the L.C. mall.

"Because it is such a visual display and it is in a central location, it is hard for people to ignore the issue," Evans said.

Building homes with Habitat

By Liza Banhalmi
Contributing Writer

Habitat for Humanity is a nonprofit organization providing affordable housing for people in need.

In order for Habitat to ensure its resources produce the greatest benefit, candidates for new housing fill out a detailed application. Once applications are reviewed, Habitat gives approved applicants a low-rate mortgage.

The organization operates through the good will of volunteers from chapters worldwide who labor on these homes. The recipient family must put in 250 hours of labor either towards the construction of its own house or another house built by Habitat. Through the organization, the family pays for materials.

The Habitat chapter at the University has about 40-50 members with a very involved core of 20 students. The chapter is helping build a house in New Berlin about 15 minutes away from Lewisburg. Groups work on the house from 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. on Saturdays. Poor weather during a few recent Saturdays slowed progress, but the group is steadfast and already finished the outside of the house.

Members of Habitat not only build locally but also travel to places around the globe to construct houses. The University's chapter traveled to Hawaii, North Carolina and Fort Lauderdale, Florida, and is deciding between Mobile, Ala., Miami, Fla. and New Orleans, La. for its next trip. Members pay for trips on their own, which cost about $100 plus travel expenses. Students stay at low- to no-cost places, such as a church or campground. They stay three to four days, work from 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. and get one day off to enjoy the area.

Members must apply to go on these trips. They are chosen based on previous involvement in Habitat. It is a great way to help out and make unforgettable memories.

"There were people who weren't that involved and said, 'This is great. I really want to do this,'" Erin Price '08 said.

Noelle Hawthorne '10 became involved when she went to an interest meeting with a friend. Afterward, she started going to all the meetings and later attended a build.

"I like it a lot," Hawthorne said. "I've always wanted to get involved. I tried starting a chapter in my high school, but it didn't work out."

"They didn't have it at my high school, but it was something I always watched to do," Kelly Boylan '08 said. "So, I just joined."

The various Habitat chapters fundraise to help pay for land and materials.

"As a chapter, we have to raise $20,000 and will co-sponsor with the county-affiliated Union-Synder County chapter," Price said.

Over the last two years the University's chapter raised over $20,000.

Fundraisers include bake sales, Trick-or-Treat for Change, a Caramel Apple Sale and Rubber Duck Derby. The Caramel Apple Fundraiser took place during Homecoming weekend and all supplies were bought from Dining Services.

"We bought everything: the caramel, apples, nuts and candy," Price said. "[Dining Services] also stayed and helped us make them."

Members spent over two and a half hours making 300 M&M caramel apples.

The chapter's biggest fundraiser is the rubber duck derby at Hufnagle Park in the spring.

"People sponsor ducks and they race them down the Bull Run Creek," Boylan said.

Over 1,000 ducks are sponsored and past winners received prizes such as Yankees tickets, Dave Matthews Band tickets, season passes to the University's basketball games and $500 prizes. Last year the fundraiser sold out of ducks and raised over $5,000.

Be on the lookout for this great fundraiser in the spring and help support Habitat.

Ellyn Ercolano—The Bucknellian

Members of Habitat for Humanity hammer nails into a wall as they work toward constructing a house. The organization, made up of about 40-50 members, is currently helping to build a house in New Berlin.

The Bucknellian

October 27, 2006

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

Volume 138, Number 8 | Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue | www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Break-up tunes

Ten songs to get you through the tough time when you and your significant other call it quits.

See page A9

Student allegedly stabbed

By Michelle Laxer
News Editor

A student reported that he was assaulted and cut six to 12 times in the wrist Tuesday night outside of 64 University Ave., according to Lewisburg Police Department.

The student, Kevin Longo '09, told police he was entering the side door of the residence hall when he was grabbed from behind, pulled onto the yard and pushed facedown to the ground.

The assailant allegedly demanded Longo's vehicle. Longo surrendered his keys telling the man that his car had been towed earlier in the day, police said.

The attacker allegedly flipped Longo onto his back, rolled up his sleeve and cut his wrist while asking where the vehicle was located. Police have not determined what kind of instrument was used.

Longo slipped away and ran to Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity where he called police at 11:06 p.m. Longo received minor injuries to the wrist, police said.

Public Safety and Lewisburg Police responded to the scene and interviewed residents.

"I saw four or five policemen with flashlights around the creek in the back of the house," said Stephanie Rozolis '09.

Areas around the building were roped off with crime scene tape, which was removed Wednesday morning.

Students living in the area were concerned about their safety.

See ASSAULT page A2

Alcohol Week promotes responsibility

By Michelle Laxer
News Editor

Student Health Services, the Office of Fraternity and Sorority Affairs and C.A.L.V.I.N. & H.O.B.B.E.S. sponsored events in recognition of National Collegiate Alcohol Awareness Week, running from Oct. 19-25. The week focused on different ways to have fun on campus without the use of alcohol.

"This week was about responsibility for your actions and how not to let them get out of control," said Alison Faux '08, the Panhellenic Chair of Greeks Advocating Mature Management of Alcohol (GAMMA).

The events included two lectures, a Greek non-alcoholic night and an event at Uptown sponsored by C.A.L.V.I.N. & H.O.B.B.E.S.

"We want to educate students about alcohol and show them what resources are out there for them," said Karen Landis, assistant director of fraternity and sorority affairs. "We want to show them what to do without alcohol."

The Greek community was very involved in Alcohol Awareness Week, hoping to disprove the stereotype that fraternities and sororities are groups revolving around alcohol and wild parties.

"By taking a proactive stance to educate not only our members but also the entire campus community, we hope that we can affect a positive change on campus to more mature consumption of alcohol," said Ben Portman '07, president of the Inter-Fraternity Council (IFC). "We have a responsibility to support proper alcohol education."

The fraternities and sororities sponsored various non-alcoholic events on Friday night, ranging from an ice cream social to an open mic night.

See ALCOHOL page A2

Men's rugby rucks again

Dave James—The Bucknellian

Adam Hinshaw '09 leads the scrum against Susquehanna University. The men' rugby team defeated Susquehanna 36-0, improving the club's record to 2-2.

By Dave James
Contributing Writer

Midway through the Bison men's club rugby match against Susquehanna on Saturday, Andrew Litzenberger '09 ran onto the field, taking off his shirt on the way.

Litzenberger met a teammate on the field and proceeded to trade shirts, donning one of the team's 14 jerseys, and jumped into the game.

The process continued throughout the game, as the coach rotated players as well as jerseys (and one Canadian club team jersey that happened to be the same color).

But the resurgent men's club rugby team couldn't ask for a better situation.

After nearly a year's worth of effort to successfully restart the pro-

See RUGBY page A5

Alumnus nominated teacher of year

By Ashley Elizabeth Hook
Writer

Harvey Edwards '78 was recently recognized as one of the 12 finalists in the 2007 Pennsylvania Teacher of the Year Competition.

Edwards, an English teacher at the Selinsgrove Area High School for the past 18 years, was selected as a finalist out of a competitive group, originally composed of approximately 70 applicants. The finalists attended a weekend conference, the theme of which was "The Bridge to Excellence: Business and Education."

The 2006 National Teacher of the Year, Kim Oliver, echoed another of the conference's overriding sentiments in her speech.

"The quality of the educator is the single most important factor in a student's success," Oliver said.

The Harrisburg Hilton hosted the competition, which included receptions at the State Capitol and the Governor's Mansion as well as an address by Pennsylvania's Lieutenant Governor Catherine Baker Knoll.

Frederick Johnson, superintendent of the Selinsgrove Area School District, expressed his great respect for Edwards and approved his nomination for this honor.

"Mr. Edwards has the ability to engage all of his students. His students know that he cares, and that his caring is genuine because you can't fool students," Johnson said. "Mr. Edwards practices what he preaches and teaches because it has been my experience that

See TEACHER page A3

University hosts talks to improve patient care

Discussions try to reduce patient alienation

By Nilanjana Saha
News Editor

A reassessment of the patient's experience, the patient-doctor relationship and redefining quality medical care from a patient's perspective were concepts explored during an international symposium titled "The Patient" held at the University on Friday and Saturday.

"Today the medical world is very anonymous and highly technologized," Professor of English Harold Schweizer said. "The patient's experience is often very alienating."

In response to this complex and technical world of medicine, a new discourse called the medical humanities was launched, which asks how the medical world can be humanized, Schweizer said.

The English department and Geisinger Medical Center organized the symposium. Professors and students from various countries presented papers written from humanistic or medical perspectives, addressing issues surrounding a patient's experience and encounters with the world of medicine.

"Nowadays, the patient disappears under machines. They are misunderstood and overwhelmed by the complexity of the medical world," Schweizer said.

The medical humanities aim to counteract the feeling of alienation and lack of personal encounters with doctors.

"Medical humanities is a

See PATIENT page A5

TKE runs relay to Washington D.C.

Fraternity raises $22,500 for Alzheimer's Association

By Jeremy O'Sullivan
Contributing Writer

Members of Tau Kappa Epsilon (TKE) ran from Lewisburg, Pa. to Washington, D.C. in a relay during fall break, raising $22,500 for the Alzheimer's Association. It was the most money raised in the annual event's three-year history.

The relay, called The Ronald Reagan Run for Alzheimer's, honors President Reagan, a member of TKE who died of Alzheimer's in 2004.

Participants carry a horseshoe the entire distance to Washington, D.C. by foot. Members of TKE took turns running legs of the 180-mile trek. Each of the 50 participants ran about four miles, but some chose to stretch their limits. One runner logged 16 straight miles.

The run ended in front of the White House, where a representative from the Alzheimer's Association met the runners for a check presentation ceremony.

"The most important thing obviously is to raise money that's going to help cure Alzheimer's eventually," said Bobby Blakemore '08, chair of the Reagan Run for TKE. "Beyond that it shows the power a group of people have to accomplish a huge task by working as a team."

The Reagan Run originated at the University's chapter of TKE. All of the money raised goes directly to the Alzheimer's Association's research institute.

In the previous two years

See RACE page A2

Courtesy of Brad Bentzen

Members of Tau Kappa Epsilon run from Lewisburg to Washington D.C. to raise money for the Alzheimer's Association.

INSIDE THIS ISSUE

OPINIONS

While an enthusiastic turnout for Alcohol Awareness week was promising, students have a ways to go.

A6

A&E

A&E editor Lily Beauvilliers '09 reviews the debut album of former Blink 182 member Tom DeLonge's band, Angels & Airwaves.

A8

FEATURES

Try the new Brookpark Station Cafe this Parents Weekend for a delightful breakfast and lunch menu.

B8

SPORTS

The football team prepares for its Parents Weekend game. Read about their last two away games in Sports.

B2

Public Safety Log

Thursday, October 12

INFORMATION—Ellen Clarke Bertrand Library: Empty bullet casings found outside.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Rooke Chemistry Building: Artwork defaced.

HARASSMENT/WRITTEN—Vedder Hall: Poster defaced.

Monday, October 16

THEFT—The Mods: Bicycle removed from a bicycle rack.

Wednesday, October 18

PROPERTY LOST—Freas Hall: Lost digital camera.

DRUG & LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—Kappa Delta Rho fraternity: Underage student found in possession of marijuana and beer.

Thursday, October 19

THEFT OF BORROWED LEASED PROPERTY—Department of Public Safety: Vehicle jump start pack borrowed and not returned. Incident report filed.

Friday, October 20

ALARM-FIRE—The Mods: Alarm caused by burnt food.

ALARM-FIRE—The Mods: Alarm caused by persons smoking in the room.

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—Larison Hall: Student cited for underage consumption.

Saturday, October 21

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—Vedder Hall: Student cited for underage consumption.

THEFT—Smith Hall: Reported bike stolen from bike rack.

HARASSMENT-VOCAL—Fraternity Road: Harassing comments directed at pedestrian.

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—Sojka Pavilion: Student cited for underage consumption.

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—Sojka Pavilion: Student cited for underage consumption and transported to Evangelical ER for medical treatment.

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—Elaine Langone Center: Student cited for underage consumption.

Sunday, October 22

ALARM-FIRE—The Mods: Alarm activation caused by burnt food.

TAMPERING WITH FIRE EQUIPMENT—Edwards House: Incident caused by unknown person(s) activating a pull station outside room 203.

TAMPERING WITH FIRE EQUIPMENT—Roberts Hall: Incident caused by unknown person(s) who discharged a fire extinguisher in the first floor hallway.

ROBBERY—Sojka Pavilion: Handbag was taken from a female as she was leaving the building.

ASSIST OTHER AGENCY—Sigma Alpha Epsilon Fraternity: LPD requested assistant in the search for the location where a underage non-BU student obtained and consumed alcohol.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Elaine Langone Center: Unknown Person(s) pulled plants out of pots, left beer cans on the patio of the Bison and tried to start a fire in the dumpster.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—McDonnell Hall: Intoxicated, diabetic student transported by ambulance to Evangelical Community Hospital.

Monday, October 23

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—McDonnell Hall: Swastika and other graffiti found in restroom.

THEFT—Sigma Chi fraternity: Laptop computer taken from basement.

FIRE-NON-STUCTURE—An electrical wire burned off of the power pole.

Tuesday, October 24

INFORMATION—64 University Avenue: Student reported that he was allegedly assaulted and cut with a knife.

SUSPICIOUS PERSONS (2)—Elaine Langone Center: Student reported that two unknown males approached her. Their behavior made her uncomfortable.

Campus organizations host events to support Alcohol Awareness Week

ALCOHOL From page A1

The IFC, Panhellenic Council and the Office of Fraternity and Sorority Affairs co-sponsored two speakers, one of whom was Kevin Pryce '93, involved in a fatal DUI accident. Rick Barnes spoke on Monday night, stressing to members of the Greek system to "slow down" in regard to drinking.

The Greek community sponsored an informational table in the L.C. Mall throughout the week, offering a wide variety of pamphlets.

"The table was a supplement to the main evening events during the week," Faux said.

Information was available about DUI laws in Pennsylvania, non-alcoholic cold weather beverage recipes, substance abuse and small blood alcohol content charts for males and females. Representatives from all the sororities sat at the table throughout the week.

"We try to have opportunities to show the many aspects other than the social ones of Greek life, such as community service," Landis said.

C.A.L.V.I.N. & H.O.B.B.E.S. sponsored an Oktoberfest-themed non-alcoholic event at Uptown Tuesday night. C.A.L.V.I.N. & H.O.B.B.E.S. is a substance-free club that sponsors numerous non-alcoholic events throughout the year for the campus and club members.

"We offer alternatives to the typical party scene," said Emily Merola '08, president of C.A.L.V.I.N. & H.O.B.B.E.S.

The Oktoberfest party featured various board games, karaoke, water pong and plenty of food and root beer.

Improvements are already in the works for next year, such as adding an additional night.

"We want more organizations getting involved," said Bob Thomas, the coordinator of alcohol and other drugs programs at the Student Health Center.

There is also a possibility of incorporating the required first-year alcohol education class into the program.

"If we can reach one freshman and show them you can have a fun time without alcohol, then it was worth all our hard work," Landis said.

National Collegiate Alcohol Awareness Week is a campaign created by The BACCHUS Network, an organization promoting of making healthy choices when dealing with alcohol, illegal drugs, tobacco and other high-risk substances. The campus- and community-based group was founded in 1975 at the University of Florida. BACCHUS student leaders and advisers are involved with over 1,000 campuses around the world.

"If we can reach one freshman and show them you can have a fun time without alcohol, then it was worth all our hard work."

— Karen Landis
Assistant Director of Fraternity and Sorority Affairs

Not too long ago, you chose a small college in the middle of cow country. And, wisely, it chose you, too.
Now go ahead and make another good choice.
For dinner.
The Inn at NEW BERLIN
The Inn at New Berlin is a short, 10-minute drive from the Bucknell campus, on scenic country roads. It's a perfect distraction from writing papers - or grading them.
Students and faculty love our relaxed atmosphere and our award-winning dining, while parents appreciate the luxurious lodging during parents' weekend and graduations. But don't wait till then to discover us!
Dine. Shop. Stay.
570-966-0321 InnAtNewBerlin.com

RACE

From page A1

TKE raised $13,000 and $19,000. Donations come from corporate and private sponsors.

In a separate endeavor, Lambda Chi Alpha (Lambda) hosted a five-kilometer run tracing through the University campus raising about $1,000 to help fight kidney disease. The event, in its 19th year, took place on Oct. 21.

The money went to NephCure, a foundation dedicated to kidney research and kidney treatment facilities. A Lambda brother has a rare kidney disorder, which made the cause even more meaningful, brothers said.

Lambda had an all-time high attendance with 70 people registered.

"The Greek system, from an external perspective, is about parties and kids acting like idiots. But a lot of what the Greek system does is overlooked," said Dan Greenberg '07, vice president-external of Lambda.

"I think it shows a positive side to Greek life. It definitely benefits the community," said Brad Bentzen '08, the alumni relations chair of TKE and co-chair of Reagan Run.

Colleges against Cancer is hosting another philanthropic event, the Paint Bucknell Pink race on Sunday.

The race will benefit the American Cancer Society and promote breast cancer awareness.

Participants can register at the practice fields next to Christy Matthewson-Memorial Stadium beginning at 8:15 A.M. for the 9 o'clock race. Registration is $20.00 and comes with a free T-shirt.

ASSAULT

From page A1

"It's creepy; there are no lights out here," Rożolis said. "If [my friends and I] have to walk home, we're going to call Public Safety for an escort."

Other students were shaken up, but said they didn't feel personally threatened.

"It's a little disturbing, but I wouldn't have a problem walking by myself at night," said Yabei Chen '09.

The alleged assailant was described as a white male wearing a dark shirt with a hood and possible blue jeans.

The incident remains under investigation and anyone with information is urged to call Lewisburg Police.

"The pen is mightier than the sword and considerably easier to write with"
—Marty Feldman

Write for News

e-mail etu001@

Appointment Setter

Flex-Hours
Part-Time
Great for Students

Must have a great voice and know how to qualify potential customers.

We Do Metal Roofs
a division of Prudential Realty

570-522-6555

Physics course recognized as exemplary

By Michelle Laxer
News Editor

The University's introductory physics course "Classical and Modern Physics I and II" was recognized as a Best Practice course by the Center for Educational Policy Research (CEPR) for certain elements that were deemed exemplary. It is currently being reviewed for possible placement among the top five best practice courses in the country.

CEPR was contracted by College Board, maker of the Advanced Placement (AP) tests, to conduct a study on the college courses towards which AP credit is awarded. One hundred and thirty nine physics courses from all over the country were submitted to the CEPR.

Only 23 were recognized for their programs and an additional five will be chosen for "full endorsement" of a Best Practice course, according to the press release.

The CEPR has not released the names of its top five courses, but the University's course will be considered for a position within the top five.

The course "received further review that resulted in specific elements of this course being designated exemplary," according to a letter from the CEPR to the department of physics and David Schoepf, associate professor of physics.

The course is a calculus-based, survey course divided into two semesters. It covers a wide variety of both simple and complex physics concepts. It discusses fundamentals of physics, in addition to more modern practices.

"We do things that, typically, most people don't see in a physics course," Laboratory Director Krishna Chowdary said.

The course is made up of numerous components, including a lecture, problem sessions, a lab and online quizzes and questions.

"The lecture hits the concepts and the problem session gives the students a chance to practice the details," Chowdary said. In lectures, the professors have made a point to practice the "active learning" teaching method.

The students will be asked to speak with their neighbor about the question and re-vote, with hopes that answers will change.

"This really is a key feature because it gives [the students] a chance to talk with someone who's thinking at the same level," Chowdary said.

During problem sessions, students work together and instruct each other in small groups.

"You can't just sit there and take notes," Chowdary said.

Students are asked to make predictions based on demonstrations.

"They have to try to defend them and see if they work," said Jeff Bowen, associate professor of physics and the first semester lecturer.

Concept tests are given at random times throughout the course of a lecture, which actively engages the students.

A multiple choice question is posed and the students are asked to answer by raising either a lettered or numbered flashcard that corresponds to their answer.

"The students must make a commitment," Bowen said.

Based on the results, the professor will either move onto a new topic or he will explain the concept further until it is understood. If there seems to be a mix of answers, the professor will result to peer instruction.

"The professor is just a facilitator who walks from table to table," Bowen said. The students are still actively engaged and learning from their peers.

The website contains reading quizzes, drill sets and homework problems as reinforcements. Solutions are posted online, as well. There are also weekly Friday quizzes.

These teaching techniques are not new. Many can be found in the book "Peer Instruction" by Eric Mazur, a physics professor at Harvard University.

"He was one of the prime motivators for these [techniques]," Schoepf said. His aim was to make lectures more interactive with the students.

"He wanted to change the dynamics in large lecture halls," Schoepf said.

The department became involved with the CEPR's study when Jerome Rackoff, assistant vice president of planning and institutional research, asked if there would be any interested departments. Chowdary and Schoepf participated in an extensive web survey of the course, answering questions about the content, organization and teaching methods. They also submitted various course documents, such as exams, the syllabus and homework.

The CEPR reviewed their answers and materials in accordance with their own criteria, which are unknown to the participating schools.

The purpose of the study was to change the guidelines for AP teaching in high school so that students would be better prepared for a college course.

"They're trying to make AP courses better reflect the needs of students who will be going to college and taking college level courses," Schoepf said.

By recognizing the Best Practice courses, College Board will have examples for high school students of the expectations in a top level introductory college course.

For the colleges, it means being recognized as having an exemplary Course.

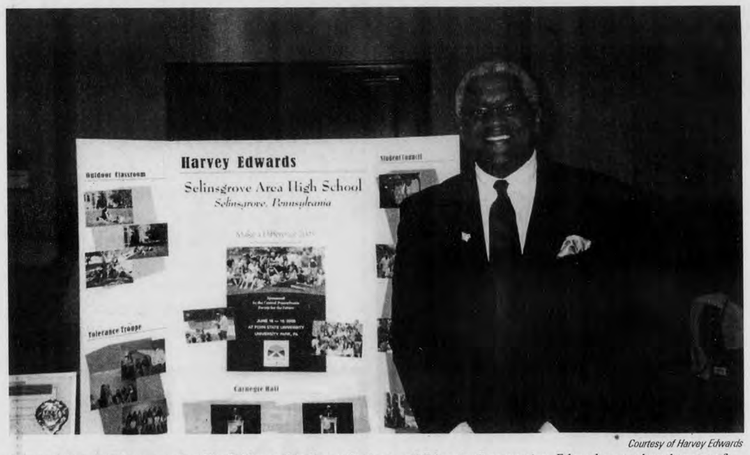
Eight of the 11 full-time professors are involved in the "Classical and Modern Physics I and II" courses.

"It doesn't belong to any one person," Schoepf said. "It has always been a group effort and we work together as a group constantly."

"The lecture hits the concepts and the problem session gives the students a chance to practice the details."

— Krishna Chowdary,
Laboratory Director

Alumnus selected as finalist for Pa. Teacher of the Year



Courtesy of Harvey Edwards

Harvey Edwards '78 poses at the "The Bridge to Excellence: Business and Education" convention. Edwards was selected as one of 12 finalists for 2007 Pennsylvania Teacher of the Year.

TEACHER

From page A1

his heart is huge."

In his teaching, Edwards undertakes a wide range curriculum in his classes, including composition, literature and many aspects of the humanities.

Reed Messmore, principal of Selinsgrove Area High School, also commented on the positive atmosphere Edwards creates in his classroom.

"He emphasizes learning with an energetic approach. Invariably his students respond to him positively and take with them not only the knowledge they should receive but also the positive experiences that emphasize the joy of learning. In addition, his personal behavior embodies that which is most important about being a teacher—modeling character, dignity and respect for others," Messmore said.

Edwards is the advisor of the school's Student Council, a community service-oriented student organization. He is also the creator and mediator of the Tolerance Troupe. This student acting group preformed on campus on several occasions. It travels across Pennsylvania, performing interactive skits dealing with topics such as racism, bullying, homophobia and abusive relationships.

Edwards received many prestigious awards for his abilities as an educator and his contributions to his school. Last spring he was the recipient of the University's 2006 Virginia Travis Lecture Award for Social Justice. This summer he was selected as the keynote speaker for the 2006 National Scholastic Arts and Writing Awards Ceremony at Carnegie Hall, a presentation honoring some of the most accomplished writing students in the country.

Johnson proudly stated he is thankful to have Edwards as a teacher in the school district.

"In my mind, the great teacher is similar to the great artist. Great teaching takes an artistic form, and Mr. Edwards epitomizes this type of artistic excellence," Johnson said. "Those who are preparing to become teachers would be well-served to pattern their behaviors after Mr. Edwards."

"In my mind, the great teacher is similar to the great artist. Great teaching takes an artistic form, and Mr. Edwards epitomizes this type of artistic excellence."

—Frederick Johnson,
Superintendent of the Selinsgrove Area School District

News Briefs

Teen killed in elevator accident

Andrew Polakowski, an 18-year-old from Pennsylvania, was killed Friday night by an elevator on the third floor of his dormitory at Ohio State University. He was the 24th person who tried to fit into the elevator when it unexpectedly began to drop with the doors still open. Polakowski tried to climb back onto the third floor of the building. He was crushed between the elevator and the floor of the third-floor lobby. Doug Smith, a battalion chief for the Columbus Division of Fire, told CNN.com that Polakowski died instantly. It has not been determined if a capacity overload was a factor in the malfunction. Smith said the 2500 pound weight capacity of the elevator was exceeded by as much as 1100 pounds. Polakowski was a first-year pre-business major at Ohio State.

Canary Diamond found in Crater

Earlier this month, Bob Wehle of Wisconsin brought home the 5.47-carat canary diamond that he found at Crater of Diamonds State Park, located in Arkansas. Tom Stolarz, park superintendent, told CNN.com that the diamond was a bright yellow and had no visible flaws. "It makes you think of a lemon drop candy," he said. Wehle's diamond was the second largest found at the park this year. The biggest belongs to Texas couple Donald and Brenda Roden. A canary diamond similar in quality, but only weighing 4.21 carats was found in the park in March and was valued at $15,000-$60,000. The value of Wehle's gem has not been estimated. Crater of Diamonds State Park is the only public park that allows its visitors to take gems home.

New Jersey to grant equal rights to gay couples

The New Jersey Supreme Court ruled that the state must give the same rights and benefits of heterosexual marriage to lesbian and gay couples on Wednesday.

According to CNN.com, the court said there was "no rational basis for giving gays and lesbians full civil rights as individuals while, on the other hand, giving them an incomplete set of rights when they enter into committed same-sex relationships."

The state Supreme Court has given the state legislature six months to either change the marriage laws or create an alternative, such as civil union laws.

The decision has created controversy.

Don't forget to set your clock back an hour on Saturday night for Daylight Savings.

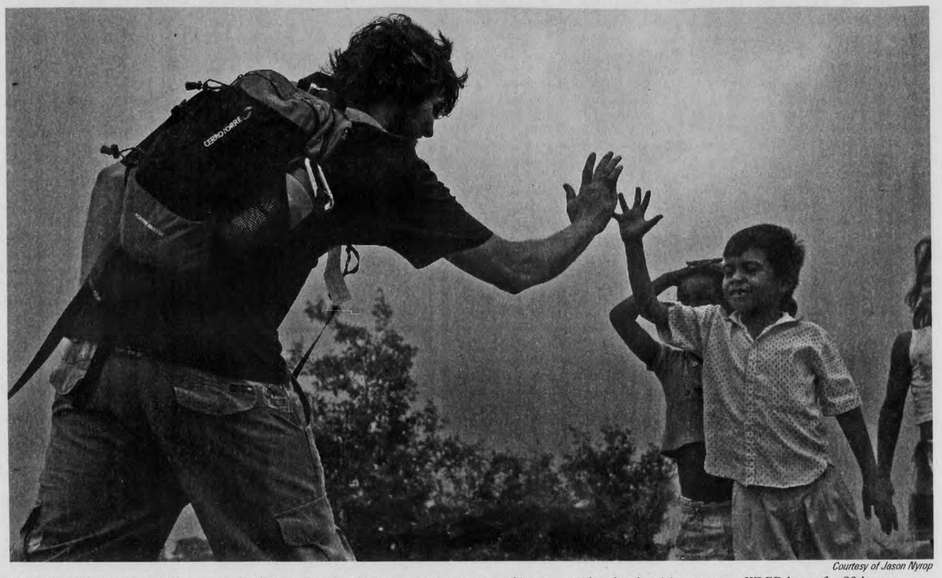
$250 CASH
Sign on BONUS
Call for details
3 & 4 Bedroom Houses
CLOSE TO CAMPUS
WHIRLPOOL
WASHER / DRYER
DISHWASHER
STOVE & FRIG

Newly renovated houses available 2006/2007
570-524-5714 / 570-412-4831
or 570-524-5745 / 570-490-2922

Engineers Without Borders to brighten Ecuador

University students raise funds to provide solar electricity to 80 homes in remote villages

By Evan Unger
News Editor



Courtesy of Jason Nyrop

Evan Doré '06 greets a child from a small village in Ecuador. University engineers are working to provide solar electricity to power WLED lamps for 80 homes. The villages have no running water or electricity.

The University's chapter of Engineers Without Borders is hosting a fundraising event at the football game this Saturday to raise money for the means to provide electricity to three rural villages in Ecuador.

Members Vickie Hau '08, Jason Nyrop '07, Evan Doré '06 and their mentor Bob Barnoff flew to Quito, Ecuador last August to assess the situations of three small communities: La Magdelena, Canala and San Jacinto.

"They have nothing there; no electricity, no running water," Hau said.

While in Ecuador, members met the villagers to see the type of housing conditions in which they live. They also mapped out locations for their lighting equipment using GPS systems.

"It was neat to go to another country to use different problem solving skills learned at Bucknell and to be able to apply them to a different situation," Nyrop said.

The students' technical adviser, Penn State Engineering Professor Bob Barnoff summed up the organization's goals.

"[Its mission] is to help developing countries where there is a shortage or complete lack of engineering expertise," said Barnoff.

Engineers Without Borders, after returning from Ecuador, decided using solar panels attached to poles made from bamboo, a local resource, would be the best solution. The poles will be located a small distance away from the structures for safety purposes. The panels–only eight inches wide by 12 inches long–will generate enough electricity to light two 1.5 Watt Luxeon WLED lamps during the day, while storing energy in a rechargeable battery for evening use.

"It will be a challenge to engineer something at Bucknell without being able to see the environment and to know what will work [in Ecuador]," Nyrop said.

Each setup, including the wiring, should cost about $100. The members plan to purchase the lamps from the Light Up the World Foundation at wholesale prices. The Light Up the World Foundation is an organization dedicated to "[utilizing] solid-state lighting technologies to bring affordable, safe, healthy, efficient and environmentally-responsible lighting to people currently without access to proper lighting," according to lutw.org.

Including travel expenses, the members estimate the entire project will cost around $14,000 to light up about 80 homes, serving around 375 people. The organization hopes to install the systems next August, contingent on fundraising. It would like to spread the project over a few years to continue interest for the organization, but members recognize it may cause jealousy between the villages over the order in which villages receive the lighting.

The organization will run a booth at the football game Saturday. Attendees of the game can "adopt" a home in Ecuador by donating the $100 necessary to pay for its lighting. Smaller donations will go towards the adoption of a fraction of a home or the purchase other components, such as wires.

Barnoff believes the fundrasing may be difficult.

"I think the hardest part will be raising the money to pay for the equipment and to ship it [to Ecuador].

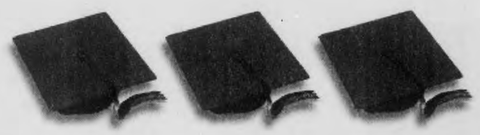
Members have found the experience to be worthwhile.

"It feels great to be 20 years old and to be able to help 375 people. I never thought I could do this or be in an organization like this," Hau said.

Engineers Without Borders is working to achieve its goal. Current members are optimistic about the group's potential.

"It would be great in future years to actually see Engineers Without Borders grow and be integrated with the Engineering curriculum," Hau said.

WE'RE LOOKING FOR A FEW EXCEPTIONAL STUDENTS.



At Quinnipiac University School of Law, you'll find everything you need to succeed. From a challenging yet supportive academic environment to faculty members who will become intellectual colleagues. From live-client clinics to real-world externships. Plus annual merit scholarships ranging from $3,000 to full tuition. For more information, visit law.quinnipiac.edu or call 1-800-462-1944.

- Outstanding faculty
- Rigorous academic programs
- Six concentrations
- Extensive experiential learning opportunities
- Student faculty ratio 15:1

Criminal | Dispute Resolution | Family | Health | Intellectual Property | Tax

Quinnipiac University School of Law
Hamden, Connecticut

Villager GMAC Real Estate
521 N. Derr Dr. Lewisburg, PA 17837
570-523-3244

CALL US FOR THE LARGEST SELECTION OF RENTALS IN TOWN
1–5 Bedroom Units
Houses or Apartments for 2007/2008 and 2008/2009

A few choice units for 06/07 left!

Call Linda or Duska
or e-mail us at linda-treese@villagerrealty.com or duska_rishel@yahoo.com for a complete list of our rentals.

A Bucknell Tradition Since 1968

bull run inn

Open 7 days a week:
Mon. – Sat. 11:30 a.m.—2 a.m.
and Sunday 11:30 a.m. midnight

605 Market St., downtown Lewisburg
ph: (570) 524-2572
www.bullruninn.com
(check for current features and events)

Trick or Treat
Halloween Pop Quiz (21 & over)
- Halloween Trivia Questions -
Tues, Oct. 31 @ 9 p.m.
Costume Contests between rounds:
Best Costume Contest—$50 gift card
Pre-Carved Pumpkin Contest—$25 gift card
Mummy Contest $15 gift card
- Halloween themed specials -

SUNDAY BRUNCH 11:30 a.m.—2 p.m.

Monday Night Football @ 9 p.m.
drawings & specials

Now Open !!
Herwig's of Lewisburg
Authentic Austrian Cuisine
Herwigs
Open Monday thru Saturday
11:45 AM-7:00 PM (last seating)
406 Market Street
(Across from Campus Theatre)
www.herwigsoflewisburg.com
Wilkommen!

Grassroot
Marketing Manager
PA, NY, NJ
We are searching for a clever, entrepreneurial, hard working individual with stamina.
Who will have fun
Generating Leads for:
We Do Metal Roofs
a division of Prudential Realty
1-888-With-Bob
(1-888-948-4262)

Men's rugby team completes successful first season

Despite struggles to attract players, the team finished its fall schedule with a 2-2 record

RUGBY From page A1

gram, the team was finishing up a solid 2-2 fall season. The squad is five times the size of the spring semester team. It has a new official coach.

"It's great to see how far the team has come since last winter," Litzenberger said.

The team had a rough start to the season, losing to Division II York University 8-58, but the team quickly bounced back with a win against second-ranked Division III Widener University, 36-24. On Saturday, Oct. 7, the team ran up against a solid top-ranked Penn State Berks, losing 13-18.

On Saturday the team jumped to a 12-0 lead over Susquehanna in the first half and continued its domination quickly, scoring three minutes into the second half, followed about two minutes later by another score.

Susquehanna picked up its defense, holding off the Orange and Blue for the next 15 minutes. The Bison broke through again, scoring two more touchdowns and holding Susquehanna scoreless the entire game.

With a crowd of about 100, the team finished up the match, scoring two more times, grabbing a 36-0 victory.

"We're improving every game," British exchange student Chris Temple '08 said. Temple, a hooker on the team and a club player at Nottingham University, was impressed with the team's improvement.

"Today was our best game; it was a good all around performance," Temple said.

The win capped off a fall season that saw a team go from the verge of collapse less then a year ago to a team competing against and beating a top Division III competitor (even if the players still had to trade jerseys).

John Hardt, director of athletics & recreation, attributes the club rugby program's disintegration during the fall semester of 2005 to various internal challenges such as a lack of members, cancellation of competitions and a lack of a certified coach.

"Students in the club recognized that it needed to be restructured in order for the club to be successful," Hardt said.

That winter, Mike Houlihan '09 and Litzenberger contacted Joe Santorine in the Recreation Services Office and began to restructure the program.

"Mike and I basically knew a bunch of people who wanted to play rugby," Litzenberger said. "[But] the real reason the team restarted so well boils down to the love and dedication to the sport by the team members."

Over 90 percent of the squad was first-year students, unaware of the rules of the game and without any playing experience.

"But they soon figured out that it is the greatest sport in existence, and stuck with it," Litzenberger said.

After working with the school and the Eastern Pennsylvania Rugby Union (EPRU), Houlihan and Litzenberger organized the first team practice, well aware that an unsuccessful restarting of the program would lead to a collapse of the program for at least four years.

The first team practice was held midway through the winter. Five players showed up.

Houlihan and Litzenberger quickly organized an interest meeting, attracting a few more players, but were still far from sporting a full team. News of the team spread through word of mouth as much as possible.

"It was unclear up to the day that we played how many guys were actually ready and willing to play," Houlihan said.

With the help of the women's club rugby team, the men's team learned the rugby basics, including the immensely important, complex process of scrumming.

"Without their help, getting off the ground would have been a much more difficult process," Houlihan said.

In late March the team faced Division II Bloomsburg in its first match. The Bison found themselves outclassed—most players had never played in an official rugby game before—and was handed a heavy 0-48 loss.

"It was a learning experience," Litzenberger said.

Despite the loss, the team enjoyed the game and kept the program alive. Houlihan praised members of that first squad.

"They were willing to work to get all their friends to come out and stayed passionate about playing. [That] was what really saved the program," Houlihan said.

Since last spring, the team has quickly grown into a 26-member squad, picking up 16 rookies this year. Players range from former varsity football players and track and field runners to former high school football, soccer and wrestling stars and nearly every sort of athlete in between.

"Rugby is the sport for any level of sportsperson—beginner though veteran, uncoordinated through athlete," Head Coach Michael Ingoldsby said. "Wrestlers, lacrosse and football players make good rugby players; also, soccer players pick it up very quickly."

The rookies in particular, Houlihan said, have made an enormous impact on the team.

"The players from the class of 2010 are enthusiastic and have showed as much dedication and team spirit as any other member of the team," Houlihan said. "They really deserve a lot of credit to making the team work."

It has been the addition of Ingoldsby that has made the largest impression on the team this fall.

Early this fall semester, Houlihan met Carrie Ingoldsby, an Activities and Campus Events advisor and the women's rugby team coach, and found out her husband, Ingoldsby, is an avid rugby player. Houlihan quickly e-mailed Ingoldsby and offered him the coaching position, which he accepted.

Ingoldsby, born in Ireland, brought over 16 years of rugby experience to the team and immediately helped provide some of the structure the team was missing.

"Ingoldsby was a big, value-added addition to the club," Hardt said. "He is an experienced and certified rugby coach, and his coaching experience was really able to facilitate the growth and success of the rugby club."

"The team took on the new coach very quickly," Litzenberger said. "He has really pulled the team together and improved the quality of our game drastically. We all respect him not only because he's dedicating his time to coach us, but also because he can hold his own on the rugby pitch."

Midway through the second half of the Susquehanna game, Ingoldsby showed just how well he could hold his own on the pitch, subbing himself in to loud cheers from the crowd.

Like the previous three games, the game against Susquehanna was a "friendly," unofficial match which allowed for more liberal substitutions.

In terms of next semester and gaining full status in the EPRU, Ingoldsby and the team have already started looking ahead.

"Right now we're trying to get organized, get more guys out here," Ingoldsby said. "My expectations for next semester are for us to keep building and progressing as individuals and as a team. I would love to have strong competition for places all throughout the team."

The team, Hardt said, will be allowed to apply for full membership into the EPRU this spring and gain full membership status next fall. The team, in the scheduling process for games next semester, is hoping to play between six and eight matches this spring.

"The guys are very receptive, they want to try their hardest," Ingoldsby said. "They have a lot of heart, a lot drive."

As for the jersey trading? The players are in luck: the team ordered enough new jerseys for the entire squad for the spring.

Dave James—The Bucknellian

International presenters call for re-evaluation of the patient experience burgeoning field in which physicians use humanistic inquiry to treat an individual rather than a specific set of physical phenomena," Nick Kupensky '07 said.

PATIENT From page A1

During the various sessions, speakers presented academic papers, dissertations and works of art and shared personal experiences as patients and caregivers.

In a session titled "Self-Portraits of Patients," Kristin Lindgren from Haverford College narrated her experiences as a patient with an unidentified disease, while Carol Schilling from the University of Pennsylvania recounted her experiences as a caregiver for her paralyzed son.

Julie Aultman, professor of bioethics at the Northeastern Ohio University's College of Medicine, explored conflicts that arise in defining mental illnesses and discussed various approaches to understanding illnesses through literature and visual imagery.

"Medicine is not an exact science. It truly is an art," Aultman said. "Similar to art, there might never be an accurate way of defining mental illnesses. But a discourse has been opened up through literature."

The symposium also presented a reader's theatre, a poetry session as well as a number of the papers presented were top notch scholarship, because of the variety of disciplines present, sions without all of the highbrow academic self-righteousness that typically accompanies these sort of performing artist to explore the various media humanizing the medical field.

> "Similar to art, there might never be an accurate way of defining mental illnesses. But a discourse has been opened up through literature."
>
> —Julie Aultman,
> Professor of Bioethics, Northeastern Ohio University's College of Medicine

"What really fascinated me was that while a good nobody was an expert at everything—and consequently, the entire group of panelists and participants had some of the liveliest discus- things," Kupensky said.

Kupensky was pleased with the University students' efforts.

"What was even more impressive is that Bucknell students played an integral role in running the conferences," Kupensky said.

The graduate students chaired the panels, entertained the presenters and took care of the logistics for two days. Kupensky and Christine Felser '07 also chaired panels at the symposium.

However, student attendance at the symposium was low.

"I was disappointed about students not seizing the opportunity to enlarge their visions. We should work tirelessly to create an atmosphere where students are intellectually curious, even on weekends," Schweizer said.

The Bucknellian
Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue
Volume 138, Number 8
C-3952 Bucknell University
Lewisburg, Pa. 17837
(570) 577-1520
bucknellian@bucknell.edu
http://www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Editor-in-Chief
Catherine Heverling '07

Associate Editor of Content
Jamie Jacobson '08

Associate Editor of Layout
Rina Van Orden '08

Business Manager
Jared Napolitano '08

Senior Editor
Drew Larson '08

News Editors
Evan Unger '09
Nilanjana Saha '09
Michelle Lauxer '09

Opinions Editors
Hallie Stebbins '08
Michael Dippery '08

Sports Editors
Matthew Saylor '08
Barbara Perlman '09
Brian Mulligan '08

Features Editors
Julia Fuchs '09
Brianna DelValle '10

Arts & Entertainment Editors
Kimberly Kane '08
Lily Beauvilliers '09

Photography Editors
Ryan Winn '08
Ellyn Ercolano '09

Chief Copy Editors
Kathleen Conti '08
Greg Hamilton '08

Advertising Managers
Meredith Reighard '07
Kat Wallis '07
Katie Casteel '08
Emily Senko '08

Office Manager
Kate Wood '07

Cartoonist
Juliana Su '09

Adviser
James F. Lee

Op-Ed Policy

The editorials of The Bucknellian reflect the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the editor-in-chief. All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

Letters to the editor must be received by noon on the Tuesday before publication. Letters may not be longer than 600 words and the Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny or edit any letter to the editor. Letters must contain the writer's name and phone number (used for verification purposes and not to be printed). Mail or e-mail letters using the addresses above.

Publishing Information

The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester entirely by Bucknell students. All published material is chosen by the paper's Editorial Board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its adviser, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

Subscription Information

Subscriptions are available for $45 per year or $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian Subscriptions, Bucknell University, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, Pa. 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

Members of the local community may pick up a complimentary issue each week, with the understanding of one free issue per person. If you would like more for a nominal fee, contact the print office.

Advertising Policy

The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements if deemed offensive, illegal or in bad taste. Advertisements reflect the opinion of the advertiser and not necessarily that of The Bucknellian. For advertising rates and information, please contact the advertising department at (570) 577- 1085. Copyright © 2006 The Bucknellian

The Bucknellian
Editorial

Alcohol: Practice what we preach

All of the usual suspects were there to observe National Collegiate Alcohol Awareness Week, which ran from Oct. 19-25.

C.A.L.V.I.N. & H.O.B.B.E.S., a substance-free club, sponsored an Oktoberfest-themed non-alcoholic event at Uptown Tuesday night.

There were at least two guest speakers on alcohol, including a University alumnus who spoke about how he caused a fatal accident after a night of binge drinking.

It was heartening to see the level of support from the Greek community. The majority of University students are Greek. And let's face it, Greeks don't always have the most pristine reputation when it comes to alcohol.

Nearly every Greek organization on campus held a non-alcoholic event last weekend. Delta Gamma and Kappa Alpha Theta sororities joined forces to host an ice cream social that attracted both Greeks and non-Greeks. Pi Phi and Chi Omega sororities teamed up for a pumpkin-painting event.

And there were many more.

Campus fraternities and sororities are required to host a certain number of non-alcoholic events per semester, but the fact that people showed up and participated enthusiastically is a testament to their real support for the cause.

The University is moving in a positive trajectory.

In 2003, the University enacted an emergency alcohol policy after a rash of hospitalizations and DUIs. The policy banned hard alcohol on campus—even for students of age—and increased the penalties for major alcohol infractions to suspension or expulsion.

The emergency measure expired in September, 2004. As students exhibited prudence, the administration relaxed its policies.

But we're still a long way from perfect. On Saturday, the night of the Kanye West concert, Public Safety reported five liquor violations—well above the typical number for a Saturday night.

Whether students were drinking more than usual or whether more were caught due to the heightened police presence (three of the citations were in Sojka Pavilion), it's impossible to say.

Still, for a week when students are being hammered on the head with the idea of drinking in moderation—that's a lot of citations in one night.

As promising as the campus' support for Alcohol Awareness Week was, we need to practice what we preach.

Letters to the Editor

SigEp alumni advocate vandalism investigation

To the Editor:

As founding members of the Bucknell University chapter of the Sigma Phi Epsilon Fraternity, we write to express our concern over recent reports of racial and anti-gay vandalism on the SigEp house and nearby personal property. We write not only to condemn this hate crime, but also to urge the University to employ all resources necessary to ensure swift and firm justice.

As Bucknellians, we are shocked to see such a display of intolerance at our alma mater. The University as we know it is a liberal arts university which prides itself on opening minds and providing a nurturing environment where students, regardless of their sexual orientation or race, may pursue academic and personal achievement.

As the much publicized Plan for Bucknell states, the University "will adopt an unwavering commitment to diversity in all its norms. This commitment will be carried out within a civil, supportive, and nurturing environment of open exchange." We believe this also includes taking appropriate and timely action in all circumstances such as this.

As founding members of the SigEp chapter, we are particularly offended by this vulgar act. When we re-colonized the chapter in the fall of 1997, we expressly committed ourselves to promoting the three cardinal principals of SigEp; virtue, diligence and brotherly love.

Since then, the chapter has demonstrated time and again its commitment to upholding these values. SigEp brothers are leaders on campus through participation in student government, nationally-recognized academic excellence and active involvement in countless student activities.

As founding members, we view this act of vandalism as a direct attack on our values, as well as our chapter house. We urge the University administration to devote the resources necessary to identify those persons responsible for this crime, and to ensure that their actions are punished to the fullest extent allowed under University policy and the law.

We respectfully ask that the University issue a statement describing the steps taken to date in its investigation, including the degree of involvement of local/state law enforcement, as well as any policies and programs designed to prevent similar acts in the future. In conclusion, we assure you that we stand ready to assist the University and our undergraduate SigEp brethren in addressing this deplorable act.

Sincerely,

Carl Becker, '99
Todd Gleason, '99
Brian Green, '00
Matthew Hornick, '00
Stephen Leicht, '98
Michael Kagey, '00
Michael Maffeo, '00
Michael Morris, '00
Mustafa Ostrander, '00
Hugh Paisley, '00
Keith Scarfo, '00
Jason Seymour, '00
Michael Smith, '00
Ryan Ural, '98
Jason Van Druff, '00
Matthew Veitas, '00

ISR offers way to pop the 'bubble'

To the Editor:

In her Oct. 13 article, "Bursting the 'bubble' myth," Janna Shapiro quotes Brian Shassian '08, who suggests that one of the reasons students are ignorant about current events is because they do not subscribe to newspapers or pay for cable television. I would like to point out that ISR can help in this arena. The Ellen Clarke Bertrand Library pays for full-text access to news sources, both electronic and print. There are two databases, "National Newspapers" and "Lexis-Nexis Academic," that offer searchable full-text access to current and back issues of many newspapers, magazines and other news sources. These databases can be accessed from ISR's Databases page, found at http://www.bucknell.edu/ISR >> Doing Research >> Databases and Electronic Resources.

In addition to electronic news sources, the library subscribes to the print versions of many local, national and international newspapers. The most current issues can be found on Level Two of the library in the Current Periodicals room. Need help finding these sources? Stop by the Reference Desk, or call 570.577.1462 during library hours.

Sincerely,

Jason Snyder '98
Student Outreach Group
ISR

Israel at Heart talk an eye-opening experience

To the Editor:

Just before Fall Break began, the University community had the privilege of hosting three Israeli speakers from the organization Israel at Heart. Assya, Yael and Dan each had unique stories but were alike in the fact that they had each served in the Israeli Defense Forces (IDF).

Listening to each of their personal stories was extremely humbling. When I was seven years old, I was playing red light-green light in my driveway. When Assya was seven years old, he was fleeing Ethiopia with his family in a 600 mile journey to Israel on foot. Additionally, while we were all deciding if we wanted to attend a college in the city or a rural area and whether or not to apply early decision, our guest speakers were figuring out which part of the IDF they wanted to serve in.

I personally feel that there is no point in learning if you are not going to look at it from multiple perspectives. By listening to Assya, Yael and Dan tell their stories and answer questions, an incredibly valuable kind of knowledge was achieved in that everyone in the room was given three first-hand viewpoints of life in the Middle East. I cannot express how thankful I am for the opportunity to receive some insight into different cultures. I am confident that this feeling resonates with the members of the University and Lewisburg communities who were in attendance.

I can only hope that the University will be the proud host of more events such as the Israel at Heart presentation. In exposing ourselves to the diverse experiences of others, we enrich our education and allow for a greater potential of success both in and out of the classroom.

Sincerely,

Kim Reynolds '09

Bucknellians have much to learn from Amish neighbors

Traditional Amish culture should be an example to all Americans

By Lauren Berninger
Writer

I recall visiting Lancaster County at the age of ten and being fascinated by the Amish way of life. Touring the Amish countryside with my grandparents, I felt as if I had stepped into the past. I imagined myself as a part of their old-world community and came to the conclusion that while it might be fun for a few days, I would soon come to miss the fruits and freedoms of typical American life.

To most of us, the Amish way of life seems far removed from reality in the 21st century. It is difficult to comprehend many of their practices within this technological age. To some women, the idea of giving birth without the aid of conventional medicine seems horrid and for most of today's men, the career they have in mind does not involve tilling fields for hours on end.

"Why the non-conformity?" we ask ourselves. The "simplicity" synonymous with Amish life seems like a paradox. Life could be so much easier for them if they used the cars and telephones we all so instinctively take for granted. The truth is that the non-conformity of the Amish led to a preservation of tradition and faith handed down from generation to generation.

Whether you agree with their lifestyle or not, I believe looking at Amish culture may serve as a reminder of the many values that have been lost because of the increasing pace of American life in the twenty-first century.

First of all, the Amish uphold family values. In a country where divorce rates are high and respect for family members is often neglected, one might look to a traditional Amish family as a reminder of its importance. The Amish make time for family and in doing so are successful in influencing the values of their children.

Traditional faith in America has declined since the country was founded. With the loss of faith has come the loss of certain morals.

Secondly, the Amish have not forgotten religious values. The Amish remain deeply rooted in their Christian faith which in and of itself may teach the world a few lessons. It seems that traditional faith in America has declined since the country was founded. With the loss of faith has come the loss of certain moral values.

Unlike the Amish, many members of religious institutions have simply decided which conditions of their religion they will follow and which they will reject. The Amish have upheld their religion and, in doing so, recently gave a lesson to the world on forgiveness. Their strong faith in God allowed them to forgive the man who killed five of their children. They even attended his funeral. Had this happened to an American family, there would still be talk of the anger and resentment felt about the incident. The Amish learn to live with things because of faith and move on.

Furthermore, the Amish relish a simple life. Scholars advocated this type of life as far back as Socrates. As a result, they are not caught up trying to accumulate worldly possessions and instead have time to commit to family and a moral life. Thorstein Veblen argued that "conspicuous consumption" forces people to work longer hours to feed their desire to spend money, sacrificing time that could be spent with family and on education, according to Wikipedia.

The Amish way of life, while it may not be desirable to us, is reminiscent of the many values gradually dying out in American society. Taking a look at their culture invites us into a living element of the past where traditional values are ever present and morality is thriving. In a world so caught up in hatred and animosity, a peek into the Amish lifestyle may teach us a lesson for a good life.

Congress bans online poker sites

Passing unpublicized laws leads to distrust of government officials

By Kristina Johnson
Contributing Writer

Friday the 13th was an unlucky day for over 23,000,000 online poker players. On that day, President Bush signed into law the Internet Gambling Prohibition and Enforcement Act.

The Act requires banks to monitor and block payments made to poker accounts, among other restrictions.

Pokerroom.com sent an e-mail to its members on Monday expressing disappointment with the new legislation, writing, "We regret that the U.S. has taken this step to make it virtually impossible to offer real money entertainment to U.S. customers." The e-mail continued, "We believe that a properly monitored forward-looking regulation would be much more effective than this general ban."

The Poker Players Alliance (PPA) is fighting the legislation and encouraging its members to take this issue into consideration on Nov. 7. The PPA has posted a table on their Web site that details the votes cast on the matter by each member of the House of Representatives. The Web site is http://www.pokerplayersalliance.org.

The representative from the University's district, Republican Don Sherwood, voted in favor of the bill. Also featured on the PPA Web site are results from an independent survey in which 74 percent of respondents answered "No" when asked "Should the federal government prevent Americans from playing poker on the Internet?" So how was an act with so little popular support passed?

Backed by Sens. Jon Kyl (R-Ariz.) and Bill Frist (R-Tenn.), the act was added to the SAFE Port Act, a legislation intended to "prevent threats from reaching the United States," and was never open for public debate.

In response to the Act, Michael Bolcerek, president of PPA, alluded to the failure of alcohol prohibition.

"If the goal of Congress is to protect people from the possible dangers of gambling, a prohibition is the worst way of achieving it. All it will do is push poker underground, essentially creating online speakeasies, which will provide no protection for youths, no services for the problem gambler and leave only the most unscrupulous operators in the game," Bolcerek said.

Sen. Frist defended the legislation.

"A quick Web search reveals that Internet gambling has grown out of control. ... Problem gambling destroys lives and families," Frist said.

I have two concerns. First, as with regulations imposed on the sale and use of drugs, making the behavior illegal is not only ineffective, it exacerbates the problem. Second, this act was approved by a majority of the House without any consultation with the people who will be affected.

This is about more than poker; it is about principle. Lincoln's ideal government "of the people, by the people, for the people" requires forethought regarding the effects of legislation, as well as the inclusion of stakeholders in the decision-making process.

Legislation that affects the liberties of Americans should not be snuck in through back doors. This kind of devious behavior leads to the distrust of government. It is unacceptable coming from individuals supposed to be serving the citizens. We should ask ourselves how we can prevent such conniving legislative maneuvers from limiting other activities—activities that ought to fall under our rights to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

Legislation that affects the liberties of Americans should not be snuck in through back doors. This kind of devious behavior leads to the distrust of government.

My Favorite Mistake

Lessons learned from idealism

By Michael Dippery
Opinions Editor

In case you have not figured it out yet, I tend to be a bit verbose. Let me assure you this trait comes through not only in my writing but also in person. Oftentimes, the cheeriness and friendliness of a party are prone to making the words flow.

In other words, sometimes I talk a lot, and this was no more evident than last Friday evening, when, surrounded by friends, I went off on a long speech about how I came to be at the University.

Some might consider it a mistake to share such a long-winded but uninteresting story—and they are probably right. But given the interesting points brought up in the rant, perhaps the mistake was not such a big one at all.

We are all given certain building blocks, and out of them, we must construct the best possible scenarios for spending our rather limited time.

As a child of the '90s, my perceptions of high school were shaped largely by "Saved By the Bell" and "Boy Meets World." Needless to say, upon entering high school I found myself sorely disappointed and bored by my irrational anticipations. Likewise, going through high school, my images of college were shaped largely by stories that do not have a strong basis in reality.

As a kid, I was interested in computers and engineering and aspired to attend MIT. I was an avid reader of the biographies of notable computer scientists. Their own stories of college hijinks and highlights were amusing and inspiring.

I conjured up images of students spending their nights coding up clever pieces of software, not for projects but just because it was fun, and spending their weekends playing humorous but harmless pranks on the unsuspecting campus (which, incidentally, does not include complete morons breaking a priceless chunk of redwood tree).

College, as I lamented at this part, has not seemed to work like this at all. Lectures do not seem to entail the level of student questioning and investigation that I expected. And no one, even the most hardcore student, is in the lab working on free software on Friday nights (more likely, students are out getting drunk and hooking up with like-minded Bucknellians).

Maybe I am being a bit too cynical, even for me. My ruminations made me realize college, like life, is what you make of it. We are all given certain building blocks, and out of them we must construct the best possible scenarios for spending our rather limited time.

I may have had an idealistic view of college, but that does not mean I am missing out on anything by not going to a school that I perceived had a more romantic image.

Looking to advertise within the Bucknell Community?

Contact our advertising department now if you would like your ad to appear in our upcoming vintage issue or holiday issue.

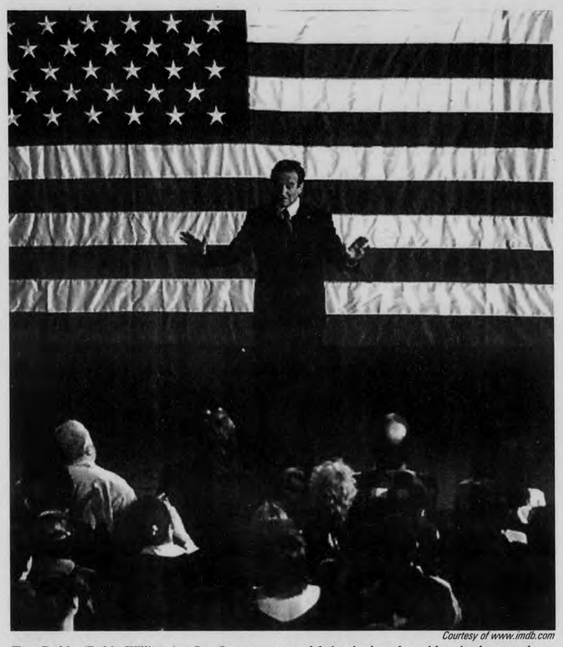
Contact The Bucknellian Business Department today to get an Advertising Guide by calling 570-577-1085 or e-mailing bucknellianads@bucknell.edu.

Something making you angry?

Read something that made you think?

Email your letter to the editor to bucknellian@bucknell.edu today!

Dull comedy not movie of the year



Courtesy of www.imdb.com

Tom Dobbs (Robin Williams), a Jon Stewart-esque celebrity, is elected president in the comedy "Man of the Year." A fluke in computerized voting, known only to one employee, causes the comedian to defeat the Republican and Democratic candidates.

By Kimberly Kane
Arts & Entertainment Editor

❖ Movie Review

What would happen if Jon Stewart ran for president and somehow won? This is the question "Man of The Year" tries to answer. What would happen if Jon Stewart was old, not funny and won due to an implausible computer glitch? This is the question "Man of the Year" does answer.

Robin Williams stars as Tom Dobbs, a late-night talk show host modeled after Bill Maher and Jon Stewart. Much like "The Daily Show," Dobbs' program is wildly popular with young people, who are more likely to get their news from his show than CNN. Taking an audience member's suggestion, Dobbs announces his candidacy for president.

Competing against Democratic President Kellogg and Republican Sen. Mills, Dobbs is placed on the ballot in 13 states. He delivers a series of boring speeches on the influence of special interests in politics and the lack of accountability on the part of politicians. Somehow he makes his way into the final debate with Kellogg and Mills.

Meanwhile, we learn the United States switched to a computerized voting system created by the company Delacroy. A Delacroy employee, Eleanor Green (Laura Linney), discovers a glitch in the computer system that causes it to miscount votes—the digital version of a "hanging chad." Why Green decides to test the system and how the error got past the rest of the programmers is never explained or addressed.

The film becomes increasingly bizarre. Dobbs wins the election after he drops the dry routine and starts cracking jokes. In the debate he leaves his podium to deliver sharp criticisms of his opponents, who are stereotypical caricatures of dull politicians. His manager Jack Menken (Christopher Walken) and producer Eddie Langston (Lewis Black) accompany him around the country.

Menken and Langston, along with a smattering of generally good-looking young people—presumably his writers—make up his entourage. Their primary job is to laugh at Dobbs' jokes, making it extremely uncomfortable for the audience, because the jokes are not that funny.

Green attempts to warn Delacroy about the computer error that put Dobbs in office. The company responds by sending an intruder to her apartment who sedates her with a mix of codeine, cocaine and other drugs. Green then has a breakdown in the Delacroy cafeteria, gets fired and decides to tell Dobbs herself.

The movie asks you to believe it is easy to waltz into the president's party disguised as an FBI agent, enter his inner circle and fall in love with him—all the while hiding from your former employer.

Around this point, the jokes pretty much stop completely and the movie becomes an incredibly dull thriller. Green is chased down by Delacroy thugs while Dobbs has to decide whether or not to give up the presidency.

If the plot sounds lackluster and implausible, that is because it is. The computer error, which Green finally figures out, is ridiculous. Williams, a respected comedian, fizzles in a film that gives him hardly any decent jokes.

Black's performance is a bright spot in this dreary film. He is quick, sarcastic and natural. His performance is also more laid-back than his appearances on "The Daily Show" or the Sojka Pavilion lawn. Walken continues his recent streak of playing bizarre characters in strange films billed as comedies (for further reference see "Click" featuring Adam Sandler—or better yet, do not see it).

The only slightly redeeming quality of the film is its commentary. It may seem ridiculous, but many people have called for people like Jon Stewart and Stephen Colbert to run for office based on their popularity. The film highlights the importance of pop culture in the media, especially with young people. Dobbs' important announcement comes on a surprise appearance on "Saturday Night Live."

While "Man of the Year" has its finger on the pulse of American culture, there is no heart in the movie. If you want political commentary that will actually make you laugh, stick to TV.

An angelically good new start for Tom DeLonge

By Lily Beauvilliers
Arts & Entertainment Editor

❖ CD Review

Blink 182 fans hoping for another catchy, pop-punk album similar to Tom DeLonge's previous work: prepare for a disappointment. His new project, Angels and Airwaves (AVA), shares little with Blink aside from DeLonge's nasal vocals. But if you like hauntingly beautiful melodies cut with strong beats and intensified through electronic instrumentation, then check out Angels and Airwaves' debut album, "We Don't Need to Whisper."

After Blink went on a break in 2005, DeLonge formed AVA with three other talented musicians: guitarist David Kennedy of Box Car Racer, drummer Atom Willard of The Offspring and bassist Ryan Sinn of The Distillers, according to www.allmusic.com. In a year and a half the group crafted an album intended to draw from current trends in music while revolutionizing the rock genre.

Courtesy of amazon

"We would literally shut the blinds, dim all the lights, put Stanley Kubrick's 2001 on the flat-screen TV and take these Stephen Ambrose World War II books, with these two-page spreads of cities burning and people dying, and we'd paste them all over the wall," DeLonge said, according to the band's MySpace page. "So on one end of the room, you'd have the endless hope of space, and on the other end you'd have the worst of humanity, and then in the middle, we'd write a love song."

The resulting album is rife with images of war and romance, artistic turns of phrase and epic musicality.

The first song, "Valkyrie Missile," starts with a two-minute, sweeping opening. Simple guitar and major tonality seem to clash at first with DeLonge's poppy voice, which immediately identifies him as the former lead singer for Blink. Once your ears get used to it, AVA's bright, feel-good sound becomes refreshing.

By far the longest song on the album at six minutes, "Valkyrie Missile" exemplifies what listeners can expect from the rest of the tracks. Strong and dramatic, it listens like a movie soundtrack, with the kind of artistry abandoned since the demise of the rock ballad. AVA comes across as earnest, emotional and mature, not attempting to write big hits but rather to make beautiful music.

The second track, "Distraction," opens with a clear, gorgeous riff and percussion that gradually gets louder until the words cut in: "There's a field nearby / With words written in stone / My love will not die / Please let it be known." These hopeful lyrics contrast with more depressing ones later on: "It's a world of hate / Gone incredibly wrong / We cared too late / We just followed along."

Plenty of bands today sing songs about the war. The war in Iraq and other problems in Israel, India and elsewhere show up frequently in the media. But few groups treat the idea of war in general with the sensitivity AVA achieves.

On the other end of the spectrum, AVA also sings about love, avoiding cheesiness or sentimentality. Track five, "A Little's Enough," opens poorly with synthesizer and rhythms reminiscent of the soft-rock music your aunt listened to in the '90s. Luckily, the mood changes when DeLonge's pop-punk voice enters. This dreamy tune unfolds slowly, ending with the pearl, "The cure is if you let in just a little more love / I promise you this, a little's enough."

Track six returns to the war theme, but the song itself has more edge than previous ones. Faster and harder, the lyrics evoke a World War II scene: "And the beaches / Stretched out with soldiers / With their arms and guns […] And the houses / Laid out like targets / With the deafening sound / We watched them all go down."

Contrast this with the next track, "The Gift." Clear, high and beautiful, this song makes the band's claim to be "angels" and airwaves make sense. The beat is weaker in this song than some of the others, but the artistry gained far outweighs any dance-ability lost. Sweet words ("I'll stop the storm if it rains / I'll light a path far from here / I'll make your fear melt away / And the world we know disappear") appeals to the nobler side of human nature, the side of us that will do anything for those we love.

Attesting to the band's versatility, the next tune, "It Hurts," departs from the positive aspects of love to look at a failing relationship. Instead of evoking strong emotions through distant images of war, AVA uses ideas that are closer to home. The main speaker questions his girlfriend, who seems to spend all her time partying and lying to him: "The alcohol is scented with your breath / You're always done up just to be used / I'm waiting for excuses that deceive / I'll meet you in the back to see them through." He concludes with the painful realization, "Your best friend is not your girlfriend."

The last song, "Start the Machine," talks about new beginnings after destruction. Tinkling sounds like those of a music box mix with heavy bass, producing a song filled with genuine emotion. Some secret in the combination of major tonality, guitar and sweeping electrical sounds will definitely make you smile—an appropriate finale for this strong debut album.

Thirty days, 50,000 words—NaNoWriMo

Get pencils sharpened for National Writing Month

By Sarah Novello
Writer

In five days I will start writing my second novel. In 35 days I will finish it.

Most novelists do not prefer the 30-day novel writing plan. I, along with an estimated 75,000 writers, will attempt it once again in November. November is National Novel Writing Month, and I am counting down the days until it begins.

Chris Baty and 21 friends founded National Novel Writing Month (NaNoWriMo or NaNo) in 1999 in Oakland, Calif. Over the past eight years it spread across the world. It is no longer "national" as there are writers in Europe, Africa, Australia and Asia, but the name has stuck for the sake of a remarkable acronym.

NaNoWriMo writers (WriMos) write 50,000 words in November—technically a short novel. On NaNoWriMo.org, Baty calls 50,000 words a challenging yet attainable goal.

"The length makes it a short novel," Baty said. "We don't use the word 'novella' because it doesn't seem to impress people the way 'novel' does."

Only about 17 percent of WriMos "win" by reaching the 50,000 word mark, yet all who seriously attempt it undoubtedly improve their writing and plot-mustering skills. You have to sit down and write whatever comes to you to write 50,000 words in one month. November is the time to send the "inner editor" on vacation and type like a maniac for two hours a day.

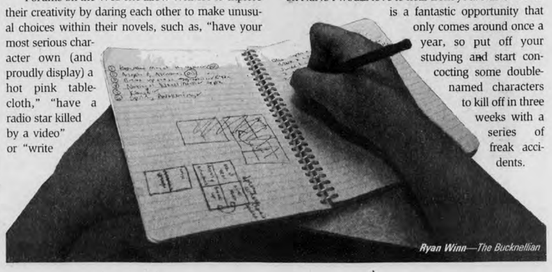
It does not matter what you write. If you are stressed out the characters think about ways to destroy the world. If you are happy they finger-paint on a blimp floating over Azerbaijan.

Because of this freedom, NaNo is described as a "puke-it-out phase"—it is about reaching the word count, not writing the next great masterpiece. Only nine NaNo novels have been published.

"Cheating" is a wonderful way to boost the word count and WriMos came up with many ways to do it. Characters are hard of hearing (the dialogue repeats), have long names (Mary Beth is two words), speak different languages (an English translation is necessary) and do not use contractions.

Since it does not matter what happens in the novel, WriMos can change the plot suddenly, killing off all of their main characters or making the postman's uncle's pet monkey very involved in rocket science.

Forums on the Web site allow WriMos to explore their creativity by daring each other to make unusual choices within their novels, such as, "have your most serious character own (and proudly display) a hot pink tablecloth," "have a radio star killed by a video" or "write a whole scene in iambic pentameter." NaNo is about enjoying the writing process and not taking yourself seriously. As Baty points out, just write and good things will come out … eventually.



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

"Because of the limited writing window, the ONLY thing that matters in NaNoWriMo is output," Baty said. "It's all about quantity, not quality. The kamikaze approach forces you to lower your expectations, take risks, and write on the fly. … Make no mistake: you will be writing a lot of crap. And that's a good thing."

With the exception of the free registration on the Web site the NaNo process is completely individual. The forums are fun and inspiring and the site only exists as a communal area to register, send novels in for word count verification and state the rules of NaNoWriMo. The novel must be written entirely in November—you cannot continue an existing story, which allows you to create characters you do not really care about. This way, their unexpected deaths by a herd of flying purple stingrays will not affect your emotional status.

Baty said the reason NaNoWriMo works is the deadline.

"Give someone a goal and a goal-minded community and miracles are bound to happen," Baty said. "Pies will be eaten at amazing rates. Alfalfa will be harvested like never before. And novels will be written in a month."

Other rules forbid sharing writing duties with a partner, writing screenplays or graphic novels and taking yourself seriously.

Baty said those who "take their writing (and themselves) very seriously should probably go elsewhere."

NaNoWriMo may seem like a waste of time—why write a novel that is expected to be terrible in a ridiculously short period of time when you could just write a good novel when you have the time?

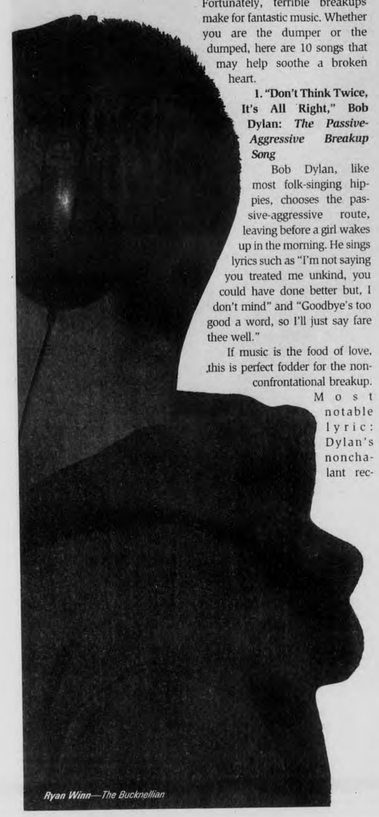
The clever Baty has an answer to this as well. He said 99 percent of people who say they want to write a novel will not start.

"It's so far outside our normal lives that it constantly slips to the bottom of our to-do lists," Baty said.

Throughout the month I will take breaks from my writing to continue with this column and speak of my progress, the progress of others writing on campus and get out some of my grievances.

On Wednesday a copy of my NaNo novel will be available in my public space. If you want to join in on NaNo I would love to hear from you. NaNoWriMo is a fantastic opportunity that only comes around once a year, so put off your studying and start concocting some double-named characters to kill off in three weeks with a series of freak accidents.

Best breakup tunes for every occasion



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

By Angela Tchou
Contributing Writer

Breaking up is hard to do. Fortunately, terrible breakups make for fantastic music. Whether you are the dumper or the dumped, here are 10 songs that may help soothe a broken heart.

1. "Don't Think Twice, It's All Right," Bob Dylan: The Passive-Aggressive Breakup Song

Bob Dylan, like most folk-singing hippies, chooses the passive-aggressive route, leaving before a girl wakes up in the morning. He sings lyrics such as "I'm not saying you treated me unkind, you could have done better but, I don't mind" and "Goodbye's too good a word, so I'll just say fare thee well."

If music is the food of love, this is perfect fodder for the non-confrontational breakup.

Most notable lyric: Dylan's nonchalant recollection of a relationship in which he "once loved a woman, a child I'm told / I gave her my heart, but she wanted my soul." For a woman's perspective, try the Joan Baez cover of this song.

2. "I Will Survive," CAKE: The Chin-Up Breakup Song

John McCrae's steady vocals on this cover make the fact that he tweaks the lyrics to sing, "I should have changed my fing lock" that much better. There is also a trumpet solo. Purists should refer to Aretha Franklin.

3. "Dry Your Eyes," The Streets: The Crying-Drunk Breakup Song

Mike Skinner is an English rapper who never saw it coming. He begs a girl to take him back, telling her he can "change and I can grow or we can adjust … we can even have an open relationship if you must." Despite a sexy English accent and claims that he "can't imagine his life without [her]," Skinner's girl walks away. This is an anthem for all who never thought they would get dumped, attempted to avoid being dumped and still were dumped.

4. "Wish the Worst," The Old 97's: The Bitter Breakup Song

Rhett Miller of The Old 97's does everything anyone who has felt bitter about a relationship wishes he or she could do. He goes to his heartbreaker's house, crawls into her bed, drinks all of her booze, reads her diary and calls all of her friends. His reasoning? "I just wanna know where you've been." The audio manifestation of his bitterness is the chorus in which he sings, "I hope you crash your mama's car, I hope you pass out in some bar / I hope you catch some kind of flu, let's say I wish the worst for you."

5. "Smoke Rings in the Dark," Gary Allan: The Mutual Breakup Song

In response to a relationship in which both parties agree that one is "a certain kind of woman" and the other is "a different kind of man," Allan sings, "I'll just touch your cheek and drift away like smoke rings in the dark." The perfect end to a less-than-perfect relationship.

6. "Where Did I Go Wrong," Martin Sexton: The One-Sided Breakup (and Breakdown) Song

When the breakup is one-sided and you are on the wrong side, this is your soundtrack. As you break down emotionally, analyzing each day of your relationship, pop in this song (the live version is top-drawer) and sit down with a box of tissues. Sexton sings, "Since you've been gone, there's nothing right" and practically sobs the chorus, "Where did I go wrong with you?"

7. "Tracks of My Tears," Smokey Robinson & the Miracles: The Bottling-Up-the-Emotions-of-Your-Breakup Song

The main message of this song: internalizing your emotions does not help anything. Therapists' advice? Lock yourself in a room with this song looped on a nice sound system and cry for a couple of hours. There, that should let it out.

8. "C'mere," Interpol: The Shake & Breakup Song

An upbeat ditty for dancing away your sadness. Interpol evokes a sort of "It's not you, it's me" feeling with this track, singing, "It's way too late to be this locked inside ourselves / The trouble is that you're in love with someone else." And hey, dancing promotes endorphin production and that cannot hurt.

9. "Answering Machine," The Replacements: The Long-Distance Breakup Song

College is unquestionably one of the biggest excuses for a long-distance relationship. Dating across different area codes can be emotionally draining, especially when one person never picks up his or her phone. The Replacements sing it best in this angst-drenched tribute: "How do you say I miss you to an answering machine?" The hard, fast truth: you cannot. So get over it a little faster by listening to this song.

10. "Autumn Sweater," Yo La Tengo: The Awkward-Meeting-After-the-Breakup Song

Ira Kaplan's mellow vocals matched with an instrumental chorus heavy with percussion give this song a heavy, anxious feeling. It describes a post-breakup meeting: "When I heard the knock on the door, I couldn't catch my breath / Is it too late to call this off … Me with nothing to say and you in your autumn sweater." The nervousness of the situation is put into music and explodes into percussion at the end of each verse.

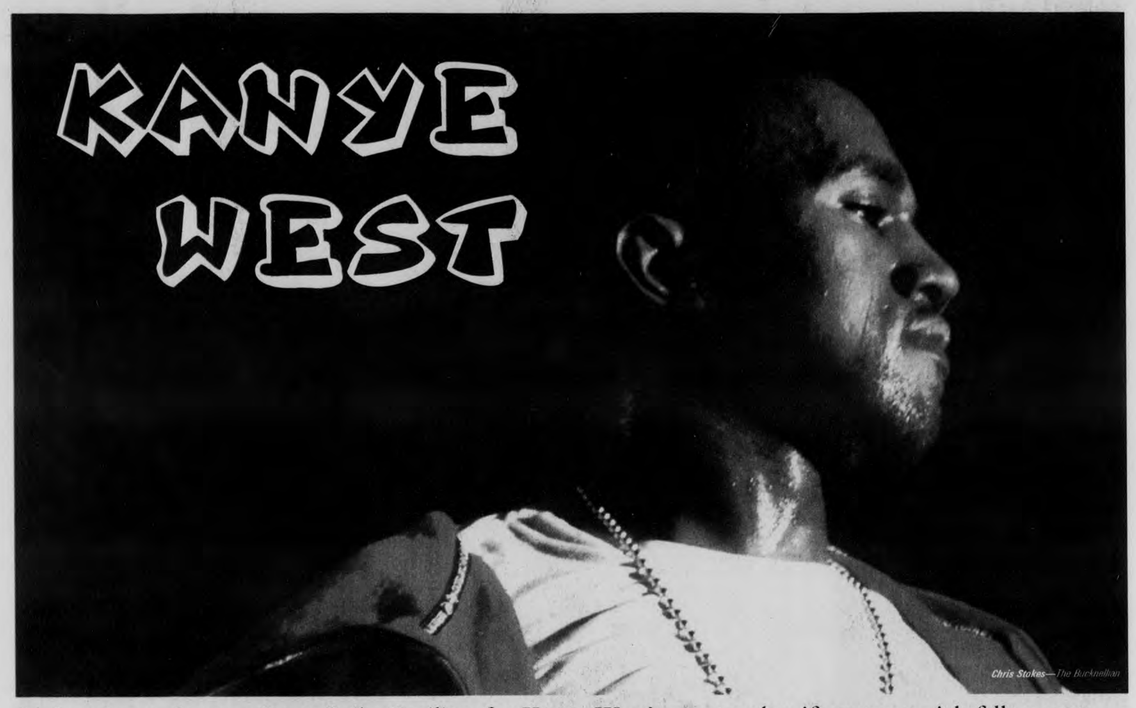
Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Spring Awakening

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

German expressionist play "Spring Awakening" by Frank Wedekind will be performed at the Harvey M. Powers Theatre tonight, Saturday, Sunday and Monday at 8 p.m. Tickets are $8, $6 with student ID, and are available at the Campus Box Office.



Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

University students unite at Sojka Pavilion for Kanye West's spectacular, if controversial, fall concert

BRIAN MULLIGAN
Sports Editor

When I first heard about the fall concert, I couldn't believe my ears. Kanye West, a six-time Grammy winning artist, was going to grace the University community with his music. The hum around campus was infectious. The excitement and expectations were very high.

My expectations were confirmed when I walked downhill Saturday night and saw the throng of students swarming outside of Sojka Pavilion awaiting West's performance.

The night began with music from DJ Jeff Martin '07, who set the mood by providing entertainment to excite the crowd for the coming performance. When Martin exited the stage, the crowd grew restless.

Suddenly, the lights dimmed and Sojka exploded. West's extensive ensemble, consisting of two back-up singers, a six-piece string orchestra and a DJ, took the stage. The sound was deafening.

The energy reverberated throughout the crowd as West sprang across the stage and opened up with "Diamonds from Sierra Leone (Remix)," from his sophomore album, Late Registration. The controversial song consists of lyrics about the debate over the blood-diamond trade in Africa.

The lyrics include: "Good Morning, this ain't Vietnam still. People lose hands, legs, arms for real. Little was known of Sierra Leone. And how it connect to the diamonds we own."

West is no stranger to controversy, with songs such as "Jesus Walks" catching the ire of religious groups. At the concert, he played the song without apology.

West continued to electrify the crowd with another seminal track from Late Registration, "Heard 'Em Say," which was performed as a duet with his female back-up vocalist.

As the performance progressed, West performed an array of songs from artists including Twista, Jay-Z and Gnarls Barkley, along with a spectacular dance performance from his back-up singer. These extra excerpts from other artists' albums added to the diversity of the music and the excitement of the crowd.

"I thought Kanye's performance was incredible. He had the whole crowd singing and dancing for the entire length of the concert and kept everyone on their feet," said Adam Weinberg '07, president of Bucknell Student Government. "It was energetic, fun, and exciting to just be in the crowd—I could not have asked for a better show."

West finished up his set with a catchy dance song featuring Lupe Fiasco, "Touch the Sky."

As he walked off stage and the lights went up, many students were surprised that his set was so short (the show actually ran 72 minutes), but the pervading feeling was exhilaration.

"Although the concert was a little short, the venue was good, and it had a really fun atmosphere. Everyone seemed pretty pumped about it," Jackie Misero '10 said.

The Concert Committee had a vision to bring the biggest artist possible to campus. Kari Conrad, associate dean of students and adviser to the committee, felt that it succeeded.

"One of the goals for this concert was to make it a 'Bucknell' show and fill Sojka with Bucknell students," Conrad said. "I think this goal was met. The feedback that we have received has been excellent thus far, although I do think they all would have liked a longer show."

Suddenly, the lights dimmed and Sojka exploded. West's extensive ensemble, consisting of two back-up singers, a six-piece string orchestra and a DJ, took the stage. The sound was deafening.

Some members of the campus community were concerned about bringing a rap artist to campus. When rapper Busta Rhymes performed at the University three years ago ticket sales were lackluster.

Bringing West, who typically plays at much larger venues, to a small central-Pennsylvania school required a significant monetary commitment.

"We asked our agent to look into Kanye, not really thinking it was a realistic possibility, and he seemed to think there was a chance we could get him," said Lauren Brian '07, co-chair of the Concert Committee. "We then went to [Bucknell Student Government] BSG for additional funding and they unanimously voted to provide us with the money. Kanye accepted our bid and the rest is history."

The obstacle for the committee was monetary constraints, and that is where BSG stepped in to contribute.

"This concert was worth BSG's investment, because it was an opportunity to bring a high profile artist for a reasonable price. The overall success of the previous concerts put BSG and the concert committee in the position to go after a high end name like Kanye West," said John Kimball '07, vice president of finance for BSG. "Personally, BSG has no regrets funding the extra money to bring Kanye to Bucknell. It was an opportunity to unite the campus together. It was the first time that I saw all of my friends attend a Bucknell concert."

After the announcement that West was coming to campus, there were rumors about the lack of funds for a spring concert and Chrysalis, and the ability of the committee or BSG to bring a name artist for either. Kimball has high hopes for the caliber of the shows to come.

"Over the past few weeks, BSG has been hearing some rumors regarding the costs and whether we will have any other concerts or lectureships," Kimball said. "I just want to squash these rumors, and say that we will have a spring concert, our annual lecture and Chrysalis. Also, this concert will not affect the quality of artist we are going to bring in for the spring concert."

With all controversy aside, West provided the best performance I've ever seen at the University, and this may mean great things to come.

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

A huge crowd consisting largely of University students showed up for the Kanye concert. Although rap artists have not been received well in the University's past, Sojka Pavilion was filled to the brim.

The Bucknellian
October 27, 2006
Sports
Volume 138, Number 8 | Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue | www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Get in the spirit

The back page of Feats takes a look at the origins of Halloween and fun ways to celebrate this spooky holiday.

See page B10

Women's soccer clinches playoff berth

BY JOSEPH DEBRAGGIO
Writer

The women's soccer team won its past three games, beating American 3-1 Oct. 14, Army 1-0 Friday and Holy Cross 3-1 Sunday to improve to 11-4-1 and 5-1 in league play. In the process, the team clinched a spot in the Patriot League Playoffs beginning Nov. 3.

On a very windy Sunday the Bison took to the field against Holy Cross in the team's senior game. Seniors Lauren Bayne, Shannon Curd, Katie Dry, Marney Egan, Caitlyn Kuntz, Jennifer Margolis and Jennifer Mrozek were honored before the game.

Bucknell 3
Holy Cross 1

Despite the Bison having the wind behind them, Holy Cross jumped out to an early lead. Less than two minutes into the game Crusader forward Casey Boland received a pass and put her shot over goalkeeper Dry to give Holy Cross a quick 1-0 lead.

The Orange and Blue recovered from the setback and started creating good scoring opportunities. In the eighth minute, Kimberly Cannon '08 fired a curving left-footed shot that just missed the goal.

Just over two minutes later, the Bison set up another attack. Curd played a beautiful ball through the defense for Chelsea McGorry '10. McGorry brought the ball to the end line and crossed into the middle. Krista Lee Gentile '08 met the ball in the air and her header snuck through the defender's legs on its way into the goal. The goal was Gentile's team-leading eighth of the season.

The Bison began to dominate play, especially McGorry, who was having little trouble beating her mark on the right side of the midfield. With 25 minutes remaining, Nicole Marotta '09 had a good chance but it was saved by the Holy Cross goalkeeper.

The score remained tied going into the half but the teams switched sides, giving Holy Cross the wind advantage. That advantage did not show itself early in the second half as both Gentile and Cannon had good attempts on goal. For the first 25 minutes of the second half, the ball rarely found itself in the Bison's defensive zone.

With 12 minutes remaining, Jennifer Dervarics '09 found Margolis and she scored the breakaway goal, putting the ball into the bottom right corner. Four minutes later Gentile crossed the ball into the box and the ball was knocked to Margolis, who buried her shot into the roof of the net to put the game out of reach.

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Krista Lee Gentile '08 maneuvers past a Holy Cross defender. Gentile leads the team in both goals and points, notching eight and 20 respectively.

With the two-goal performance, Margolis increased her season total to seven goals and picked up the BRINE Offensive Player of the Week award.

With the 3-1 final over the Crusaders, the Bison set a program record by going undefeated at home for the first time in the program's history.

"The seniors have been through a lot in four years. It was wonderful to win together yesterday," Team Captain Curd said.

"Sending our seniors off with a win like that, to finish an undefeated home record this year for the regular season was very special," Head Coach Ben Landis '96 said.

In order to finish undefeated at home, the Orange and Blue had to beat Army. On a very cold Friday night, Army set the tone of the game from the start with good pressure on the Bison's defense.

The game was very physical, with Army having a 12 to nine advantage in fouls by the end. After about 15 minutes, the Orange and Blue evened out play and the game settled down. Dry made a great save with 29 minutes left in the first half to preserve the 0-0 tie. Dry finished the game with two saves.

Bucknell 1
Army 0

The triple threat of Gentile, Margolis and Dervarics moved the ball around and created a few strong chances in the first half, including a shot by Dervarics that just missed the left post with 15 minutes remaining in the half.

Army opened the second half like the first, getting a corner right away and producing good attacks.

The Bison weathered Army's attack and in the 50th minute Gentile crossed the ball to Margolis, who put her shot to the left of the goalkeeper for the 1-0 lead.

The Bison defense, playing tough all game, broke up a breakaway less then a minute later. With 21 minutes left Dry made a diving save to the right to save a sure Army goal and keep her shutout. The shutout marked the team's fifth of the season, equaling a program record reached by five other teams.

Margolis almost added a second goal in the game when she received a pass from Gentile. Margolis' shot beat the Army goalkeeper, but the ball did not have enough speed and was cleared by an Army defender before it could roll into the goal.

The Orange and Blue held fast during the final 10 minutes of the game to win 1-0. The win over Army, along with a Colgate win over Holy Cross on Friday, clinched a spot in the Patriot League Tournament for the Bison.

The team played American on Oct. 14 at home and wasted no time asserting its dominance over the visitors. Margolis took a cross from Gentile in the second minute of play and put the ball in for a 1-0 lead. The goal marked Margolis' fifth in her career of four games against American.

Bucknell 3
American 1

In the 35th minute the rebound from McGorry's shot fell to Gentile who knocked the ball into the goal to notch a 2-0 lead for the Bison.

McGorry assisted on the third goal as well. With a little over six minutes left in the first half, McGorry's ball got by the American goalkeeper and was finished off by Molly Linhart '10.

The three goals were all the Bison needed as they won the match 3-1. With the win over American, the Bison were ranked number 14 in the Soccer Buzz Mid-Atlantic regional poll for the first time in program history.

"From the first whistle to the first goal just 73 seconds into the match, to the end of the first half, we played probably the best 45 minutes of soccer that we have played all year," Landis said. "Three good goals, solid possession

See SOCCER page B5

Women's crew beats nation's best

Varsity four earns gold at the Head of the Charles Regatta in Boston

Courtesy of Page Kannor

From left to right: Katie Kessler '10, Whittney Henry '09, Kelly Henkler '09, Page Kannor '09 and Caitlin Doolin '09 show off their hardware after winning the Head of the Charles.

BY ROB BLAKEMORE
Staff Writer

Success in this sport is all about sweat and dreams, and no dream is bigger in fall racing than winning a gold medal at the Head of the Charles Regatta, which is exactly where members of the Women's V4+ found themselves treading Saturday.

The boat was crewed by the familiar combo of stroke-Kelly Henkler '09, 3-Page Kannor '09, 2-Caitlin Doolin '09, bow-Whittney Henry '09 and coxswain Katie Kessler '10. The cox guided the engine room down the course in just 20 minutes 27.22 seconds, two seconds ahead of Penn State, who was 27 seconds ahead of the rest of the field of 27.

The gold comes just a week after a silver medal effort at the Philadelphia Navy Day Regatta on the Schuylkill River.

This was the first time the women's crew team won a medal at the race. The event is the world's largest two-day regatta, drawing over 7,500 athletes and 300,000 spectators to the banks of the Charles River.

The head race format means a staggered start, with the shortest elapsed time from start to finish winning the event. On the course you never know quite where you stand, and the only answer is to keep driving harder. The result for the Bison was the equivalent of a wire-to-wire win, with the fastest time to each of the checkpoints.

"This was my first time racing the Charles," Henry said. "It's amazing knowing you are one of the select few [to win]."

Keeping Henry safe from the notorious bridges and boat traffic was Kessler, who showed a lot of composure for her third collegiate race. She kept a cool head when slower competition would not yield, called for the boat to weigh enough and deftly avoided a crash that could have cost them the race.

"We had to have a lot of confidence and trust in our coxswain," Doolin said. "It saved us a lot of time as opposed to crashing."

Kannor, whose first-year effort helped the varsity eight win the Patriot League Championship, credited the boat's preparation here at home on the Susquehanna for giving the squad the opportunity to succeed. The boat spent a lot of time perfecting the sharp turns and quick maneuvering necessary to excel on the twisty course in a 41-foot shell built for speed in the sprint season.

The win came on the tail of a second

See ROWING page B6

Volleyball rocks the weekend

BY ELLIS HUDES
Staff Writer

The volleyball team "rocked the house" with two of its biggest wins of the season, pulling out a pair of 3-2 thrillers over second-place Army and Holy Cross in Davis Gym over the weekend.

Bucknell 3
Army 2

The Bison improved to 6-3 in the Patriot League and 15-10 overall, but more importantly they made a statement to league rivals that they belong among the elite.

For the second time this season Jenna Henderson '08 was named Patriot League Player of the Week. Not only did she lead the team in kills with 45, averaging an impressive 4.50 kills per game, but she also matched her career-high against Holy Cross with 23 kills and recorded another double-double versus Army with 22 kills and 10 digs. Henderson served five aces to round out her fantastic weekend.

Three other Bison received Honorable Mentions for the week. Rachel Freeman '10 had a career-high 22 digs against Army and averaged 3.40 digs per game last week. Kristen Sydlowski '07 averaged 5.00 digs per game: 20 against Army and another 30 against Holy Cross.

Sydlowski now has 978 career digs, moving her past Emily Pomeroy '99 into fifth place for career digs in University history. Shannon Pitsch '09 had two double-doubles over the weekend, equaling a career-high 58 assists against Army and posting a new personal-best 20 digs versus Holy Cross.

On Friday, students packed into Davis Gym for "Rock the House Night" against the formidable Army Black Knights. A number of fraternities, sororities and athletic clubs cheered in the stands that night, contributing to the electric atmosphere.

Army dictated play throughout the first game, winning it comfortably 30-21. The Orange and Blue rebounded well and shocked their opponent at the outset of the second

See VOLLEYBALL page B5

Football spilts two on the road

Football squad beats out Georgetown while falling against Lehigh

By Marcus Mateer
Staff Writer

It was a tale of two defenses. The Bison defense held Georgetown University to only 269 total yards and seven points on Oct. 14. One week later, Lehigh University rushed for 227 yards and scored 38 points. The Bison (4-4, 1-2) defeated Georgetown 17-7 and fell to the Mountain Hawks 38-7 in the two away games.

The Orange and Blue started strong against Lehigh (3-4, 2-0), moving 45 yards in 13 plays, mostly on the ground. A critical drop by wide receiver Daniel Zvara '09 on the third down left the coach with a difficult decision. On fourth-and-five at Lehigh's 33-yard line, Head Coach Tim Landis elected to go for it rather than attempting a long field goal or a pooch punt, but the run was stopped.

Lehigh gouged the defense for 51 yards on the ground on the ensuing drive. Quarterback Sedale Threatt snuck it in from the one-yard line for a 7-0 lead. Following the kick, a fumble by A.J. Kizekai '10 handed the Mountain Hawks ideal field position at the Bison 34-yard line. Ten plays later, Threatt ran across the goal line again for a 14-0 lead.

Lehigh 7
Bucknell 38

Following a Lehigh field goal, the Bison refused to quit. Quarterback Marcello Trigg '10, who had a career-high 91 rushing yards, used his legs and his arm to marshal the offense down the field. Capping one of the most impressive drives of the year, Trigg hit Richard Simpson '07 over the middle for the score.

The Mountain Hawks took the opening drive of the second half and blasted the Bison defenders for a 24-7 lead. The Bison had a chance to stop Lehigh's offense on their next possession, but a roughing-the-kicker penalty kept the home team's drive alive. The ensuing touchdown iced the game.

"We couldn't get the ball back all game," Landis said. "Roughing the kicker, that was a real back-breaker. [The return team] was in return mode, and I'm not sure how we got a roughing penalty on that. It put the defense in a tough position. It was a bad break."

Trigg forced a pass on the next drive. The resulting interception allowed Threatt to put an end to the game. He hit Mike Fitzgerald for 29 yards and a score, finalizing the point total.

> "It doesn't matter what I do. We went out and got the win. It's good to see that our hard work is starting to pay off."
> —Kevin Mullen '09

Very little defense was evident on either side in the game. The Bison racked up 250 rushing yards to match Lehigh's total. This was in stark contrast to the game in Washington, D.C.

Georgetown (1-6, 0-4) had great difficulty moving the ball against the stodgy defenders. Dorian Petersen '07 was all over the field notching his 9.5 tackles. Until the final two drives, the Bison only gave up 126 yards in total offense. Coming in, they were averaging well over 400 yards per game.

Bucknell 17
Georgetown 7

The Orange and Blue struck first on a field goal by Will Carney '09 late in the first quarter. Georgetown's Charlie Houghton was plastered on the following drive and Petersen fell on the loose ball. Trigg hit Zvara for 26 to the Hoyas' 7-yard line, allowing Peter Kaufman '07 to punch it in for a 10-0 lead.

Penalties killed the next three Bison drives, but the defense held the home team scoreless until the half.

"We executed well, but didn't put quite as many points on the board as we wanted," Trigg said. "We just had to execute and everybody had to work together to get that win."

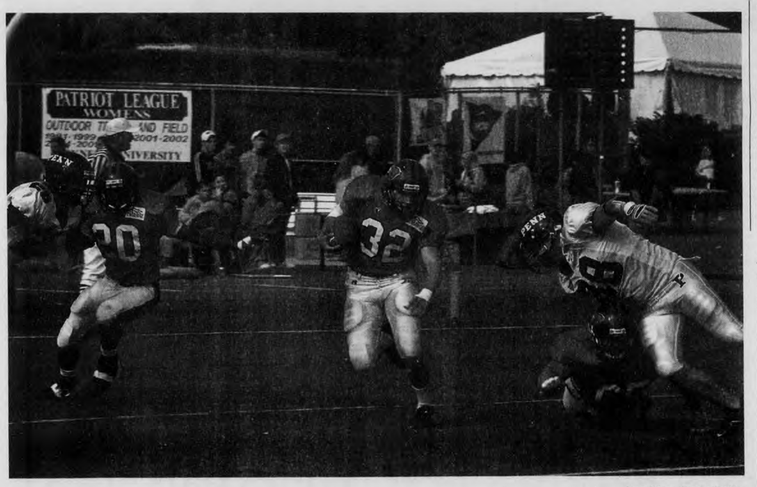
The second half was similar to the first. Neither team put together a drive until the fourth quarter. Georgetown finally gained some momentum, stringing together a series of short completions to work their way down to the Bison 39-yard line. Then Ryan Slater '08 stripped the ball and Brigham Farrand '10 fell on it.

Trigg overcame a holding penalty by hitting Zvara for a first down . Kevin Mullen '09 and Kizekai pounded the ball the rest of the way. Mullen, who had a career-high 110 yards on the day, rumbled in for the score and a 17-point lead.

"It doesn't matter what I do," Mullen said. "We went out and got the win. It's good to see that our hard work is starting to pay off."

The Hoyas entered into two-minute mode. For some reason in football, a team stymied the entire game can move the ball when time begins to run short. That is what happened at the end of this game, but it was too little, too late. When Georgetown finally crossed the goal line, only 27 seconds remained on the clock. Stephen Collage '08 fell on the onsides kick to end it.

Fordham comes to Christy Mathewson-Memorial Stadium during Parents' Weekend. The 2-5 Rams look to obtain their first Patriot League win, while the Bison hope to get back over .500. Kickoff is at 1 p.m. on Saturday.



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Running back Peter Kaufman '07 jukes around a Quaker defenseman in a recent home game. Kaufman is averaging 4.8 yards per carry and is tied for the team lead with four touchdowns.

Polo struggles over fall break

By Ty Clark
Staff Writer

With four road games over fall break, the men's water polo team ended the regular season with a 1-3 weekend.

"It is always difficult to summarize weekends where there is disappointment in our performance," Head Coach John Zeigler '91 said. "But this round of away league games provided us with many different lessons larger than just wins and losses which we must use as final learning experiences."

In the first match Sean Robinson '07 scored a career-high four goals to power the Bison to a 13-12 victory over league rival Johns Hopkins. Trailing 9-7 at the half, the team responded with a 4-1 third period to take an 11-10 lead before holding on to win. Kyle Roslyn '08 set a career high with three goals and four assists for the Bison, who were 3-of-4 with a man-advantage.

Bucknell 13
JHU 12

"It is a difficult place to play and a different kind of game," said Zeigler, speaking of Johns Hopkins' facilities. "But we learned that we can play a very fast-paced, aggressive offensive style and be very successful."

Defensively, the Bison were just as solid. Mark Masterson '07 set a career high with six steals to help the season-high 21, and the Bison received solid goaltending from Luke Belenky '08, who recorded six saves.

The Bison then traveled to Navy, where the 10th-ranked Midshipmen downed the Bison for the eighth consecutive meeting 10-5. The Orange and Blue outscored Navy 5-4 in the second and third periods, but they were outscored 6-0 in the opening and closing quarters in the loss. Five Bison scored in the match and Belenky tied his career high with 11 saves.

Navy 10
Bucknell 5

For the weekend's third game, the Bison traveled to George Washington, where they fell 7-6 to the Colonials. Masterson set a pair of personal marks, tying his career mark of 48 goals in a season and setting a new career high with his 72nd point this season, thanks to his two goals and three assists. Roslyn and Jason Rechel '08 scored two apiece to help the Bison's cause. Rechel added three steals as well.

GWU 7
Bucknell 6

"Great teams respond to frustrating losses by coming out with a new level of intensity and desire," Zeigler said. "We did not and it cost us a win in a game that had no business even being close."

The final match took place at No. 15 Princeton, where Princeton downed the Orange and Blue 12-10. Seeking their second win against Princeton since 1998 the Bison faced the Tigers for the third time this year. They fell three times by increasingly smaller margins. The Bison led 6-5 at the half but Princeton took the lead in the third and held on to win by two. Gabriel Heiber '09 scored four goals while Chet Eimstad '10 added two goals, an assist and a steal.

Princeton 12
Bucknell 10

Zeigler observed that various pieces of the puzzle were coming together for the team but noted the bigger picture.

"Putting this all together into 32 minutes of high-level performance is what will get us there," Zeigler said. "All the cylinders have to be cranking two weekends from now."

The regular season is over, leaving the Orange and Blue with a 12-10 (3-5 in league play) record. The Bison will face off against Gannon in the Southern Championships beginning at 12:45 p.m. Saturday.

"You can expect to see some competitive water polo this weekend," Heiber said. "Hopefully, we will have some good fan turn out, because that can really make a difference."

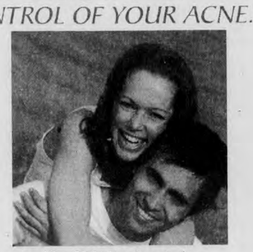
"This is a team that I have been confident in all along with regards to a championship run," Zeigler said. "We look forward to bringing a Conference championship back to Bucknell and then making a run at taking the East.

This just in...

Men's Soccer

The Bison lost to No. 7 Maryland 4-1 on Tuesday at College Park, Md. Joey Kuterbach '08 made nine saves in the match, which saw the Terrapins score three goals in the first 11 minutes of the game. The Orange and Blue got on the board in the second half, when Anthony Ferraro '09 tallied his second goal of the season. Maryland scored its final goal a little more than a minute later to end the scoring on the night.

ACNE?
TAKE CONTROL OF YOUR ACNE...NOW!



Blue Light Treatments Are:
*Simple
*Affordable
*Effective- They Work!

Bucknell Students Only...
Call before December 1st for a FREE consultation and receive a FREE Blue Light Treatment ($175.00)

CENTER FOR SKIN HEALTH
Ernest Normington, M.D., FACS
210 JPM Road in Lewisburg (570) 524-7777 www.drnormington.com

Domino's Pizza - A Proud Partner of Bucknell University
LEWISBURG • 524-9000
1722 Market St.

MANIC MONDAY $7.99 LARGE 1-TOPPING PIZZA - DELIVERED!
2xTUESDAY BUY ANY LARGE PIZZA AT REGULAR MENU PRICE & RECEIVE A 2ND OF EQUAL VALUE FOR FREE
WACKY WEDNESDAY BUY ANY LARGE PIZZA AT REGULAR MENU PRICE AND GET A SIDE ITEM FREE
TERRIFIC THURSDAYS $4.99 LARGE CHEESE PIZZA
HOT BROWNIES FREE
DOUBLE DEAL $11.99 2 MEDIUMS $13.99 2 LARGES
CHICKEN SPECIAL $17.99
CARRY-OUT DEAL BUY ANY PIZZA AT REGULAR MENU PRICE & RECEIVE A 2ND OF EQUAL VALUE FOR FREE

CALL TODAY! 1.800.DOMINOS
(1.800.366.4467)

Men's golf ties for second

By Connie Barko
Staff Writer

During fall break, the men's golf team competed at the Don Mershon Classic in Teleford, Pa. The team played against 11 other schools and tied for second with host school Lehigh University.

"After a tough first day, we knew we needed to go low on Sunday to have a chance at winning," Rahul Desai '08 said. "I thought we closed with a very solid final round, unfortunately it wasn't quite good enough."

The invitational had its own set of obstacles for the Bison to overcome. Because of frost, which shortened the amount of daylight available, all of the teams had to complete Sunday's first round on Monday as well as play the entire second.

"Fairly windy conditions, finishing first round on Sunday and then starting the second round immediately was a difficult adjustment that we had to overcome," Desai said.

Charlie Waddell '07 pinpointed another factor that negatively affected play.

"Amongst the team and myself, the problem was definitely on the greens. The greens had a lot of 'poe' in them which is a foreign type of grass. Poe grows a lot faster than the rest of the grass on the greens, so because they didn't cut the greens between the first and second rounds, the greens became almost unputtable and we couldn't adjust," Waddell said.

Both Waddell and Desai supported the Bison's finish by placing in the top 10. Waddell earned second place overall. He shot 77 during the first round and earned a par of 72 during the second day of play. Desai shot 74 and 78 to place seventh out of 53 competitors.

Keita Aoki '08 and Chas Wagner '07 finished 14th and 17th, respectively. Aoki shot 81 in the first round and 75 in the second while Wagner ended 81-76. Finally, Stuart Lindgren '08 shot 88-79.

The Orange and Blue will compete at the Mt. St. Mary's Invitational Saturday and Sunday in Littlestown, Pa. It will be their last invitational of the semester.

Bison spilt four games

Field hockey ends regular season with a must-win game against Lafayette in Easton, Pa.

By Shannon Pitsch
Staff Writer

In its last four match-ups, the field hockey team earned wins against Colgate and Cornell while suffering losses to Holy Cross and Brown. The Bison, with a record of 6-8 and a conference mark of 1-3, must defeat the Lafayette Leopards on Saturday to earn a berth in the Patriot League Championships.

The Bison traveled to Worcester, Mass. to take on conference heavy-weight Holy Cross on Saturday. The Bison began the match confidently with a goal just 10 minutes into play. It came off a rebound penalty corner from Katie Urosevich '07. Despite six subsequent shots on goal and five penalty corners, Urosevich remained the only Bison to score. Twenty minutes into the first half, the Crusaders tied it up with a goal from Tara Welch. Senior goalkeeper Emily Groendyke's five saves closed out the first half with a tie score of 1-1. In the first five minutes of the second half, Welch scored again off a rebound to give Holy Cross the 2-1 lead.

Holy Cross 2
Bucknell 1

For most of the season, the dominance of Alex Kyzmir '07 and Amanda Faust '09 in executing penalty corners paced the Bison offense. Against Holy Cross, the team had five incomplete opportunities. Head Coach Heather Lewis believes that this contributed to the loss.

"We are a team whose success is often times determined by our penalty corner execution," Lewis said. "This weekend, we weren't as sharp as in previous weekends and it caught up to us. We had a number of good scoring chances against Holy Cross but couldn't convert; unfortunately, that was our downfall against Holy Cross."

The Orange and Blue were out-shot 14-7 by the Crusaders, but two more saves from Groendyke in the second half limited the score to 2-1. Holy Cross advanced to 12-3 on the season. The Crusaders are tied with American for first in the Patriot League with an undefeated 4-0 record.

The team traveled to Providence for a non-conference match against Brown University on Sunday. Urosevich led the offense, scoring 23 minutes into the game on an assist from Steph Graf '09 to tie the score at 1-1. Chyncia Smith '08 scored late in the second half on a penalty corner from Kelly Hoffman '08 and Katie Ruiz '09. Unfortunately, the goals were not enough as Brown defeated the Bison 5-2.

Brown 5
Bucknell 2

The Bison picked up a pair of wins during fall break, including their first Patriot League win of the season, which broke a tough five-game losing streak. Despite the absence of the student body on Oct. 14, parents, locals and other sports teams cheered seniors Callista Costpolous, Groendyke, Sheri Keener, Kyzmir, Anne Lutz, Heather Rodgers and Urosevich on as they played their last conference match at home against Colgate University.

Bucknell 4
Colgate 2

Hoffman commented on the home field advantage.

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Kelly Hoffman '08 clears the ball out of the Bison's defensive half. The Orange and Blue will play for a playoff bid in their final regular season match against Lafayette this Saturday.

"We came out to our home field to play Bucknell field hockey," Hoffman said. "Meaning we had a unified mindset that we were going to play with heart, play with and for each other, and that we were confident in our ability as a team to play well and to compete with intensity and emotion against other good teams."

The Bison offense started strong with a goal from Trina Boyer '09 on a penalty corner from Faust in the third minute of the game. Just 10 minutes later, the pair scored a second time with an assist from Faust which placed Boyer in front of the net. The 2-0 lead lasted only a short time.

> "We came out to our home field to play Bucknell field hockey. Meaning we had a unified mindset that we were going to play with heart, play with and for each other, and that we were confident in our ability as a team to play well..."
> —Kelly Hoffman '08

Colgate responded with two goals of their own. The Orange and Blue had the advantage in shots 10-4 and penalty corners 7-2 in the first half. Offensively dominant, the Bison refused to end the half with a tied score. In the last minute of the half, Faust notched her third assist of the game with a pass to Megan Krebs '10 on the left side of the net.

The Bison maintained the lead for the rest of the second half, collecting a fourth goal from Faust, this time assisted by Graf and Kyzmir. Defensively, Groendyke collected five saves. The Bison earned their first Patriot League win with a score of 4-2 over Colgate.

Lewis was pleased with the Bison performance over fall break.

"We really challenged ourselves on fall break to come away with two wins against a quality league opponent in Colgate and a non-league foe in Ivy member Cornell," Lewis said. "I was very pleased with how we responded to the challenges—both mentally and physically. Against Colgate we had great enthusiasm and energy for the game and it showed as we got up early on them 2-0 and went on to win 4-2."

In a match against Ivy League power Cornell, the Orange and Blue earned its second straight win. After Cornell notched their first goal in the ninth minute of the game, the Bison responded with back-to-back goals. In the 23rd minute, Urosevich scored her fifth of the season unassisted in a battle in front of the net. Just one minute later, Boyer scored her fifth of the season as well from an assist by Faust off a penalty corner.

Cornell 3
Bucknell 2

In the second half, Cornell tied the game in the 45th minute, but once again the Bison scored off an assist from Faust to Emily Hutchison '09. That assist, Faust's 10th on the season, tied her for first place on the team's single-season assist list with Kyzmir's total from last year and Jen Zimmerman '00 in 1997.

According to the scoreboard, the Bison dominated Cornell offensively, but most of the game was played on the side of the Bison defense. Despite Cornell's persistence with nine shots on goal and eight penalty corners, the Orange and Blue held them to just two goals. Led by Groendyke, matching her career-high with seven saves, the balanced Bison defense inevitably won the match.

These two wins were important markers for the improvement of the Bison this far in the season.

"The Cornell game was a good test for us as we could measure our progress as a program, seeing as how they beat us fairly easily last season," Lewis said. "To come out after an emotional win on Saturday and beat Cornell was a great win for this team. Everyone worked very hard and 'dug deep,' so to speak, to come away with the win."

The Bison will need to use the lessons learned over the past two weeks in their final Patriot League match-up against Lafayette Saturday in Easton, Pa.

Field hockey update...

The Orange and Blue defeated No. 18 Villanova 2-0 at Graham Field on Wednesday evening. This is the first time the University's field hockey team has ever defeated a nationally ranked opponent. Emily Groendyke '07 made 10 saves on the night, recording her second shutout of the year. Emily Hutchison '09 and Katie Urosevich '07 scored goals for the Bison. Look for more information on this game in next week's issue of The Bucknellian.

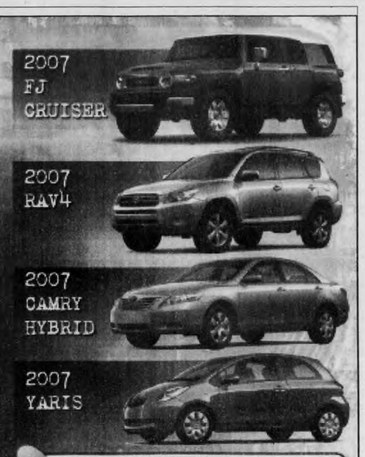
Want to be sweet?

Write for Sports

email msaylor@

Nancy's Nu-Wave Salon
look your best
10% Discount with Student ID
524-2315
Main Street (Rte 45) - Mantandon

AS A COLLEGE GRAD, YOU MAY BE ELIGIBLE FOR
$400 OFF
ANY NEW TOYOTA OF YOUR CHOICE*



WWW.WINAYARISONLINE.COM†
TOYOTA moving forward
TOYOTA
buyatoyota.com

*NOT ALL CUSTOMERS WILL QUALIFY. CUSTOMERS RECEIVE $400 FROM TOYOTA TOWARDS LEASING OR FINANCING THE PURCHASE OF NEW UNTITLED TOYOTA MODELS THROUGH PARTICIPATING TOYOTA DEALERS AND TOYOTA FINANCIAL SERVICES. SEE DEALER OR VISIT WWW.TOYOTAFINANCIAL.COM/FINANCE FOR DETAILS. COLLEGE GRADUATE PROGRAM IS SUBJECT TO CHANGE OR TERMINATION AT ANY TIME. †NO PURCHASE IS NECESSARY. MAKING A PURCHASE DOES NOT INCREASE YOUR CHANCES OF WINNING. VOID WHERE PROHIBITED BY LAW. TO ENTER YOU MUST BE A LEGAL U.S. RESIDENT AT LEAST 18 YEARS OLD AND YOU MUST HAVE A VALID DRIVER'S LICENSE. VISIT YOUR PARTICIPATING TOYOTA DEALER OR WINAYARISONLINE.COM FOR COMPLETE ELIGIBILITY REQUIREMENTS AND SWEEPSTAKES RULES.

Men's tennis wraps up season on high note

Ira Reibeisen '08 leads the team with win at Quinnipiac Invitational and competes at ITA Regionals

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Jonathan Brenner '09 smashes a forehand. The tennis team finished their fall season at the Quinnipiac Invitational two weeks ago.

By Kyle Barndollar
Writer

After a strong showing at the Quinnipiac Invitational two weeks ago, the men's tennis team, led by junior co-captain Ira Reibeisen's impressive play, competed in the ITA Regionals Friday and Saturday at the University of Pennsylvania. This marked the end of the fall season for the Bison, who are now out of action until February.

Reibeisen was the only singles player to compete in the regional tournament for the Bison. After defeating Lehigh's Alfredo Fernandez Cocha 6-1, 6-1, Reibeisen fell to Harvard's Chris Clayton 1-6, 4-6.

"I really wanted to perform well at ITAs and came out strong against Lehigh as a result," Reibeisen said, "and despite falling short of beating my Harvard opponent in the second round, I look at this tournament as a success. I feel like it was the most focused I have been during a match this season and saw my game respond when put under pressure."

The doubles team Ryan Sandburg '09 and Jonathan Brenner '09 defeated conference foe Lafayette's Paul Guarino and Brett Kraft 8-5, before falling in the second round to Cornell's Nick Brunner and Josh Raft 2-8.

The entire Bison team participated in the Quinnipiac Invitational Oct. 13-15 and captured some good results, including a Flight A Championship by Reibeisen. He was ranked number one coming into the tournament and showed why, dominating his competition and not losing a set.

Reibeisen served bombs as he defeated John Fernando of Fairfield in the semifinals 6-3, 6-0 and completed his tournament win by edging Andrew Chan of Quinnipiac 6-1, 7-5 in the finals.

"Ira has really separated himself from the rest of the group," co-captain Ben Young '08 said.

Reibeisen also performed well in doubles play, pairing up with Young to reach the finals in the Flight A doubles. The pair defeated Brian Kelly and Angelo Sica of Holy Cross 9-7 and Christian Malerba and Nate Carvalho of the University of Connecticut 8-4 before falling in a tight match to Jon Fernando and Chip Palumbo of Fairfield in the finals 8-6.

Zachary Hascoe '10 continued his impressive play in flight B. He won matches over Fairfield's Palumbo 6-2, 6-3 and UConn's Malerba 6-1, 6-0 before falling to eventual flight winner Goldy Sherrill of Quinnipiac 3-6, 3-6 in the semifinals.

"Zach Hascoe has definitely out-performed any of our expectations and been doing really well this fall," Young said.

Brenner also competed in flight B, defeating Fairfield's Zach Morrison 6-2, 7-6(4) before falling in the quarters to Quinnipiac's Mike Racioppo 6-4, 4-6, 10-5.

Flight C saw two Bison players reach the quarterfinals, as Sidharth Makkar '09 fell to John Hughes of Quinnipiac 6-3, 6-0, and Daniel Bednarek '09 lost to Esteban Blanco of Farleigh Dickenson 4-6, 7-6(4), 10-7.

The Bison now enter a winter break from tournaments and will return to the courts on Feb. 2 at Duchesne.

"We had a pretty successful fall, and I think it's safe to say that our team right now is definitely in the best place that it's been in during at least my three years here," Young said. "We really have high hopes now for the spring season."

"After seeing the potential in Sandburg and Brenner, I think our doubles teams in particular will be quite strong" Reibeisen said. "I've said in the past that the opportunities for this team are limitless, and I continue to believe that."

Women's golf completes historic fall season

By Wes Trowbridge
Writer

The women's golf team wrapped up its record-setting fall season with two top-three finishes over fall break. In its first action since its victory at the Bucknell Fall Classic, the team finished second and third at the Rutgers and Spider Invitationals respectively. Amy Loughney '08 led the Bison with top-four finishes at both tournaments.

On Oct. 13-14 the women's golfers missed a second consecutive tournament victory by one shot at the Rutgers Invitational in Piscataway, N.J. After a very solid first round of 316, the Bison led the tournament by one stroke over Lehigh and Ivy League powerhouse Columbia. Under windy playing conditions, the team hit a 328 in the second round. The Bison ended the tournament one stroke shy of Columbia.

"Even though we lost by a shot, we put together a strong run and made [Columbia] earn their victory," Head Coach Kevin Jamieson said.

Loughney shot rounds of 78-76 to place second individually, missing a victory by one shot to Lauren Huhnerkoch of Rutgers. It was Loughney's second career runner-up finish.

Teri Schlang '07 followed up her victory at the Bucknell Fall Classic with rounds of 77-83, placing her in a tie for 10th. Deirdre Moran '09 also placed near the top of the leader board, tying for 17th with a pair of 81s.

Just two days later, the golfers competed again at the Spider Invitational at the University of Richmond. The team posted a first round score of 334, placing them seventh out of 12 teams, but in the final round the Orange and Blue played through the driving rain to shoot 323 and jump four spots up the leader board into a third-place finish.

> "We have become such a close-knit team; every single person contributed this season and it really shows as we far exceeded our expectations."
>
> — Amy Loughney '08

"The field had some really strong teams and our goal before the tournament even started was to finish fourth," Loughney said. "To pass four good teams is quite an accomplishment."

The consistency of Loughney paced the Bison as she was one of five players in a 70-golfer field to break 80 both days. Loughney tied for fourth place with rounds of 79-79 and did not card a score worse than bogey through both rounds.

"My short game really shined this week," said Loughney, named Big South Golfer of the Week. "I never gave up and I played smart in the rain."

Emily Chiodo '08 was the second-best finisher for the Bison, firing rounds of 83-81 to tie for 15th. Moran made her third consecutive top-20 finish shooting 85-80 to tie for 18th. Schlang tied for 36th and Kathryn Batchelor '08 tied for 42nd.

In the nine-year history of the women's golf program this fall season was undoubtedly the best. In their final four tournaments, the Bison captured their first ever tournament victory at the Bucknell Fall Classic, as well as second, third and sixth place finishes against some extremely competitive fields.

"We have become such a close-knit team; every single person contributed this season and it really shows as we far exceeded our expectations," Loughney said.

The team's expectations are high for the upcoming spring season. Traditionally, that is when the team plays its best golf of the year.

Summer Breeze Stables
Est. 1973
10 minutes from Campus
Riding Lessons for all levels
Certified Professional Trainer
Large indoor and Outdoor Arenas
Boarding, Training and Showing
Call 570-412-0771 for an appointment

Igniting Creative Ideas
On Fire Promotions
by trautman associates, inc.
promotional products · fundraising items
embroidered & screenprinted caps & apparel
awards · trophies · business gifts
800-538-8009
Lewisburg Showroom 434 Market 570-522-8005
www.onfirepromotions.com
Bring in this ad for one FREE SCREEN!!!
GOOD ON ANY APPAREL ORDER
(minimum 36 pieces)

DOES YOUR CAR NEED SERVICED?
Our Service Department has $25,000 in new upgrades, including a new alignment rack, brake lathe, tire machine, and hundreds of hours of training for the techs. We now offer shuttle service to and from work or home. We have become a complete service center that can perform any work on any model, from an oil change to engine replacement.
Lewisburg Ford Oil Change w/Multi-Point Inspection $19.95
Lewisburg Ford Oil Change/Tire Rotation w/Multi-Point Inspection $34.95
Lewisburg Ford
2265 Old Turnpike Rd. (Route 45 West) Across From Brookpark Farm
Call Today! (570) 524-7267
Visit us on the web at www.lewisburgford.com

COLDWELL BANKER
PENN ONE REAL ESTATE
Thank You, Bucknell!!
For thirty years of calling Bucknell and Lewisburg home.
Susan Warner-Mills, Sales Associate
Competence, Integrity, Service
524-7500; swm@coldwellbanker.com

Nancy's Nu-Wave Salon
look your best
October Special
Free Paraffin Dip with Pedicure or Manicure
Main Street (Rte 45) Mantandon
524-2315
www.nancysnuwave.com

CatmanDo
Handyman Services
Specializing in small home repair jobs:
Custom Carpentry
Painting
Light construction
Greg H Mathias
570-524-4724
Free Estimates Fully insured

Red Smoked BBQ! Beef Brisket, Pork, Chicken, Ribs! Sandwiches, Wraps, Salads, Platters!
RESERVATIONS NEEDED
Call in for TAKEOUT!
SKEETER'S PIT BBQ
ON THE BLUFF OVERLOOKING THE SCENIC SUSQUEHANNA RIVER
AT THE INTERSECTION OF ROUTES 11 & 15 SHAMOKIN DAM
570.743.2727
Daily 11:00am - 10:00pm
Sundays till 9:00pm
www.SkeetersBBQ.com

VOLLEYBALL From page B1

game. Henderson continued her aggressive play securing the first four points with three consecutive service aces and a kill.

The Bison continued to build momentum and, with a re-energized crowd behind them, clinched game two 30-20.

"It was the fullest I have ever seen Davis Gym and the feeling of playing such a high intensity match behind a roaring crowd was unparalleled," said Pitsch, who served four aces in the match. "The greatest part of the match was at the end of the second game when I was serving. The gym was so loud it was ringing, and the feeling of playing in that enthusiastic atmosphere was unbelievable."

The Bison found themselves in a late game-three hole, but in a stunning turnaround they were able to claw their way back after saving a few game points. They stole game three 31-29 to the delight of the University fans who faithfully attended the match.

The Black Knights built another late lead in game four, but this time closed out the game 30-23 to force a decider. In the deciding fifth game both teams scrapped for points, but the Bison ultimately won the match with a clutch team performance 15-13.

The Orange and Blue played with some extra motivation that night.

"Being down in key moments never got us down because we were out for revenge (over the last time we played them) that we just kept the game plan in mind the whole time and our mentality never strayed from that," Freeman said. "I thought that the game against Army was the best overall effort we have had all season."

Besides this week's award winners, the match had its share of standouts. Amanda Grossman '07 tallied 13 kills and committed only three errors in 27 attempts while hitting .370. Emilie Hardinge '09 chipped in with 10 kills and Jennie Smith '07 posted eight kills and eight blocks.

After an emotional victory against Army, the Bison tried to avoid a letdown in their match against the Holy Cross Crusaders the following night. It looked like the Orange and Blue could do no wrong in the first two games as they stifled the Crusaders on both sides of the court and swept past them 30-19 and 30-20.

This match became a tale of two halves for the Bison.

"At the start of the third game Holy Cross picked up their defensive intensity and forced us into some uncharacteristic errors," Head Coach Cindy Opalski said.

In games three and four a different Holy Cross squad took the court. The offense cut down errors and with a greatly improved defensive stance forced the Bison into another five-game contest.

Bucknell 3
Holy Cross 2

If the Bison were fatigued from extensive match play they did not show it. They snatched back the momentum from Holy Cross at the beginning of the decider, returning to early form with a .458 hitting percentage and clinched the match 15-9.

The Bison came into the weekend's matches after blanking Navy 3-0 and getting swept by the league's top team, the American Eagles, whose lineup features two of the tallest players in the nation. The Bison made things tough for the five-time defending Patriot League Champion Eagles, despite dropping the three games by scores of 30-22, 30-28 and 30-26.

The Orange and Blue had a more straightforward match against the Midshipmen. After a first-game rout, Navy threatened in the last two games, but could not close out the tenacious Bison, falling 30-27 and 30-22.

The Bison will play two of their last three home games of the season against Lafayette at 7 tonight and Lehigh at 7 p.m. Saturday.

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Emilie Hardinge '09 goes for the kill against Holy Cross. Hardinge is tied for second on the team with 196 total kills. The Bison are currently tied for third in the Patriot League with Lafayette whom they will host tonight at 7 in Davis Gym.

WEEKEND SCHEDULE

Friday

WOMEN'S VOLLEYBALL - Lafayette, 7 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.

Saturday

FOOTBALL - Fordham, 1 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
MEN'S SOCCER - Navy, 4 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
FIELD HOCKEY - American, 12 p.m., Washington, D.C.
WOMEN'S CROSS COUNTRY - Patriot League Championship, 10:30 a.m., Hamilton, N.Y.
MEN'S CROSS COUNTRY - Patriot League Championship, 11:30 a.m., Hamilton, N.Y.
MEN'S WATER POLO - Mercyhurst, 12:45 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.; Southern Championship, TBA, Lewisburg, Pa.
MEN'S SWIM & DIVE - Holy Cross, 1 p.m., Worcester, Mass.
FIELD HOCKEY - Lafayette, 1 p.m., Easton, Pa.
WOMEN SWIM & DIVE - Holy Cross, 1 p.m., Worcester, Mass.
WOMEN'S VOLLEYBALL - Lehigh, 7 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
MEN'S GOLF - Mt St Marys Invitational, All Day, Littlestown, Pa.
ROWING - Head of the Schuylkill, All Day, Philadelphia, Pa (Schuylkill River)

Sunday

WOMEN'S SOCCER - Navy, 1 p.m., Annapolis, Md.
MEN'S SWIM & DIVE - Boston College, 12 p.m., Chesnut Hill, Mass.
WOMEN'S SWIM & DIVE - Boston College, 12 p.m., Chesnut Hill, Mass.
MEN'S GOLF - Mt St Mary's Invitational, All Day, Littlestown, Pa.
MEN'S WATER POLO - Southern Championships, TBA, Lewisburg, Pa.

Saylor Says

By Matthew Saylor
Sports Editor

1. The atmosphere at Davis Gym for the volleyball game against Army last Friday was spectacular. Over 800 fans provided great vocal support throughout the match, never more so than in the Bison's spirited comeback during the third game of the match. The team staved off three game points, scoring the final five of the game. When the match was over the team and its coaches applauded and thanked the fans for their support throughout the match. Tonight's game against Lafayette should be equally competitive as both teams have a 6-3 record in Patriot League play. So bring your parents and tell your friends to come to Davis Gym tonight—there is no reason we can rock the house only once.

2. Remember when Miami Heat center Shaquille O'Neal became a deputy sheriff? Well he saw some action when he participated in a raid of a home that was suspected of having and distributing child pornography. Unfortunately, O'Neal and his posse received an improper address and went to the wrong home. That is a slam dunk gone awry.

3. Chris McNaughton '07 was named the Patriot League Preseason Player of the Year for the 2006-2007 men's basketball season. Hope Foster '08 was named to the Patriot League Preseason Team for the upcoming women's basketball season. It is clear that the University has the two top centers in the Patriot League. They will need to perform well if the Bison are to live up to their potential this season.

4. It was a sad week for Philadelphia sports fans. The Flyers, off to a dismal 1-6-1 start, fired Head Coach Ken Hitchcock and General Manager Bob Clarke resigned on Sunday. Later in the day the Eagles lost to the Buccaneers on a 62-yard field goal as time expired. This was the second-longest kick in NFL history. All three of the Eagles' losses this season have been on the last plays of the game.

5. Detroit Tigers starter Kenny Rogers went from playoff hero to potential cheater when a foreign substance was found on his pitching hand in his World Series start against the St. Louis Cardinals. Video recordings also showed there was a similar substance on his hand for his two previous playoff starts against the New York Yankees and the Oakland Athletics. It is surprising that Major League Baseball is acting so calm about this situation. It is a shame that not more was done (as of Wednesday evening at least) to answer the questions of the media and fans as to what the truth is.

6. The San Antonio Spurs' roster currently stands at 17 players, and they have to cut it down to 15 by the end of the week. Charles Lee '06 is still in the running for what is believed to be one more available spot on the team. Even if the Spurs release Lee, there is a strong chance that another NBA team could sign him due to his impressive play in training camp and the preseason with one of the league's elite teams.

7. The Dallas Cowboys decided to bench starting quarterback Drew Bledsoe in favor of back-up Tony Romo. Romo is a much more mobile quarterback and that could help compensate for the Cowboys' weak offensive line. Romo is extremely inexperienced, though, as evidenced by some of the decisions he made in the second half of the team's Monday night home loss to the New York Giants.

8. The on-field fight that broke out between the football teams of the University of Miami (Fl.) and Florida International University on Oct. 14 is a black eye for both schools. Over 30 players were suspended because of the incident. I say at least make both teams ineligible for postseason play, if not cancel the seasons of both teams.

9. If the Cardinals win the World Series over Detroit, they will have set the record for fewest wins in the regular season by a World Series champion with 83. Parity reigns throughout baseball.

10. The Bison football team could have a large impact on who will win the Patriot League title this season. After Saturday's game against Fordham, the Orange and Blue will face Holy Cross and Colgate - the top two teams in the league - to close out the season. A win over Fordham will even the Bison's league record at 2-2 and give the team a shot to finish at or near the top of the standings.

BRYNWOOD 535 Inc. Rentals
In Lewisburg Since 1969
Your search begins..... and ends here.
Professional 24/7 Maintenance Staff
Apartments (furnished & unfurnished)
Houses for professionals students families
Rental Garages Also Available
Office & Retail Space 300—3,000 sq ft
brynwoodrentals.com
611 Market Street, Lewisburg
ph: 570.524.2121 x 3

SOCCER From page B1

and stingy defense that absolutely throttled American."

The Bison will need to play like they did against American with their upcoming schedule. The Orange and Blue travel to play Navy, who has yet to be beaten this year.

"We need to not be scared or intimidated by Navy's perfect record so far," Landis said. "We have respect for them but are not afraid of them."

With the Bison coming into the game with only one league loss, the winner of the game will host the Patriot League Tournament.

The team is focused on the road that lies ahead of them.

"Our team is aware that in order to continue our success, we must continue to do the things that have put us in the position that we are in presently," Curd said. "Take each game one at a time, fight for every inch against every team and continue to support and inspire each other."

The Bison take on Navy at 1 p.m. Sunday in Annapolis, Md.

"If we play smart, physically and play together for 90 minutes, we're a very difficult team to beat at this time of year," Landis said.

Men's soccer tries to find its footing

By John Mlodzinski
Senior Writer

The men's soccer team fell to American 2-0 on Saturday allowing the Eagles, now at 2-1-2 in Patriot League play, to move into fourth place ahead of the Bison. The loss was the University's third loss in as many games.

American 2
Bucknell 0

"I feel we are beginning to show our inexperience," Alex Russo '09 said. "When the season started we were fresh out of a tough preseason and ready to play. However, as the season progressed we began to take things for granted."

Joey Kuterbach '08 recorded a season-high 10 saves, but he could not stop shots by Larry Mark and Sal Caccavale. American took 23 shots in the match while the Bison attempted six shots.

The first half was relatively quiet as American and the Bison combined for a total of nine shots. In the second half the Bison were out-shot by the Eagles 17-3. Caccavale and Mark combined for 14 of the team's second-half shots.

The Bison fell to Penn State 3-1 on Oct. 17. It looked as though the Orange and Blue's winless streak might end when, in the 34th minute, Nathan LaGrave '10 received a pass from Corey Curnutte '08 and headed the ball past Penn State's goalie. The goal ended the Bison's 432-minute scoreless streak. After that goal the defense held tight and the Bison took a 1-0 lead into halftime.

PSU 3
Bucknell 1

The second half was all Penn State, as David Gray, Geordie MacNeill and Simon Omekanda all scored to give Penn State a lead it would not lose.

Penn State out-shot the Bison 22-4 in the game and also had the advantage in corner kicks 9-4.

LaGrave is now tied with Russo for the team lead in goals with five. Kuterbach made seven saves in the game.

Lehigh, currently ranked 21st in the nation, defeated the Bison 2-0 on Oct. 14. It was a very tight game as the score remained knotted at zero for 74 minutes of play.

Lehigh 2
Bucknell 0

Then Joe Verdi and Joseph Clemente both scored in the final 16 minutes to seal the Bison's fate.

The Bison were out-shot 20-7 in the match. They performed better in the second half, but the team knows they still have to improve.

> "We can only move forward and focus on the process of getting better, regardless of the previous outcomes. No matter who we beat or lose to there is always room for our team to grow."
>
> —Cam Ornsby, assistant coach

"We can only move forward and focus on the process of getting better, regardless of the previous outcomes," Assistant Coach Cam Ormsby said. "No matter who we beat or lose to there is always room for our team to grow."

After starting the season 7-1-2, the Orange and Blue have gone 0-5-2 in their last seven games.

"Wins and losses are part of soccer," Ormsby said. "We knew going into the season the last stretch would be difficult. But that's part of playing tough opponents."

The Bison now hope to defeat Navy on Saturday and hope that either Colgate loses to Holy Cross or American loses to both Navy and Army.

"We need to beat Navy. ... That is our main focus and the only part of the equation we can worry about," Ormsby said.

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Joe Mellott '08 defends against an opponent in a recent game. The squad is looking to bounce back against Navy on Saturday after a couple tough losses.

Bison compete in Pre-NCAA Championship

By Brian Mulligan
Sports Editor

The men's and women's cross country teams traveled to Indiana State University for a preview of the NCAA National Championship course and teams. The Bison had tough competition including 10 ranked teams on both the men's and women's sides. The women placed 26th out of 37 teams on the six-kilometer course, beating out Auburn, Arizona and Louisville. The men's squad posted a 35th-place finish out of 36 teams on the eight-kilometer course.

The women's team posted an impressive finish among some of the top teams, including the number five team, North Carolina State.

Leanna Nastase '07 was the first Bison to cross the finish line in 21 minutes 25 seconds to take a 66th-place finish overall. Erin Cranmer-Hart '08 was next to finish in 137th place in 22:04, while Jenny Stevens '07 finished only four seconds behind Cranmer-Hart to take 144th place and Christa Sawko '07 finished 162nd in 22:19. Gillian Nordquist '09 rounded out the top five for the Orange and Blue, finishing 199th in 22:42.

"It was motivating to know that our performances would amount to more than a meet, championship or a trophy; it would show where we stand relative to the rest of the nation," Sawko said.

Matt Forys '07 led the men's squad taking 73rd place out of 243 runners in 24:43. Wallace Campbell '08 crossed the finish line next in 25:16 with a 159th-place finish, while Andrew Corral '08 placed 181st in 25:26. Michael Gibney '08 was the fourth Bison to finish in 207th place in 25:48. Clinton Orloski '09 finished 219th overall. The men's team was excited to compete against such a high level of competition.

"It was a bit overwhelming going up against some of the top schools in the nation, but at the same time it was exciting to toe the line with the best young runners from this country and abroad," Corral said.

The Orange and Blue are entering their championship season, kicking it off with the Patriot League Championship.

"We are confident going into the Patriot League Championship," Forys said. "This is the best men's team that we have had in the past few years and we plan on competing with the best teams in the league."

The teams will compete on Saturday at Colgate University in Hamilton, N.Y., where the women's team will defend its title from last year.

ROWING From page B1

place finish in a very competitive field at the Navy Day Regatta. Dowling College pulled off the victory in 17:06.2, 15 seconds ahead of the Bison.

Often big races in the fall announce the arrival of the crews who will be around late into the spring season. Head Coach Stephen Kish seemed happy with the progress so far.

"The women did a great job with the preparation period and they have definitely added something very valuable to their set of experiences," Kish said. "The idea is that this experience will add to what they can bring to the second semester."

The fact that the four has consistently finished ahead of other Patriot League entries this year has given him reason to smile. The quietly-confident Kish is looking towards a strong future for the program.

"The entire team, inexperienced and experienced, is doing a great job working together, motivating each other and pushing themselves to improve on a daily basis," Kish said. "If we stay on that path, we will continue to take the program to new levels of success. Someday, that will mean rowing at the NCAA Championships. And a little further down the road from there, it includes medaling and eventually winning at the NCAAs."

The entire team will be in action for the first time this season at the Head of the Schuylkill Regatta on Saturday in Philadelphia, Pa.

FALL 2006 – FIRST WEDNESDAY SERIES
Everyone is invited to enjoy
JAZZ at Bucknell

JOANNE BRACKEEN
piano
8:30 p.m., Wednesday
November 1, 2006
Bucknell Hall
Free Admission
Bucknell Hall is located on Loomis Street between the President's House and Hunt Hall
Bucknell

BROOKPARK STATION
Café
Make tracks to Lewisburg's newest restaurant
"A unique dining experience with a gourmet flare."
Featuring a variety of fresh home-made salads, sandwiches, soups and loaded baked potatoes.
Fresh Sushi
BYOB
Monday thru Thursday 7:00 am - 7:30 pm
Fridays & Saturdays 7:00 am- 9:00 pm
Breakfast served 7:00 - 11:00 am daily
West on Rt. 45 to Reitz Blvd
Just past the first light

The Sigmund and Claire Weis Center for the Performing Arts
PRESENTS

L'ensemble Pennetier
Bartók's Sonata for Two Pianos and Two Percussion and music by Debussy, Ducol, and Messiaen
Saturday, October 28, 2006
8 p.m.
coming to the Weis Center
Frederick Moyer, piano
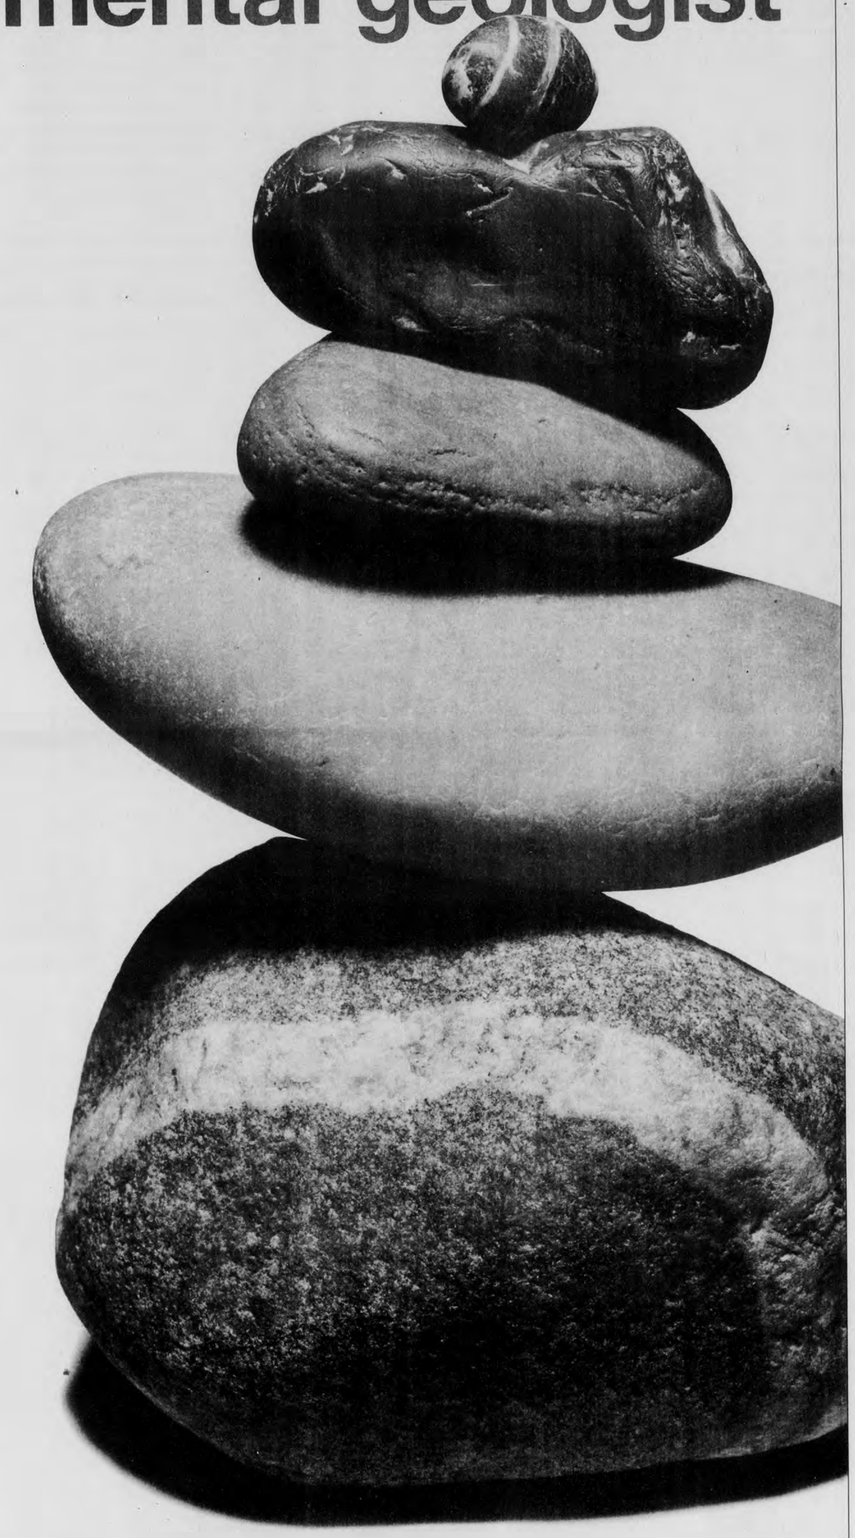
Friday, November 10, 8 p.m.
Turtle Island String Quartet
A Solstice Celebration: The Festival of Lights
Saturday, December 2, 8 p.m.
Bucknell University, Lewisburg, Pennsylvania
Tickets and Information: 570-577-1000
www.bucknell.edu/WeisCenter/

Create Color with Clear Vision LOGICS.
The choice for clean, clear, pure tone color. Haircolor with maximum versatility.
Infinite creativity.
Call for an appointment today.
Joseph Carroll Salon
HAIR CARE FOR THE ENTIRE FAMILY
431 Market Street, Lewisburg
524-0790
Open Tuesday-Saturday Walk-ins when time permits
www.matrix.com SALON BEAUTIFUL ENJOY! MATRIX

Vera Bradley Giveaway Event
THE MERCANTILE
Friday, October 27th & Saturday, October 28th
Bring this card in and receive your choice of a coin purse ($14.00 value) or zip ID case ($10.00 value) FREE with any $50.00 Vera Bradley purchase.
Enter your name to win one of several Vera Bradley Bags & Vera Bradley gift certificates we are giving away!

319 Market Street,
Lewisburg, 570-523-7300
Vera Bradley

Campfire queen
Cycling champion
Sentimental geologist*
Learn more about Marjon Walrod and tell us more about you. Visit pwc.com/bringit.
Your life. You can bring it with you.


*connectedthinking
PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS
© 2006 PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP. All rights reserved. "PricewaterhouseCoopers" refers to PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (a Delaware limited liability partnership) or, as the context requires, the PricewaterhouseCoopers global network or other member firms of the network, each of which is a separate and independent legal entity. *connectedthinking is a trademark of PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (US). We are proud to be an Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity Employer.

Mer Cares

Dear Mer:

Recently my boyfriend broke up with me and I am having a very difficult time dealing with it. We were together for six months and lately I was starting to doubt whether we had anything in common and if we should stay together. He said the best things in life included the most risk and, if I could let my guard down and let him in and commit, the benefits from it would be endless. We took a break and got back together, but it wasn't the same. Before we took a break, he said he was at a party and a girl came onto him and they ended up kissing, but then he pushed her off. What hurts the most is he jeopardized our relationship and his excuse was he was afraid of losing me and thought this was going to be our final fight. He said he loved me and knew he didn't deserve me. He knew he treated me terribly and took me for granted and said he regretted kissing her.

I said I could forgive him because I loved him but I don't think I ever did. I kept bringing it up and it hurt our relationship a lot. We spent too much time with each other and, when we weren't together, I always worried where he was and who he was with. I didn't want to be that person but I couldn't help it—it's just that he broke my trust and my heart. When he broke up with me, he said our differences in personality didn't mesh anymore and he didn't see our relationship as long-term anymore because his feelings changed. He said he didn't think he loved me as much after the incident. What's even more hurtful was recently he told me he was finally ready to have sex with me because he loved me so much and I was considering it. Then, he suddenly broke up with me.

He was my first love and I tried to forgive him and put in even more effort after the incident, but the breakup was inevitable. Parts of me regret not breaking up with him when he cheated. I've been so depressed and angry and I miss him so much. I'm not even sure if I miss him or miss just being in a relationship. He said he wants to be best friends because of what we shared, but how can he see us being friends after being intimate for so long? We met through mutual friends and hooked up for awhile before he asked me to become exclusive, so we never had a normal friendship. He became one of my best friends because of our relationship and I can't imagine not having him in my life, but he hurt me so much.

—Hurt and Heartbroken

Dear Hurt and Heartbroken:

This may sound cliché, but all breakups are hard, especially if both parties loved each other. It will take time and you may not completely get over him since he was the first guy you loved. That kind of personal rejection hurts like hell. When you share something special with someone else it is hard to accept the fact they will no longer be part of your life.

I know it hurts, because not only did he violate your trust, he broke your heart. The minute he decided to kiss another girl he stopped caring about your feelings. You do not deserve to let someone take advantage of you and you should never feel obligated to stand by someone after he cheated on you.

I have always been a firm believer that everything happens for a reason. It was time: the relationship ran its course and you outgrew each other. Since you are hurt it is hard to say if you miss having a "boyfriend" and doing things couples do or if you miss your ex. You may love the idea of the relationship and just miss being close to someone.

Allow a reasonable amount of time to grieve. It will not be a quick and easy process; you will have good and bad days and the pain from missing him will come in waves. Keep busy with work and extracurricular activities. Make a list of the things you did not like about him and the way he treated you to help you realize you are better off without him. You will begin to get over him and move on. Lean on your friends and talk about your ex until there is nothing left to talk about.

According to "How To Get Over Being Dumped," by psychotherapist and lifecoach Christine Webber, "When we talk about our hurt it gradually ceases to have power over us and step-by-step we recover." You need to start loving yourself and appreciating all you have to offer.

The past six months were not a waste. You not only learned how to love and be close to someone, but you also learned about yourself and what you will not put up with in a relationship. Now you must decide whether in time you can see him as a close friend again. You can go from being friends to lovers but it is hard for lovers to become friends. There will always be a history and a lot of emotion involved. If you were close friends during your relationship, consider staying friends because you shared a lot and it is hard to throw it all away. But if you do not think you could ever look at him without thinking of those painful memories and how he hurt you, maybe being friends is not an option.

You may want to make him miserable and hurt him the same way he hurt you, but you will most likely regret it. Many guys tend not to express their sorrow outwardly, and I am sure he thinks of you and misses doing things with you because you were such a big part of his life.

The guy who is worth your time, love and effort will fight for you and your relationship even when problems arise. You deserve a guy who puts you at the center of his universe, because obviously he will be at the center of yours and your ex certainly did not treat you the way you should be treated.

Show him how much this split has freed you—you are single and able to go out whenever you want with whomever you want. Being independent is a wonderful thing; you should embrace the possibilities that have opened up for you. You will be a much happier and stronger person as a result of this breakup. Just be careful because you are vulnerable now and you do not want to start dating immediately on the rebound, because you will only end up hurting yourself in an attempt to replace your lost love.

Though it may not seem like it now, you will get over this as time heals everything.

Love,
Mer

Please send questions regarding any topic to marc001@bucknell.edu with subject line reading "advice" or you may send a letter via campus mail to box number C1099. I look forward to hearing from you!

Gaining a worldly perspective

Students encouraged to study abroad as a means to explore the world

By Katie Steele
Contributing Writer

Have you always dreamed of dining in a quaint café along the Grand Canal in Venice, Italy, or visiting the famous Globe Theatre in London? Do you want to take your proficiency in a foreign language to the next level?

The University's study-abroad program provides students with a unique opportunity to take classes, travel and immerse themselves in another country's culture.

Many University students take advantage of the opportunity to study abroad. Over 300 juniors and first-semester seniors study abroad every year and nearly 40 percent of each graduating class has studied abroad, according to the University Web site.

Some students decide not to study abroad because they do not want to sacrifice a semester at the University. Do not let this scare you.

"Not once when I was in France and Italy did I think 'I wonder what I would be doing at Bucknell now?' Plus, now I am so happy to be back and excited to be back into 'college life' rather than ready to graduate like some of my friends," Jenna DiPaolo '07 said.

Study-abroad programs are available in over 60 countries. You can participate in one of the six programs run by University professors or an approved program at another university.

There are semester-long and year-long programs sponsored by the University in France, Spain, London and Barbados. A University professor travels with the students as the University professor-in-residence. Students enroll in a class taught by the professor-in-residence and classes at local universities.

Depending on the program students live with host families, in dorms at a university or housing near the campus. Meal plans are available with each housing choice.

Students participating in Bucknell en España, a popular program for Spanish majors and minors, live with a host family. Jaclyn Campoli '07 and another University student lived with a single woman when they studied abroad in Spain.

"It worked out OK for us ... in the beginning it took some time to get used to different customs and rules that she had for the house, but after a while we got used to it. She allowed us to come and go as we pleased and we had our own key, so it didn't hinder our freedom at all," Campoli said.

If students are not interested in the programs the University offers, the Office of International Education works with them to find a program at another school. There are programs in over 52 countries approved by the University.

Campoli found it difficult to be a guest in someone's home for such a long period of time, but her Spanish improved dramatically.

There are two University-sponsored programs offered for engineering students: The Nottingham-Bucknell Engineering Exchange in London and Universitat Rovira i Virgili – Chemical Engineering Exchange in Tarragona, Spain. Engineering students fulfill their class requirements by taking pre-approved classes at universities in those cities.

If students are not interested in the programs the University offers, the Office of International Education works with them to find a program at another school. There are programs in over 52 countries approved by the University.

Students having trouble sacrificing a semester because of their major or sports teams can participate in the University's summer programs. The University offers summer programs in Northern Ireland, Nicaragua, England, Barbados and the Virgin Islands. Students travel with and take classes taught by University professors. They receive one or two course credits, depending on what classes they take.

The Office of International Education, located in Taylor Hall, provides students with numerous resources about studying abroad. The office's Web site, http://www.bucknell.edu/x9096.xml, contains helpful information about study-abroad programs. When I e-mailed the Office of International Education (intled@bucknell.edu) with a question about a specific program, I received a list of students who participated in that program offering to talk about their experiences.

Start thinking about studying abroad early in your college career to make sure it fits into your schedule. It is also important to consider the GPA requirement. Students must have a minimum GPA of 3.0 to apply for the engineering programs and a minimum cumulative GPA of 2.8 to apply for most other programs.

Studying abroad can broaden your perspectives, enhance your understanding of different cultures and leave you with invaluable experiences. When picking a program, keep an open mind and explore different possibilities. As the Office of International Education says on its Web site, "The world is our campus!"

Town's newest station a fresh treat

By Kim Kane
Arts & Entertainment Editor

If you want to try something new this Parents' Weekend, visit the Brookpark Station Café. I can safely say this because I recently dined there with my parents and younger sister. The Brookpark Station Café has a delightfully fresh view on dining in Lewisburg—it opened only six weeks ago.

The menu offers salads, soups, sandwiches and wraps, but it also ventures into loaded baked potatoes and even sushi.

The homemade soups are a great way to start the meal. The Café offers fresh onion medley, chicken tortilla, blended tomato and Maryland crab soups. My dining party of four had three of the soups. They were delicious, obviously homemade and served in generous portions.

After the soup, my mom and sister each had a "Texas-sized" baked potato. These large potatoes come loaded with everything from broccoli and cheese to barbecued beef and red peppers. They enjoyed "The Station," a potato topped with butter, sour cream, bacon, green onions and cheddar cheese. These potatoes are large enough for a meal, but I would recommend having soup to make sure you are full.

A lighter option is the extensive salad selection. The Café serves "designer salads," including a grilled ahi tuna salad, seared teriyaki tofu salad and Mediterranean shrimp salad. The chef also prepares an assortment of others, ranging from seafood salad to Italian potato salad. If it sounds like too many choices, do not worry—you can have the trio, your choice of three salads, or the sampler, your choice of six salads.

My dad and I were looking for something a little more filling. He loved the "La Cubana," a turkey sandwich with double-smoked ham, red onions, lettuce, pickles, cheddar cheese and mustard served on freshly-baked ciabatta with potato chips.

I had a chicken fajita wrap. It is advertised as a cold wrap but the chicken is warm from the grill and deliciously seasoned, though not too spicy. The wrap also has lettuce, tomatoes, cheddar cheese, fresh salsa, roasted red peppers and sour cream.

The entrees average about $7.95 and a cup of soup is $3.50. You will definitely want to save room for dessert; there is an assortment of freshly-baked cookies and a variety of cakes. My sister and I split a piece of orange sherbet cake, and this morning I got an e-mail from her asking me to bring a piece home for Thanksgiving.

The atmosphere at Brookpark Station Café is as fresh and enjoyable as the food. The restaurant is housed in a brand-new building located at 2370 Old Turnpike Road, about a five-minute drive from campus, and doubles as a train station with train tracks running right behind the building, giving it charm without corniness.

Inside, the colors are bright but tasteful and beautiful light fixtures complement the high ceilings. There is also a small fireplace in the corner which adds to the café atmosphere.

Perhaps the reason Brookpark Station Café is so family-friendly is because it is a family-operated restaurant. It is owned by Terri and Scott Zimmerer of Lewisburg, and their son Ben is the primary chef. Their other children also help out.

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

The Brookpark Station Cafe, a five-minute drive from campus, is a new restaurant at which students can purchase quality entrees at low prices.

"Ben was after us to buy a property downtown, but we didn't want to buy something that had already been used," Terri said.

When a friend who owned the property decided to build the train station, he approached the Zimmerers to add the restaurant.

Just because the building is new does not mean it is without history. The salad counter is the old ice cream counter from Bechtel's, the restaurant that closed last year after serving Lewisburg for 82 years. There are also booths from Kinney's Bakery, which was located downtown for 35 years.

Ben attended culinary school and brings a professional flair and passion for food to the menu.

"I design all the recipes," Ben said. "Most of them come from things I've thrown together for myself at home."

The menu is also influenced by two restaurants from the Dallas area, where the Zimmerers lived for 10 years.

"There was a place called Jason's Deli that [served] huge baked potatoes, and you could get anything on them," Terri said. "And Café Max had the salad sampler. We decided to combine these ideas for our place."

Brookpark Station Café is BYOB and will soon serve dinner entrees.

"We will have some kind of beef, chicken and seafood meals," Ben said.

The Café also does tailgate parties and off-site catering.

Brookpark Station Café is open from 7 a.m. to 7:30 p.m. For Parents Weekend it will stay open until 9 p.m.

Tell us anything you want.
Get it off your chest.
Send your secrets to
The Bucknellian.
Create a postcard and mail it to
C3952

From the middle of nowhere to the center of Times Square

ACE brings students and townspeople to experience New York City

By Liza Banhalmi
Contributing Writer

Activities and Campus Events (ACE) sponsored a trip to New York City on Saturday.

"Despite the large number of cancellations, we still had two full buses," said Mandy Hart '07, president of ACE.

The trip was the same day as the Kanye West concert, but the turnout was still strong.

"It has been a great opportunity for students to get off campus for a day and experience a different area, or visit friends at different places," said Allison Hirsch '08, ACE trips chairperson.

The recent trip had 110 passengers, and ACE coordinators expect even more this winter.

"For the December trip to New York City there are 165 spots, as it is very popular to visit the city at Christmastime," Hirsch said.

ACE sponsors about six trips each semester. So far, the trips have been to Baltimore Inner Harbor, Washington, D.C. and New York City. Still ahead are trips to King of Prussia Mall on Nov. 4, the Penn State versus Temple football game on Nov. 11 and another trip to New York City on Dec. 2.

"Next semester, we will probably have three trips to New York City, and one each to Washington D.C., the Crossroads Outlets in Tannersville and the Camelback Ski Area," Hirsch said.

Fortunately for students, the cost of these trips was lowered from $20 to $15 round-trip. This is a great deal, considering the daily Susquehanna Bus to New York City is almost $45 one-way and can take over five hours with the various other stops along the way.

"The shuttle was punctual and well-organized, and we were given incredible freedom—12 hours free for shopping, seeing shows or just enjoying New York," Stacey Featherstone '10 said. "I was able to see the city, eat out at a great restaurant, get a head start on my Christmas shopping, and see my friends' university and lives. Just a nice way to escape the Bucknell 'bubble' for a day."

Many people took advantage of the trip to see Broadway plays. Pamela Benfer, an accountant at the University, saw "The Wedding Singer." This musical is based on the film, in which a popular New Jersey wedding singer named Robbie is left at the altar by his fiancée.

Photo courtesy of Visit-New-York-City.com

Robbie is determined to make every wedding as disastrous as his own until he meets the girl of his dreams. Unfortunately, she is already engaged, so Robbie must pull off a stellar performance in order to win her heart. The musical only came on Broadway six months ago.

"It was a very funny show to see and we really enjoyed it," Benfer said.

Robert Hallinan '09 saw "Rent," winner of the Tony Award for Best Musical and the Pulitzer Prize. This musical was turned into a movie in 2005. The show is based on Puccini's opera "La Bohème," first performed at the end of the 19th century.

In "Rent" a group of young artists and musicians struggle to survive against AIDS and flourish in inner-city New York. "Rent" is credited with being one of the first shows to emphasize homosexual, bisexual and transgender people, and for its ethnically diverse original cast. By being one of the first shows to address these controversial issues, "Rent" helped open the forum for discussion of these topics in society.

Others visited Central Park, Times Square, Wall Street and Ground Zero.

Some visitors tasted the different cuisines New York City offers. Luckily for Candace dePass '10, the trip conveniently fell right before her birthday. After meeting her friends from St. John's University in Queens, dePass ate in Maroons, a restaurant serving Jamaican and Southern dishes, offering a range of meats and seafood. The restaurant has tasty dishes such as jerk chicken wings, plantains and fried fish.

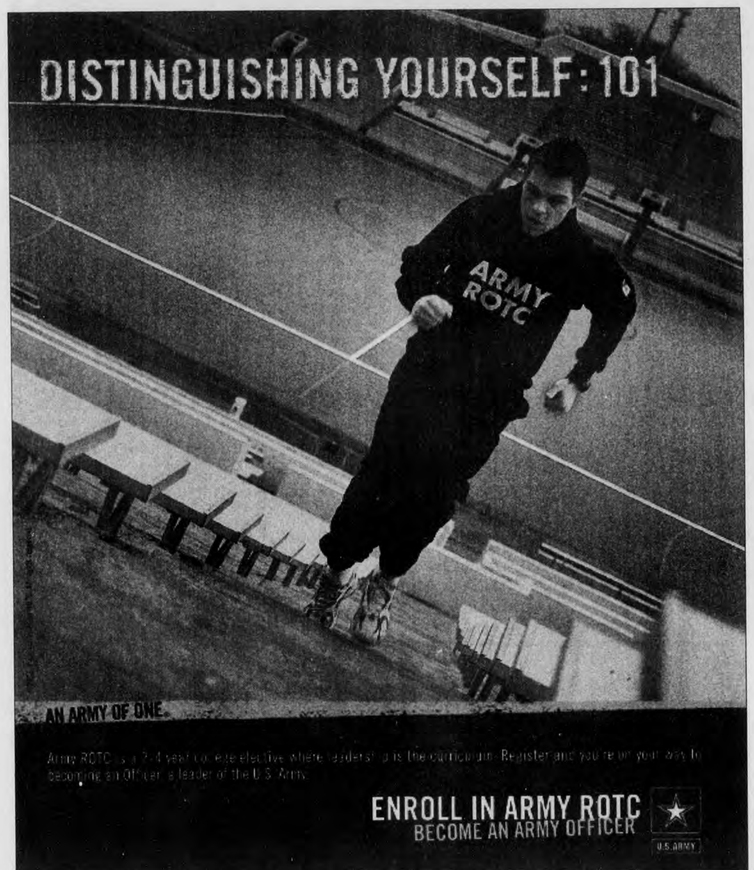
"Being able to visit New York for the weekend truly added a special bonus to my birthday celebration since it was my first birthday away from home," dePass said.

Benfer also visited Max Brenner: Chocolate by the Bald Man at South Union Square on Broadway between 13th and 14th Streets. New York City is the only place on both American continents to house these delicious chocolates—the only other locations are in Australia, the Philippines, Singapore and Israel.

The store resembles a scene from "Willy Wonka and the Chocolate Factory," with vats of molten chocolate, pipes that remind you of Oompa Loompa transports and unexpected desserts such as chocolate bagels and chocolate pizza.

This article cannot cover all the great sights and attractions New York City offers, so take advantage of ACE's next trip on Dec. 2 and find out for yourself.

To get involved with these trips and other weekend events sponsored by ACE, go to their general member meeting at noon on Tuesday in Arches Lounge.



CONTACT CPT GRIFFITH OF THE BISON BATTALION ARMY ROTC AT 570-577-1013/1246 FOR MORE INFO.
CHECK OUT OUR WEBSITE AT HTTP://ARMYROTC.COM/EDU/BUCKNELL.

Another titillating edition brought to you by ...

Ms. Love and the Bubble

Dear Ms. O,

I've been with my boyfriend for a while and we recently took our relationship to a more physical level. I've been enjoying it, but I feel really uncomfortable being naked in front of him. I cringe when he takes off my shirt, even worse when he reaches for my bra and I always put my clothes back on as soon as possible.

I don't want to act like that because I really care about him, but I just can't bring myself to relax with him when I have no clothes on. How can I get more comfortable with being naked around him?

— Nauseous When Naked

Dear Nauseous When Naked,

Let's face it, being naked can be a lot of fun. And it's obviously a big part of your sex life.

But to enjoy your experiences fully, you've got to get comfortable in your own skin.

Carefully consider the reasons that may be making you feel uncomfortable while naked around you boyfriend.

Above all, you need to make sure you are comfortable with yourself. Body image is something most people deal with at one time for another, if not continuously. You need to focus on the things about your body that you like, and at the same time realize that there's a lot more to you than how you look.

Guys don't see the things you see about yourself. Chances are that when you two are naked together, he's not noticing those few pounds you gained or lost in the last month, or the tiny patch of hair that you missed while shaving your legs. He's got other things on his mind.

Keep in mind that your boyfriend may feel self-conscious, too. You may not think that guys worry about their appearance as much as you do, but it's just not true.

In order to feel more comfortable being naked with your boyfriend, it might be a good idea to get used to being naked on your own. Try sleeping naked or spending time naked after you get out of the shower. Once you feel good in your own skin, you might not feel so awkward in front of your guy.

Also, make sure you're truly happy with the activities you're engaging in with your boyfriend. If you're not quite ready for the physical level that you've taken it to, your concerns may be manifesting themselves through your discomfort in being naked with him. If this is the case, take a step back and wait until you're ready.

Is it possible that something else is bothering you? Did someone make an offhanded comment about your appearance that stuck in the back of your mind?

If your boyfriend said something, discuss it with him and explain how it makes you feel. Odds are he didn't mean it.

If someone else said something, let your guy know how you feel and tell him you're working on your nakedness comfort level. He may have some ideas to help you out as well.

And when he compliments you, listen to him.

I think overall there's a few statements we can agree on. Guys like boobs. Guys like butts. Guys like other unmentionables too. So odds are your boyfriend is enjoying every minute of you being naked. Don't psych yourself out.

Love your body, and let him love it too.

Now go get naked.

~Ms. O

E-mail me your questions at MsOintheBubble@yahoo.com or send them through campus mail to Ms. O, The Bucknellian, C-3952. All authors of questions will remain anonymous.

"Turn your Power ON and Add LIFE to your Years!"

MORRISON'S ADVANCED CHIROPRACTIC CARE

Michael D. Morrison D.C.
1205 W Market Street
Lewisburg, PA 17837
Office: 570-523-1221

A Healthy Spine Equals a Healthy YOU!

Bucknell Students may receive a free exam and x-rays (if needed) with mention of this advertisement.

The legend of Hunt Hall

By Deidre Carlin
Senior Writer

Women who have lived in Hunt Hall throughout the years have said that they have witnessed some rather strange phenomena. While many say that they do not believe in ghosts, most admit that there is something strange going on in Hunt, sometimes nicknamed 'Haunt' Hall.

According Jeff Loss, senior associate director for maintenance, Hunt Hall was built in 1928 and then renovated in 2002. According to X Project Paranormal magazine, the supernatural occurrences have just been reported in the last thirty years.

Encounters with the ghost seem to be rather few and far between. Experiences also seem to be limited to the third and fourth floors. The ghost also never seems to harm anyone and many describe her as "friendly." One former Hunt Hall custodian claimed that she could feel a cold presence against her arm sometimes which allowed her to sense the ghost was near.

Rumor has it that the ghost likes to try on dresses that are hung on the backs of doors. From time to time students have said that they have seen the ghost walking around the hall in a dress.

Cristie Winkler '08, a resident of Hunt Hall, says that she's heard the ghost's name is Angela. Reports differ as to who 'Angela' actually is, but most agree that she is the spirit of a former resident who died.

Amanda Stewart '08, another resident of Hunt Hall, says that she had an experience with the ghost as recently as last week.

Stewart says that she was the last person to leave for Fall Break and her mom and stepfather were on her fourth-floor hall to pick her up for break. Stewart then said that her mom went to go use the bathroom and what she experienced inside startled her.

"My mom doesn't believe in ghosts. She goes into the bathroom and then she comes out and looks really shaken. She looks at me and says 'Amanda is there something?' She said she walked into the stall and saw brown shoes in the stall next to her . She left the stall and looked under again and didn't see anything. She then went over and washed her hands...threw out the paper towel, cleared her throat, and [heard] someone say 'shhhh....shhhhh,'" Stewart said.

Leslie Schulze '08 also says that she experiences strange things in her fourth floor Hunt Hall room. Schulze says that a potted plant that she had on the window sill mysteriously disappeared. She claims that she checked the floor and the window below to see if the plant had fallen but couldn't find anything.

Former fourth-floor resident Katie Dry '07 says that she had a similarly creepy experience last year.

"When I moved in there was a sticky hook left behind. I remember taking it down because I fell off [a] chair. I threw it away. I left and came back a couple hours later and the same hook was back up on the wall in a different spot in the middle of the wall above my bed where I'm sure there wasn't one before. I went through the garbage and the hook I threw away wasn't there," Dry said.

Whether or not one chooses to believe in the Hunt Hall ghost, most agree that she is an interesting topic of conversation with both former and future Hunt Hall residents.

Happy (haunted) Halloween!

Get in the Spirit this Halloween

Getting lost at Ard's Farm Market

By Genna Jerrard
Contributing Writer

Looking for something fun to do in the spirit of autumn and Halloween? Ard's Farm Market is a great place to get in the spirit of the season and take a break from the stress of classes.

Located five minutes north of campus on 4803 Old Turnpike Road, Ard's Farm Market offers great attractions including a five-acre corn maze, a rope maze, the Maze Mountain Tube Slide, hayrides to the pumpkin patch and a small petting zoo with rabbits and goats.

The corn maze was my favorite attraction, and the slide and the s'mores at the end came close. Before you enter the maze you must watch a short video in which you are given a brief summary of maze rules (no smoking, no running), as well as the instructions to fulfill the Maize Quest upon entering.

Courtesy of Ard's Farm Market

Ard's Farm Market features a giant corn maze with a different theme every year. This year's theme, "Down on the Farm," is demonstrated through the maze's shape as a tractor and farm house.

At certain points there are posts with interesting facts and a bold word. Write this word in the corresponding place on your Maize Quest sheet; at the end of the maze all the words create a phrase. Though a bit childish, it is fun.

Upon entering the maze, you are given a sheet of paper to help you navigate if you get lost. There are checkpoints situated in the maze where you insert your paper into a red marker and are shown a map of the maze and your location. This makes it much easier for people who are always getting lost.

"Getting lost in the corn maze is fun, as long as you have good boots and friends with a good sense of direction (always turn right)," Hilary Peirce '10 said.

The maze is very neat because it is not just a random layout of rows of corn. If looked at from a bird's-eye view it is composed of about five clearly-defined images, including a farm and a sun with long rows of corn protruding out of its center as the rays. Each section of the maze is defined by a certain color, making it easier for you to trace the image as you journey through it.

After successfully navigating the maze we headed over to the Maize Mountain Tube Slide. The slide is underground and you must climb a steep hill to reach it. Once correctly positioned on top of a potato sack, you are ready to zoom down into darkness and fly out at the bottom of the hill. Despite its brevity, it was definitely a blast.

The farm features a rope maze in which you hook yourself up to a mess of rope and race your partner to the center with animal pens housing bunnies and goats. Both of these activities were fun, but what autumn season is complete without a hayride to a pumpkin patch?

This year, the residential colleges offered a retreat for all members to the farm, and it was a great time (even if a little chilly), Marissa Magno '09, a Junior Fellow for the humanities college, was a strong advocate for the retreat and very influential in getting people excited to go.

"I had heard lots of good things about the farm, and I thought it would be a great hall-bonding experience," Magno said.

I recommend this as a great activity for a hall retreat or any other group that you wish to go with on a Friday or Saturday. You need a car to get there, but it is a short drive. There is also a cover charge of $7 for adults (13 and over) and $6 for children.

"Just remember to definitely bundle up and wear boots if it is damp outside, as it will get a little muddy inside the maze," Nicole Kelly '10 said.

Other than that, have fun and GET LOST.

How Halloween started and what it has become

By Ali Burack
Contributing Writer

In the world of a child, Halloween is simple. It is all about the candy. Children don't take into account the money that is involved with arranging parties, buying candy and costumes, and creating haunted houses. "My mom would always dress me in ridiculous outfits, so now at the age of 20 years old, where I am in complete control of what I wear, I like to put a lot of effort into the details of my costume and appearance," Sarah Winslow '09 said.

At college, numerous concerns arise. Students worry about their costumes and whether or not they will be invited to attend a party. Halloween transforms from the realm of the goblins and candy and emerges into a time where "...anything goes. Whatever weird outfit you might have some bizarre desire to wear can now be donned," said Aglaya Glebova and Lisie Mehlman of The Middlebury Campus newspaper.

Today Halloween represents both a time of make-believe and a time where college students are able to wear whatever they want, but it was not always viewed this way. The origin of the word comes from "All Hallows Eve," a Catholic holiday. In 5th Century B.C. in Celtic Ireland, "the holiday was called Samhain, the Celtic New Year," according to wilstar.com. It was believed that on this day "the disembodied spirits of all those who had died throughout the preceding year would come back in search of living bodies to possess for the next year," according to Wikipedia. The living and the spirit world would be able to intermingle, suspending the laws of times and space. According to wilstar.com, to protect themselves villagers "would extinguish the fires in their homes, to make them cold and undesirable. They would then dress up in all manner of ghoulish costumes and noisily paraded around the neighborhood, being as destructive as possible in order to frighten away spirits looking for bodies to possess."

Halloween came to America in the 1840s by Irish immigrants fleeing from the potato famine. According to Wikipedia, "the custom of trick-or-treating is thought to have originated not with the Irish Celts, but with a ninth-century European custom called souling," which involved children begging for soul cakes door-to-door. Instead of focusing on the religious significance of the day, Halloween is now a time of fun and games. College students will go to parties, play games, eat candy and of course, drink At college, students are free from the supervision of their parents they are free to do and wear whatever they want.

"More and more people are getting into celebrating the holiday, regardless of their age," said Scott Krugman of the National Retail Federation, according to MSN.com. Young adults are at taking the lead in this transformation turning Halloween into the second or third biggest party night of the year behind New Years and the Super Bowl. It seems the Halloween party scene is getting bigger each year on college campuses. Students have allowed Halloween to become an evening of debauchery.

"I don't know what it is about Halloween, but preppy kids love it. Guys and girls use Halloween as a time to dress in clothes they would usually not wear, whether it be funky, outrageous or promiscuous," Catharine Driever '08 said.

As people get older they lose touch with their inner child, who saw Halloween as a time of candy and make-believe. They begin see Halloween instead as an excuse to spend money, party and get dressed up.

"People start to plan for Halloween way in advance. They engage in constant discussions about who they are going to be and what they intend to do that night," said Alena Beerman '08. Going downtown on Halloween for the past two years fully reinforces her view.

When you see everyone running around on the downtown streets and heading to date parties people are fully put together. Their shoes and bags even match perfectly," Beerman said. As Halloween nears I urge you, if you haven't already, to start planning your costumes. As you get ready on All Hallow's Eve remember that ANYTHING can happen!

Creative ways to celebrate Halloween on campus

By Rajaa Qadri
Writer

So here comes the spooky holiday again, with the scary faces, haunted houses, pumpkins and much more. When I was young my friends and I used to sit together and brainstorm about what we were going to do for Halloween in June. It has not changed much, and I am sure a lot of you are also brainstorming.

"Halloween is so exciting for me," Amanda Rose '10 said. "I am really looking forward to celebrating it on campus. It's different here, as you have more space to decorate than you had at home and you can spend more time with friends and enjoy."

So, are you and a bunch of friends planning to visit a hunted house? Or maybe you are hosting a Halloween party? Or you may be just sitting and thinking of what to do on Halloween. Here are a few ideas that can speed up the brainstorming process or maybe even turn this Halloween into an event you will never forget.

If you are going to a Halloween party and everyone has their costumes, ask everyone to meet up at one place and get dressed together. Play Halloween music in the background and take pictures once everyone is dressed up.

On the way to the party, stop by an old graveyard or cemetery. Cemeteries, day or night, are always haunting and scary. Read the tombstone inscriptions and speculate about them, and do not forget to take pictures. The cemetery right behind the Smith Hall parking lot is a good place to visit.

We all want to dress up in cool Halloween outfits, do we not? During the Halloween season, bigger stores have all sorts of cool costumes. You can also look for costumes online. There are many Web sites offering plenty of options. If you are sick of the usual stuff, you can make your cool costume. Check out http://www.robinsfyi.com/holidays/halloween/costumes.htm for some pretty cool ideas about homemade costumes.

Wearing freaky vampire contact lenses or any colored contact lenses enhance the effect of your costume.

Rather than wearing the same old masks, try face-painting, which is a lot of fun. The good part about face-painting on Halloween is even if you make a mistake, it does not matter. It is meant to scare people anyway. Who knows you screwed it up?

Apart from getting dressed in scary costumes and going to parties, you can also visit some creepy locations.

One Halloween article on Halloween-Blog.com claims, "One of the scariest locations in the U.S.A. is Gettysburg, Pa., scene of the Battle of Gettysburg which occurred in the summer of 1863. By the end of the bloody three-day conflict, the battlefield was strewn with the corpses of soldiers from both sides. ...Now those restless spirits from a war fought long ago can be seen walking, fighting and dying again and again on those same battlefields."

When you are done visiting places, attending parties and taking pictures, invite all your friends to your place to watch a scary movie. Stephen King is known for his horror movies and stories. Play board games like Clue, 13 Dead End Drive or Vampire to end your day.

The good part about face-painting on Halloween is even if you make a mistake, it does not matter. It is meant to scare people anyway. Who knows you screwed it up?

Whatever you choose to do on Halloween, keep safety first. When outside, stay close to friends and do not wander anywhere alone. It is already creepy out there and bad things can happen. Choose the right costume for yourself, stay safe and have fun!

Photos courtesy of amazon.com

November 3, 2006

The Bucknellian

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

Volume 138, Number 9 | Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue | www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Foreign Film

See the photos that won the recent contest held by the Study Abroad Office for best landscape and cultural pictures.

See page A10

Mitchell discusses plans for the future

By Wes Kinter
Contributing Writer

In his State of the University Address on Saturday in the Elaine Langone Center Forum, President Brian C. Mitchell spoke on the present condition of the University and its promising future.

Following a brief multimedia presentation on the University's past and present, Mitchell welcomed the audience to Parents Weekend, describing the campus as a place for students "to learn, to grow, to thrive."

Mitchell described looking to the future as the world continues to move forward.

"Bucknell will require a new agility," Mitchell said.

"The University will have to adapt its programs and services, augmenting traditional modes of instruction with innovative pedagogies where appropriate," the Plan for Bucknell states.

One particular focus of these plans remains with the students. Mitchell emphasized the necessity for them to strive to succeed.

"At Bucknell, I am pleased to say, there resides a latent hunger for the next level of achievement," Mitchell said. "We are determined to transform that drive, that spirit, into action that strengthens this institution and the educational experience we offer."

Accommodating this movement, Mitchell plans to implement a five-course teaching load for faculty members, replacing the current load of six courses. He hopes this will provide professors with more time to focus on students.

"Several other institutions have adopted a smaller course load with great success," Professor of English Michael Payne said. "For Bucknell, this will allow for more personal research opportunities and guided individual development."

Mitchell provided three examples that would work through the Plan for Bucknell.

The first is to build or renovate classrooms, the second plans to link downtown Lewisburg with the campus and the third looks to open up the entrances to the campus.

"We want the physical borders of the campus to open to the world in every direction," Mitchell said. "We envision front doors to campus on all sides."

Mitchell emphasized the scope of these projects, believing it to encompass a decade of work in association with "the distinguished firm of Shepley, Bulfinch, Richardson and Abbott to help us develop this master plan."

Mitchell outlined five priorities within The Plan for Bucknell, which focus on specific areas of improvement.

The first aims to "strengthen the academic core," by building up a solid liberal arts foundation. By offering such an inclusive curriculum, Mitchell envisioned the unique experience, such that "you can find Amherst and Williams at Bucknell, but you cannot find Bucknell at Amherst and Williams."

The second looks to "deepen the residential learning experience" of

See MITCHELL page A2

Parents Weekend festivities

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

"We Brake for Nobody," the University's improv comedy group, performs during Parents Weekend. The group held two performances last Saturday.

By Emilie Linsenmeyer
Writer

From Friday to Sunday, parents visited the University from around the country and the world to spend some quality time with their children and explore the campus. Parents were greeted in the Welcome Center located in the Elaine Langone Center Mall where they received an information packet containing materials to guide them through the weekend. Spirit buttons and pom-poms were also distributed so parents could display their Bison spirit.

See PARENTS page A4

Bishop Rhoades visits University

By Jeremy O'Sullivan
Writer

The University was recently blessed by a campus visit from Catholic Bishop Kevin C. Rhoades, the ninth bishop of the Harrisburg diocese.

Rhoades accepted the invitation from Catholic Campus Ministry (CCM) and campus priest, Father Martin O. Moran. While at the University, Rhoades celebrated an afternoon Mass. In his homily Rhoades addressed how following Christ as a young person is often difficult.

"In our culture there are many challenges, especially for young people ... and that to follow Christ is really counter-cultural today. It takes courage," Rhoades said.

"It's an important time in a person's life ... as far as one's faith ... as far as choices one's making for his or her life and I think the church needs to be there to help with guidance ... and love, and to make sure that we are there with the students in this time in their life."

Moran said a great deal of the success of CCM is because of the Bishop's support for collegiate programs.

"We have a lot of colleges and universities in our diocese but we make the sacrifices both in personnel and in finances so the church is present and active at all of our campuses, and Bucknell is an example," Rhoades said.

Rhoades was named bishop of the Harrisburg diocese on Oct. 14, 2004, where he became a high spiritual leader to nearly a quarter of a million Catholics from the Maryland border north to below Scranton, Pa.

Before Rhoades received his title in Harrisburg he was the administrator of Mount St. Mary Seminary for many years. He was raised in Lebanon, Pa., began his undergraduate education at Mount St. Mary's and then transferred to St. Charles Seminary. After college, he studied in Rome for several years while occasionally returning to the United States to do parish work. Since he is bilingual, he was able to partake in parish work in Spanish communities.

Rhoades came to campus

See BISHOP page A4

Former Nixon strategic adviser criticizes Bush administration

By Ahmed Kodouda
Writer

Kevin Phillips, former strategic adviser to President Nixon, said the current administration is directing the country into a process of decay on Wednesday in Rooke Chapel.

The chapel was filled with students, faculty and Lewisburg residents intently listening to Phillips' remarks.

Phillips is a regular commentator for National Public Radio and a contributing columnist to the Los Angeles Times and The Wall Street Journal.

Phillips explained how today's current administration is in too much support of religion and military.

His talk focused on the three central ingredients in the decline of the major economic powers of the world. They included terrorism, political instability and economic reliance on other nations.

"I found Phillips very enlightening and took a lot from his lecture," said James Balakian '10, a member of the Global Residential College. "I went to the lecture because I had to go as part of the Modern World Systems [Foundation Seminar] common hour."

When it came to oil and debt, Phillips said the Republican Party was the main party involved with the nation's reliance on foreign oil. In his opinion, the national debt was the fault of both the Republican and Democratic Parties.

During the '80s he found himself writing more about

See PHILLIPS page A3

Panelists examine issues of 2006 election

By Alexandra Campbell-Ferrari
Staff Writer

Four University professors held a forum on Oct. 20 to discuss the people, the politics, and the issues of the 2006 election. Three assistant professors of political science, Scott Meinke, Susan Tabrizi, Robin Jacobson, and Eric Mazur, associate professor of religion, presented information on topics complimentary to their expertise.

Meinke addressed the theme "How Did We Get Here?: The Midterm Elections in Context." According to Meinke, the big question in voters' minds is whether or not there will be a party switch in the House and/or the Senate. All of the seats in the House and one-third of the seats in the Senate are up for grabs. Many of the seats currently held by Republicans are likely to change.

"The Democrats will need a 15-seat net gain in the House and a six-seat net gain in the Senate to become the majority party" Meinke said.

Recent polls have found more seats are in play than originally thought, a positive situation for Democrats. Democrats are fighting certain Republican advantages such as incumbency and greater fundraising.

Trend shows the president's party looses seats in midterm elections with exceptions being the 1998 and 2002 elections. Voters tend to hold their representatives responsible for the president's flaws.

The 1994 and 2006 elections are often compared due to their similarities. In the 1994 election, Democrats lost fifty-two seats in the House and eight seats in the Senate.

This upheaval was attributed to high voter turnout, but there were many other factors at play. Unified party government, meaning the House majority, Senate majority and President were all part of the same political party, made it easy for voters to know who to blame for what they do not like. In 1994 there was also prevalent disapproval of Congress.

The approval rating of Bush and his Congress are low, as was the approval of Clinton and his Congress.

See ELECTION page A3

Open forum addresses future campus changes

By Michelle Laxer
News Editor

Dennis Hawley '72, associate vice president of facilities, led an open forum on Wednesday night in the Elaine Langone Center regarding the master plan to improve living conditions in the campus community. The dialogue touched on issues such as a multi-purpose student center, new dining options and the campus environment as a whole.

"[Students need to] help us think and envision the future of Bucknell," Hawley said.

Tom Kearns, Ann Newman and Stephen Erwin were the three representatives from the Boston architectural and planning firm Shepley Bulfinch Richardson and Abbott. They were present to answer questions from students and listen to suggestions for improving campus living. They also explained the tentative timeline of the campus master planning process.

See FORUM page A2

INSIDE THIS ISSUE

OPINIONS
There are plans for the next 10 years, but what can students do to improve the University now?

A6

A&E
A&E takes a closer look at writing a book in honor of National Novel Writing Month. Also read the New York best-sellers list for this week.
A10

FEATURES
Don't forget to send in your postcard revealing you darkest secrets. For instructions turn to Feats.

B9

SPORTS
Volleyball team reflects on season, looks forward to final home match.

B7

Public Safety Log

Wednesday, October 25

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Vedder Hall: Student Health Services driver contacted for transport.

ALARM-FIRE—The Mods: Cause unknown.

INFORMATION—6th Street: Student reported he was allegedly assaulted.

BURGLARY—Smith Hall: An employee reported a computer hard drive, keyboard and monitor stolen. Incident is under investigation.

ALARM-FIRE—Swartz Hall: Caused by burnt food.

ALARM-FIRE—The Bison: Caused by smoke from cooking.

ALARM-FIRE—The Mods: Caused by cooking.

Friday, October 27

MOTOR VEHICLE ACCIDENT—Farm Lot: Two employees were involved in a minor vehicle accident.

ASSIST OTHER AGENCY—Swartz Hall: Officer assisted a constable to locate a student.

TAMPERING WITH FIRE EQUIPMENT—The Mods: Detectors covered.

TAMPERING WITH FIRE EQUIPMENT—The Mods: Drug and alcohol paraphernalia found. Detectors covered.

ALARM-FIRE—Harris Hall: Caused by a smoke machine.

Saturday, October 28

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—The Mods: Student cited for underage consumption.

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—Vedder Hall: Student cited for underage consumption.

TAMPERING WITH FIRE EQUIPMENT—Vedder Hall: Fire extinguisher discharged on the ground floor.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Kinney Natatorium: Non-University student transported to Evangelical Hospital emergency room for treatment.

THEFT—Phi Kappa Psi Fraternity: Cell phone theft.

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—Kappa Delta Rho Fraternity: Student cited for possession of alcohol.

PROPERTY DAMAGE—Edwards House: A vehicle damaged the lawn.

Sunday, October 29

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—Roberts Hall: Student cited for underage consumption.

TAMPERING WITH FIRE EQUIPMENT—Swartz Hall: Fire extinguisher discharged in the stairwell.

ALARM-FIRE—Phi Kappa Psi Fraternity: Caused by cigarette smoke.

DISORDERLY CONDUCT—Vedder Hall: Large recycling can full of water poured into a room.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Roberts Hall: Broken windows on the second- and third-floor stairwells.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Kappa Delta Rho Fraternity: Two vehicles parked in the Kappa Delta Rho parking lot had windshield damage.

TAMPERING WITH FIRE EQUIPMENT—The Mods: Detector covered.

Monday, October 30

FOUND PROPERTY—Charles A. Dana Engineering Building: Bike recovered.

Tuesday, October 31

DISORDERLY CONDUCT—Moore Avenue Lot: Indecent gesture towards an officer.

MOTOR VEHICLE ACCIDENT—Vaughan Literature Road: Two vehicles involved in a minor accident.

ALARM-INTRUSION—Coleman Hall Sound Booth: Cause unknown.

President reviews five-point plan

MITCHELL From page A1

200 organizations and clubs on campus. Mitchell wants to create "a place where students with great academic skills and talents in other areas not only succeed, but also thrive."

The third point examines the need to promote diversity in all its forms to "contribute to a student's capacity to grow, reflect, understand and adapt."

The fourth priority is to build bridges and bring"the world to Bucknell and Bucknell to the world."

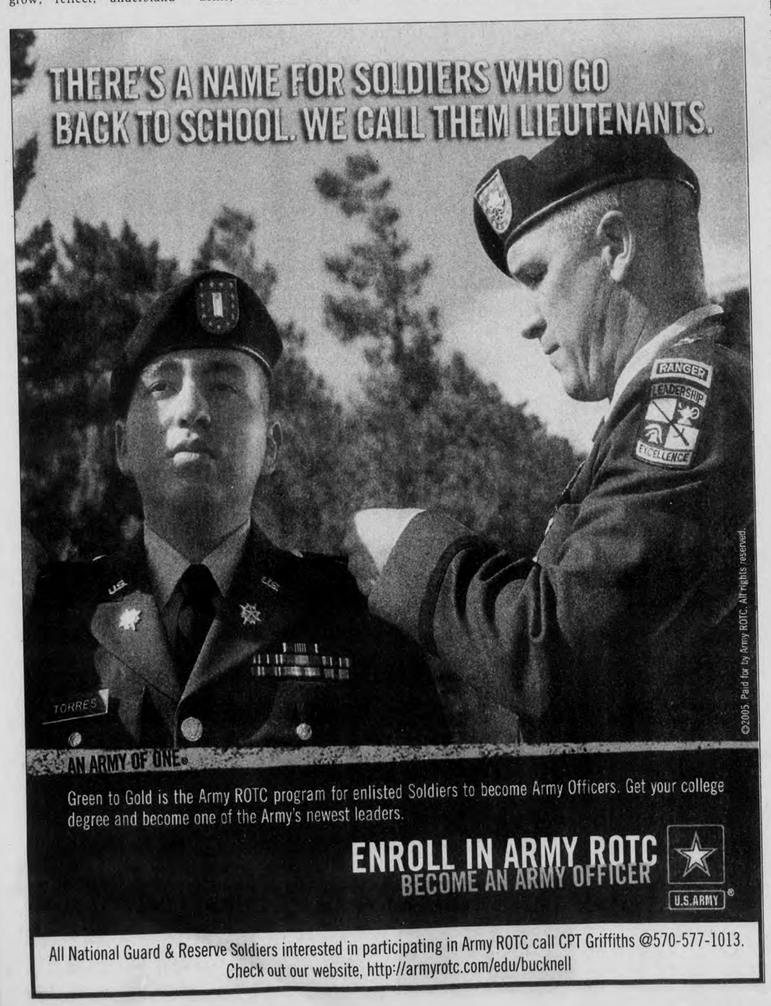
"We want our students to have even more chances to connect with the world on many levels," Mitchell said, "locally, regionally, nationally and internationally, as students, volunteers and leaders."

The final point aims to secure and stabilize a financial future by extending different mediums of support in an effort to promote philanthropy on campus.

"The Office of Finance, in collaboration with appropriate department heads, will assess the general financial impact of each strategic initiative," according to The Plan for Bucknell. "The financial plan will contain expected operational and capital components, balanced budgets projected out for at least five years and options for the funding strategy for each plan initiative."

Payne offered his thoughts on the future of the University.

"The future is made up of pieces," Payne said. "How they are put into action is an accurate depiction of what Bucknell wants to be or wants to do."



THERE'S A NAME FOR SOLDIERS WHO GO BACK TO SCHOOL. WE CALL THEM LIEUTENANTS.
RANGER
LEADERSHIP
EXCELLENCE
TORRES
AN ARMY OF ONE.
©2005. Paid for by Army ROTC. All rights reserved.

Green to Gold is the Army ROTC program for enlisted Soldiers to become Army Officers. Get your college degree and become one of the Army's newest leaders.

ENROLL IN ARMY ROTC
BECOME AN ARMY OFFICER

U.S.ARMY

All National Guard & Reserve Soldiers interested in participating in Army ROTC call CPT Griffiths @570-577-1013.
Check out our website, http://armyrotc.com/edu/bucknell

Campus facelift is underway

Planners are seeking student input

FORUM From page A1

The process begins with open forums with the students, faculty, staff and eventually the Lewisburg community. During these forums, the firm will listen to suggestions and concerns of the residents.

"Listening is critical because it is the foundation of the process," Erwin said.

Erwin and his colleagues plan to draft an agenda consisting of a "laundry list" of items and issues that should be addressed. The firm hopes to have the final draft completed by the end of the year.

"Physical planning starts in January," Newman said.

The plan will be implemented over the next few years, and the final master plan should be presented to the Board of Trustees in September 2007. The entire process is expected to take 10-20 years to complete.

One of the initial steps taken by the firm was a study of space and classroom utilization. All the rooms on campus, with the exception of four or five, were placed into a database analyzing the use of every room.

"We're looking at the physical environment," Erwin said.

They are looking at the parking lots, landscape and "sacred spaces" of the campus.

Kearns began the dialogue asking the forum about the nature of the campus and the University's culture. One student brought up the separation between the uphill and downhill communities.

Another suggested the implementation of hall programs to improve socialization between the uphill and downhill first-year students.

One of the larger ideas discussed was the possibility of an improved, centralized, multi-purpose student center. Designed as a place where students go to relax or do homework, there would be room for student organizations to meet regularly and store supplies. A common room in a new student center could provide interaction between uphill and downhill students. Uptown and the Student Health Center could also be moved there. A new student center could serve as a place where professors and students interact on a regular basis.

Other ideas discussed included combining the Bison and the Bostwick Cafeteria so first-year students and upperclassmen would not be isolated from each other. Students also discussed the possibility of a large banquet hall or conference room.

Newman asked which two or three places were integral parts of the campus community that should not be changed. Answers included the Grove, the Academic Quad, Bucknell Hall and 7th Street Café.

There were objections to constructing buildings on the hill between the Langone Center and Rooke Chapel.

The campus master planning is also being expanded to the general Lewisburg community.The agenda plans to clean up the transition from the University to Market Street. One student made a suggestion to fix the sidewalks.

Representatives of the firm will make many visits to campus during checkpoints in the process. They will hold more open forums to hear feedback from students and they encourage the campus community to attend.

"Listening is critical because it is the foundation of the process."

— Stephen Erwin,
Representative Boston Architechtural and Planning Firm

Recycle this newspaper!

Appointment Setter

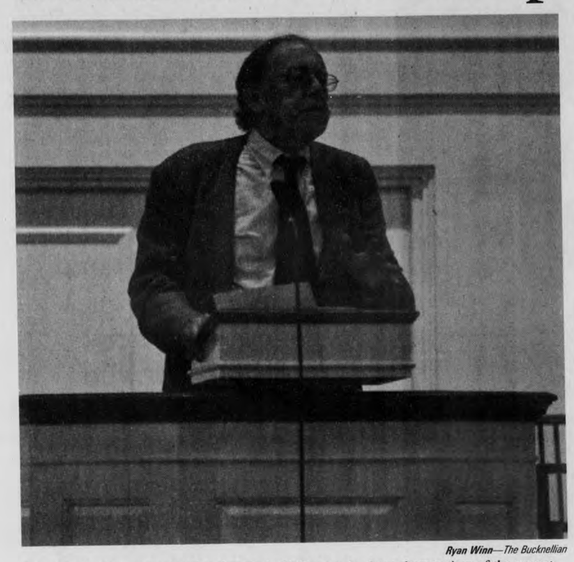
Flex-Hours
Part-Time
Great for Students

Must have a great voice and know how to qualify potential customers.

We Do Metal Roofs
a division of Prudential Realty

570-522-6555

Phillips speaks about recent decline in ecomomic power



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Recognized author and political analyst Kevin Phillips speaks about shortcomings of the current administration. He served as President Nixon's strategic adviser.

PHILLIPS From page A1

the economy, the gap between the rich and the poor and globalization mainly because these factors were changing politics.

He also asserted the idea of "dynastic power." Even though there have been presidents with relations to other presidents such as the Roosevelts and the Adams, there have not been any presidents with such proximity to each other's terms within the same party and political beliefs as the Bush "dynasty." He went on to say there have never been consecutive republican presidents to be father and son.

Phillips said the media failed to shed enough light on the dynastic power issue.

"I never thought God played such a major role in a president's decision making," said Karan Shah '10, another member of the Global Residential College. "It is frightening to think that the most powerful man in the world makes believe that God tells him what to do and that God placed him in his position of power."

Phillips' talk also focused on the "religious right" and the power it had when it came to Election Day. The Republican Party will use the Evangelicals as its base to win the election, he said.

Phillips authored several books including "American Dynasty," "Wealth and Democracy," "Arrogant Capital," "Boiling Point" and the "Emerging Republican Majority." His most recent book is "American Theocracy: The Peril and Politics of Radical Religion, Oil and Borrowed Money in the 21st Century."

The lecture was part of the 2006-2007 Science, Technology and Society Colloquium Series. The series will include talks by Volker Hartkopf on Feb. 5 and Joel Mokyr on Mar. 21.

Faculty encourages students to vote

ELECTION From page A1

The difference lies in the fact that the Democrats have not run as effective a campaign as the Republicans in 1994. There are now smaller margins and fewer competitive races, which means turnout will be more important in 2006 than in 1994. It only takes one vote to win.

Tabrizi spoke about the importance of polls and where the battlegrounds for hot seats are located.

Polls have been around since the mid to late 90's. Well- designed and implemented polls can inform the public.

It is important not to blindly accept all polls and their interpretations. Web polls, for instance, are for entertainment.

Scientific polls provide significant data, based on samples and statistical theory. Their results are estimates of what is going on in the big picture. Their margin of error gives us a range of probable values. For example, if candidate A is at 47 percent, candidate B is at 53 percent and the margin of error is +/- 4, then the range of the actual vote is 43-51 percent for candidate A and 49-57 percent for candidate B. This shows an overlap, signifying no real difference and therefore a statistical dead heat.

Tabrizi identifies Iraq, the economy, healthcare, terrorism, immigration, abortion and stem cell research as important issues for voters. Democrats identify Iraq as their number-one concern, while Republicans say terrorism is their first concern.

Tabrizi also examined several of the closely watched races.

In Tennessee there is an open seat. The current senator, Republican majority leader Bill Frist, decided to retire. Republican Robert Corker at 47.2 percent faces Democrat Harold Ford at 45.8 percent. Congressional Quarterly (CQ) determined that there is no clear favorite.

In the 10th Electoral District in Pennsylvania, which includes the University, Republican Don Sherwood at 37 percent faces Democrat Chris Carney at 51 percent (margin of error +/- 5). CQ states there is no clear favorite in this traditionally Republican district.

Jacobson focused on local campaigns and national policy.

"It is important to pay attention to the issues. The balance of power is at stake," Tabrizi said. "So make your vote."

"It is important to pay attention to the issues. The balance of power is at stake."

— Robin Jacobson,
Assistant Professor of Political Science

News Briefs

Assault investigation continues

Lewisburg Police Department is still investigating the alleged stabbing of a University student last Tuesday night near 64 University Ave.

Kevin Longo '09 reported that he was assaulted and cut six to 12 times on the wrist with an unknown object when he did not turn over his car keys to the assailant.

Due to the sensitivity of the situation, no further details have been released to the public and any current developments are being withheld.

"I hope we can wrap this up in the next week or so," said Director of Public Safety Jason Friedberg.

He also assured the campus community that there is no immediate threat to University safety.

"If we believe the threat is credible, we will send out a campuswide email," Friedberg said.

Lewisburg Police Department would not comment on the investigation at this time.

Florida teen charged with stealing city bus

Ritchie Calvin Davis, a 15-year-old Florida resident, was charged with grand theft auto and driving without a license after he stole and operated a city bus on Saturday.

CNN.com reported Davis took the bus from Orlando's Central Florida Fairgrounds, where the bus was awaiting sale at an auction. He proceeded to pick up passengers and collect fares on a public transportation route.

"I drove that bus better than most of the LYNX [the Orlando area's public transport system] drivers could,"Davis said to a deputy. "There isn't a scratch on it. I know how to start it, drive it, lower it, raise it."

Witnesses reported Davis obeyed the speed limit and followed the appropriate route. He has been charged with a similar bus theft in the past, but this information has not been released.

Bob Barker to retire

Bob Barker, iconic host of the daytime game show "The Price is Right," has decided to retire in June, reported CNN.com. Barker made his television debut as host of "Truth or Consequences" in 1956. He began hosting "The Price is Right" on Sept. 4, 1972.

"I will be 83 years old on December 12," Barker said. "I've decided to retire while I'm still young."

Barker said hosting the show at his age has taken a mental and physical toll on him.

Leslie Moonves '71, president and CEO of the CBS Corporation, called Barker a "daytime legend, an entertainment icon and one of the most beloved television personalities of our time."

Crimson staff members suspended

The Harvard Crimson, the student newspaper at Harvard University, suspended two members of the staff this week.

The Crimson discovered at least four cartoons drawn by undergraduate student Kathleen Breeden resembled work previously published in other news sources.

According to CNN.com, one of the cartoons was similar to one released in the Oct. 16 edition of Newsday drawn by Pulitzer prize-winning cartoonist Walt Handelsman. The Crimson publicly apologized on their Web site.

"The Crimson regrets the publication of these cartoons, and would like to publicly apologize to the offended publications and cartoonists," the Crimson said.

On Friday, Victoria Ilyinsky, a columnist for the Crimson, was suspended because her column took material from Slate, an online magazine, without any accreditation.

Landis extends contract

The University signed Tim Landis, the Bob Odell Head Football Coach, to a multi-year contract extension. Landis was hired as the team's coach in December 2002 and has compiled a 19-24 record over his three plus seasons, including 10-13 in Patriot League play. The team has a 5-4 (2-2) record this season, rebounding nicely from last year's 1-10 (0-6) injury-plagued season. Terms of the contract were not disclosed to the public.

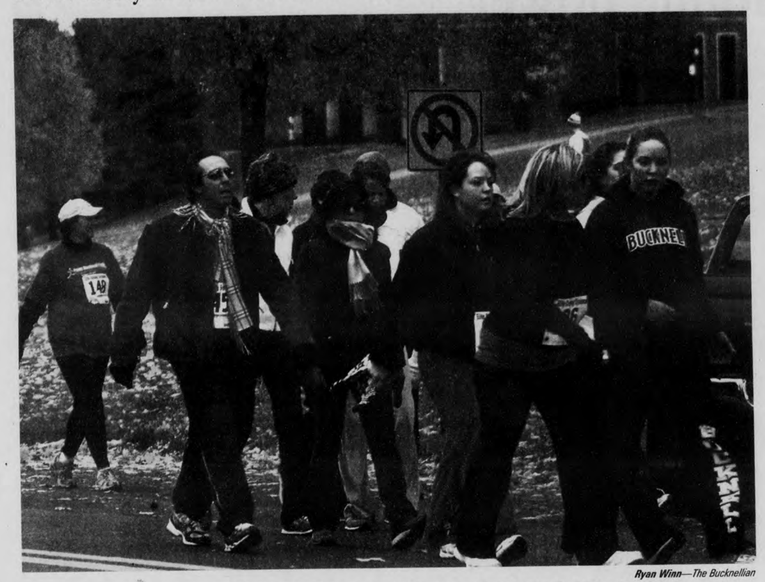
BRYNWOOD 535 Inc.
Rentals
In Lewisburg Since 1969
Your search begins..... and ends here.
Professional 24/7 Maintenance Staff
Apartments (furnished & unfurnished)
Houses for professionals students families
Rental Garages Also Available
Office & Retail Space
300—3,000 sq ft
brynwoodrentals.com
611 Market Street, Lewisburg
ph: 570.524.2121 x 3

Dearest Nathan,
"Some hearts just get lucky sometimes." I am so fortunate to have you in my life.
Happy 1 Year Anniversary!
Love always,
Erika

Summer Breeze Stables
Est. 1973
10 minutes from Campus
Riding Lessons for all levels
Certified Professional Trainer
Large indoor and Outdoor Arenas
Boarding, Training and Showing
Call 570-412-0771 for an appointment

Students welcome parents back to campus

University hosts multitude of events to entertain families



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Families participate in "Paint Bucknell Pink," a five-kilometer run to raise money for the Susan G. Komen Breast Cancer Foundation. The walk took place on the Sunday morning of Parents Weekend.

PARENT From page A1

On Friday night, many students and their families took the opportunity to watch the volleyball team's win over Lafayette, while others attended the University Jazz Band's performance. Parents had the option of viewing a performance of the play "Spring Awakening," performed again on Saturday night.

Parents who decided they would rather be part of the entertainment instead of watching it headed over to Open Mic Night, held from 11 p.m. to 1 a.m. at 7th Street Café.

Saturday's multitude of events kicked off with the State of the University address given by President Brian C. Mitchell. He spoke about the University today and his hopes for the future.

Families of first-year students were invited to Mitchell's home for an informal welcome. The line wrapped around the house as parents waited for the opportunity to speak with students, administrators and Mitchell and his wife, Mary Jane.

Throughout the day, various academic departments held open houses so parents could meet faculty and see what their sons or daughters are learning. Information about studying abroad was also presented.

> "It was a lot of fun. got to spend time with my dad and got to show him a little of what college is like."
>
> — Peter Friedman '08

The football game against Fordham attracted students and parents, who saw the Bisons emerge victorious. Many people not wanting to face the cold attended one of two "We Brake for Nobody" performances held at 12 p.m. and 4 p.m.

"The performance was hilarious," Stephanie Paciello '10 said. "It was so crowded that my parents and I had to sit on the steps, but it was definitely worth it."

After a fun-filled day, many families attended the themed dinner, "Bucknell Around the World," held in the Bostwick Cafeteria. Chi Omega sorority held a "Make a Wish Auction" during the dinner to fund its Wish Child suffering from Cystic Fibrosis.

A very popular attraction Friday and Saturday night was "Christy's," an a cappella concert held in Rooke Chapel that sold out both nights. Another fun activity on Saturday night was a show hosted by Uptown featuring Swingset, a student jazz group, until 2 a.m.

The sisters of Kappa Alpha Theta sorority held a Pancake Brunch from 8 a.m. to 2 p.m. on Sunday for parents before they went back home.

The "Paint Bucknell Pink" five-kilometer run also took place on Sunday morning. This event, sponsored by Colleges Against Cancer, benefited the Susan G. Komen Breast Cancer Organization.

"I think it is terrific that the University plans all sorts of positive and fun activities for Parents Weekend," Zak Marsh '10 said. "It helps hide the fact that on normal weekends, most social events involve alcohol."

Students found the weekend enjoyable.

"It was a lot of fun," said Peter Friedman, '08. "I got to spend time with my dad and got to show him a little of what college is like."

Rhoades speaks about diffculties Christians face to help students create and enforce a relationship with Christ. Greeting parents and students allowed him to elegantly diffuse his message across campus.

BISHOP From page A1

"The thing that [Rhoades] loves the most is to be able to come out and be with people ... to spend time with the people in parishes and schools, just to be with the people, to pray with them. His message is one of evangelization, about spreading the good news; a call to holiness and building a personal relationship with Christ," Father Neil Sullivan said.

"More than print and ink, a newspaper is a collection of fierce individualists who somehow manage to perform the astounding daily miracle of merging their own personalities under the discipline of the deadline and retain the flavor of their own minds in print."
-Arthur Ochs Sulzberger

Write for News
etu001@

CatmanDo
Handyman Services
Specializing in small home repair jobs:
Custom Carpentry
Painting
Light construction
Greg H Mathias
570-524-4724
Free Estimates Fully insured

Nancy's Nu-Wave Salon
look your best
October Special
Free Paraffin Dip with Pedicure or Manicure
Main Street (Rte 45) Mantandon
524-2315
www.nancysnuwave.com

Igniting Creative Ideas
On Fire Promotions
by trautman associates, inc.
promotional products · fundraising items
embroidered & screenprinted caps & apparel
awards · trophies · business gifts
800-538-8009
Lewisburg Showroom 434 Market 570-522-8009
www.onfirepromotions.com
Bring in this ad for one FREE SCREEN!!!
GOOD ON ANY APPAREL ORDER
(minimum 36 pieces)

Create Color with Clear Vision LOGICS.
The choice for clean, clear, pure tone color. Haircolor with maximum versatility.
Infinite creativity.
Call for an appointment today.
Joseph Carroll Salon
HAIR CARE FOR THE ENTIRE FAMILY
431 Market Street, Lewisburg
524-0790
Open Tuesday–Saturday Walk-ins when time permits
www.matrix.com SALON BEAUTIFUL ENJOY! MATRIX

Real Smoked BBQ!
Beef Brisket, Pork, chicken, Ribs!
Sandwiches, Wraps, Salads, Platters!
NO RESERVATIONS NEEDED!
Call in for TAKEOUT!
SKEETERS PIT BBQ
ON THE BLUFF
OVERLOOKING THE SCENIC SUSQUEHANNA RIVER
AT THE INTERSECTION OF ROUTES 11 & 15
SHAMOKIN DAM
570.743.2727
Daily 11:00am - 10:00pm
Sundays till 8:00pm
www.SkeetersBBQ.com

"Turn your Power ON and Add LIFE to your Years!"
MORRISON'S ADVANCED CHIROPRACTIC CARE
Michael D. Morrison D.C.
1205 W Market Street
Lewisburg, PA 17837
Office: 570-523-1221
A Healthy Spine Equals a Healthy YOU!
Bucknell Students may receive a free exam and x-rays (if needed) with mention of this advertisement.

COLDWELL BANKER
PENN ONE REAL ESTATE
Thank You, Bucknell!!
For thirty years of calling Bucknell and Lewisburg home.
Susan Warner-Mills, Sales Associate
Competence, Integrity, Service
524-7500; swm@coldwellbanker.com

Sunset Skating Rink
Adult Night
18 and Up
Tuesday, November 14
7-9:30 P.M.
$4 Admission
$2.50 with School ID
(not including skate rental)
Rt. 11 & 15 Shamokin Dam (570) 743-0606

We print nothing but the hard facts

The Bucknellian
Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue
Volume 138, Number 9
C-3952 Bucknell University
Lewisburg, Pa. 17837
(570) 577-1520
bucknellian@bucknell.edu
http://www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Editor-in-Chief
Catherine Heverling '07

Associate Editor of Content
Jamie Jacobson '08

Associate Editor of Layout
Rina Van Orden '08

Business Manager
Jared Napolitano '08

Senior Editor
Drew Larson '08

News Editors
Evan Unger '09
Nilanjana Saha '09
Michelle Laxer '09

Opinions Editors
Hallie Stebbins '08
Michael Dippery '08

Sports Editors
Matthew Saylor '08
Barbara Perlman '09
Brian Mulligan '08

Features Editors
Julia Fuchs '09
Brianna DelValle '10

Arts & Entertainment Editors
Kimberly Kane '08
Lily Beauvilliers '09

Photography Editors
Ryan Winn '08
Ellyn Ercolano '09

Chief Copy Editors
Kathleen Conti '08
Greg Hamilton '08

Advertising Managers
Meredith Reighard '07
Kat Wallis '07
Katie Casteel '08
Emily Senko '08

Office Manager
Kate Wood '07

Circulation Manager
Adam Kahler '07

Cartoonist
Juliana Su '09

Adviser
James F. Lee

Op-Ed Policy

The editorials of The Bucknellian reflect the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the editor-in-chief. All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

Letters to the editor must be received by noon on the Tuesday before publication. Letters may not be longer than 600 words and the Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny or edit any letter to the editor. Letters must contain the writer's name and phone number (used for verification purposes and not to be printed). Mail or e-mail letters using the addresses above.

Publishing Information

The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester entirely by Bucknell students. All published material is chosen by the paper's Editorial Board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its adviser, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

Subscription Information

Subscriptions are available for $45 per year or $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian Subscriptions, Bucknell University, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, Pa. 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

Members of the local community may pick up a complimentary issue each week, with the understanding of one free issue per person. If you would like more for a nominal fee, contact the print office.

Advertising Policy

The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements if deemed offensive, illegal or in bad taste. Advertisements reflect the opinion of the advertiser and not necessarily that of The Bucknellian. For advertising rates and information, please contact the advertising department at (570) 577-1085. Copyright © 2006 The Bucknellian

The Bucknellian
Editorial

Students should focus on present before future

University President Brian C. Mitchell recently gave a State of the University address. The speech focused heavily on the five points of the Plan for Bucknell, which is projected to be completely implemented within the next 10 to 20 years.

There are plans for a new student center and the integration of the uphill and downhill parts of campus. There are hopes downtown living can be improved and the overall quality of the student experience will increase as time passes.

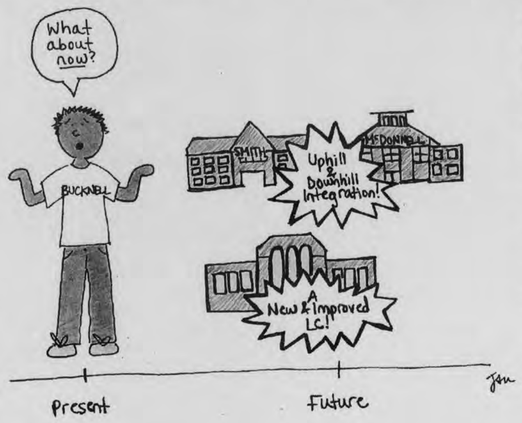
But the student experience can also be improved here and now.

While most of the benefits of the Plan will be seen in the future, current students can play a part in changing the University through student leadership.

The present and future of the student body falls largely in the hands of the Bucknell Student Government (BSG) representatives students will elect on Nov. 15. The current BSG officers not only recognize others' concerns and hopes for the University, but are also in a position to help make them a reality.

In a community of thousands, these are the few individuals representing students and building relationships with everyone from our many vice presidents to borough officials.

On that note, it is imperative for students to attend the BSG debates on Wednesday, Nov. 8. Here, they will hear not only the long-term goals of the candidates, but can also receive and share ideas on how these goals might be achieved during their terms.



These individuals will be in a position to make changes. But this does not mean other students are not.

By electing the candidates best fit to represent the student body and taking active roles in campus organizations, students promote change in the present, but this is not to say they should dismiss the future.

The University invited students to voice their concerns and share ideas about master planning and living conditions Wednesday evening. About 30 students attended.

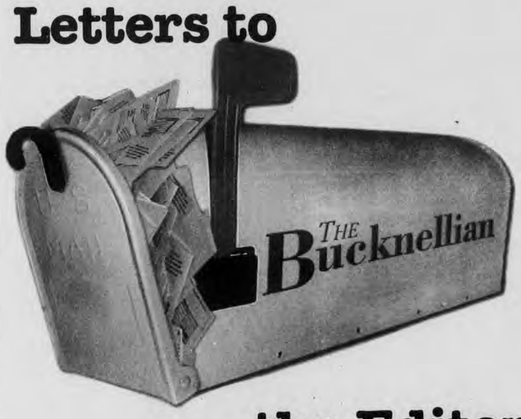
It is important for students to take an interest in those changes that will likely be made in future years. The changes made to the University will inevitably alter the value of our present education years from now.

Still, the University should work to make these "plans" concrete. When will these improvements begin and how will we be affected?

And if, as current students, we will not see the Plan come into action, should we really make it our main focus?

After all, a plan for our future is not certain. Our potential to improve the present is.

Letters to the Editor



University actively investigating vandalism

To the Editor:

I was surprised and disappointed to read a letter to me in the Oct. 27 issue of the Bucknellian ("SigEp alumni advocate vandalism investigation") suggesting the University has been lax in investigating the anti-gay, racist spray-paint vandalism that plagued our campus in September. Surprised because of the extent of our investigation; disappointed that our alumni would not first make a polite inquiry regarding the scope and breadth of that investigation.

Had an inquiry been made of my office or that of Public Safety Director Jason Friedberg, the alumni fraternity brothers would have been informed:

From the first day following the report, an anonymous tip-line was established to allow any suspicions or observations to be reported and investigated (four such tips were investigated).

An officer was specifically dedicated to this investigation. Several dozen students were interviewed, many of them residents, neighbors or visitors of the area where the vandalism occurred.

In week one, Friedberg issued a public appeal in the Bucknellian for assistance and for witnesses to come forward.

In week two, I issued a similar appeal through the Bucknellian.

In week three, I repeated my request in a campus-wide e-mail.

In total, our Public Safety Office has dedicated approximately 175 hours to this investigation. Ongoing reports of the status of the investigation were made to the President of Sigma Phi Epsilon, as the victimized fraternity, and the Multicultural Council of Presidents representative to the Bucknell Student Government.

We have pursued and continue to pursue every lead and every suspicion. We work closely with our local law enforcement counterparts in investigating all criminal activity.

Unfortunately, acts of shameful cowardice are frequently committed at night without witnesses. If any witnesses come forward, we remain prepared to investigate and prosecute those persons who would defile our campus.

As I stated in my earlier e-mail to campus, and repeat here: This incident is an outrage to the University. I asked then and I ask now for campus help in identifying the culprits and reaffirming the University's commitment to civility and mutual respect.

We take these incidents seriously and have dedicated the resources necessary for a full and complete investigation. We know that concerned alumni, students and our entire University community expect no less.

Sincerely,

Brian C. Mitchell
University President

Ms. O's column a disservice to campus

To the Editor:

As the mother of a Bucknell student and a healthcare professional I feel compelled to express my concern over the Ms. O column. Topics have ranged from talking dirty to being nervous when naked. In the Oct. 13 editorial, "Discussion promotes sexual health," you defended the column as a forum to promote sexual health. In my world, sexual health means avoiding unwanted pregnancy and disease, not knowing the finer points of dirty talk. If this column were really meant to promote sexual health, you would be less concerned with titillating your readers and more concerned with educating them. One night of nervous nakedness and dirty talk with the wrong partner can leave you with a virus that can kill you. Hepatitis, HIV, HPV-take your pick. If the Bucknellian truly wants to promote sexual health, begin offering real advice on topics which allow students to make informed sexual choices. You may not thrill your audience, but you will probably save some lives.

Sincerely,

Sarah C. Beauvilliers RN

Tree thieves highlight immaturity of students

To the Editor:

I understand that college students do not always make the best decisions. This is to be expected. Some choices are particularly bad. One choice baffled and appalled me when I learned of it in the Oct. 13 issue.

What puerile, ignorant, selfish morons try to steal an ancient tree slice?! I have given a great deal of thought to this absurd and callow act of criminal idiocy. I have considered the following:

First, I saw the tree slice once. It was pretty big. I am willing to bet that it was at least two people moving it, probably more.

Second, I am certain it was more, because even if one person could lift and move such an object, I highly doubt he or she would have the fine muscle control to do so drunk. I refuse to believe that anyone deserving to be at an institution as prestigious and intellectually rigorous as ours could possibly be thickheaded enough to attempt Grand Theft Redwood unless he or she had drank themselves brainless.

Thirdly, what on earth were you numbskulls planning to do with this tree once you got it out of the building? Put it on the President's driveway? Roll it into the middle of the academic quad? Take it to a pawn shop? Sorry, but I do not know of any market for centuries-old lumber.

Fourthly, this incident happened during Homecoming weekend. It occurred to me, with some degree of incredulity but suspicion nonetheless, that the culprits may have been alumni. If this is the case, I have no idea how said alumni could be so disrespectful and ungrateful to the establishment which nurtured them, taught them, graduated them and then welcomed them back onto campus with open arms and so much love. That kind of lack of maturity is shameful in college students, but outright disgusting when displayed by people who are supposed to be responsible adults in the real world.

I wish I could have been there in the room when Drunk Knucklehead #1 said to the other Drunk Knuckleheads, "Hey. You know what would be a great idea? Stealing the really old tree slice out of the Bio Building!" just so I could slap everyone in the room in the head. You poor fools.

Stealing the tree was a terrible idea. It was such a nifty teaching tool, not to mention a miracle of nature and witness to centuries of history until several degenerates decided to test the limits of idiocy. Turn yourselves in, tree-thieves. If you do not, your collective guilt will plague your souls until your respective dying days.

Sincerely,

Zak Marsh '10

Wikipedia helps bridge chasms between societies

Building a free community requires cooperation

By Michael Dippery
Opinions Editor

I have a confession to make: I am a Wikipedia editor.

I say that like it is a bad thing—I should not. As an editor, I am contributing to a project dedicated to enhancing the intellect of humanity. But given Wikipedia's bad reputation, it almost feels like something I should be ashamed of.

To the unfamiliar reader Wikipedia seems like a prime example of anarchy: no one is in control, the argument goes, since anyone can edit an article. What stops a malicious reader from inserting fraudulent or misleading material?

The answer is: a lot. To the common reader, Wikipedia is a vast territory of articles being updated by an untold number of anonymous editors. How, then, can such edits be tracked—and reverted—if it turns out they were put there as a practical joke (or for a more malicious reason)?

To combat such "vandalism," Wikipedia has two mechanisms: page watches and revision history.

Page watching is simple: any editor with a free account can add a page to his Watch List. Whenever he checks his Watch List, he sees a list of pages that have been edited, with the specific changes highlighted in bold red text.

This page is tied into Wikipedia's larger revision history. Each page has an associated revision history that shows a timeline of the edits, from the very first to the current edit. Any two edits can be compared to see the changes instantly highlighted, and any article can be reverted to an earlier edit.

In other words, Wikipedia is not a system of chaotic anonymous edits but rather an integrated, detailed system of edit histories emphasizing accountability for each and every editor, whether he or she is anonymous or has an account.

Wikipedia captures the very spirit of the Internet, or at least the World Wide Web. The World Wide Web was conceived by Sir Tim Berners-Lee during his tenure at CERN, a European nuclear research laboratory. According to his book "Weaving the Web," Berners-Lee's original concept was a hyperlinked series of documents that could be both read and edited over a network connection.

The central idea was to make scientific information easily indexed and free to anyone to read and publish. Berners-Lee originally designed the Web to be both readable and editable by the user's web browser, but no web browser since Berners-Lee's prototype has supported the edit feature.

Since anyone has the ability to edit articles, Wikipedia emphasizes the core spirit of the World Wide Web. The idea of free-as-in-speech information might shock the commoner, who is accustomed to knowledge to which he or she cannot contribute (e.g., Encyclopedia Britannica), but it is not strange at all to many scientists.

The idea of freely sharing information has long been a staple of the scientific community and the computing community in particular. Wikipedia emphasizes the values of computer scientists like Richard Stallman and groups like the Free Software Foundation: information should not be proprietary, but easily and freely available to all. (It is worth noting that part of the success of the World Wide Web was due to the fact that, unlike other hypertext systems, the software required to run and use the Web would be available to anyone.)

In fact, Wikipedia's license allows anyone to edit and distribute articles, just as the Free Software Foundation's GNU General Public License allows for the ability to modify and distribute computer source code. The catch is that all edits and distributions must adhere to the same obligations.

Lately, the spirit of Wikipedia has been marred by bad publicity and attention. The first headline came with edits to the article about John Seigenthaler implying he was involved in the Kennedy assassination. The editor later said he was just playing a joke, but the fallout from the changes forced Wikipedia to implement stricter controls on editing.

Since then the relatively obscure nature of Wikipedia has been in the spotlight and has caught the attention of other high-profile vandals. Comedians like Stephen Colbert even jumped on the bandwagon, encouraging fans to insert false, misleading or useless information into Wikipedia articles.

Not all edits have been jokes. According to Newsvine, politicians have begun taking advantage of Wikipedia's free and open nature by changing articles to make themselves look better or make their political enemies look worse.

All this detracts from the utopian nature of Wikipedia. Wikipedia is essentially a privately-funded public service project dedicated not only to bringing knowledge to all of humanity, but enabling anyone to contribute to that pool of knowledge on an equal footing.

Sabotaging Wikipedia, whether for benign purposes like humor or amusement or malicious purposes like political gain, is like sabotaging a public highway or park.

The only way Wikipedia can be successful is with the commitment of a few and the cooperation of all. Vandals are not merely hindering Wikipedia, but all of humanity. Like other projects dedicated to the free spread of information, Wikipedia enables us to break down social, political and cultural boundaries, bridging the gap between all people.

This goal is hindered by those who vandalize Wikipedia—not because of the vandalism itself, but because of the fact that Wikipedia's reputation is tarnished along with its articles.

So the next time you are thinking of adding "Stephen Hawking is teh sux0rs," think instead about making a constructive edit—if not for yourself, then for the good of humanity.

Penny for a bygone era

United States should move to 5-cent pricing scheme

By Ben Sirolly
Contributing Writer

The United States should eliminate the penny. The penny is an annoying piece of metal with no real worth and it is costing the United States millions of dollars every year. In 1908, a Hershey's chocolate bar cost 2 cents—a penny actually represented real value. Today, even penny candy costs 5 cents.

The penny is composed of 2.5 percent copper and 97.5 percent zinc, and in previous years zinc was inexpensive enough that minting of the penny made the United States government money, according to www.usmint.gov. China's hunger for raw materials to fuel their industrial expansion made zinc more scarce and more expensive.

Today, producing a single penny costs approximately 1.4 cents. Last year the United States minted 15,400,101,000 pennies, which means the United States lost over 20 million dollars in the process. That is 20 million dollars that could go to funding our failing public school system, paying off the national debt, fixing Social Security or funding better equipment for our troops. Twenty million dollars could be spent more wisely on projects other than minting the penny.

Not only does the penny waste government money, it wastes our time. Retirethepenny.org estimates the average American spends four hours each year counting pennies during monetary transactions. That is four hours each year I could spend sleeping, working or exercising, but no, I have to spend four hours fumbling with a useless coin.

The penny also hurts businesses. In 1999 Walgreens estimated it loses 1.3 million dollars every year counting pennies. With every company wasting time counting pennies the total cost to our economy is huge.

If you are like me, you are just annoyed by the idea that you have to deal with another piece of metal that sits in your pocket all day long.

I believe we should operate on a 5-cent system in which any remainder of cents is rounded to the nearest zero or five.

According to a press release at www.house.gov, Representative Jim Kolbe, R-Ariz., said such a rounding system "favors neither the consumer nor the retailer because the probability of rounding up or down is 50 percent either way—it would all come out even in the end."

One concern is eliminating the penny would create higher prices because most businesses would round up to the higher 5-cent mark. The soda machine industry has been operating on a 5-cent rounding scheme for years and its prices are often lower than those found in convenience stores. The rounding system would most likely not hurt individual consumers and it would definitely stop wasting people's time and companies' money.

I think it is obvious the penny has to go. It had its day in the sun and now it is time to retire the penny and relegate it to the history books next to the buffalo nickel. So long, and good riddance.

Gays deserve the legal protections of marriage

Federal amendment would violate states' rights

By Lauren Berninger
Writer

Marriage has long been acknowledged as the union between a man and woman. The institution of marriage sets the framework for the traditional family.

Family itself is most prominent in inculcating proper morals into children. The preservation of marriage in the traditional sense is very important to a moral society because it helps to ensure proper morals will be conserved from generation to generation.

Over the past few years, there has been much talk about the idea of gay marriages, civil unions and the rights of gay individuals. While recently the war in Iraq, the behavior of North Korea and other international events have overshadowed this issue, an article in the Washington Post on Monday gave rebirth to this American topic of concern.

While gay marriage is not conducive to our society, gay men and women should have the same rights that married couples have.

The article, written by Chris Jenkens and Michelle Boorstein, noted the majority of Virginia's voters support a constitutional amendment banning gay marriage. The surprising twist is that while the majority of Virginia's voters are currently in support of such an amendment, Catholics are split over the issue. According to Jenkins and Boorstein, approximately 60 percent of Catholics said gays should "be allowed to form legally recognized civil unions."

An important aspect of Catholicism is in fact the preservation of marriage as the union between man and woman, and more importantly the traditional family that results from marriage. This is why that statistic comes as such a surprise.

This is not because Catholics are in favor of gay marriage, but because the amendment would actually deny gays the very right to the legal rights that men and women share in marriage through civil unions, said Boorstein and Jenkins.

While gay marriage is not conducive to our society, gay men and women should have the same rights that married couples have. To deprive them of these benefits is extremely discriminatory on our government's part.

Same-sex relationships should not be called marriage because the union between man and man and woman and woman is not marriage. The definition of marriage cannot be changed to accommodate a minority.

To call them "married" would imply their union would result in a traditional family, which is not the case.

In addition, marriage is an issue of the state, not the federal government. Such an amendment would infringe on states' rights. States should stand up for the powers they possess and not allow the government to create an amendment out of their control.

This potential amendment may seem like a blatant attack on gays by the federal government. An entire amendment devoted to this topic seems a little excessive. While an amendment to define marriage and protect the traditional family is understandable, it cannot outlaw civil unions. That would visibly deny certain rights to a group of American citizens.

In conclusion, as a heterosexual society most people do not really come from a position of understanding in regards to these issues. Over the years it has become more and more apparent people do not choose who they are attracted to. It just happens. As a result, gays should be able to share the legal benefits of marriage as long as it is not "gay marriage."

Consider the patient who needs a life or death medical decision to be decided for him or her. What if the person who knows and loves him or her best is legally unable to make that decision because he or she is gay? Is that something we want embedded in American society?

Looking to advertise within the Bucknell Community?

Contact our advertising department now if you would like your ad to appear in our upcoming end-of-the-semester issue.

Contact The Bucknellian Business Department today to get an Advertising Guide by calling 570-577-1085 or e-mailing bucknellianads@bucknell.edu.

Mer Cares

Dear Mer:

I have a friend who is always depressed because of her boyfriend. They have been together for almost two years and have had sex. He seemed like a good guy at first but he always cheats on her and she takes him back. Worst of all, he abuses her and physically hurts her. I don't tell him what I think, because I am afraid of him. I don't want anything to happen to my friend. She says she can't break up with him because she doesn't want to feel alone. Besides, she won't listen to me when I say he is bad for her. She even wants to have a baby with him! I try to help her out but I can't because I haven't been through that. When she gets really depressed, she cuts herself. I am scared she will really hurt herself, but I don't know what to do.

—Concerned Comrade

Dear Concerned Comrade:

Your friend is in desperate need of help and it is up to you to help her. This is a serious matter and you will need outside assistance since you will not be able to take care of her alone.

While I understand your concern for your friend, and the fact that she may be upset if you voice your own feelings towards her abusive boyfriend or about her relationship, you must help her in any way possible. Your friendship is not solely about keeping her as a friend, but rather putting her health and welfare first and asking an adult to help intervene is the only way in helping her. Your friend should not stay in this abusive relationship and she needs your guidance to help her get out of it.

The boyfriend obviously has your friend wrapped around his finger, since he cheats and comes back to her multiple times. He has brainwashed her. Your friend will not listen to you alone. If she refuses to go to a counselor or therapist at Psychological Services, you may want to advise her parents about the situation and let them take it from there. It is better if your friend ends up temporarily angry at you than pregnant, abused and depressed. She will thank you for helping her in the end.

Love,
Mer

Dear Mer:

My roommate and I share a double. She just recently got a new boyfriend and he sleeps over almost every night! I wouldn't mind if it were occasional, but it is as if he lives here. While they do not sexile me every night, it is awkward being in the same room as them all the time. He is over in the afternoon hanging out with my roommate, whom I hardly spend time with anymore, and is there in the evening when I go to bed. He takes showers in our hall and sometimes I have even walked into the room while he was getting changed. It has gotten to the point of irritation and I never have any privacy. He shares a double with his friend in a dorm nearby, and I do not know why my roommate keeps insisting they sleep in our room! I do not want to start an argument because she is one of my friends and so is he.

– Tongue-Tied Roomie

Dear Tongue-Tied Roomie:

It looks like you are having some trouble talking to your roommate about important issues. In order to have a healthy living environment, both parties need to be honest in this type of situation. This is a common problem in college, and we all learn to deal with it in one way or another. It is just a matter of how you would like to go about it. My roommate last year and I made a compromise and we decided that if either of us should want to have the bedroom to themselves we would let the other know ahead of time. On the weekends, one of us would sleep in another friend's room. That way, there was no awkwardness or uncomfortable situations.

Do not be afraid to be honest and speak up to your roommate. You need to talk to her about the current situation and say that you would appreciate it if she divided her time between her boyfriend and you. It is better to talk about it now before it gets out of hand, because one day you might just blow up at your roommate and she will not have the slightest clue why. Do not be too "nice" and not say what is bothering you because the pattern will just continue. Be straightforward and let your roommate know that you do not appreciate her boyfriend sleeping over every night. You may just need to work out a system. Also, make sure you set ground rules so you will not be uncomfortably lying wide awake in the next bed while they "sleep."

Love,
Mer

Please send questions regarding any topic to marc001@bucknell.edu with subject line reading "advice" or you may send a letter via campus mail to box number C1099. I look forward to hearing from you!

Fantastically fun,
Fabulously fulfilling.
Write for Feats!
E-mail jjf018@

Students AID to find a cure

By Genna Jerrard
Writer

The University will host an AIDS Walk on Sunday to raise money for various local education services, as well as healthcare support for community members living with HIV/AIDS. This is a great opportunity to show your support and to help the surrounding community.

At a time when AIDS is deemed one of the most destructive epidemics in recorded history, AIDS awareness is especially crucial. More than 25 million people have been killed around the world since its national recognition in 1981, according to Wikipedia.

Its transmission does not only come from anal, vaginal or oral sex, but also from blood transfusion, contaminated hypodermic needles and exchange between mother and baby during pregnancy, childbirth and breastfeeding.

The antiretroviral treatment available today reduces both the mortality and morbidity of HIV infection, but continual routine access to the medications is not available in all countries. There is also a large social stigma attached to AIDS which leads to marginalization of the victims. This extends beyond the disease itself to providers and even volunteers involved with caring for people living with HIV.

The fight against this disease is truly a world battle and the effects of its spread can be seen far and wide. The AIDS Walk is one way you can participate in the fight.

The walk "is open to anyone who wants to donate money or come and walk and show support," said Carrie Ingoldsby, assistant director of campus activities and programs.

Packets were available in the L.C. Mall during the week to help collect money. Anyone who wishes to participate should call Kirsten Felix at (570) 322-8448 ext. 11 or e-mail her at kirstenfelix@yahoo.com to sign up through AIDS Resource.

"Teams and individuals do not have to sign up in advance to walk," Ingoldsby said. "Registering in advance through AIDS Resource allows them to track how many teams will be in attendance."

Ingoldsby also said there will also be day-of registration at noon on Sunday in the Gerhard Fieldhouse.

If you plan to participate in the walk, there are some very enticing goodies you could be eligible to win. Individuals who raise $25 or more will receive T-shirts and those who raise $50 or more will be placed in a drawing for an iPod Nano. For anyone planning to donate money, the instructions are in the packets provided. The method is just a simple monetary donation and does not relate to the distance walked.

There is also an online system, available at www.firstgiving.com, through which people can donate using a credit card. This system allows teams to sign up and then send the link to friends and family so a donation can be made. In order for this donation to register for the iPod Nano drawing, the individual or team leader must contact Felix and give her the team information so she can track online donations.

Many people are very enthusiastic about participating, including those in the Greek system. Pi Beta Phi sorority is having community service leaders organize groups of girls to participate.

"We are really trying to support the walk for AIDS, and we now have three groups of girls participating," said Kelsey Brown '09, a member of Pi Beta Phi.

Other students are equally enthusiastic about the event, but some suggest improvements.

"I think that it's definitely a great way to spread AIDS awareness, and the incentive of prizes will target a lot of students to get involved," Craig Dwyer '10 said. "I do think, though, that the publicity for the event could have been better so more people could have participated."

There is still time to register and walk on Sunday. Participating is a great way to show your support for this cause on a local level.

Along with a monetary donation, contributors help decrease the social stigma associated with AIDS and promote social education to increase awareness of its urgency. So please come out and show your support for this hopeful cause.

New Web site resembles facebook, adds more options

By Erica Schiffres
Contributing Writer

Fret no more, students. Next time you have a stuffy nose, sore throat, cough or fever, you can sleep a little better knowing you will not miss the notes from class. SwapNotes.com, a Web site where college students and professors across America can upload notes and rate courses, is quickly becoming the "Facebook for class notes."

Co-creator Adam Steiner said his intentions were to "even the playing field" for transfer, new or lost students who have no one to help them. Because of this site, students no longer have to hound friends or strangers for notes or worry about losing class notes they have lent to others.

SwapNotes.com was launched about a month ago (but started locally within a university in 2001) and is the oldest note-sharing site on the Internet.

The site currently boasts 6,002 professors and 3,402 schools enlisted, 2,430 professor ratings, 2,787 users and 40,694 courses. The site looks to expand its databases and is giving away a $3,000 scholarship as an incentive for students to rate courses and upload notes.

Sparknotes.com, RateMyProfessor.com and even the University's public space system all share a common thread with SwapNotes.com: they allow students to share notes and/or evaluate courses.

SwapNotes.com does all this but with the added bonus of an extensive cyber network connecting universities, community colleges and law and medical schools across America.

Membership is free and notes include images, plain text documents and even tests (with each teacher's permission).

Some issues emerge, such as the spread of inaccurate information. While the credibility of the notes is questionable, users are encouraged to rate the material. Some teachers fear it will promote absences in lectures. Sara Alfano '10 said it would not compromise her attendance in class or discourage her from taking her own notes, but she cannot speak for other students.

Photo courtesy of swapnotes.com

Steiner shared his thoughts on this issue.

"Students who are often absent will continue to be so. ... The question of increased absences only arises in a relatively narrow segment of the class," Steiner said.

Some teachers feel taking notes is an essential skill in synthesizing and digesting relevant information.

Ethical considerations surface as well.

"[I can] see how some might claim it is unfair to those who went to class and took the notes, or how it might be abused by students not wanting to do their work, but I would say that they are wrong on both accounts," Kevin Cooper-Smith '10 said. "The site seems like an open source for sharing and communication. Education shouldn't be about competition, but joint effort to share knowledge and learning."

In spite of this, Stephen Wakulchik '10 disagrees.

"If you upload your notes, you allow freeloaders who chose to go out and party the night before and then cut class to reap the rewards of your hard work. I would only want to share my notes selectively," Wakulchik said.

Steiner points out the positive aspects of the site.

"Professors, and detractors, also need to look at it from another angle," Steiner said. "There's always another perspective, another way to interpret what the professor said. How many times have you spoken to a friend to get clarification on a class subject? How many times have we learned something, or made a connection, that we would have missed absent a friend or his/her notes? Do people disdain Google because it makes information easy to find? No, and there's no reason to dislike SwapNotes either."

Arguments aside, co-founder Daniel Segal said SwapNotes.com is a brand new service with the potential to be the next big craze on campus.

Many students are unfamiliar with SwapNotes, but most say they would find it helpful—leaving one question: when will the University be registered?

Views of Public Safety on Halloween

By Sam Kantor
Contributing Writer

When you were a child, Halloween was a time to dress up as your favorite superhero or princess.

It was a time to consume unhealthy amounts of candy in what seemed to be one never-ending night, and it was a time to ask for a trick or a treat on your neighbors' doorsteps.

Halloween for a college student is, surprisingly, not much different. It is a time to dress up as your favorite superhero or princess, only, for most, its porn-star counterpart. It is a time to consume unhealthy amounts of, well, not candy. It is a time to ask for a trick or a treat, though usually somewhere other than the doorstep, and from only one person (or two people).

But it is still all for the sake of the same holiday. Only now, our parents are no longer here to fix our costumes when they fall apart, tell us it was only a matter of time until our tummies started to ache and remind us which neighbors are good to get treats from and which neighbors we should not visit.

Instead, we have Public Safety to watch our backs (and our walks home).

In a pre-Halloween interview, Public Safety Director Jason Friedberg spoke about the department's feelings on safety around Halloween and how closely they planned to watch the student body. Friedberg worked at institutions such as Smith College, Springfield College, Western New England College and Franklin and Marshall College, so his experience in dealing with Halloween is expansive.

Friedberg said the fact that Halloween fell on a Tuesday made him less concerned than if it had fallen on a weekend. But as all college students know, Halloween is a transferable holiday just because it falls on Tuesday does not mean it is celebrated only on Tuesday. If Public Safety realized this, what would be done on the weekend prior to Halloween?

As the weekend before Halloween came to a close, I was curious to see the students' opinions on how Public Safety officers handled it.

Stephanie Needell '10 said she went out dressed as a "one-night stand." For those who are not familiar with a "one-night stand" costume, it usually includes a large men's T-shirt with very small bottoms.

"[I attracted] more attention than usual," Needell said. "But none from Public Safety, as far as I could tell. I only saw maybe like one or two Public Safety cars. They were driving slowly ... maybe just surveying the area."

According to Needell, Public Safety had no effect on the students' partying mentalities.

"The thought [of Public Safety] crossed my mind, but they didn't seem to be any more strict than usual," Needell said.

A male perspective affirmed Needell's views.

"I dressed up as a ninja, and I actually felt very confident that if Public Safety stopped me, I could take them down," Conor O'Brien '10 said. "Basically, I just hung out with my friends in my ninja costume. Public Safety was not an issue for me."

Rachael Bulmer '10 agreed.

"I went out this past weekend ... but I didn't notice anything out of the ordinary concerning Public Safety," Bulmer said. "I really didn't think there was more security than any other weekend."

From the students' perspectives and Friedberg's comments, several conclusions can be drawn about the way Public Safety operated on the infamous holiday this year. From what the pre-Halloween weekend tells us, Public Safety appears to be giving us our space and letting us enjoy ourselves. The coming weekend will be a sign of the measures Public Safety will go to in order to keep University students safe.

Just because Public Safety seemed slightly lax during the pre-Halloween weekend, students do not have the OK to do whatever they please the weekend after Halloween. From listening to Friedberg and the interviewed students, mutual respect now seems to exist between students and Public Safety.

If we choose to treat the weekend after Halloween just like any other night in Lewisburg, Public Safety will have no reason to do anything but that as well.

The perfectionism of students

By Rajaa Qadri
Writer

Do you think you have to get things done "just right"?

Do you have unreasonably high standards for yourself?

Do you spend too much time trying to get things done correctly in order to avoid criticism?

Do you feel like no matter how hard you try, it is never good enough?

Are you always afraid you will not be able to achieve the standards you set for yourself?

If you answered yes to any or all of these questions, you might be a perfectionist or have perfectionistic tendencies.

A perfectionist is commonly described as a person who is not satisfied with anything that is not perfect or does not meet extremely high standards.

Perfectionism usually provides encouragement to overcome obstacles and to strive for the best. Perfectionists know their goals in life and set out to get things done in order to achieve them.

"The root of excellence is perfectionism," said Linda Kreger Silverman, director of the Gifted Development Center, according to www.hoagiesgifted.org. "It is the driving force in the personality that propels the individual toward higher and higher goals. There is a strong correlation between perfectionism and giftedness. I have yet to meet a gifted person who wasn't perfectionistic in some way."

Perfectionism can lead to great vulnerability. If you take perfectionism to the extreme, it can leave you feeling down if you are unable to reach your goals. Setting very high standards without leaving any margin for error reduce your productivity and effectiveness. Usually perfectionists set unattainable goals for themselves, and when they are not able to meet them, they experience anxiety and depression.

Monica Basco, an internationally-recognized expert in cognitive-behavior therapy, explains uncontrolled perfectionism can lead to depression, anxiety, low self-esteem, fear of failure and broken marriages and friendships.

Usually perfectionists set unattainable goals for themselves, and when they are not able to meet them, they experience anxiety and depression.

You bring a lot of expectations and standards for yourself to college. If you are trying to achieve those standards by being a perfectionist, you may want to change your mindset.

Trying to identify the advantages and disadvantages of being perfect is the first step to coping with the problem. Do you get very stressed if things do not go your way? Or maybe you are always afraid things will not go your way? When you mess up or do less than perfect, instead of cursing, try to see the big picture and ask yourself, "Is it as bad as I think it is?"

In setting goals and expectations for yourself, remember to be realistic. You cannot get all six assignments done in one night.

Learn how to take criticism. Most perfectionists fear criticism, but you have to accept the fact that everyone messes up once in a while, and it is OK. If someone criticizes you for an error, acknowledge your mistake and tell yourself you have the right to make mistakes.

"It's important for students to appreciate that there's no way to attain perfection, no matter how hard you work," said Kimberly Daubman, associate professor of psychology. "At the end of the day, you want to be able to say that you did the best you could, given the time you had, and let it go. Of course, you also want to be open to constructive criticism so that you can improve."

Daubman said it is important to know that criticism or low grades do not reflect your worth as a person.

"You are much more than the grades you receive, and it's good to remind yourself of your positive qualities or past successes when you receive a disappointing grade. The key is to compartmentalize the criticism and not let it affect your general sense of self-worth," Daubman said.

By explaining the downside of perfectionism, I am not suggesting it is an unhealthy habit. Just remember, if uncontrolled it can prevent happiness.

Life is spent one day at a time and while we should prepare for the future, perfectionism will make our minds plan or think about a perfect future or lament about what went wrong in the past.

If you think you are a perfectionist, be careful you do not take it to the extreme.

Marco's Tapas serves up culture

By Mandy Hart
Writer

Some people say there is not much culture in Lewisburg. Marco's Tapas, located on Market Street across from the Pineapple Inn, is out to dispel this myth. As its name suggests, Marco's is a Spanish-inspired restaurant with a menu consisting mostly of tapas: small, appetizer-sized dishes meant to be shared.

Ellyn Ercolano—The Bucknellian

Marco's Tapas, located on Market Street, offers a taste of Spain as it serves up the traditional Spanish appetizers known as "tapas." Since each dish arrives in small quantities and is meant to be shared, it is necessary to order many dishes for a complete meal.

The atmosphere at Marco's results from tasteful Spanish décor: tiled walls, a fountain and classical guitar music playing in the background.

The lighting is sparse, but the colored tables bring brightness to the room. The relaxing theme is topped off with very comfortable chairs with armrests: a rarity for restaurants.

The menu has four sections: salads, tapas, personal pizzas and desserts. Each dish (except for the dessert) is meant to be shared. The menu even contains a line encouraging you to order more than one dish.

At first glance, the food seems reasonably-priced, each dish ranging between $7 and $11. But two people could easily finish three tapas, bringing the average price per person to about $15.

The menu offers shrimp, clams, mussels and other seafood. Pork products are also heavily featured. It is easy to find vegetarian options, but chicken is much harder to come by. The menu contains unique cheeses like Manchego and goat cheeses, along with more traditional ones like mozzarella and parmesan.

The dish names sound intimidating; between the Gambas con Salsa Remulada and the Alcachoffa pizza, it is tempting to hold up the menu and point to what you want.

But none of that matters when the wait staff brings out the food.

The meal starts with bread while you wait for the first dish. There is no butter in sight, but olive oil on the tables is a fine complement for the soft bread.

The tapas are brought out as they are made, not all at once.

Our first dish to arrive was fried shrimp with a roasted garlic remulade sauce. In the United States, we think of fried shrimp as breaded, deep fried, and served at Long John Silver's. This was not your typical fried shrimp. The dish contained five extremely large shrimp, coated in crunchy strips of lightly-fried corn. The corn seemed to be baked onto the shrimp after being fried itself, because there was a substantial layer left on the plate after the shrimp was gone.

The sauce was flavorful but light. Further research indicated remoulade sauces are packed with herbs and spices, and this particular one had just the right amount of garlic to make the shrimp as tasty as possible.

Our next dish was a vegetable crepe. The tortilla looked like and had the texture of a flour tortilla, but it had a distinct corn taste, bringing out the Spanish influence. The tapa consisted of two small tortillas packed with peppers, mushrooms, artichoke hearts and other vegetables covered in a light wine sauce. Once again, the sauce took the already-great dish to a new level.

The third tapa was the "Pollo al Ajillo," described as chicken sautéed with lemon, garlic and herbs, making the curry and chili flavors pleasantly surprising. When the bowl arrived, its small appearance did not go unnoticed. But this dish lasted the longest, as the bowl was full of small chicken pieces so savory that they could not be devoured as quickly as a plate of chicken wings at Applebee's.

Our pizza arrived last. The pizza is small but cut into six slices for easy sharing. The pizza menu was extensive. We decided on an eggplant and artichoke pizza with mozzarella cheese and plum tomato sauce. The sauce was smooth and flavorful, but the fried eggplant and artichoke hearts were the most distinct palate-pleasers on the doughy crust.

"The tapas fill you up, but they are so light that you feel perfectly satisfied," Lauren Litts '07 said of Marco's Tapas.

The fresh vegetables and cheeses, corn-based breading and light sauces make this a healthy outing, drastically opposing the greasy, heavy dinners you find elsewhere. This restaurant is a must-visit because every bite is rich and flavorful and the presentation is second to none.

We decided to finish our meal with Dulce de Leche: a Spanish caramel cheesecake. There are no words that can describe the taste of this cheesecake.

The crust alone tasted like the top of a coffee cake because of the brown sugar and graham-cracker taste. The whipped cream was clearly fresh, not fluff out of a can. A drizzle of rich, dark chocolate syrup and confectionary sugar sprinkled over the caramel topping made this dish the best part of the meal.

If you cannot afford a whole dinner at Marco's, stop by for an extraordinary, one-of-a-kind dessert.

This restaurant is perfect for many occasions: a first date, parents' visit or a nice dinner with friends. It is a great place for large groups to share many tapas, but be sure to make reservations by calling (570) 523-0023 since space is limited.

This restaurant proves you really do get what you pay for: a little extra money gets you an unbelievable experience of unforgettable flavors.

"Marco's is expensive, but worth it: the food is amazing and having tapas is a great experience," said Sara LaPorte, assistant director of campus activities and programs.

Especially for satisfying your thirst for culture in central Pennsylvania.

Another tantalizing edition brought to you by ...

Ms. Love and the Bubble

Dear Ms. O,

It's so confusing when I go to the drug store to pick up some condoms. There are so many different brands with different options and I don't know which to choose. How am I supposed to know what would be the most pleasurable? And what's the best way to store them?

— Curious about Condoms

Sifting through the many condom choices can be a daunting decision with all the options available in drug stores.

But no matter what type you choose, it's essential that you use them.

You've made an excellent decision.

Condoms help protect against pregnancy and STDs, and are vital part to maintaining your sexual health if you are engaging in intercourse.

When it comes to choosing the right type for you, there are many options to consider. So here's a look at some of the major brands and the types they offer.

According to trojancondoms.com, Trojan brand alone offers 16 different types of condoms with various sizes and lubricant choices for each.

Trojan offers regular lubricated latex condoms, as well as ultra-thin. Well-endowed males may want to consider Trojan Magnums, which will provide a better fit for larger penises.

Many of the condoms are designed to provide different sensations in the bedroom.

Trojan Supra and Warm Sensations condoms have special lubricants that create heated pleasure for both participants while Mint Tingle adds a special flavorings the will cool things down.

Textured condoms like Ultra Ribbed, Twisted Pleasure, and Shared Sensation are specially shaped to assist in hitting all the right spots.

Extended Pleasure offers the wearer a special chemical in the lubricant that will supposedly help prevent premature ejaculation and increase staying power.

These are just a few options that Trojan offers.

So when sifting through, see which ones sound interesting and which ones you feel you can rule out. Make sure you consider your partner's thoughts on the subject.

If you still can't narrow it down, Trojancondoms.com offers a "Trojan Selector" that asks a few questions and finds the types that match your criteria.

Durex brand offers condoms with some of the same types of features.

The Ultimate Feeling condom is ultra-thin for his pleasure and ribbed for hers.

Durex also produces condoms with colors and scents in orange, strawberry, and banana.

Other durex options are comparable to Trojans.

LifeStyles is another common brand that sells various condoms with all the bells and whistles.

Some brands sell glow-in-the-dark and flavored condoms, ranging in flavors from strawberry to pina colada to coca-cola.

When it comes to storing condoms, there are a few important facts to know.

Though frequently portrayed in movies and on television, keeping condoms in your wallet is not a good idea.

According to trojancondoms.com, condoms need to be stored in a cool, dry place. Direct sunlight or sources of heat can damage the material and cause the condom to fail.

So a condom that heats up in your wallet against your body all day may not function properly.

Make sure you check the wrapper for tears before use, and be especially careful when opening it. Do not use your teeth, fingernails, or other sharp objects. Keep spares in case there's a problem.

And always double check the expiration date.

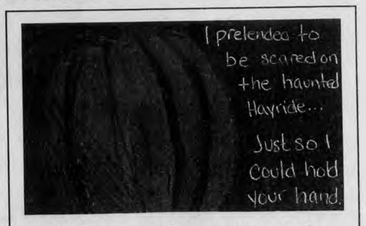
Females who are sexually active should keep condoms on hand as well.

Condoms are available at Student Health Services for free.

Main message: Wrap it before you tap it.

–Ms. O

E-mail me your questions at MsOintheBubble@yahoo.com or send them through campus mail to Ms. O, The Bucknellian, C-3952. All authors of questions will remain anonymous.



Tell us anything you want.
Send your secrets to
The Bucknellian.
Create a postcard and mail
it to C3952

New CDC externship program opens doors

University sophomores given the chance to shadow professionals in a chosen field this winter break

By Katie Steele
Contributing Writer

The new externship program introduced this fall by the Career Development Center (CDC) provides sophomores with a unique opportunity to explore career paths by exposing them to the workplace. Students will shadow a sponsor around the workplace for two days in January.

In addition to the externships offered for sophomores, junior and senior pre-med students can participate in a program called Jan Plan. In this more intensive program, students will participate in a shadowing experience for eight to 10 days at either the Evangelical Hospital in Lewisburg or Geisinger Medical Center in Danville. If students apply to both locations, they must participate at the location to which they are assigned.

In one of her many presentations to sophomores about the program, Missy Gutkowski, manager of externships and a career consultant, said with the addition of the externship and Jan Plan program the CDC hopes to "allow early exposure to career paths."

She also said exposure to professional work experience helps students "find out what they enjoy or do not enjoy" in terms of career paths and academic explorations.

Gutkowski said externship experiences will vary depending on the sponsor, but possible opportunities include attending meetings, touring facilities, assisting with office duties and participating in assessments and planning sessions.

According to information provided by the CDC, there are over 1,000 externships offered from 572 companies. Out of the 626 sponsors from these companies, 500 volunteering externships are alumni, 72 are parents and 54 are friends and other volunteers. Sixty-three individuals who do not have positions open for this year have expressed interest in sponsoring an externship for next year.

Gutkowski encouraged students to apply for six externships in order to increase their likelihood of being chosen for one. The CDC cannot guarantee each student will get an externship, but the office works hard with students to pair them with companies that interest them. If a student is not chosen for one of the externships he or she applied for the CDC will contact him or her to discuss other opportunities.

Ellyn Ercolano—The Bucknellian

The Career Development Center, housed in Taylor Hall, is open during the week for student consultations on internships and job fit. New this year is an externship program exclusively for sophomores to shadow a professional for two days in January.

In September Gutkowski held office hours for students interested in externships. Beginning in October, she held 30-minute orientation sessions to introduce students to the program and give them resources to help with the application process.

Applications for externships were due Monday night, with an extension given to Wednesday. Students completed their applications on The Bridge, a Web site allowing students to search and apply for jobs and internships. In the required orientation session, Gutkowski taught how to update profiles on the Web site and upload documents. For each externship they applied for, students submitted a resume and a statement of interest, as well as a brief letter expressing their appeal to that specific externship.

In addition to the application materials they submitted online, students signed a "Statement of Obligation" declaring they must complete their assigned externships on two consecutive days from Jan. 8-12 unless they have legitimate academic or personal conflicts. If they are not available on those days, students must contact Gutkowski immediately in order to set up an alternative date.

Students receive their externship assignments in mid-November. In the beginning of December they attend a second group of required orientation sessions. Near the end of the month, students will begin contacting their sponsors to make arrangements for their externship.

Gutkowski said she will pick the best student for each externship based on his or her resume and letter of interest, rather than experience. This will allow students to explore jobs and get exposure to any field that interests them.

"I am very excited about the externship program because it gives students the rare opportunity to get a feel for possible career paths," said Jackie Martin '09, who applied to six externships with financial firms. "It is very important to know if you like the future that you are pursuing, and this program allows us to do that."

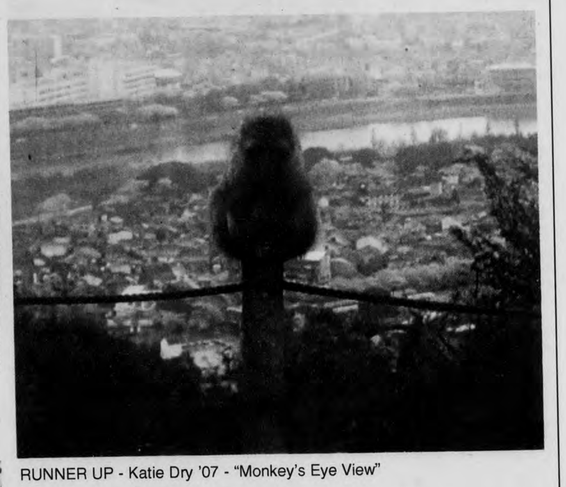
The externship program is unique because it allows students to gain exposure and experience without committing to a summer internship or job. Whether externship experiences reassure students they are following the right career path or inspire them to explore other options, they will offer a glimpse at life after college and allow students to create relationships with members of the professional community.

Foreign Film:

Study Abroad Photo Contest Winners

The study abroad office recently held a contest for the best pictures from students' experiences abroad. Of the two categories, culture and landscape, a winner and runner-up were chosen for each. Pictures were displayed in the LC mall and students could vote for their favorites. Below, the winners and runner ups for the categories are displayed.

WINNER - Susan Shadle '07 – "A Vietnamese Dusk"



RUNNER UP - Katie Dry '07 - "Monkey's Eye View"

WINNER - Laura Kessler '07 – "Traffic on the Grand Canal"

RUNNER UP - Becky Kosowicz '07 – "Virginity Inspection"

The Bucknellian
November 3, 2006
Sports

Must-see Thursdays?

Are Jim and Pam the next Ross and Rachel? Read the top 5 reasons to watch "The Office."

See page B10.

Volume 138, Number 9 Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Bison run and stun

Women's cross country races to second straight title, while men's squad beat the odds, placing third overall

Leanna Nastase '07

Matt Forys '07

By Brian Mulligan
Sports Editor

The women's and men's cross country teams produced another spectacular performance at the Patriot League Championships Saturday at Lehigh University.

Despite adverse weather conditions and a challenging race course, the women's team prevailed, winning its second straight title. Captain Leanna Nastase '07 captured the individual title in 23 minutes 6 seconds. The men's team took third overall. Matt Forys '07 posted the fastest time for the Bison in 25:36 seconds on the eight-kilometer course, placing third overall.

The women's team tallied a mere 28 points to win the event ahead of Navy with 79 points and Colgate with 82 points on the six-kilometer course.

"Twenty-eight points is much better than we had anticipated," Head Coach Kevin Donner said. "I was very impressed with how our ladies handled the adverse conditions and to have individuals go one-two against such great runners is just beyond my wildest dreams."

Nastase was the third Bison to win an individual title in cross country since the inception of the Patriot League in 1984. She beat out the top-two returnees from last year's competition, Army's Justine Whipple and Lehigh's Jennifer Schappert.

Erin Cranmer-Hart '08 was next to cross the finish line. She completed the one-two finish by grabbing the silver in 23:25, while Jenny Stevens '07 capped off her final Patriot League Championship with a sixth place finish overall.

Nicole Falcaro '09 and Gillian Nordquist '09 finished within two seconds of each other to finish ninth and 10th respectively, rounding out the top five for the Orange and Blue.

"The league meet was by far our best team race this season because we executed our race plans perfectly and didn't let the mud, rain or hills deter us from our goals," Nordquist said. "Winning the P.L. championship for the second year in a row is an honor as well as a source of motivation for us to perform just as well, if not better, at regionals."

Along with winning the championship, the Bison posted three Patriot League first team runners and six all-Patriot League honors. The future looks bright for the women's cross country program.

"We'll be returning four all-league runners and I'm confident about next year," Donner said.

At the beginning of the season, the men's cross country squad was slated to finish fifth at the Patriot League championship, but behind strong runs from Forys and Wallace Campbell '08, it exceeded expectations. The Bison had a total of 80 points, only 11 points behind second-place Navy. American won the meet with 25 points. The men's team improved on last year's fifth-place finish.

"The men had an outstanding day. They were picked to finish fifth, but we were determined to show the Patriot League that we were a top-three team," Donner said.

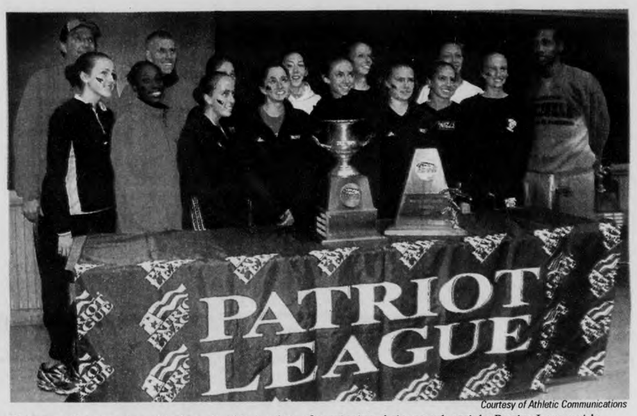
Campbell had a great day, breaking into the top 10 with a ninth-place finish in 26:26, while Andrew Corral '08 finished in 26:49 and earned 16th place. Campbell and Corral will be the base for next year's squad. Donner has faith that they will be up to the challenge.

"Campbell is starting to show some great consistency for us and Andrew Corral has been a very solid three man all year," Donner said.

Michael Gibney '08 crossed the finish line next for the Bison in 27:03 to finish 22nd. Donald Sanner '09 was the final scorer for the Bison with a 30th place finish in 27:23. With a high expectations for next year's squad, the team has to step up to fill Forys' shoes.

"The difference between this year and last year is our team dynamic. We went into this league meet confident and not afraid to compete with those other schools," Forys said.

Both squads now look forward to the NCAA Mid-Atlantic Regional meet on Nov. 11 at Lock Haven University in Lock Haven, Pa. The men finished 15th last year, while the women placed fifth. The Bison hope to use the Patriot League championship as a springboard into a successful showing at the NCAA Mid-Atlantic Regional.



Courtesy of Athletic Communications

The women's team poses with championship trophies after winning their second straight Patriot League title. The team now enters the post-season, competing at the NCAA Mid-Atlantic Regionals on Nov 11.

Field Hockey defeats No. 18 Villanova

By Shannon Pitsch
Staff Writer

The field hockey team beat Villanova, the number 18 team in the nation, on Oct. 25 and secured a spot in the Patriot League Championships, despite a loss to conference rival Lafayette on Saturday.

This is the first time in program history that the Orange and Blue defeated a nationally-ranked opponent. In the last home game of the season, the Bison ended their two-game losing streak with a win against No. 18 Villanova.

"There's no doubt this team has worked very hard every day and to be rewarded with a win against a nationally-ranked team such as Villanova is a just reward," Head Coach Heather Lewis said of the victory. "We have tremendous respect for Villanova and to finally step out on the field and compete at their level is a good indication of the direction of this program.'

"There's no doubt this team has worked very hard every day and to be rewarded with a win against a nationally-ranked team such as Villanova is a just reward."
—Heather Lewis, head coach

Emily Hutchison '09 jumpstarted the offense with a penalty corner after just 12 minutes of play. This was her first penalty corner this season and brought the team to a 1-0 lead early in the match. After successfully defending six penalty corners from the Wildcats, the Bison ended the half with the lead.

In the second half, Villanova again delivered a strong offensive effort with three shots on goal and two penalty corners. The strong Bison defense, led by senior goalkeeper Emily Groendyke's 10 saves, outmatched the opposition.

"I was so pleased with our defensive effort," Lewis said. "It was a great shutout for ...[Groendyke] and the individual defensive effort of Steph Graf '09 to hold the nation's third-leading scorer to zero goals and assists – well, that's not only a tribute to Steph's talent but also a tribute to the collective effort of our team on the defensive

See FHOCKEY page B3

Women's soccer downs No. 14 Navy

Squad notches two goals to topple previously unbeaten Navy team

By Joseph Debraggio
Writer

Bucknell 2
Navy 1

The women's soccer team defeated 14th-ranked and previously unbeaten Navy 2-1 thanks to goals from Nicole Marotta '09 and Krista Lee Gentile '08. The win allowed the Bison to clinch a share in the Patriot League regular season title with the Midshipmen and gave the Bison the privilege of hosting the league tournament as the top seed.

On a very windy day in Annapolis, Md. the Orange and Blue fell behind early. Meggie Curran, Navy's leading scorer, took a powerful shot in the sixth minute that took advantage of the wind to get over goalkeeper Katie Dry '07. That goal gave Navy (19-1-0) a quick 1-0 lead.

"Other teams have had this happen to them too and then they quickly crumbled and that's how Navy has built a 19-0-0 record and a national ranking going into this match," Head Coach Ben Landis '96 said. "We didn't crumble as we kept them off the board and generated some decent attacks into the wind."

With less than three minutes remaining in the first half the Bison capitalized on one of their attacks. Chelsea Brinkman '10 took a corner kick and Marotta headed the ball into the Navy net for the equalizer. Navy had not been scored on since Sept. 22 when the team let in a goal from Albany.

The Orange and Blue had the wind at their backs for the second half and took advantage of that in the 68th minute. Brinkman took a free kick from 40 yards out.

"We were going with the wind and Chelsea hit a line drive to the inside of the wall," Gentile said. "Jen Dervarics took her run right to where the goalie and the ball were going. She was able to settle the ball to me behind the goalie and I got a good touch on the ball that kept the shot low to the far corner past the last defender standing on the goal line."

With that goal, Gentile tallied nine on the season which leads the team. The goal was also Gentile's fifth game-winning goal of the season.

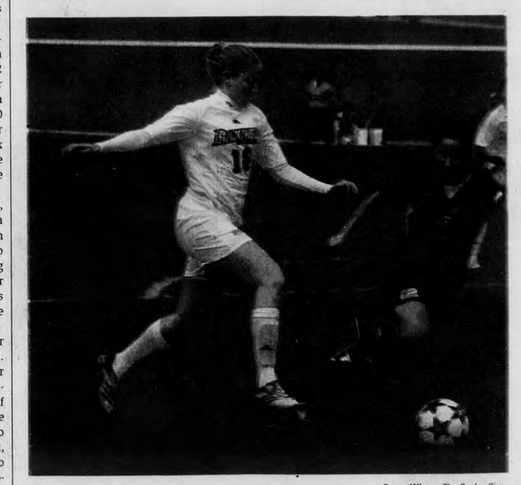
Later in the game Gentile had a good chance to put the game beyond reach on a breakaway but her shot missed the net by a yard at most. The defense led by Dry held firm and sealed the victory for the Bison.

With the win, both the Bison and Navy finished with 6-1-0 league records so they are co-Patriot League Regular Season Champions. The Bison also debuted at No. 10 in the National Soccer Coaches Association of America (NSCAA) Mid-Atlantic regional poll for the first time in program history.

"The key is to go into every game knowing that it is the most important game of the season and never take any game for granted," Gentile said. "Just because we went six and one in the regular season doesn't mean that any of these teams are going to step aside. We have to fight with everything we have to win."

The Orange and Blue square off against Colgate in the first round of the playoffs.

See WSOCCER page B3

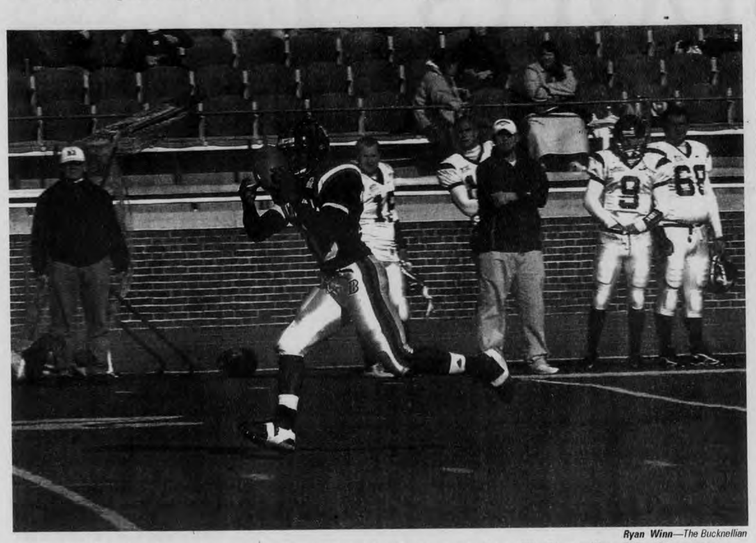


Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Chelsea Brinkman '10 accelerates past a Holy Cross defensive player in a recent game. Brinkman was named to the Soccer America national women's Team of the Week and to the Soccer Buzz Elite Team of the Week.

Bison overcome Rams at home

Football squad improves record to 5-4 against Fordham, winning 13-3



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

A.J. Kizekai '10 receives the winning touchdown pass in last weekend's win over Fordham. The Bison will travel to Worcester, Mass. to play against Holy Cross Saturday in a must-win game to remain in the hunt for the Patriot League title.

By Marcus Mateer
Senior Writer

Heavy storm clouds, blustery winds and cold temperatures made it an ugly day for football Saturday at Christy Mathewson-Memorial Stadium. Eight three-and-outs, six turnovers and two missed field goals between the teams made it an ugly game as well. The play fit the natural ambiance, and the Bison defeated the Fordham Rams 13-3 in the hard-fought but mistake-ridden game.

Bucknell 13
Fordham 3

The wind gave added import to the coin toss at the beginning of the game. Fordham (2-6, 0-3) gained the advantage of sustained 20 mph winds when they won the toss and elected to defer to the Bison, forcing the Orange and Blue to head into the wind.

The wind killed the passing games for both teams. Marcello Trigg '10 was 2-13, with two interceptions, and the Rams only managed 89 yards through the air. The Bison's pass defense gave up 238.0 yards per game on the season and the visitors yielded 226.3 yards per game.

On the ground, fullback Josh DeStefano '08 had a big day, gaining a career-high 180 yards rushing. His effort was a big reason why the Bison came away with the win.

"I think we knew eventually the fullback was going to play a big part," DeStefano said. "We knew they were going to take away the slotbacks, and they left me some good cutback lanes. If only I had speed."

DeStefano first broke free for 31 yards following the Rams' score in the first quarter. He took the handoff and blasted up the middle, rumbling all the way down to the one-yard line before being dragged down. The drive ended in futility, as Trigg threw an interception on the goal line following a pair of rushing plays for a loss.

Fordham marched down the field on the ensuing drive before the Bison defense stiffened. Ryan Slater '08 stuffed Fordham quarterback John Skelton on fourth down and the Orange and Blue took control again.

After trading three-and-outs, the Bison offense strung together a drive. The highlight of the drive was another 31-yard DeStefano run. Fordham held, and Will Carney '09 hit a 27-yard field goal to tie the score 3-3.

The third quarter featured much of the same activity. The Rams handed the Bison a golden opportunity when a muffed punt was recovered by offensive lineman Chad Glasser '08 at the Fordham 21. The drive was ineffective, and the wind took Carney's field goal attempt wide.

Fordham then put together its best drive of the day. Jonte Coven, filling in for injured star James Prydatko, streaked for 45 yards, deep within Bison territory. The drive continued to the nine-yard line, where Sam Nana-Sinkam '10 stripped Coven. Brandon Friday '08 fell on the loose ball.

DeStefano then rushed six straight runs, with a long of 41, leading the offense to another field goal. Much of DeStefano's success was due to solid blocking up front.

"This O-line is great," Glasser said. "They were letting us run the fullback, and we took it to them."

Following a missed Fordham field goal, the Bison iced the game. On third-and-nine, Trigg took a designed quarterback draw for the first. Three plays later he found Aj Kizekai '10 for 44 yards and a touchdown.

The win brings the Bison to 5-4 overall and 2-2 in the Patriot League. The Bison take on Holy Cross at 12:30 p.m. on Saturday in Worcester, Mass. A victory there will keep the Bison in the running for the Patriot League Championship.

Men's golf places in top three

By Wes Trowbridge
Writer

The men's golf team wrapped up their fall season over the weekend the way they began it: with a tournament title. Keita Aoki '08 won the individual tournament title and lead the Bison to their third consecutive top-three finish. It was the Orange and Blue's first win since the season opener at Colgate in September.

Playing conditions at Quail Valley Golf Club were extremely windy both days of the tournament hosted by Mount St. Mary's University. The scoring reflected the extreme conditions. Battling 30-40 mph winds, Aoki was one of only three golfers in the field to break 80 both days of the tournament.

"It was probably the toughest conditions I have ever played," Aoki said. "So I tried to keep the ball as low as possible to get the least effect [from the wind] which worked most of the time."

After a first round 308, the Bison had a three-stroke lead over Fordham. In the second round the gale-force winds led to a season-worst score of 330. This left the Bison in a tie for first place with Fordham. The tie-breaker was the score of the fifth man for each team. Fordham's fifth score was a 92 while Andrew Cohen '10 and Jeff Pike '10, two of the Bison's highly touted first-year students, both had rounds of 89.

Aoki's rounds of 75-78 were highlighted by his birdies on the last two holes of the tournament. The birdies propelled the Bison into first place and moved Aoki two strokes ahead of the second place finisher, Rob Gallagher of Long Island. The win was the first of Aoki's career. Aoki and Charlie Waddell '07 are the only Bison golfers to receive medalist honors this season.

Waddell was one stroke behind individual first place after the first round. He was one-under-par through the first 10 holes of the second round, but struggled on the 11th hole. Waddell shot a second-round 83 and finished in a tie for-eighth place.

Stuart Lindgren '08 carded rounds of 79-80, also tying for eighth place in the best finish of his career. Cohen placed 31st with rounds of 78-89 and Pike's rounds of 81-89 put him into a tie for 37th.

This was the last tournament of an excellent fall season for the men's golf team. The Bison placed in the top-three in five of their seven tournaments, including two wins and two runner-up finishes. Last fall the team had only three top-three finishes, and no wins.

"I think the whole team, especially the four freshman, gained good experience and confidence for the spring season," Aoki said.

Waddell also had one of the most memorable individual seasons in the recent history of the men's golf team. His win at the Mulekicker Fall Classic was complemented by three second place finishes. He only missed the top 10 once in seven tries. He also earned Patriot League Golfer of the Month honors for September.

This spring, Waddell and the Bison men's golfers will look to be crowned Patriot League Champions for the third consecutive year.

Now Open !!

Herwig's of Lewisburg

Authentic Austrian Cuisine

Herwigs

Open Monday thru Saturday
11:45 AM-7:00 PM (last seating)

406 Market Street
(Across from Campus Theatre)

www.herwigsoflewisburg.com

Wilkommen!

www.mintgems.com
Early Holiday Sale!
Shop early for holiday gifts & save!
Create your own jewelry...
Choose your metal, stones, closures & lengths
Up to 60% off
Nov. 1-15
Interested in earning some extra cash?
Mintgems is looking for sales reps
Please contact us at sales@mintgems.com if you'd like more information.

Bison Award Winners

Field Hockey

All-Patriot League First Team – Katie Urosevich '07 and Amanda Faust '09

All-Patriot League Second Team – Kelly Hoffman '08 and Steph Graf '09

ECAC Goalkeeper of the Week – Emily Groendyke '07

Men's Soccer

All-Patriot League Second Team – Andrew Loia '07 and Corey Cumutte '08

ESPN The Magazine Academic All-District Men's Soccer First Team – Justin Wolf '08

Women's Soccer

All-Patriot League First Team – Krista Lee Gentile '08 and Nicole Marotta '09

All-Patriot League Second Team – Shannon Curd '07, Jennifer Margolis '07, Jennifer Dervarics '09 and Lauren Stoller '10

Soccer America national women's Team of the Week – Chelsea Brinkman '10

Soccer Buzz Elite Team of the Week – Chelsea Brinkman '10

Domino's Pizza
Proud Sponsor of Bucknell
Lewisburg (570) 524-9000
1722 Market St.
Hours: Sun-Thurs 11am - 1 am/Fri-Sat 11am - 3am
MANIC MONDAY $7.99 LARGE 1-TOPPING PIZZA - DELIVERED!
2xTUESDAY BUY ANY LARGE PIZZA AT REGULAR MENU PRICE & RECEIVE A 2ND OF EQUAL VALUE FOR FREE
HOT BROWNIES FREE
DOUBLE DEAL $12.99 2 MEDIUMS $14.99 2 LARGES
ORDER ONLINE WWW.DOMINOS.COM

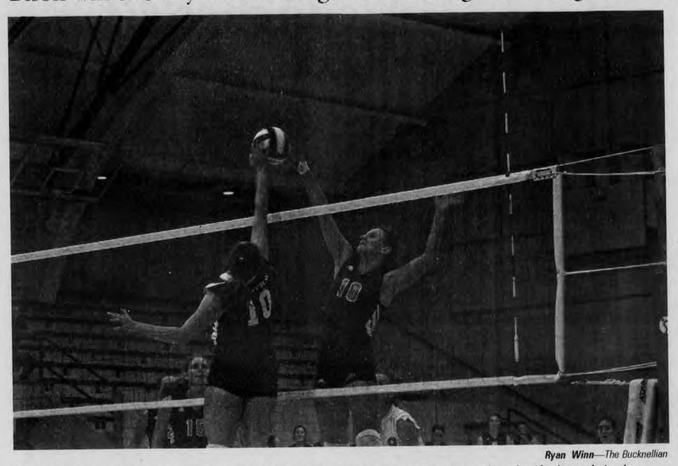
ACNE?
TAKE CONTROL OF YOUR ACNE...NOW!

Blue Light Treatments Are:
*Simple
*Affordable
*Effective- They Work!
Bucknell Students Only..
Call before December 1st for a FREE consultation and receive a FREE Blue Light Treatment ($175.00)
CENTER FOR SKIN HEALTH
Ernest Normington, M.D., FACS
210 JPM Road in Lewisburg (570) 524-7777 www.drnormington.com

If you watch sports on TV, then you can write for sports.
Contact msaylor@

Women's volleyball downs two over weekend

Bison win two key Patriot League matches against Lehigh and Lafayette and prepare for final home match



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Jenna Henderson '08 challenges an opponent at the net in a recent game. Henderson has played a key role in the squad's success this season, tallying a team leading 336 kills.

By Ellis Hudes
Senior Writer

During a weekend full of milestones, the women's volleyball team earned two more victories over Patriot League foes defeating Lehigh 3-0 and Lafayette 3-2, and boosting its record to 17-10 overall and 8-3 in league play. The win over Lehigh moved the Bison into a tie with Army for second place in the Patriot League behind American.

Kristen Sydlowski '07 and Jenna Henderson '08 made Honorable Mention for last week's Patriot League awards. Sydlowski averaged 5.75 digs and 0.75 aces per game while Henderson added two more double-doubles for the season, averaging 4.75 kills and 2.75 digs per game.

Before Saturday's match with Lehigh there was a special ceremony to honor the senior class, including tri-captains Sydlowski, Amanda Grossman and Jennie Smith, in addition to Allison Brady and Sarah Groman. Each senior, accompanied by her parents, received a bouquet and framed picture from Head Coach Cindy Opalski and Assistant Coach Anna Allison.

It was clear these five girls shared a special bond with each other.

"The best part of senior night was spending it with the four other girls who have become my family away from home since I've been at Bucknell," Smith said.

After the ceremony the team immediately went back to business, getting pumped up quickly for its second to last home match of the season.

The Bison came out smoking in the first game, hitting .316 as a team and showing great consistency to crush the Mountain Hawks 30-17. In game two the Bison jumped out to another big lead before Lehigh finally found its footing and made it an even contest. The home team withstood Lehigh's late rally for a hard fought 30-28 win. The Bison inched in front at the beginning of game three and kept a resilient Lehigh team at bay to eventually complete the sweep with a 30-23 victory.

Bucknell 3
Lehigh 0

Despite Lehigh's dismal 0-24 overall record the Bison refused to underestimate their opponent.

"With the quality of players on that team they don't deserve that record. Our girls had to come out with a 'Patriot League Tournament' mentality," Opalski said.

Henderson and Emilie Hardinge '09 ignited the Bison offense with 12 kills each and the former also tallied 11 digs for the match. Grossman tallied seven kills while Groman and Smith added six kills of their own. Shannon Pitsch '09 fueled the attack with 39 assists and two service aces. Sydlowski, the team's defensive backbone, added 22 digs.

The Orange and Blue faced off against the formidable Lafayette Leopards on Friday, with third position in the Patriot League at stake. Game one was initially a seesaw affair, but thanks to a timeout near the midway point the Bison reasserted themselves and grabbed the first game 30-27. The Leopards responded in game two with a mid-game run of their own, ultimately leveling the match with a 30-24 win.

Bucknell 3
Lafayette 2

The third game saw a relentless Bison squad hit .443 and dominate Lehigh. The Bison only committed three errors and ran away with the game 30-16. The determined Leopards forced a decider by taking game four 30-22. Lafayette had momentum from game four but the experienced Bison, playing in their third straight five-game match, prevailed 15-11 in the decider.

Henderson had another stellar match with a match-best 22 kills along with 11 digs and Hardinge again posted 12 more kills. They received more all-around support from Grossman with nine kills and four blocks. Groman who contributed nine kills and five blocks.

Sydlowski covered the court well, tallying 24 digs, and served a match-best four aces. Pitsch posted the team's second double-double of the night, combining an impressive 53 assists and 11 digs.

This victory over Lafayette marked Opalski's 250th career win as Head Coach. After the victory the team gathered around Opalski, giving her warm hugs and an autographed ball to commemorate the milestone.

"She is such a great coach and I know it means so much to all of the seniors that we were able to be there for that milestone in her career," Grossman said.

The Bison will play their last home match against Colgate at 7 p.m. Saturday.

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Kelly Hoffman '08 runs onto a ball in a recent home game. The women's team is playing their first round Patriot League tournament game against American Saturday.

FHOCKEY From page B1

end."

In the 55th minute junior Chyncia Smith's shot bounced off the right post. It was collected by Katie Urosevich '07 who passed back to Smith. Smith scored on the ensuing shot. The unrelenting offense of the Wildcats returned with three shots on goal and two penalty corners. The Bison's defense prevented them from converting and won 2-0.

Bucknell 2
Villanova 0

On Saturday the Bison returned to Patriot League play with their last regular season game at Lafayette. The Leopards opened up with the first goal 12 minutes into play. Once again the Bison defense came to the rescue, as Lafayette attempted 10 shots on goal in the first half compared to the Bison's four. They also held the penalty corner advantage 5-1.

Lafayette increased the lead with an unassisted goal in the first five minutes of the second half. Down 0-2, the Bison offense, commanded by Callista Costopoulos '07 with five shots and Amanda Faust '09 with three, tried to fight back. Offensively the Bison led the final 35 minutes with seven shots on goal and four penalty corners to the Leopard's six and three, the Bison were unable to capitalize on their offensive opportunities and fell 2-0 to Lafayette.

Lafayette 2
Bucknell 0

The loss against Lafayette brought the team to a record of 1-4 in the Patriot League.

With Lehigh losing to Colgate on Saturday, the Bison were able to capture their second straight Patriot League Championship bid. With the fourth seed, the Orange and Blue will face one seed American University.

While starting the tournament with American is less than ideal, Lewis recognizes that they are an inevitable opponent.

"All of us in the league recognize that in order to win the trophy, we have to go through American. I believe this team has the confidence to step out on the field and compete with American – we are not at all intimidated. We are respectful of their excellence but we also know our own capabilities. As much as we have to play American, American also has to play the Bison and that's our focus," Lewis said.

The Bison will have a chance to defeat the Eagles at 11 a.m. Saturday. The winner will face the champion of the game between No. 2 seed Holy Cross and No. 3 seed Lafayette on Sunday at 1 p.m.

WSOCCER From page B1

Landis plans to follow the same successful strategy that allowed the Bison to beat Colgate 2-1 earlier in the year.

"We'll look to do some things similarly while also realizing that we're playing better now then we did in late September,", Landis said. "As the top seed, we must play with poise and look to go out and dictate the flow of the game rather than wait for things to happen."

> "We cannot be afraid to lose the game, we must go after the win and play to win in for the full 90 minutes. Undefeated at home in 2006 and our supporters are a big reason for that."
> —Ben Landis, head coach

The other semi-final match-up is between No. 2 seed Navy, and Lehigh, who is the only league team to defeat the Bison this year. The Bison are just taking the games one at a time though. "Our focus is strictly on Colgate and the semi-final match. As defending champions, we want to have the opportunity to actually defend that title," Landis said. "And that means we have to get to Sunday's championship game. That's all we are thinking about right now."

The Bison play Colgate in the semi-final game today at 7 p.m. at the varsity soccer field. The championship game will be held at 1 p.m. on Sunday. All games are free to the public.

The team has cited fan support as a reason why they have yet to lose at home.

"We have played some great soccer at home, have scored some tremendous goals and defended our home turf with such pride. We cannot be afraid to lose the game; we must … play to win for the full 90 minutes," Landis said. "Undefeated at home in 2006, and our supporters are a big reason for that."

A Bucknell Tradition Since 1968
Bull Run Inn
Open 7 days a week:
Mon. – Sat. 11:30 a.m.—2 a.m.
and Sunday 11:30 a.m. midnight
605 Market St., downtown Lewisburg
ph: (570) 524-2572
www.bullruninn.com
(check for current features and events)
Trick or Treat
Halloween Pop Quiz (21 & over)
- Halloween Trivia Questions -
Tues, Oct. 31 @ 9 p.m.
Costume Contests between rounds:
Best Costume Contest—$50 gift card
Pre-Carved Pumpkin Contest—$25 gift card
Mummy Contest $15 gift card
- Halloween themed specials -
SUNDAY BRUNCH 11:30 a.m.—2 p.m.
Monday Night Football @ 9 p.m.
drawings & specials

DOES YOUR CAR NEED SERVICED?
Our Service Department has $25,000 in new upgrades, including a new alignment rack, brake lathe, tire machine, and hundreds of hours of training for the techs. We now offer shuttle service to and from work or home. We have become a complete service center that can perform any work on any model, from an oil change to engine replacement.
Lewisburg Ford
Oil Change w/Multi-Point Inspection
$19.95
Lewisburg Ford
Oil Change/Tire Rotation w/Multi-Point Inspection
$34.95
Lewisburg Ford
2265 Old Turnpike Rd.
(Route 45 West)
Across From Brookpark Farm
Call Today! (570) 524-7267
Visit us on the web at www.lewisburgford.com

Villager GMAC Real Estate
521 N. Derr Dr. Lewisburg, PA 17837
570-523-3244
CALL US FOR THE LARGEST SELECTION OF RENTALS IN TOWN
1-5 Bedroom Units
Houses or Apartments for 2007/2008 and 2008/2009
A few choice units for 06/07 left!
Call Linda or Duska or e-mail us at linda-treese@villagerrealty.com or duska_rishel@yahoo.com for a complete list of our rentals.

Men's water polo wins two of three

Bison capture a third-place finish overall at Southern Championship

By Ty Clark
Staff Writer

With two wins this past weekend, the men's water polo team placed third at the Southern Championships this past weekend.

In the last home games of the season, the Bison compiled a 2-1 record, winning 17-5 over Mercyhurst, losing 12-9 to 12th-ranked Navy, the eventual champion, and winning 8-5 over Johns Hopkins to secure their fifth third-place finish in the last seven years.

In their first action this weekend, the Bison, seeded fourth in the competition, soundly defeated Mercyhurst, 17-5, behind a career-high performance from Sean Robinson '07, who netted five goals. Bucknell led 7-1 at the end of the first quarter and 12-1 at the half. This allowed Head Coach John Zeigler '91 to substitute freely, and this was reflected by 11 Bison scoring in the contest. With the win, the Bison secured a bid to the Eastern Championships for the seventh consecutive year, tying a program record.

Bucknell 17
Mercyhurst 5

After the victory over Mercyhurst, the Bison faced Navy, who they had already lost to twice this year. The Bison held a 3-2 lead in the first quarter, but Navy scored three unanswered to take control of the game. Mark Masterson '07 paced the Bison with four goals and two assists in the contest, and Luke Belenky '08 added 10 saves in goal. Navy has a perfect record against conference teams this year.

Navy 12
Bucknell 9

The next day, the Bison finished their weekend with an 8-5 win over Johns Hopkins. Both schools' defenses set the tone with their play. The Bison totaled 15 steals to Johns Hopkins' nine.

The Bison jumped out to a quick lead and led 5-1 at one point in the second quarter. After the Blue Jays pulled within one in the fourth quarter, Zeigler reinserted his starters, who pushed the lead to its final margin. Josh Sunday '08 led the way with three goals for the Bison and Belenky made eight saves.

Bucknell 8
JHU 5

The 18th-ranked Bison will travel in two weeks to Princeton for the Eastern Championships.

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Lee Anderson '08 launches a pass over an opponent in a game this past weekend. The team will travel to Princeton in two weeks for the Eastern Championships.

WEEKEND SCHEDULE

Friday

MEN'S SOCCER - Lehigh, 7:30 p.m., Bethlehem, Pa.
WOMEN'S SOCCER - Colgate, 7:15 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.

Saturday

FOOTBALL - Holy Cross, 12:30 p.m., Worcester, Mass.
MEN'S BASKETBALL - Mansfield, 7 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
FIELD HOCKEY - American, 11 a.m., Washington, D.C.
MEN'S SWIM & DIVE - Bucknell Sprint Invitational, 12 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
WOMEN'S SWIM & DIVE - Bucknell Sprint Invitational, 12 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
WOMEN'S VOLLEYBALL - Colgate, 7 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.

Sunday

MEN'S SOCCER - Patriot League Championship, 1 p.m., Bethlehem, Pa.
WOMEN'S SOCCER - Patriot League Championship, 1 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
FIELD HOCKEY - Patriot League Championship, 1 p.m., Washington, D.C.

Men's soccer clinches PL playoff spot

By John Mlodzinski
Staff Writer

The men's soccer team will be heading to the playoffs for the third time in four years. A 2-0 win on Saturday against Navy, coupled with an American loss to Army, means the Bison have captured the fourth seed in the Patriot League playoffs.

Bucknell 2
Navy 0

The Bison grabbed an early lead, just nine minutes into the first half when Nathan LaGrave '10 scored his team-high sixth goal of the year, off assists from Joe Mellott '08 and Corey Curnutte '08. The Bison nearly added two more goals on great scoring chances late in the first half. The first occurred when a shot by Chris Hennings '09 hit the crossbar and nearly bounced into the goal. A few minutes later, with Navy goalkeeper Nolan Grebb out of position, Anthony Ferraro '09 took an open shot, but it was deflected by a Navy defender.

> "All the pressure will be on Lehigh to keep their streak alive... Our team has nothing to lose this weekend and all streaks must end sometime."
> —Joey Kuterbach '08

Mark Schmiegel '09 added an insurance goal late in the second half to give the Bison a 2-0 lead. Conor O'Brien '10 passed to Mellott, who shot the ball toward the net. Schmiegel was able to gain position and headed the shot past the Navy goalkeeper. The goal was Schmiegel's first of the season.

"Scoring my first goal was a great feeling and I was happy to score for my team," Schmiegel said.

The Bison defense had a remarkable game, allowing goalkeeper Joe Kuterbach '08 to pick up his sixth shutout of the season. Navy never really had a chance to score, as they were out shot 8-2 in the first half and only had one legitimate scoring chance, which was early in the second half. Doug Devuono was able to get a shot past Kuterbach, but his shot went left and hit the post. Kuterbach recorded two saves.

The Bison had a different attitude heading into this game as opposed to previous games.

" "We didn't want this game to be the end of our season," Schmiegel said.

The players were excited to secure a win and even more keyed up when they found out they were heading to the playoffs, after wondering whether or not they would even get in.

"We are very excited to be back in the playoffs this year. After the game at American last week, we thought our playoff hopes were gone....We realize we are very fortunate to be in the Patriot League Tournament right now," Kuterbach said.

The team has achieved success by focusing on the present.

"Realizing that certain things were out of our control, we focused on just taking care of business during the Navy game and not worrying about anything else," Head Coach Brendan Nash said.

The team must prepare for Lehigh, a formidable opponent. They are undefeated in conference play and are the favorites to win the tournament. Many players feel they have nothing to lose this weekend. The team also hopes to end Lehigh's current 15-game undefeated streak.

"All the pressure will be on Lehigh to keep their streak alive... Our team has nothing to lose this weekend and all streaks must end sometime," Kuterbach said.

The Patriot League playoffs begin at 7:30 p.m. Friday at Lehigh.

Not too long ago, you chose a small college in the middle of cow country. And, wisely, it chose you, too.

Now go ahead and make another good choice.

For dinner.

The Inn at New Berlin is a short, 10-minute drive from the Bucknell campus, on scenic country roads. It's a perfect distraction from writing papers – or grading them.

Students and faculty love our relaxed atmosphere and our award-winning dining, while parents appreciate the luxurious lodging during parents' weekend and graduations. But don't wait till then to discover us!

Dine. Shop. Stay.

570-966-0321 InnAtNewBerlin.com

Grassroot
Marketing Manager
PA, NY, NJ
We are searching for a clever, entrepreneurial, hard working individual with stamina.
Who will have fun Generating Leads for:
We Do Metal Roofs
a division of Prudential Realty
1-888-With-Bob
(1-888-948-4262)

A MATCH MADE IN HEAVEN

THIS MVP IS NEVER WITHOUT HIS MVP.

PATRIOT LEAGUE MOST VALUABLE PLAYER CHARLES LEE &
BUCKNELL'S MOST VALUABLE PAPER, THE BUCKNELLIAN

Take a time out once a week and go one-on-one with The Bucknellian to stay up to date with all of the action happening on campus.

Enclose this form and a check (made out to The Bucknellian) and mail it to:

The Bucknellian, Bucknell University C3952, 701 Moore Avenue, Lewisburg, PA 17837

Name _____ __ ONE YEAR: receive 24 issues each week for the academic year for only $45, a $15 savings!

Address _____

_____

Phone _____ __ ONE SEMESTER: receive 12 issues during the fall or spring semester for $30. Please specify semester: _____

E-mail _____

For more information, contact The Bucknellian at 570-577-1520 or 570-577-1085 or e-mail bucknellian@bucknell.edu.

PLAYER PROFILE: Lindsey Hollobaugh '07

By Connie Barko
Senior Writer

Lindsey Hollobaugh '07 is an athlete with a reputation that precedes her. As a standout on the women's basketball team, her career average of 14.1 points per game is fifth in University history, and she is also fifth with 87 career 3-pointers. She became the 15th player in Bison women's basketball history to score at least 1,000 points. With 1,159 points, she enters the upcoming season needing only 62 more points to enter the top 10 and 289 to enter the top five.

Hollobaugh's presence was immediately recognized when she joined the team in 2003. In fact, her statistics have not changed much from her first year. She averaged 16 points per game and was given the honor of Patriot League Rookie of the Year.

"So, from a basketball perspective it's hard to say that her role has grown so much in terms of production because she produced at such a high level so early," Head Coach Kathy Fedorjaka said. "But what has grown is the team around her and her role within that team as well as her leadership abilities both on and off the court."

Hollobaugh is much more humble than these accomplishments suggest. Basketball dominates her time, but family is one of the most important things to Hollobaugh.

"On the weekends, I find time to go home," Hollobaugh said. "I only live 40 minutes from here although I kind of have to schedule it in."

When asked why she decided to go to the University, Hollobaugh had several reasons. She wanted to play basketball at a Division I school with a good academic reputation, but family was also a deciding factor.

"My family can easily get to my games," Hollobaugh said. "I am very close to my family so that was a big part of it."

Despite her many achievements, it has not always been an easy road. Last year, Hollobaugh tore her MCL, but no surgery could fix the injury. She had to let it heal on its own, causing her to miss five games. When she was thrown back onto the court it was not an easy transition since she had not played for an entire month.

"At that point, I never had an injury during a season," Hollobaugh said. "It made me realize how important basketball is to me. I was there for my team but not getting to play was so awful. It changes my outlook on things."

It took some time to readjust to competitive play again, but Hollobaugh strived to maintain her role as a leader even when her physical capacity was limited. As a result, she earned the respect of her teammates.

Ashton Sprouse '08, a forward on the team, has been motivated by Hollobaugh's example.

"She has been a role model for me since my freshman year because she always works extremely hard, not just on the court, but academically as well," Sprouse said. "She [is] bound to get something out of all the hard work she has and continues to put in."

This season presented a different obstacle for Hollobaugh to overcome: limited time. She is student teaching fifth grade at Milton Area Elementary School this semester which has conflicted with practices and may impact future games.

"At first, I was freaking out because I was teaching until four every day and then [going to] practice," Hollobaugh said. "I did not know how to fit it in, but my coach has been very understanding."

Because of the time commitment, Hollobaugh has had to lift weights and perform some practices on her own. She will also be missing a few days of student teaching in order to attend games, but that does not get her off the hook for school absences. Her status as an athlete does not excuse her for missed work.

"I will be missing three or four days of student teaching, and it is actually all a part of the certification," Hollobaugh said. "I have to make that up. I will be adding those extra days in December."

In regard to the upcoming season, the Bison are ranked second in a pre-season poll. They are returning all but one player from last year's team and have two additions expected to make important contributions to the program. Hollobaugh's experience as a seasoned veteran will be invaluable.

"Lindsey contributes to this team in so many ways," Fedorjaka said.

> "She has been a role model for me since my freshman year because she always works extremely hard, not just on the court, but academically as well."
> —Ashton Sprouse '08

"Obviously, on the court, she is a go-to player in the guard position. She is also one of the top defensive players in the league. She also is a tremendous rebounder from the guard position as well."

In addition to executing plays and scoring points, Hollobaugh's presence is crucial to the squad in other ways.

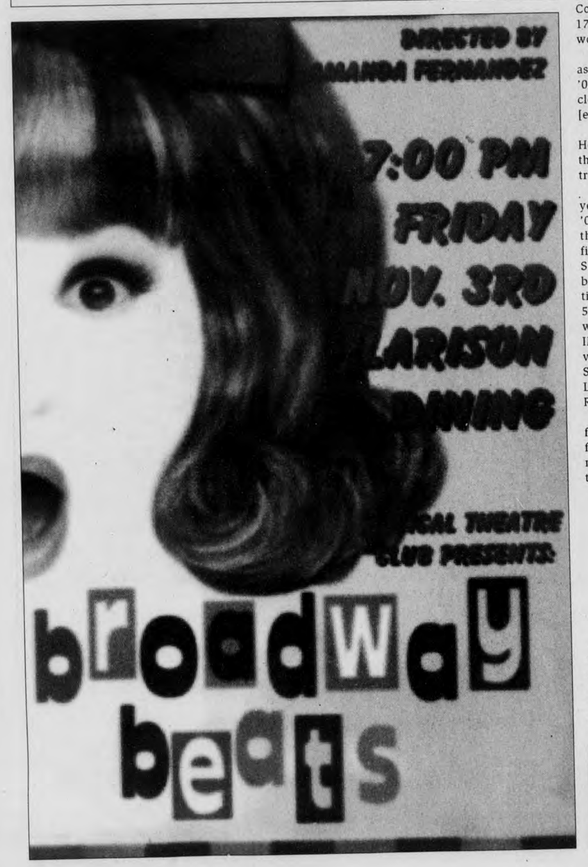
"She also contributes in many ways outside of x's and o's," Fedorjaka said. "Lindsey is a very consistent leader and I've witnessed her leadership grow over the last year from more of a quiet leader who people followed what she did to more of a vocal leader now."

The team to beat in the Patriot League is Army, which is similarly returning most of its team. The Orange and Blue beat Army once last year during league play, placing them in a confident position going into the season.

Hollobaugh has high expectations for the squad and herself.

"We're better than ever," Hollobaugh said. "This is the best team I've had here. It's my last year and I don't want to have any regrets."

$250 CASH
Sign on BONUS!!! Call for details
3 & 4 Bedroom Houses
CLOSE TO CAMPUS
WHIRLPOOL
WASHER / DRYER/ DISHWASHER
STOVE & FRIG
Newly renovated houses available 2006/2007
570-524-5714 / 570-412-4831
or 570-524-5745 /
570-490-2922



Swimming starts strong off the blocks

Men start season with sweep while the women split

By Barbara Perlman
Sports Editor

The men's and women's swimming and diving teams got off to a great start this past weekend. In the meet against Holy Cross on Saturday, the Bison came out on top with the men winning 155-81 and the women defeating the Crusaders 139-96. The Orange and Blue went on to split with Boston College, as the men posted a 178-121 victory while the women lost 168-132.

"I thought we swam well as a team," Kristen Skroski '08 said. "It was a really close meet with some really [exciting] races."

The women dominated Holy Cross in part because the first-year students talent truly shone.

Led by the senior/first-year duo Rebecca Scheffter '07 and Megan Mongan '10, the women's team placed first in all but three events. Scheffter captured first in both the 50 and 100 free with times of 25.15 seconds and 55.24 seconds respectively, while Mongan won the 200 IM and 500 free. Other individual winners included Skroski, Ally St. Claire '09, Lauren Russell '10 and Rebecca Bersani '10.

The relay teams performed well as both the 400 free relay and 400 medley relay were victorious with times of 3:43.41 and 4:06.28.

Women's Swimming

Bucknell 139
Holy Cross 96
BC 168
Bucknell 132

The men also scorched the competition as they defeated the Crusaders in all 13 events. Michael Deighan '09 took two wins in the 200 IM and 200 breast. Captain Matt Crandell '07 got the win in the 200 fly with a time of 1:59.52, while Grant Steadman '08 took the 50 free. Other individual winners include Mark Kawczenski '09 in the 100 free, Christopher Amato '09 in the 500 free and John Peterman '08 in the 200 free.

Men's Swimming

Bucknell 155
Holy Cross 81
Bucknell 178
BC 121

> "The team did a great job of racing for every position. We were not satisfied with just swimming our best. We were always looking to touch out the guy next to us to move up one more position and get the team one more point."
> —Ben Leboza '10

The Orange and Blue also swept the relays, posting wins in both the 400 free relay with a time of 3:16.62 and the 400 medley relay which they completed in 3:37.63.

Diver Jeffrey Manning '09 celebrated a sweep of his own, winning the one-meter and three-meter dives.

"The team did a great job of racing for every position," Ben Leboza '10 said. "We were not satisfied with just swimming our best. We were always looking to touch out the guy next to us to move up one more position and get the team one more point."

The women were not as successful the next day against Boston College, despite a strong effort.

The Orange and Blue took the early lead as the 200 medley relay team took first at 1:52.35 and Skroski captured the win in the 1,000 free. Boston College bounced back with two wins of its own. The Golden Eagles then clinched first, second and third in the 100 breaststroke.

The Bison continued to thrive as Laura Goeller '07 won the 200 backstroke, Nikki Woodward '07 took the 200 breast and Skroski clinched the 500 free. Diver Eliza Massie '10 also posted a win in the three-meter.

The men's team continued showing their strength, defeating the Golden Eagles. The Bison swept the 1,000 free as Leboza touched first at 10:15.31, Theo Leriotis '08 placed second, and Brendan McGregor '09 placed third. Leboza also took the 500 free with a time of 4:59.00. Amato continued to excel, winning the 200 back and coming in second in the 200 free.

The trio of Deighan, Bradford Bennett '08 and Joseph Metcalf '08 claimed the first, second and third spots in both the 100 breast and the 200 breast.

The Bison are confident they will improve drastically over the next few meets.

"Both teams, the men's and women's, are practicing harder than ever before and as [a] result we're not swimming as fast right now," Crandell said. "However, we're confident that the work will pay off at Patriot League Championships."

The Bison will host the Bucknell Sprint Invitational at 12 p.m. on Saturday in the Kinney Natatorium.

WRITE FOR SPORTS
CONTACT msaylor@

Volleyball Says ... 'One Heart Beat'

By Matt Saylor
Sports Editor

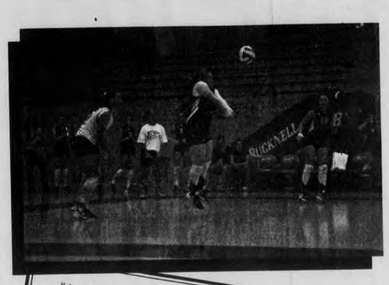
I wanted to write an article on the recent success of the volleyball team. Its home stand has generated high levels of excitement around campus, as the team has graced us with its enthusiasm and hard-nosed style of play.

During the match against Army, the noise level rivaled that of a men's basketball game and the excitement level was equally high. I became interested in the impact the fans have had on the team, as well as the family dynamic the squad has, evident even during the most nail-biting games.

I asked the members of the team to comment on all of this, and the response I received was overwhelming. Any article I could write would not do justice to what the team expressed to me. So this weeks "Saylor Says" has become "Volleyball Says." Members of the team expressed their thoughts as they prepare for Saturday's final home game of the season. Responses came in from 12 players and both coaches. Unfortunately, there was not room for them all in this piece.

A few weeks ago my column touched on how I have become disenfranchised with the sporting world. This team has helped to restore my belief in the positives of sports.

Thank you ladies.



"As a senior and a captain I can tell you that this 2006 team is the best that I've been on in four years in terms of everyone being on the same page and working towards a common vision. Whether girls on our team start, get a little playing time or never see the court, everyone knows that their role is crucial to the success of the team. Some of us are leaders, some of us are playmakers, some of us are supporters and some of us are cheerleaders, but we are all a part of a bigger goal of coming home from the Patriot League Championships with a victory. The fan support has been tremendous these past couple weeks and instrumental in helping us pull out some tough fifth game wins. I'd like to thank everyone who has been out to support us this year and encourage everyone to take a road trip down to D.C. for the weekend of November 17 and 18 to keep the winning streak alive." – Jennie Smith '07

"If I was to describe this team – coaches and players – in one word it would be family...that kind of family where you would do anything for them. The kind of family where you rect each others' faults out of love and compassion, where you can be yourself and no one will judge you for that. The kind of family where you can laugh out loud on a bus trip because everyone got the joke but you, where you wish the years slow down so we can spend more time with each other. That's Bucknell volleyball." – Anna Allison, Assistant Coach

"All I can say is that there are two families in my life – the one that you are born into and the one that you create. My team is my second family. They are my home and it is because of that I believe we are so successful. I can go to every single one of my teammates with any issue that I have and I know they will do whatever they can do to help me out. They helped me adjust freshman year and continue to help me transition this year. I knew that going to practice everyday was time spent with my family." – Emile Hardinge '09

We are a family. Everyone on this team supports everyone else. It is a great feeling because you know that no matter what happens, whether on or off the court, there will be 15 other people behind you. I think our team dynamics are different than other teams because since we are so genuinely close it helps there to be a lot more of a vested interest in the team. We have the saying "one heart beat" on our team which basically sums up everything about us. We may be 16 different girls, but we are all acting as one; there is one heart beat driving us all toward our common goal. – Amanda Grossman '07

"Energy and momentum mean that players must always look to the next point and cannot let mistakes hang around. Just as mistakes lead to more mistakes as a team commits unforced errors, positive plays allow a team to gather momentum. A team with momentum is very difficult to beat.

This makes volleyball an interesting game because the important thing is not so much the skill level of any one player, but rather how the team comes together as a unit to play at its own tempo. Sometimes, in volleyball, we are even told to fake it because energy and excitement are so important that you can be out-dug, out-blocked, out-served, and out-hit and still win if you have the momentum. So that partially explains why both the girls on the court and on the bench get so into the games. You could say its part of our strategy to play a high-intensity passionate game because that kind of play makes it harder for the other team to rally against us." – Tessa Mendez '08

GET IN
THE ACTION!
Write for Sports
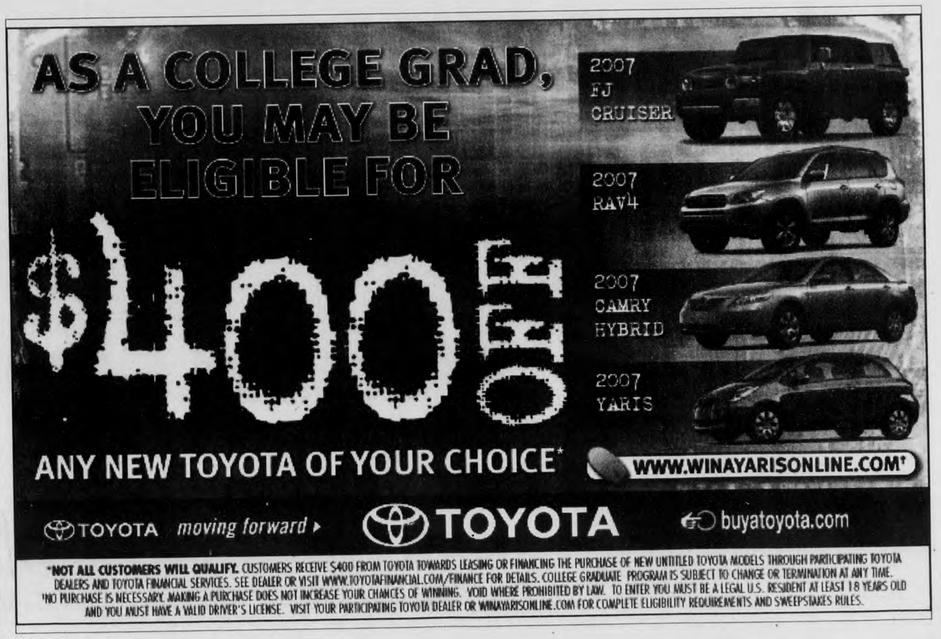
Contact
msaylor@



AS A COLLEGE GRAD, YOU MAY BE ELIGIBLE FOR $400
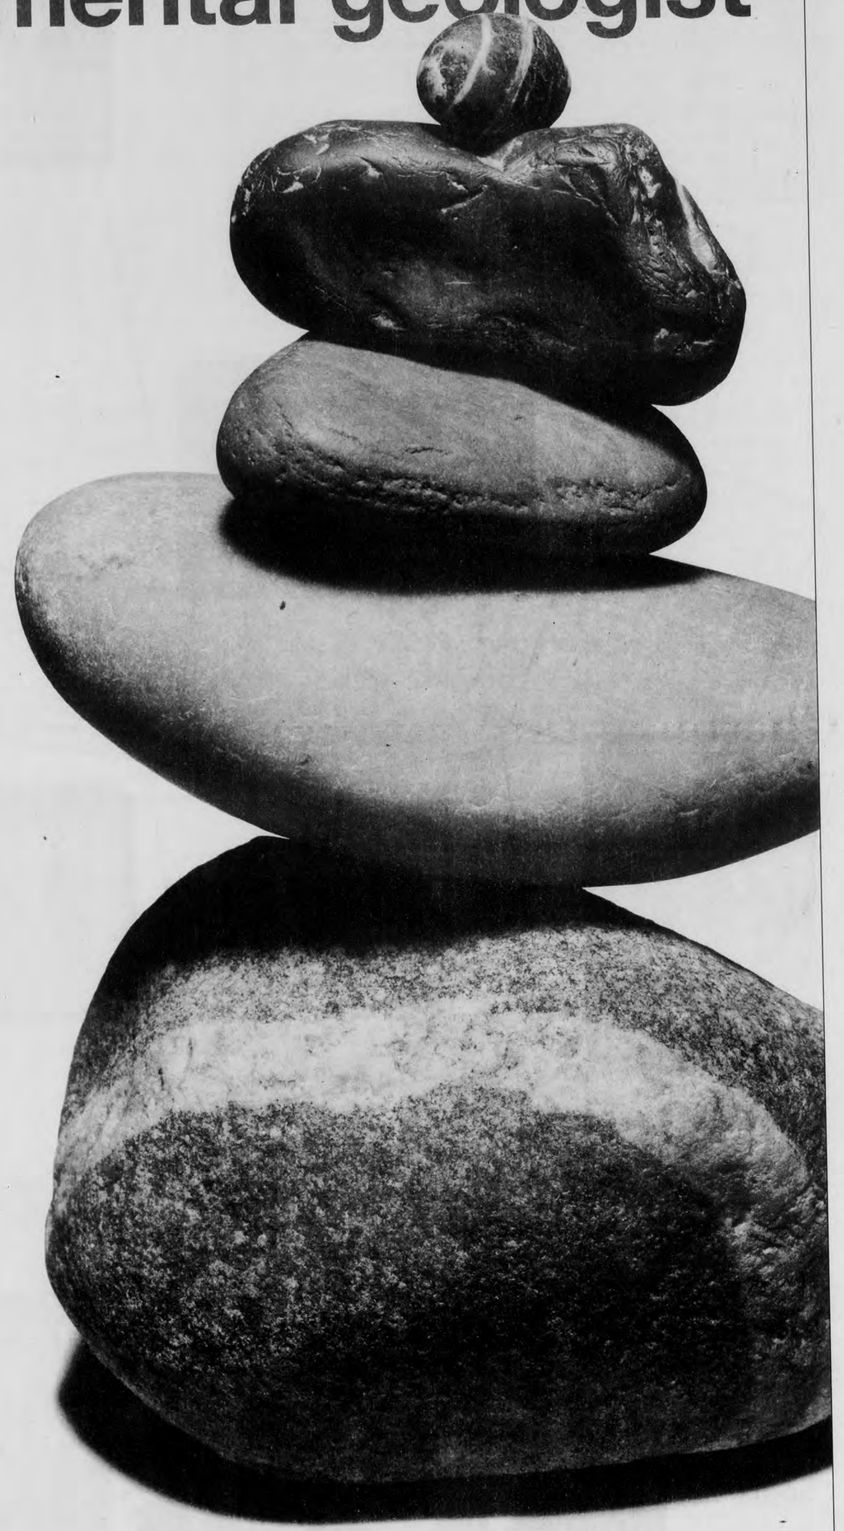
2007 FJ CRUISER
2007 RAV4
2007 CAMRY HYBRID
2007 YARIS
ANY NEW TOYOTA OF YOUR CHOICE*
WWW.WINAYARISONLINE.COM†
TOYOTA moving forward
TOYOTA
buyatoyota.com
*NOT ALL CUSTOMERS WILL QUALIFY. CUSTOMERS RECEIVE $400 FROM TOYOTA TOWARDS LEASING OR FINANCING THE PURCHASE OF NEW UNTITLED TOYOTA MODELS THROUGH PARTICIPATING TOYOTA DEALERS AND TOYOTA FINANCIAL SERVICES. SEE DEALER OR VISIT WWW.TOYOTAFINANCIAL.COM/FINANCE FOR DETAILS. COLLEGE GRADUATE PROGRAM IS SUBJECT TO CHANGE OR TERMINATION AT ANY TIME.
†NO PURCHASE IS NECESSARY. MAKING A PURCHASE DOES NOT INCREASE YOUR CHANCES OF WINNING. VOID WHERE PROHIBITED BY LAW. TO ENTER YOU MUST BE A LEGAL U.S. RESIDENT AT LEAST 18 YEARS OLD AND YOU MUST HAVE A VALID DRIVER'S LICENSE. VISIT YOUR PARTICIPATING TOYOTA DEALER OR WINAYARISONLINE.COM FOR COMPLETE ELIGIBILITY REQUIREMENTS AND SWEEPSTAKES RULES.

Nancy's Nu-Wave Salon
look your best
10% Discount with Student ID
524-2315
www.nancysnuwave.com
Main Street (Rte 45) - Mantondon

Campfire queen
Cycling champion
Sentimental geologist*

Learn more about Marjon Walrod and tell us more about you. Visit pwc.com/bringit.

Your life. You can bring it with you.



*connectedthinking

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

© 2006 PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP. All rights reserved. "PricewaterhouseCoopers" refers to PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (a Delaware limited liability partnership) or, as the context requires, the PricewaterhouseCoopers global network or other member firms of the network, each of which is a separate and independent legal entity. *connectedthinking is a trademark of PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (US). We are proud to be an Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity Employer.

Top five reasons to watch 'The Office'

Courtesy of imdb.com

Reason number five to watch "The Office"—Jim (John Krasinski) Pam (Jenna Fischer). Their on-screen romance has taken many turns throughout the show's two seasons and is expected to evolve even more.

By Matt Saylor
Sports Editor

Some of the greatest comedies of all-time almost never made it at all. "Cheers" ran for 11 seasons and 275 episodes between 1982 and 1993. Its final episode was seen by 80.4 million viewers.

The show that took place "where everybody knows your name" almost never had its name known, limping through its first season and avoiding cancellation only by winning the Emmy in 1983 for Outstanding Comedy Series.

Gradually, the show found viewers, becoming a staple on NBC's "Must See TV" Thursday night lineup, airing in the critical 9 p.m. time slot, and the most Emmy-nominated show of all-time with 117.

NBC currently has another Thursday night show that started off with little fanfare and even less hope of finding an audience. It initially aired only six episodes on Tuesdays in March and April of 2005, but NBC Entertainment President Kevin Reilly enjoyed the show and ordered 13 more episodes for the NBC fall schedule.

Paired with the new hit "My Name Is Earl," "The Office" found a somewhat small, but loyal audience that grew over time. In January 2006 "The Office" followed "Earl" and moved to Thursday nights, where both shows have continued to gain favor with critics and fans.

"The Office" is expected to be the centerpiece of NBC's revival of its "Must-See TV" comedy lineup beginning the end of November with the additions of "Scrubs" and "30 Rock" in the 9 p.m. time slot, leading into the creatively revitalized "ER" at 10 p.m..

What has made "The Office" such a hit? Here are the top five reasons why I think the show has not only survived, but also thrived.

1. Steve Carell. This Golden Globe winner plays Scranton-based Dunder-Mifflin Regional Manager Michael Scott, a boss who craves nothing more than the attention of his colleagues and tries to make them his friends. Carell rose to stardom with his starring role in "The 40-Year-Old Virgin," along with supporting roles in "Anchorman," "Bruce Almighty" and Oscar-hopeful "Little Miss Sunshine." His movie success may bring viewers to the small screen, but his laudable turn as the cringe-worthy, sympathy-inducing boss makes them stay.

2. The Dialogue. There is not a show on television with writing as fresh and witty as "The Office." Part of the strength of the writing comes from the fact that some of the writers are also regular actors on the show, including Ryan (B.J. Novak), Kelly (Mindy Kaling) and Toby (Paul Lieberstein). This allows for constant feedback between the cast and writers' room, as well as the opportunity to write for their own characters.

For example, Novak wrote the recent episode "Initiation," which prominently featured Ryan making his first sales call under Dwight's (Rainn Wilson) tutelage. Kaling wrote Thursday night's episode, "Diwali," featuring her family's Indian heritage. The actors playing Kelly's parents in the episode are Kaling's real parents.

Improvisation is a big part of the show. The strained kiss (and dialogue with it) between Michael and Oscar (Oscar Nuñez) in this season's premiere episode, "Gay Witch Hunt," was improvised by Carell. This moment immediately became the highpoint of the episode—an amazing accomplishment for something unplanned.

3. The Ensemble. While Carell is the star of the show and characters such as Dwight, Jim (John Krasinski) and Pam (Jenna Fischer) receive the main storylines and the most screen time, it is often the secondary characters who receive the biggest laughs. Stanley (Leslie David Baker), Kevin (Brian Baumgartner), Angela (Angela Kinsey) and Creed (Creed Bratton) are just a few minor characters who stand out in their roles.

The cast is one of the largest on television, featuring as many as 19 different characters on a weekly basis. Unlike "Lost," in which several episodes go by without featuring some of the characters, only a few, if any, characters on "The Office" are missing each week. There is also a much smaller likelihood that they will be killed off.

4. The Format. The documentary-style format in which the show is filmed allows for more creativity. The interview-style segments let the individual characters express thoughts on their office peers that otherwise would be unknown. The camera itself is a character on the show, as the cast interacts with it in both subtle and not-so-subtle ways. It is a testament to the actors' talents that they are able to convey comfort, or lack thereof, when the documentary crew catches the characters acting in certain ways.

5. Pam and Jim. Pam and Jim are the new Ross and Rachel of primetime with their will-they or will-they-not romance. The cliffhanger last season, in which Jim confesses his love and kisses the engaged Pam, left fans clamoring all summer for knowledge of the resolution. The show handled the development in a very realistic way. Pam tells Jim she cannot get involved with him because she is going to marry her fiancé Roy (David Denman).

Jim subsequently transferred to Dunder-Mifflin's Stamford branch, claiming it offered a better job with better pay. But a few days before the wedding, Pam broke off her engagement and is now living a single life.

What will happen now? Pam clearly misses Jim, her best friend, but there is still some chemistry between herself and warehouse employee Roy, who vowed to get his act together and win her back. Jim seems happy at Stamford and his flirtatious relationship with Karen (Rashida Jones) may be just what it takes to get his mind off of his unrequited love. Yet the phone call between the two at the end of "Initiation" shows they still long to be with each other.

So will Pam and Jim ever be reunited? No one knows for sure, but the 40-minute episode airing Nov. 16, "The Merger," may offer a clue.

Other things to look forward to on "The Office" are a special one-hour Christmas episode directed by Harold Ramis and a February episode filmed under the direction of "Lost" mastermind J. J. Abrams.

"The Office" may not become the next "Cheers" or "Seinfeld." But if it continues to do as well as it has creatively and commercially, then perhaps "Cheers" and "Seinfeld" will be known as predecessors to "The Office."

Courtesy of imdb.com

Reason number three to watch "The Office"—the ensemble. A single episode can feature as many as 19 characters, giving secondary characters plenty of screen time and witty dialogue.

Charming (un)historical movie a great escape

Courtesy of amazon.com

Kirsten Dunst stars in "Marie Antoinette," directed by Sophia Coppola. The film roughly tells the story of Marie Antoinnette's life.

By Jamie Jacobson
Associate Editor of Content

❖ Movie Review

In an attempt to resurrect a Queen, captivate audiences and make money all at the same time, Sony Pictures released their version of "Marie Antoinette" on Oct. 20.

But did director Sofia Coppola accomplish the impossible?

It depends on how you look at it—literally.

If you are in search of a history channel special, then Coppola lets you down. History has little to do with this extravagant production.

For starters, Kirsten Dunst (The Virgin Suicides, Spiderman) plays the role of one of France's most notorious monarchs. The blonde American actress offers little in terms of realism. She has no accent and is certainly not 14 years old. She is heart-wrenchingly kind and she consumes the screen with her endearingly indulgent behavior.

The audience is even spared the tragic end that the real Antoinette met. Coppola chooses to leave out the beheading that ended the real Queen's life, sugar-coating the script from start to finish.

I cannot imagine a better way to get a glimpse into Victorian-era France than through the eyes of one of America's sweethearts backed by a soundtrack that includes New Order. How else can a director portray a teenage princess sent from her cozy bed in Austria to wed Louis XVI (Jason Schwartzman) for the sake of all things French?

The poverty and political strife that was so prevalent at the time is simply washed out of the plot. Instead, the scenes are dripping with shoes, dresses and booze.

Perhaps the most fitting scene in the movie is the cake montage.

As Dunst drinks and tries on dresses, the viewer is given the opportunity to get up close and personal with the Queen's greatest infatuation—cake.

Watching Dunst flit about a castle in her pink sparkling splendor as she is chased by servants carrying silver trays of cake is not only entertaining, it is dream-like. And yes, the cake is pink.

It is somewhere around minute 14, out of the film's 123 minutes, that you begin to get lost in a world of royal fantasy. What I found most endearing about the film was the director's ability to poke fun at the life of royals without being mean. It is hard to avoid a dull plot when we are talking about the court of Versailles, but Coppola met the challenge well.

Molly Shannon (Wet Hot American Summer, Scary Movie 4) and Shirley Henderson (Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire) play the roles of the Royal Court's big-mouth gossips. They snicker and sneer behind the King's back and comment on everything about the other characters from their sex lives to choice of jewelry.

But what Shannon and the other supporting actors really do is reveal the pain the princess feels. With a marriage unconsummated for seven years and a burning desire for love and affection, it becomes clear that the clothes, parties and big hair are all there to replace what Antoinette could never get from Louis.

Just as things really begin to heat up with a mob of angry villagers banging at the palace doors, the scene is cut and the credits start rolling. If there is anything unsatisfying about this glamorous drama, it is the ending.

New Found Glory album caters to conventionality

By Lily Beauvilliers
Arts & Entertainment Editor

❖ CD Review

This CD is really nice. It is nice. Mmm hmm, mmm hmm. This CD is nice.

"Wow," you are probably thinking, "that is a really horrible lead." If so, you are quite right. This lead is terrible in all the ways "Coming Home," the new album from New Found Glory, is terrible. Repetition, conventional lyrics and nonsensical noises add up to one unfortunate album.

Looking for dull background music? Look no further than the first track, "Oxygen." The song boasts interesting, strumming guitar rhythms, but the music itself suffers from unoriginality. Vocalist Jordan Pundik sounds bored with his own tired lyrics: "Don't leave me, don't leave me here / I can't breathe without you." If Pundik really wants to impress a girl, he could come up with something a little more creative to sing.

Song two, "Hold My Hand," does not get any better. "Do do do do do do do do / You'll never know / I'm after you." Yup, those are the lyrics to the chorus. You can expect quality from a band that centers a chorus about the sound "do." The song continues with, "And you smell like / how angels ought to smell / and you look like / you're ready to go." What do angels smell like, exactly? And since when are angels and being "ready to go" a decent juxtaposition?

The songs on "Coming Home" do, undeniably, sound good in a heartless, processed way. But the sound just mimics that of more popular bands like Green Day and Fallout Boy. Angst-ridden emo-punk has been thoroughly explored. To make good music, a band has to try to make new music. New Found Glory fails in this attempt entirely.

Two tracks might actually be worth downloading. "Too Good to Be" breaks out of the emo mold to incorporate a country-influenced guitar sound and softer, more meaningful vocals accompanied with simple clapping.

The other track, "Boulders," listens like a ballad. Violin, piano and female vocals are carefully blended with the usual instrumentation, creating a sweeter song. A tender double-entendre in the chorus ("I never said that I didn't need you / Put down your arms / And wrap them around me") elevates this song to the mature ranks of real music.

Tracks like the third one, titled "It's Not Your Fault," almost achieve decency in a brainless, bubble-gum sort of way. Pretty little sentiments fill the song, a clear piano solo introduces it and the vocals are coherent and cute. But as a whole many of the tracks are just noisy. Guitar, piano, percussion and electronic distortion are all layered, drowning each other out.

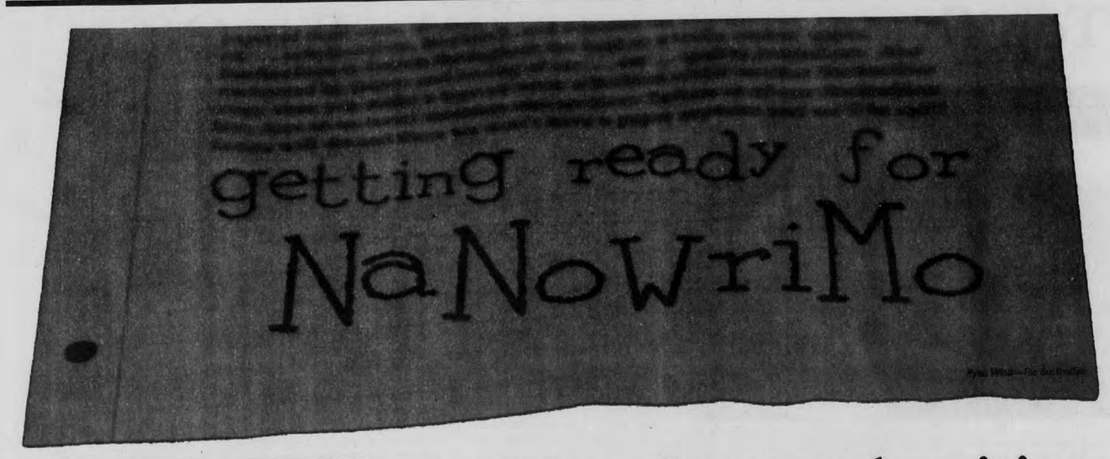
As a band that does not have any famous musicians or any great focus on artistry, New Found Glory needs good vocals and catchy lyrics to stand out. For the most part, Pundik does not sing with enough passion to make his voice captivating.

"On My Mind" almost gets there, with a quieter middle section that lets the song sound crafted rather than formulated. "Make Your Move" also breaks through the noise, but cannot break through the conventional subject matter—the speaker just tries to convince a girl he likes to come to bed.

Listening to this album in its entirety was the auditory equivalent of watching grass grow. Stagnant and unoriginal, New Found Glory does not seem able to stay interested in its own songs, let alone captivate an audience. "Coming Home" could fill a hole in your processed-pop-rock-boyband consumption if that hole is not already filled by more creative bands. Otherwise, it is best to let this one pass under the radar.

Courtesy of amazon.com

Pop-punk band New Found Glory released their anticipated fifth album, "Coming Home," on Sept. 19. The album introduces new sounds like piano, violin, and female vocals into their guitar-percussion-vocals set.



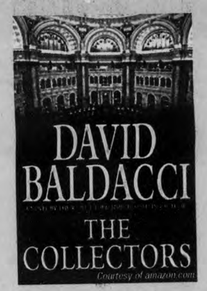
Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Top 10 best-sellers from the New York Times

These novels were top sellers for the week of Nov. 5 on NYtimes.com. Pilfer these plots for your own novel or peruse for your reading pleasure.

1. FOR ONE MORE DAY, by Mitch Albom.
A troubled man gets a last chance to reconnect and restore his relationship with his dead mother.

2. THE COLLECTORS, by David Baldacci.
The members of the Camel Club reunite to solve a murder at the Library of Congress.



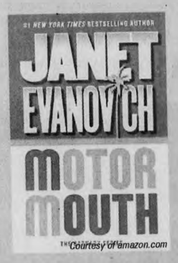
Courtesy of amazon.com

3. ACT OF TREASON, by Vince Flynn.
The C.I.A. operative Mitch Rapp makes surprising discoveries when he investigates an attack on a Democratic presidential candidate's motorcade.

4. ECHO PARK, by Michael Connelly.
The Los Angeles detective Harry Bosch returns to an old unsolved case with unexpected results.

5. THIRTEEN MOONS, by Charles Frazier.
A man raised in the North Carolina wilderness travels America in defense of his adopted Indian people and broods over an elusive woman.

6. MOTOR MOUTH, by Janet Evanovich.
Alexandra Barnaby, known as Barney; her boyfriend, a Nascar driver; and his St. Bernard inadvertently become involved in a murder investigation as they investigate a possible cheating scandal.



Courtesy of amazon.com

7. WHAT CAME BEFORE HE SHOT HER, by Elizabeth George.
The back story of the murder of Inspector Thomas Lynley's wife focuses on an abandoned mixed-race family in North London.

8. SHORT STRAW, by Stuart Woods.
A Santa Fe trial lawyer must fight against an attack on his practice and his reputation.

9. THE THIRTEENTH TALE, by Diane Setterfield.
A biographer struggles to discover the truth about an aging writer who has mythologized her past.

10. THE BANCROFT STRATEGY, by Robert Ludlum.
A former intelligence agent tries to rescue a kidnapped colleague, while a banker discovers that her family's foundation is involved in shady politics.

Prepping for novel writing

Sarah Novello shares tips and tricks for generating a 50,000 word novel

By Sarah Novello
Staff Writer

Magnanimous.

That will be the first word of my novel for National Novel Writing Month. Word one. Word 50,000? Well, I have a ways to go before I get there, but hopefully it will still be intelligible.

I have yet to start my NaNoWriMo novel (it is still October as I am writing this), but by the time you read this article, I will (hopefully) be well on my way to 50,000 words. Right now I am developing a few different characters that will inspire me to throw partially interesting words at my computer for the next 30 days.

Each NaNoWriMo writer prepares for November differently. Some very daring writers start typing at 12:00:01 on November 1 without any real plans, like Nicole Haines '08.

"Planning isn't my style," Haines said. "I take basic plot lines from my life and the lives of those around me, and characters come from people who I've met or heard stories about. Then I put everything into crazy situations and see what develops. I never plan."

First-year NaNo participant Robin Stevenson '08 plans to start the month with an idea of what will happen in her novel. She is not yet sure what path it will take, but she will not start writing until she at least has a genre and basic plot line. She is certain that she will pick her plot based on its flexibility.

"It is important to make sure that the plot will take a long time to develop and follow through," Stevenson said. "Be prepared to make changes to it if it doesn't."

After all, it is more important to write 50,000 words than to have a fantastic plot.

This year I am planning to write a novel inspired partly by my summer job as a housekeeper at an elite hotel. There will be (surprise) a housekeeper who notices odd or interesting objects in each different room that she cleans. Each of these objects will initiate a first-person account from the guest's point of view of a certain moment in their life. I plan to continue on this path and develop guests' characters through their objects until I get bored with it, at which point the guests will have some kind of interaction, or something will happen. Since I want to improve my character development skills, this is a great way for me to do that without worrying about a "good" story.

Last year I had a solid plot line, but I was so concerned with not having 50,000 words that I stretched out each tiny scene for as long as I possibly could and ended the month with the birth of those who were supposed to be my main characters.

For example, rather than writing "she was pregnant," I wrote, "But, for the sake of this story moving forward so that this will all relate back to the second prologue that occurred about forty five thousand words ago and so that the main characters can actually be born soon, all of her plans changed when she went to her yearly doctor's appointment eight days into the marriage and they pronounced her 'quite pregnant' and without a doubt there is a baby growing in there."

This "tactic" yielded a truly horrible novel that I cannot bear to read. My mistake was that I wanted to control everything. I learned that you have to allow things to happen to your characters. You have no control over the plot. All you can do is start off with a lot of possibilities and hope for the best.

For example, if you are planning to write a scene where the two main characters meet and immediately fall in love, but you are having a bad day, they might just meet and kill each other. NaNo writers will take their emotions out on characters, so a NaNo plot has to be loose so that it will account for this.

So if you have a few moments to spare, take a look at my public space and see where these ideas are taking me throughout the month. Better yet, if you have a character idea that you would like me to throw in the hotel as a guest, drop me an e-mail and I will include your character in the novel. After all, I have a lot of writing to do, and any speed novelist needs all the inspiration that they can get!

The average person types 40 words a minute. So 50,000 will take 21 hours! Help Sarah come up with ideas. E-mail snovello@

Novel-related classes on campus

Class scheduling starts Monday—have you figured out what classes you are taking? Here are a few novel-related classes in the English department for students with all levels of experience and different interests.

Course Number	Course Name	Professor	Day/ Time
Engl 101	Intro to the Novel	Ghislaine McDayter	TR 9:30-11:00 A.M.
Engl 106	Literature & Creative Writing	Shara McCallum Ron Mohring Robert Rosenberg	TR 1:00-2:30 P.M. MW 1:00-2:30 P.M. TR 8:00-9:30 A.M.
Engl 201	Intro to Creative Writing	Ron Mohring Chris Camuto	TR 1:00-2:30 P.M. MW 8:30-10:00 A.M.
Engl 202	Creative Writing: Fiction	Robert Rosenberg	T 1:00-4:00 P.M. R 1:00-4:00 P.M.
Engl 203	Creative Writing: Nonfiction	Chris Camuto	MW 3:00-4:30 P.M.
Engl 204	Creative Writing: Poetry	Shara McCallum	TR 2:30-4:00 P.M.
Engl 392	Seminar in Contemporary Novel	Glynis Carr	M 7:00-10:00 P.M.

November 10, 2006

The Bucknellian

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

Volume 138, Number 10 | Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue | www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

On Broadway

The Musical Theater Club performed hits from the most popular Broadway shows Friday in Larison Dining Hall.

See page A10

New major, courses for spring

By Nilanjana Saha
News Editor

The University will offer neuroscience as a major spring semester.

"The creation of the neuroscience major reflects our growing awareness of the role of the brain in the behaviors, thoughts and emotions of organisms," said David Evans, associate professor of psychology. "In addition to many other aspects of neuroscience, one of the issues that the field addresses is the importance of the brain in determining what it means to be human."

According to Evans, a growing number of undergraduates and prospective students expressed interest in majoring in neuroscience.

"A lot of students have been patching together their own neuroscience major by double majoring in biology and psychology," Evans said.

Many faculty members at the University already teach courses and conduct research on neuroscience.

"It was just a question of organizing and formalizing what was already here," Evans said.

The major will combine courses in biology, psychology, animal behavior, math and chemistry, with an emphasis on research. Besides introductory neuroscience, several new courses including one on neurodevelopmental disorders will also be offered.

First-year and sophomore

See MAJOR page A3

Vandalism rampant on campus

By Amanda Sidman
Staff Writer

The 49 reported vandalism cases this year have both Public Safety and the student body concerned.

Public Safety Director Jason Friedberg said offenses ranging from tampering with fire equipment to the recent Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity vandalism occur frequently on the weekends and mostly at night. Friedberg and Public Safety are working to differentiate between the severities of the cases and are working together with other campus organizations to bring about a stop to such crimes.

Friedberg said tampering with fire prevention is one of the most dangerous forms of vandalism—hence, the newly posted fliers in most residence halls warning of a $500 fine for offenders. Public Safety is working together with Housing and Residential Life and the Inter-Fraternity Council to bring a stop to such danger-

See VANDALISM page A3

BSG Today

Courtesy of John Kimball
Adam Weinberg, President

Courtesy of John Kimball
JT Dean, VP Operations

Courtesy of John Kimball
John Kimball, VP Finance

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian
Lindsey Pierce, VP Administration

University considers extending library hours

By Brian Mulligan
Sports Editor

Some University students are seeking 24-hour access to the Ellen Clarke Bertrand Library. The Library is currently open from 7:45 a.m. to 2 a.m. during the school week.

The interest in longer hours is based upon the lack of accessible study areas and research materials in the early morning hours. The idea of extending the library's hours is currently being considered by Information Services and Resources (ISR) and Bucknell Student Government (BSG), but a 24-hour library may not be feasible at this moment.

"The question about staying open 24/7 is more complex, and it comes down to resources. Unlike some buildings, the library cannot stay open without at least a skeletal staff in the building," said Gene Spencer '76, associate vice president of ISR.

The only time the library is open for a full 24 hours is during the reading period and finals, allowing students to prepare for final exams and papers.

Before making a considerable change to the library hours, ISR must investigate if the opportunity to have the library open for the extra hours is worth the investment.

"Before we could assess the

See LAB page A2

Prioritizing student safety

By Michelle Laxer
News Editor

In coordination with the Parents Board and Lewisburg borough officials, Bucknell Student Government (BSG) began work to improve the standards of living downtown, focusing on students' safety and general relations with the Lewisburg Police Department (LPD).

Former BSG President Joel Buckman '06 first proposed the plan to the Board of Trustees last spring as his major project.

"He worked with landlords constantly," said Sarah Cummings '08, chair of student affairs.

Buckman's initial ideas included a common lease, online pictures of available houses and regular inspections to ensure the houses met the proper safety codes. In addition, BSG is currently working to improve relations between downtown students and LPD.

"We want to come up with a line of communication to promote respect between students and officers," said J.T. Dean '07, vice president of operations.

Some downtown students feel like they are being targeted by LPD and the officers do not respect them.

"[LPD] should use Public Safety as a model," Cummings said. "They really worked hard to build that level of recognition and trust with the students."

To initiate a dialogue between the students and the LPD, BSG held an open forum last fall with Lewisburg Police Chief Paul Yost. The forum helped ease tensions and the

See LIVING page A2

Slow progress made in laundry system

By Michelle Laxer
News Editor

Bucknell Student Government (BSG) is working closely with Information Services and Resources (ISR) and the Office of Finance and Administration to facilitate the "One Card Project," which will introduce a one-swipe laundry system using the University ID card. While laundry is the current focus, the project will also include the use of the BUID for other functions.

The switch to a one-swipe system is in response to student dissatisfaction with the current laundry system. According to a survey conducted by BSG last year, 77 percent of those who responded said they were not satisfied with laundry services.

"BSG is always trying to improve student life," said Sarah Cummings '08, chair of student affairs.

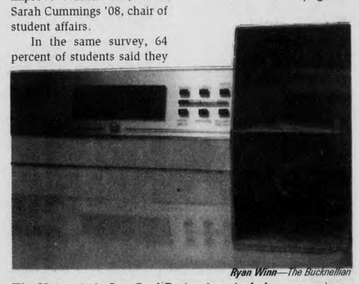
In the same survey, 64 percent of students said they would prefer a one-swipe laundry system with the use of their BUID. BSG used the survey to draft a proposal to present to ISR and the Office of Finance and Administration, both of which are in favor of the "One Card Project" and are working closely with BSG to further its progress.

The "One Card Project" was discussed among the administration even before the proposal from BSG. The project suggests the BUID could be used to grant access to residence halls and to pay for food at vending machines.

"We are submitting this as a tactic for the Strategic Plan," Cummings said.

Due to the cost and size of the project, it will be implemented in many phases. In the meantime, "we can

See LAUNDRY page A2



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

The University's One Card Project is to include a one swipe laundry system.

Tomorrow...

By Wes Kinter
Writer

Adam Weinberg '07, Bucknell Student Government (BSG) president, led an executive debate Wednesday night in the Bison highlighting student candidates and their positions leading into the coming election. Each candidate had the opportunity to respond to questions suggested by BSG and student submissions as well as speak in an open question- and-answer session following the debate.

Four officer positions are up for election and two candidates will run unopposed.

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Sarah Cummings '08 is the sole candidate for president and Lindsey Pierce '08 will run for vice president of administration.

Responding to a question on the future of the University, Cummings described the need for student input within BSG. She said the Plan for Bucknell would be at the top of BSG's agenda, but every student's perspective is invaluable.

"If students could submit ideas to student government," Cummings said, "it would provide the best way to reach out and hear the student voice."

Cummings suggested various methods of finding this student voice, such as a Flame Sheet, on which all students could write their opinions freely.

Pierce addressed the need for developing and maintaining strong relationships between students and professors.

"Some students have really strong relationships with their professors," Pierce said, "but some feel distant out of class."

See DEBATE page A3

INSIDE THIS ISSUE

OPINIONS

The Bucknellian editorial board discusses the lack of interest in this year's BSG election.

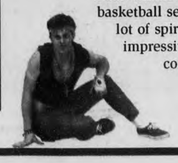
A6

SPORTS

Men's soccer team is heading to the NCAA tournament for the fist time in 30 years.

B1

FEATURES



Bison Mania kicks off the basketball season with a lot of spirit and an impressive lip-sync contest.

B10

A&E

A&E writer Sarah Novello gives tips on how to get a novel written in one month.

A9

Public Safety Log

Wednesday, November 1

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Gerhard Fieldhouse: Student injured ankle and requested medical treatment. Transported to Evangelical Hospital ER.

Thursday, November 2

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Vedder Hall: Broken Window in corridor.

MV ACCIDENT—Smith Hall Parking Lot: Minor vehicle accident.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Vedder Hall: Room window broke out.

Friday, November 3

INFORMATION RECEIVED—South 7th Street, Lewisburg Borough: Possible Intruder in off-campus residence.

MEDICAL ASSIST—Sojka Pavilion: Ankle injury. Person transported to Evangelical ER.

Saturday, November 4

ASSIST OTHER AGENCY—Swartz Hall: Assisted LPD with student transported by ambulance to Evangelical ER for alcohol overdose.

TAMPERING WITH FIRE EQUIPMENT—Kappa Delta Rho fraternity: Caused by a fog machine.

INFORMATION RECEIVED—South 6th Street: LPD reports male possibly peeping in windows.

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—Swartz Hall: Students cited for underage consumption.

Sunday, November 5

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—Swartz Hall: Student cited for underage consumption of alcohol.

ALARM-FIRE—The Mods: Caused by cooking.

HARASSMENT BY COMMUNICATIONS—Trax Hall: Unknown person(s) is calling her phone.

THEFT—Gerhard Fieldhouse: Unknown person(s) took the yard markers from the Flag Football Field.

WELL-BEING CHECK—Swartz Hall: RA requested assistance for medical issue.

Monday, November 6

MEDICAL ASSIST—Swartz Hall: Knee injury. Person transported to Evangelical ER.

THEFT—The Mods: Theft of personal property.

Tuesday, November 7

DISORDERLY CONDUCT—The Mods: Intoxicated student was ill in room.

THEFT—Physical Plant: Unknown person(s) removed the decal from an employee's vehicle.

MEDICAL ASSIST—Elaine Langone Center: Employee transported to Evangelical ER for a head injury.

ALARM-FIRE—Vedder Hall: Students cited for failure to vacate a building.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Phi Kappa Psi fraternity: Student put his hand through a window and was transported by ambulance to Evangelical ER for treatment.

LAUNDRY From page A1

easily make small, simple changes to our system," according to the BSG executive report on laundry services.

The improvement of the laundry services includes the purchase of more, better-quality washers and dryers. Last year, Swartz Hall received brand new washers and dryers. Improvements will include regular maintenance and servicing of the laundry facilities.

There is a possibility that a new laundry system would use "Intelligent Laundry" technology that would save time for students by sending them electronic alerts about the current laundry status.

"Students may receive notification via e-mail, PDA or cell phone when a machine is free, or their laundry is done," according to the BSG report.

"Intelligent Laundry" was proposed by the University's current laundry contractor, Mac-Gray corporation, who owns the program.

Since much of the project is still under review and awaiting implementation, details have yet to be determined.

"The cost [of laundry] will be consistent with normal trends," Cummings said.

If the laundry system is added to the BUID, it would be on an account similar to declining dollars but separate from the meal plan.

While students agree the project is great idea, there are some concerns that current students will not be able to take advantage of the improvements.

"I'd like to see them start it now and be diligent about it so we can benefit from it," Ali White '09 said. "It's a really great idea."

Some students are happy to hear about a change in the laundry system but would rather the University focus on other aspects of the "One Card Project."

"I'd like to see them work on access to the residence halls, as opposed to laundry," Stephanie Wilsey '09 said.

Students should expect to see small changes made to further the progress of the project.

"We will be making improvements here and there when necessary," Cummings said.

LIBRARY From page A1

value of those changes, we would need to ask the question, 'would Bertrand Library be used heavily enough during the early morning hours to justify the added expense to the University?' With the answer to that question, it becomes a financial decision," Spencer said.

The University is on par with comparable schools within the Patriot League. Colgate's main library is open from 8-2 a.m., while Lehigh's library is open only 15 minutes longer than Bertrand Library. The data supports that the University is not falling behind similar universities, but the implication of a 24-hour library may still be in the mix for the future through the Plan for Bucknell.

"Many of us would like to have a 24-hour library," said John Dean '07, vice president of BSG. "Through the vision of The Plan for Bucknell of making Bucknell the premier undergraduate liberal arts institution in the country making the library 24 hours would undoubtedly be one of the major ways to achieve this vision. We hope that we will be able to have a 24-hour library in the near future."

Currently, the University is considering opening the library an hour earlier on weekdays and weekends to better accommodate students needing the library prior to their 8 a.m. classes.

Some students feel there are enough study areas on campus to accommodate their late night study needs.

"I think it would be a nice resource to have at all hours of the night, but there are so many other locations available late at night," Kyle Lafferty '10 said. "The 7th Street Cafe and quiet study areas in residence halls are adequate alternatives to the library atmosphere. I think most students go to the library to get a quiet place to study rather than to utilize the resources."

To start the ball rolling, students will have to show a purpose and desire to have extended hours. Then it becomes the question of logistics and resources.

"It is something to look into when considering long-term planning, but it would be very difficult to implement immediately," said Sarah Cummings '08, president of the class of 2008. "We need to get a better picture of what students really want so that we can prioritize number of complaints dropped, but there was no follow-up. In an attempt to continue communication with the town, the Committee on Complementary Activities (CCA) initiated a dinner on Thursday to discuss downtown issues with University officials, student leaders and Lewisburg borough officials, including Yost.

BSG improves LPD relations

LIVING From page A1

BSG also hopes holding small meetings between Lewisburg officials and University students will create more discussion between the groups.

"We are confident that we can continue dialogue and make things good for everyone," Cummings said.

The initial phases of downtown improvement began approximately two weeks ago when BSG sent out a checklist to students living downtown. The list consisted of important items that needed to be present in each house, such as banisters on the staircases, functioning smoke detectors and fire extinguishers. The checklist was designed to get the students and their landlords to tour the house together and ensure the house met the points on the checklist.

"We want to create a dialogue between landlord and student," Dean said.

The Board of Trustees is reviewing additional plans to improve the downtown area. These plans could possibly be a supplement to the Campus Master Plan—a long-term project that aims to improve the overall standards of living on campus. Another possibility is the creation of a University-owned "University Village," located downtown and available to both students and professors as a residence option.

For now, BSG hopes to educate students on what they should expect from their landlords and downtown life. Living in a house is an excellent opportunity for students to experience true independence because it exposes them to working with landlords and paying bills, but they need to have decent living conditions. Many houses downtown are structurally unsafe or lack basic preventative measures that ensure the safety of the residents.

"Students go into these homes expecting them to be safe," Dean said. "We want students to know they don't have to accept [these living conditions] and they can do something about it."

In conjunction with the Parents Board and the Town Gown Committee, the Downtown Safe Living Task Force has been developing ideas that will help raise standards of downtown living and educate the residents.

The Parents Board discussed the idea of a Downtown Living Web site.

"We're looking for it to include a discussion forum, fire safety sections, general safety sections, a list of downtown houses and a list of contacts," said Jenna DiPaolo '07, BSG downtown living representative and member of the Safe Living Task Force.

Members of the Parents Board suggested putting pictures of the houses available on the site.

The option of a general lease is also being discussed as another option for students who feel the landlord's contract is not sufficient.

The entire process has been a positive experience and BSG received support from faculty and administration.

"Everyone is looking out for the safety of the students, and it is comforting to see," DiPaolo said. "There is a lot more to come in the future."

Summer 2007 in Paris
A multitude of undergraduate, credit-bearing courses
- Two 5-week Sessions
- Fast Track Intensives
- French Immersions

www.aup.edu

THE AMERICAN UNIVERSITY OF PARIS knowledge, perspective, understanding

THERE'S A NAME FOR SOLDIERS WHO GO BACK TO SCHOOL. WE CALL THEM LIEUTENANTS.
RANGER
LEADERSHIP
EXCELLENCE
TORRES
©2006. Paid for by Army ROTC. All rights reserved.

AN ARMY OF ONE®

Green to Gold is the Army ROTC program for enlisted Soldiers to become Army Officers. Get your college degree and become one of the Army's newest leaders.

ENROLL IN ARMY ROTC
BECOME AN ARMY OFFICER
U.S.ARMY

All National Guard & Reserve Soldiers interested in participating in Army ROTC call CPT Griffiths @570-577-1013.
Check out our website, http://armyrotc.com/edu/bucknell

Appointment Setter

Flex-Hours
Part-Time
Great for Students

Must have a great voice and know how to qualify potential customers.

We Do Metal Roofs
a division of Prudential Realty

570-522-6555

New courses to be offered in spring

MAJOR From page A1

students interested in majoring in neuroscience should not have difficulty fitting in the courses, Evans said. Juniors who are natural science majors may have already taken core courses required for a neuroscience major and can easily switch their majors.

Besides preparing students for a graduate program in neuroscience, the major will also help students interested in medical or pharmaceutical industries.

"The new Neuroscience major is the perfect option for students not only interested in the biology and chemistry of neuronal function, but for those interested in the psychological realms of neuroscience," said Angela Remeika '09. "The interdepartmental focus is really appealing."

The University will also offer a course called "Entertaining the Nazis" for the first time next semester.

Familiarization and analysis of German films from the third Reich and comprehension of the broader implications and roles of films in society will be the main agenda for the new course.

"When most people think of German cinema or the third Reich, a more ominous image comes to mind," said Gundolf Graml, visiting assistant professor of German.

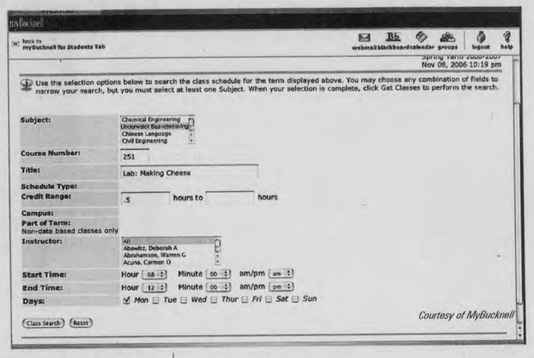
There were about 1000, films produced during the third Reich. While approximately 150 of them had overt propaganda, a majority of these films were created for entertainment.

"[They were produced] with an awareness of Hollywood," Graml said.

The course is formatted as a blend of discussion and lectures as well as a film lab, in which students will watch "Münchhausen," "La Habanera," "Paracelsus" and various other films.

According to Graml, there are multiple approaches to examining these films. Graml hopes through an in-depth analysis, students will recognize the role the films played in installing the Nazi regime to power.

Students will also analyze the connection between films as popular media and totalitarian politics, as well as how the visual language contributes to the overall narrative plot.



Courtesy of MyBucknell

Public Safety tries to implement preventive measures

VANDALISM From page A1

ous offenses as destroying smoke detectors and pulling alarms unnecessarily.

Other forms of vandalism include what Friedberg calls "nuisance crimes," or pranks like breaking windows or a recent crime in which a "large recycling can full of water" was poured into a Vedder Hall dorm room. According to Friedberg, these crimes will not be tolerated because they take Public Safety away from the more important and crucial elements of its job.

When asked about vandalism in first-year residence halls, which seems to be the case for most of the incidents, Amanda Silva '10 seemed to agree with Friedberg's stance.

"I'm not sure that there's necessarily something that the administration can do to help prevent such matters because Public Safety as well as the Lewisburg police already seem to be circulating the area quite heavily as it is," Silva said.

Recently, Public Safety has dealt with an increased number of inter-fraternity vandalism incidents, such as windshield damage to two cars in the Kappa Delta Rho parking lot.

Jason Rechel '08, a Kappa Delta Rho brother, said the act "upset the brothers." Friedberg referred to the act as "horseplay between fraternities."

Friedberg said the Greek community is "tightly knit and often closed," which usually prevents Public Safety from completing full investigations of these crimes.

Two hundred hours went into investigating the Sigma Phi Epsilon vandalism incident with no current leads to date. Friedberg said while Public Safety will pursue any new leads it receives, the case is currently at a standstill.

As vandalism incidents continue appearing in the Public Safety log of The Bucknellian week after week, Friedberg said something needs to be done.

Public Safety will continue to distribute information, use the anonymous tip Web site and urge students to be involved with safety on campus.

Twenty-four-hour lockdown is an obvious solution but not one Public Safety is jumping to yet, even though Friedberg said all recent incidents are "building blocks" to that resolution.

Twenty-four-hour locked dorms would decrease vandalism, save money and ensure students' safety.

Friedberg emphasizes the importance of the participation of the student body in such matters.

"If 24-hour lockdown is what the students want, they can get it," Friedberg said.

Friedberg and Public Safety stress the importance of the anonymous tip Web site (http://www.bucknell.edu/x6442.xml) and are open to suggestions students may have.

DEBATE From page A1

She also discussed keeping the student body aware of occurrences within BSG through the used of the student government Web site, www.bucknellstudentgovernment.com.

The candidates for the position of vice president of operations are Andrew King '08 and Andy Logan '09. During the debate, Rosy Kim '08 represented King, who could not be present due to participation in the University's study-abroad program.

One of the questions posed to the candidates asked how each, as vice president of operations, would take charge of and work with clubs on campus.

"If Bucknell is going to strive to be the best," Kim said, "we must pull our resources to achieve the best."

Kim, reading King's written response, suggested more interaction between individual students groups, as well as with BSG, would improve student relations and produce effective and necessary changes on campus.

Andy Logan then responded to the question.

"I would act as a mediator between these organizations," Logan said. "We need to take the initiative and go out there and make contact with these groups."

Logan referenced the need for group interaction, but focused on the need of a strong connection between student government and student groups to ensure the right voices are heard.

"What would you say is the most pressing issue facing students at Bucknell?" Weinberg said as the concluding question. "How would you go about changing it?"

Kim responded that while issues such as problems with downtown living are significant, they do not represent the greater need of the student body. She said students do not feel connected to the University.

Kim expressed King's ideas of more integration of students through events on campus in an attempt to unify beyond specific venues, such as basketball games.

Logan said many of the changes set for the University go unnoticed by students.

"[While] the paths of success have been laid out by the University, [it is ultimately] up to the students to decided which route to take," Logan said.

The two candidates for the office of vice president of finance, Cara Jellison '08 and Julia Miller '08, also discussed plans for the future.

Regarding the funding for student groups and organizations on campus, Miller described the importance of educating clubs about funds they are allowed to have.

"It's crucial for groups to understand what funds they are and are not entitled to," Miller said.

Jellison agreed, stating the importance of "helping them along with the budget process."

The two candidates also answered a question by Harry Kastenbaum '09 asking whether or not the vice president of finance would fund a controversial event planned by a student organization.

Both candidates described the urgency of maintaining an unbiased perspective while allowing each member of the Appropriations Committee a chance to respond.

Voting is scheduled to take place next Wednesday in an online election.

News Briefs

Hussein sentenced to death

Saddam Hussein, former president of Iraq was sentenced to death by hanging for crimes against humanity. A panel of five Iraqi judges called the "Green Zone" made the unanimous decision on Sunday. Two of his co-defendants were also sentenced to hang and four others were given prison terms ranging from 15 years to life. Hussein's half-brother is one of the other two defendants sentenced to hang. The death sentences and life prison terms will be appealed immediately.

According to The New York Times, despite the appeal, Hussein's sentence may be carried out within the next few months. "It may depend on behind-the-scenes maneuvering by Mr. Hussein's embattled successors in Iraq's new government who have shown before that they are not hesitant to pressure judges," The Times reported. One of the events that may have contributed to Hussein's sentence was the execution of 148 men and youths in Dujail, a Shiite town north of Baghdad.

Rumsfeld to resign

On Wednesday, Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld announced his resignation after almost six years in the position. He has been criticized by Democratic and Republican leaders alike for poor strategies in the Iraq war. At a White House news conference on Wednesday President George W. Bush said, "After a series of thoughtful conversations, Secretary Rumsfeld and I agreed that the timing is right for new leadership at the Pentagon," according to The Washington Post. In the same news conference Bush announced he nominated Robert Gates to replace Rumsfeld. Gates is the former director of the CIA and current president of Texas A&M University. It has not been determined when Rumsfeld is leaving the Pentagon, and Bush's nomination must be approved by the new Senate.

Democrats take control of House and Senate

Nancy Pelosi from California is set to become the first female Speaker of the House after the results of the midterm Congressional elections Tuesday. She will replace the current Speaker, Dennis Hastert, R-Ill. Without losing any seats it previously controlled, the Democratic Party gained an additional 28 seats, more than enough to gain the majority in the House of Representatives. Democrats took control of the Senate after awaiting confirmation from narrow races in Virginia and Montana.

The Democrats captured enough Senate seats to create a significant shift of power. "The upheaval in the House and the changing balance in the Senate signaled a dramatic power shift in Washington that will alter the final two years of Bush's presidency," The Washington Post reported. According to The Post, Bush contacted the victorious Democratic leaders Wednesday morning to congratulate them and invite them to a friendly lunch, indicating his willingness to cooperate.

Burger King served pot burgers

Two New Mexico police officers sued Burger King Corporation with accusations that they were served hamburgers laced with marijuana. On Oct. 8 the officers, Mark Landavazo and Henry Gabaldon, bought meals from a drive-through window at a Burger King located in Los Lunas, N.M. They were in uniform and riding in a marked cruiser. According to CNN.com, the officers were almost done with their hamburgers when they suspected there was marijuana in their food. Using a field test, the officers confirmed marijuana was present.

"It gives a whole new meaning to the word 'Whopper,'" said Sam Bregman, the officers' attorney. Three Burger King employees were arrested and face charges of possession of marijuana and aggravated battery of an officer. The lawsuit was filed on Friday and "alleges personal injury, negligence, battery and violation of fair practices," reports CNN.com. The officers are seeking legal costs and other unspecified damages. They work for the Isleta Pueblo tribal police.

Poll worker arrested for alleged assault

A Kentucky poll worker was arrested on Tuesday for allegedly choking a person waiting to vote and pushing him out of a door. He was charged with assault and interfering with an election. According to CNN.com, the dispute between the voter and the poll worker, Jeffery Steitz, had to do with marking the ballot. "The voter told poll worker [Steitz] that he didn't want to vote in a judicial election because he didn't know enough about the candidates," said Lt. Col. Carl Yates of the Jefferson County sheriff's office. Steitz told the voter he had to vote anyway. The dispute ended when Steitz grabbed the voter by the neck and threw him out of the building.

Fairfield University
Jesuit. Personal. Powerful.

Winter Intersession Courses
Put your winter break to good use!

Earn 3-Credits in One or Four Weeks
One Week Sessions: January 3 – 9, 2007
Four Week Online Sessions: January 2 – 31, 2007

Subject areas:
Art History* · Applied Ethics* · American Studies · Business · Economics · Ethics · History · Italian · Literature · Math* · Management* · Music · Politics* · Psychology* · Religious Studies* · Sociology · Studio Arts · Writing*
(* Courses also available in online format)

More course & registration info at:
www.fairfield.edu/ucwisbu
Register by Phone: (203) 254-4288
Registration deadline is Dec. 20, 2006

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE AT Fairfield UNIVERSITY
Jesuit. Personal. Powerful.
Fairfield, Connecticut

Sunset Skating Rink
Adult Night
18 and Up
Tuesday, November 14
7-9:30 P.M.
$4 Admission
$2.50 with School ID
(not including skate rental)
Rt. 11 & 15 Shamokin Dam (570) 743-0606

Meet the Candidates...

Julia Miller

What position are you running for: Vice President of Finance

Class year: 2008

Major(s): Economics and Religion, minor in Philosophy

Extracurricular activities/campus leadership positions: I am an active member of Pi Beta Phi sorority. I currently hold the position of Standards Board Chair for Pi Phi and was recently elected VP of Membership for the upcoming year. I also work in Admissions, setting up the overnight and day visits for prospective students.

Why do you want to run for BSG Executive Board?

I have sat on the Appropriations Committee of BSG since the fall of my freshman year. Through that experience I have seen three different executive boards and the differences between each Vice President of Finance. I am currently an accounts manager for BSG, working directly under the VP of Finance. I thoroughly understand the position and its demands, and I am confident that my experience and my schedule will allow me to do the job well.

How would you effectively communicate with BSG and the rest of the students?

Through both office hours and e-mail communication I know that I will be extremely accessible for questions, concerns and help from both treasurers of clubs and the rest of the student body.

What would you say is the most pressing issue facing students at Bucknell? Why? And how would you go about changing it?

I think that a major issue that students face is a lack of knowledge of the wide variety of events occurring on campus. In the past, I have seen many events funded that have seemingly gone unnoticed by the campus community, due in part to a lack of advertising. I would use my position to encourage groups through financial support to advertise their events further, enabling students to become more aware of campus activities.

If you were to create one tactic according to The Plan for Bucknell what would it be?

I would encourage the increase of diversity of thought on campus by financing both culturally and ideologically diverse programs, speakers and events. I hope to encourage groups to use their funds to increase the awareness of both their club and their events. In doing this, I hope to strengthen students' knowledge and experience outside of the classroom.

What one thing would you most like to see included in the Campus Master Plan?

I would like to see the Campus Master Plan include more performance space for the increase of performers and speakers coming to campus. I think that these performers and speakers will enhance the overall experience of students. We must make sure that these increases do not take away from the academic side of the Master Plan. The campus must be inviting to both intellectual growth as well as acceptable extracurricular entertainment.

Courtesy of Julia Miller

Cara Jellison

What position are you running for: Vice President of Finance

Class year: 2008

Major(s): Accounting and Chemistry

Extracurricular activities/campus leadership positions: BSG Class of 2008 President, BSG Appropriations Committee, BSG Fiscal Committee, Alpha Chi Omega sorority, Bucknell Cycling Club

Why do you want to run for BSG Executive Board?

I have a never ending passion for both Bucknell and accounting. Vice President of Finance is an important position for both club budgeting and general Bucknell policy.

How would [you] effectively communicate with BSG and the rest of the students?

Effectively communicating to BSG is easily done through our weekly meetings at 5 p.m. on Sundays. Effectively communicating with the rest of the student body is a little more challenging. The most important constituents for the VP of Finance are obviously the club treasurers and presidents. This can be done through convenient office hours, reliability through e-mail and phone and meetings in the forum every semester.

What would you say is the most pressing issue facing students at Bucknell? Why? And how would you go about changing it?

The most pressing issue facing students at Bucknell can never truly be named. Each student at Bucknell has a voice and I think that is the most important thing to keep in mind here.

What one thing would you most like to see included in the campus master plan?

A new student center. The Langone Center does not fulfill the needs of the students anymore. Think offices for student organizations, massive windows and skylighting, better traffic flow, a mailroom where you can actually send mail, more meeting rooms, lounges with couches and pool tables.....the list goes on and on.

Courtesy of Cara Jellison

Andrew King

What position are you running for: Vice President for Operations

Class year: 2008

Major: Political Science

Minors: Environmental Science and International Relations

Extracurricular activities/campus leadership positions: Bucknell Student Government, InterVarsity Christian Fellowship, Orientation Assistant, Reunion Student Ambassador, Concert Band, Orchestra

Why do you want to run for BSG Executive Board?

During the last two years of my involvement with BSG, I have been able to have first hand experience on what this student government can accomplish. In just two years, we have been integral in the new Dining Services, the hiring of the new Public Safety Director, the negotiated rules between landlords and students living downtown and have helped coordinate many other student philanthropic events for the Bucknell community. Now as BSG, along with President Mitchell and other administrators have put together the illustrious Plan for Bucknell, a document laying out five foundational principles pushing Bucknell forward, it is crucial to now ask for the results (tactics) stemming from this document. Creating Bucknell as one of the finest world-renowned Universities is not too much too ask but it requires the effort of everyone on campus. Determining on where Bucknell can assist not only students but faculty, the region, Pennsylvania and the country is the mindset we should all have. Therefore I will be basing my term on achieving results.

How would effectively communicate with BSG and the rest of the students?

To answer this question, it is important to recognize the achievements already made in increasing communication between BSG and the student body. Under the leadership of the past two Presidents of BSG, Joel Buckman and Adam Weinberg, students are now able to hear about the initiatives BSG is undertaking much more easily through the Bucknellian and the installation of the LCD screen. And while these two projects will be continued if I am elected, I also see more possibilities.

As VP of Operations, one of my responsibilities will be to talk with all of the clubs here on campus. Since most, if not all, students are involved with at least one club, it is important to use these niches as ways of communication. Rather than having students coming to BSG, I want BSG to come to you. I want to meet with the students of these clubs and hear the concerns they have but in an environment in which they are comfortable.

What would you say is the most pressing issue facing students at Bucknell? Why? And how would you go about changing it?

In talking with students, I have found that a lot of people do not feel connected to Bucknell. Not in the sense that there are not enough things to do on the weekends but rather that students are not enthusiastic about BU than other universities like Penn State. And while we have been able to rally around our basketball team, there have not been too many other things in which students have been able to come together.

The Plan for Bucknell lays out five goals that the administration is following to achieve success for the University in the future including talk about having an endowment of $1 billion. As of now, the administration has been in the planning about "the Plan." But it is now time to have results. For instance, during my time on the Library Committee, I learned that we have run out of room in Bertrand for new books. The building is out of date and needs major renovating. If we combine this with the Plan, as advancing the University's educational system, I believe we will be able to see such results. Going back to the issue of apathy amongst students, when we start seeing these results come to fruition, students will begin to feel as though Bucknell is for them.

If you were to create one tactic according to The Plan for Bucknell what would it be?

While it is difficult to name just one possibility The Plan for Bucknell would be able to be achieved in one year, I see the most important tactic being a main, centralized area for students; in other words a new student center. The reasons for this are twofold. First, is the logistical need of having a comprehensive building that has the offices of key administrators, a dining facility, the mailroom and the offices of several clubs on campus. Currently, the situation is that we have administrators' offices in several buildings (primarily the LC and Marts Hall) and almost no office space for students. As the campus is becoming more complex with over 120 clubs, the need for student office space is crucial. Second, this tactic will be an aspect in which students, faculty, administrators, prospective students and visitors can be impressed with. The student center in many of our peer schools is usually the center of campus, the point in which the campus is most proud. Therefore, it is vital that we too have an impressive, new, modern student center.

What one thing would you most like to see included in the campus master plan?

By far the situation downtown must be included in the campus master plan.

Two years ago, BSG reached an agreement with the landlords association to better the appearance of downtown. By implementing a Code of Conduct, the students agreed to live by a set of standards in exchange for the upkeep of the houses by the landlords. And so with the creation of this document, the relationship between these two parties stayed relatively stable. Yet two years later, there still exist many houses downtown that are in poor shape, need major renovating, and yet there is a lack of responsibility for them to be refurnished. A new set of negotiations must start in which accountability and fairness is the focus. Landlords must be held accountable for the upkeep of the houses. Further, the way in which the landlords relate with students as compared to other tenants must be fair. To charge a student much more rent for an apartment that is in crappier condition yet on the same street as a non-student resident is unfair.

It is time that this issue becomes important once again.

Courtesy of Andrew King

Sarah Cummings

What position are you running for: President

Class year: 2008

Major(s): Philosophy and Political Science double major

Extracurricular activities/campus leadership positions: BSG Class President for first 2 years (not currently), BSG Student Affairs Committee Chair, Committee on Complementary Activities (Vice-Chair), Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority (Recording Secretary), Bucknell University Conservatives Club, The Counterweight, Teaching Assistant for Logic (PHIL 103)

Why do you want to run for BSG Executive Board?

Thanks to excellent leadership in the past, BSG is well-respected among the campus community. Our voices are heard and our opinions are valued. It's never been better to be a student at this university. This is an incredible opportunity and we must take full advantage of it. Representing my peers is a passion of mine, and I would be honored to be given that mandate.

How would you effectively communicate with BSG and the rest of the students?

Many times, BSG is working on the same issues that students feel disgruntled about. Yet it is difficult to communicate mass amounts of information from BSG to the 3,000+ students we represent. Students must begin to feel involved in the process. An idea that might be useful for Bucknell is something that other universities do called "Flame Sheets." When there's a hot topic on campus, BSG would hang up a large, blank poster and let students vent their thoughts and concerns, thus closing the gap of communication between BSG and the student body. In addition, we can always strive for more consistent communication with other student organizations, improved public relations and awareness of our website (www.bucknellstudentgovernment.com) and more consistent contact with the study body.

What would you say is the most pressing issue facing students at Bucknell? Why? And how would you go about changing it?

There are many issues that face us right now, but there is no single issue that faces everyone equally. One thing that affects most of us, though, is education about University policies and procedures. I will make it one of my top priorities as BSG President to make sure that you are aware of these policies and how BSG can help you to learn more and/or change them. Knowledge is power, and students need to feel empowered.

Continued on pg 5

Courtesy of Sarah Cummings

Continued from page 4

If you were to create one tactic according to The Plan for Bucknell what would it be?

I am already involved with the process of creating a tactic for BSG regarding a "One-Card Project" which would include using BU ID for laundry, vending machines and residence hall access. Another tactic I might add would be to create more of a living-learning friendly environment in residence halls with the inclusion of adequate lounge space and computer facilities in every single hall.

What one thing would you most like to see included in the campus master plan?

One thing Bucknell lacks is an adequate student center. We need a building that has plenty of office space for student organizations, lounge space for socializing, studying and hosting events and other facilities that are common to so many universities. The student center should literally be the "center" of student life, not just a place to run through and check your mail.

Andy Logan

Courtesy of Andy Logan

What position are you running for: Bucknell Student Government Vice President

Class year: 2009

Major(s): History, Spanish

Extracurricular activities/campus leadership positions: Bucknell Student Government 2009 Class Vice President, Bucknell Student Government Internal Affairs Committee Chairman, Sigma Phi Epsilon Fraternity, Building on Foundations Participant and Counselor, Model United Nations, Association of Independent Colleges and Universities of Pennsylvania (AICUP) – Bucknell Student Lobby Delegation, Global Residential College

Why do you want to run for BSG Executive Board?

I believe that I can bring a fresh brand of leadership to the Executive Board. I am genuinely interested and concerned with what happens on the Bucknell campus to all members of its community. This university is evolving rapidly, and the students must have a strong voice in the implementation of tactics that follow the path Bucknell is beginning lay for the future. I know that I can effectively listen to the concerns and suggestions of the student body and convey them to other bodies and groups in the Bucknell Community. Working together as a community we will be able to achieve our goals for the future and solve our problems today.

How would effectively communicate with BSG and the rest of the students?

I believe that the path BSG follows must come from the vision and voice of the students. As the representatives of the student body we must not make decisions about issues within the University on our own, we must listen to others and take into consideration all of their concerns and suggestions. If the students are going to make Bucknell a benchmark in higher education, then we must realize we are all going to have to work together. It is my job to be open to all opinions, suggestions and concerns that the student body may have. I will act as a mediator between the students and other bodies on campus in a way that will properly get things done. It is crucial that, as leaders, we are constantly available to our constituents and that we take the initiative to personally reach out to each student.

What would you say is the most pressing issue facing students at Bucknell? Why? And how would you go about changing it?

I believe that many students are most concerned with the situation they face in the downtown areas of Sixth, Seventh and St. Catherine Streets, to name a few. Many students have been consumed by the difficult situations they encounter as residents and as frequent visitors to this part of Lewisburg for numerous reasons. It is time that students have their opportunity to know their rights off-campus, as well as on campus. The town of Lewisburg must understand that the Bucknell community respects their wishes but that they must respect ours in return. As Vice President of Operations I would open dialogue between the students and different governing bodies in the borough and town. BSG has already begun this process by putting a student on the Borough Council, but it must be expanded upon if we are to achieve our goals. I believe that meetings in small group settings with town officials and residents, students, and University officials is the most effective way to express our great concern and suggest our hopes for the future of the downtown area. We are members of the Lewisburg community too. It is time that they begin treating us as ones.

If you were to create one tactic according to The Plan for Bucknell what would it be?

I believe that one tactic the student body and the Bucknell community, at-large, could benefit greatly from is the strengthening of lectureship. In the past, this has been overlooked and poorly funded. With a greater focus on bringing large speakers and events on campus the university could work directly with The Plan for Bucknell. An ambitious lectureship series would strengthen the academic core by hosting more prominent authors, professors and leaders in their respective fields of academia. This would have the potential to enhance the residential learning experience by offering fresh and challenging ideas. These speakers would bring diverse views on world events, academic topics and cultural issues at the forefront of international events today. Greater lectureship would build bridges strong enough to separate the university from the ridiculous stereotype, "The Bucknell Bubble." There would be a fresh outlook on the state of national and world affairs currently concerning the Bucknell Community. An ambitious lectureship series would have the potential to bring the world to Bucknell as well as bring Bucknell to the world.

What one thing would you most like to see included in the campus master plan?

I envision a plan that truly has the students in mind. The first space on this campus that must be built to accommodate the student body is a new student union, a true building for the community. With the diverse range of activities and organizations that many Bucknell community members take part in, there needs to be proper areas for the students to easily come together and meet. Presently, the Langone Center serves the purpose of a dining hall, mail room and Bookstore, and does not offer much else for everyone to enjoy. The new student union would offer a unique building that could give each student the opportunity to see friends, have a place to relax between classes, grab a cup of coffee, or hold a meeting for their group or club. At the same time the building should hold many spaces that students utilize in their everyday lives, but in this plan these spaces must be tailored to better fit the ever-changing needs of students.

Lindsey Pierce

What position are you running for: Vice President of Administration

Class year: 2008

Major(s): Economics

Extracurricular activities/campus leadership positions: Current BSG VP of Administration, Economics TA, Pan-Hellenic Alumni Liaison, Kappa Alpha Theta sorority

Why do you want to run for BSG Executive Board?

Being Vice President of Administration on BSG Executive Board over the past year has been my best experience at Bucknell. I have had the opportunity to voice the opinions of my peers and to affect change. Serving on the Bison Renovation committee and currently on the Dean of Students search committee has enabled me to voice the concerns and suggestions of my peers. Bucknell is at a critical point in its development and I would like to have the opportunity to represent my peers in the important decision making processes of campus master planning, the merger of academic and student life and the tactical phase of The Plan for Bucknell.

How would you effectively communicate with BSG and the rest of the students?

When I ran for VP of Administration last year, I promised to make BSG and its resources more assessable to the student body. On Fridays, instead of holding office hours in the BSG office on the third floor of the LC, I sit in the Terrace Room to make it more convenient for students to ask me questions or voice their concerns. Additionally, in the beginning of my term, the Executive Board visited fraternities and sororities to inform them of how we can help. Many of the Greek life organizations and countless student clubs have taken advantage of advertising on the LCD screen, which I update at least twice a week.

Over the next year, I would like to increase the usage of the BSG table tents in order to communicate to the student body the initiatives of BSG. Additionally, I would like to explore the option of using BUTV to post updates on initiatives that BSG has currently past and initiatives that BSG is pursuing. BUTV could, also, be used to further advertise and explain upcoming events hosted by different student organizations.

What would you say is the most pressing issue facing students at Bucknell? Why? And how would you go about changing it?

Many students do not have strong relationships with their professors. BSG has recognized the lack of interaction between students and professors outside of the classroom and created the BSG/faculty fund where professors can apply for funds to hold out of the classroom learning experiences. By developing strong relationships with professors, students can become more engaged in their classes. Additionally, professors have many resources to help students network in certain job fields.

I would go about changing this issue in two ways. First I would advertise the BSG/faculty fund to the department chairs. By sending letters and meeting with professors, I could promote the fund and encourage professors to apply so that students would have more out of the classroom experiences to form meaningful relationships with their professors. While meeting with the campus master planners, I expressed a need for an expanded library café where students could sit and have coffee with professors. Currently, I do not feel that there is a venue on campus where all professors are comfortable to talk with students. By expanding the library café and making it a more intimate environment with jazz music playing in the background, students and professors could meet in a comfortable environment.

If you were to create one tactic according to The Plan for Bucknell what would it be?

Residential living facilities are not equipped with the necessary spaces to be living/learning environments. I believe that all dorms should have a computer facility, study rooms and lounges to encourage students to learn and socialize together. Many students do not live close to the library and would like to have quiet places to study, as well as lounges and social rooms to collaborate on projects. Many dorms do not accommodate this. I feel that a merger of student and academic life cannot occur until students are able to work and socialize where they live.

What one thing would you most like to see included in the campus master plan?

I believe more apartment style living is needed at Bucknell. Currently, if students would like to live with seven or eight of their friends, they must look off-campus for housing. There should be apartment style living options on-campus and off-campus. These living options should all be safe and sound structures. Providing students with desirable housing for all four years on campus is an important part of a connected Bucknell community, but I feel that students should have the option of living off-campus because it provides excellent opportunities to transition to life after college. Living off-campus gives students the opportunity to negotiate leases and manage paying bills. In campus master planning, I would like to see a University village with downtown living and shops so that students living on-campus and off-campus will remain connected to each other and Bucknell.

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

BSG Election Day

November 15, 2006

Go online and Vote!

Grassroot Marketing Manager

PA, NY, NJ

We are searching for a clever, entrepreneurial, hard working individual with stamina. Who will have fun Generating Leads for:

We Do Metal Roofs
a division of Prudential Realty

1-888-With-Bob
(1-888-948-4262)

The Bucknellian
Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue

Volume 138, Number 10
C-3952 Bucknell University
Lewisburg, Pa. 17837
(570) 577-1520
bucknellian@bucknell.edu
http://www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Editor-in-Chief
Catherine Heverling '07

Associate Editor of Content
Jamie Jacobson '08

Associate Editor of Layout
Rina Van Orden '08

Business Manager
Jared Napolitano '08

Senior Editor
Drew Larson '08

News Editors
Evan Unger '09
Nilanjana Saha '09
Michelle Laxer '09

Opinions Editors
Hallie Stebbins '08
Michael Dippery '08

Sports Editors
Matthew Saylor '08
Barbara Perlman '09
Brian Mulligan '08

Features Editors
Julia Fuchs '09
Brianna DelValle '10

Arts & Entertainment Editors
Kimberly Kane '08
Lily Beauvilliers '09

Photography Editors
Ryan Winn '08
Ellyn Ercolano '09

Chief Copy Editors
Kathleen Conti '08
Greg Hamilton '08

Advertising Managers
Meredith Reighard '07
Kat Wallis '07
Katie Casteel '08
Emily Senko '08

Office Manager
Kate Wood '07

Circulation Manager
Adam Kahler '07

Cartoonist
Juliana Su '09

Adviser
James F. Lee

Op-Ed Policy
The editorials of The Bucknellian reflect the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the editor-in-chief. All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

Letters to the editor must be received by noon on the Tuesday before publication. Letters may not be longer than 600 words and the Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny or edit any letter to the editor. Letters must contain the writer's name and phone number (used for verification purposes and not to be printed). Mail or e-mail letters using the addresses above.

Publishing Information
The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester entirely by Bucknell students. All published material is chosen by the paper's Editorial Board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its adviser, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

Subscription Information
Subscriptions are available for $45 per year or $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian Subscriptions, Bucknell University, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, Pa. 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

Members of the local community may pick up a complimentary issue each week, with the understanding of one free issue per person. If you would like more for a nominal fee, contact the print office.

Advertising Policy
The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements if deemed offensive, illegal or in bad taste. Advertisements reflect the opinion of the advertiser and not necessarily that of The Bucknellian. For advertising rates and information, please contact the advertising department at (570) 577-1085. Copyright © 2006 The Bucknellian

The Bucknellian
EDITORIAL

BSG election: few candidates, little interest

Around 5:45 p.m. Wednesday, the Bison was brimming with students eager to hear candidates for Bucknell Student Government's executive officers debate.

Just kidding. At 6 p.m. when the debate started, most of them retreated to the other side of the Bison, where they could continue their conversations undisturbed or watch TV.

It was a sad sight to see when current BSG President Adam Weinberg opened up the microphone for students to ask questions and only one student not affiliated with the candidates and their organization raised her hand to ask a question.

It is this lack of interest from students that has resulted in only one student out of 3,500 running for the position of president of the entire student body.

The Bucknellian supports Sarah Cummings '08 for president. Cummings has experience as a former class president, chair of the BSG Student Affairs committee and vice-chair of the Committee on Complementary Activities. She has ideas, such as a "flame sheet," which students could use to voice complaints and concerns to BSG.

But because she is the only candidate running, there is no comparative measure for her credentials and ideas. It's easy to be the most qualified person for a job when you're the only candidate for it.

The apathy that seems to surround our generation with a hazy cloud of disinterest for the surrounding world (or campus for that matter) has trickled down into even the most relevant facets of our young lives.

This apathy has become so strong that perhaps it has even come to be expected.

The BSG debates have the intention of formality. They have the intention of giving students the opportunity to get involved. But this intention is not fulfilled.

On Oct. 30, the current BSG leaders sent out an e-mail notifying students that they could sign up to run in the election up until Nov. 6. What application did students need to go through in order to enter the race?

They had to sign their name on a piece of paper in the mailroom and attend a meeting.

Perhaps this tradition, like holding the debates in the Bison, is meant to be convenient. Maybe BSG is hoping that students will put their southern ranch chicken wraps down for a second and listen up. Or contemplate the possibility of signing their name as they are waiting in line to retrieve a care package from their mom in the mailroom.

But perhaps it is this accommodation of apathy and forfeit of formality that has caused there to be only one candidate in the presidential election.

BSG needs to assert its power through its image. Have the debates in the Elaine Langone Center Forum and invite administrators and student leaders. Have students complete an application online to become a candidate. Seek out the technology to make certain that all candidates, even those that are studying abroad, can be seen and heard.

Our student government is one of the most important organizations on this campus. The students that recognize this will make the effort to complete a simple application and walk the extra flights of stairs to the Forum.

Those that are willing to do no more than scribble their name on a paper or tune out a debate happening right in front of them should not be catered to.

Letters to the Editor

Fan hand-holding stifles enthusiasm

To the Editor:

"Whose socks are these?" a man asks, standing on a railing and swinging smelly socks into the air. "FORDHAM'S SOCKS!" the crowd replies, eliciting chuckles from nearby parents. I hope everyone got to see this wonderful display of camaraderie and group bonding, because this year's Parent's Weekend football game against Fordham was the last time for my beloved "socks" cheer. Not two minutes after we yelled this cheer (which has been yelled at every winning football game since I joined the pep band) we were informed it had been banned for three years and does not comply with the "Bison Good Sports" program. Right.

With this new program (I would tell you what I think they should call it but it involves several swear words and is insulting to hippies; search Facebook and you may find it) the Athletics Department decided that every team we play is not mature enough to stand a defeat against the mighty Bison. Can someone explain how calling your rivals absolute morons is an example of good sportsmanship? And what ever happened to friendly rivalry? People watch sports because they beat people, not because they did a good job and deserve a cookie.

This is not just a problem at the University; the "everyone's a winner" mentality has invaded all facets of American life. Bands of America (a national marching band organization) no longer announces first and second place at their competitions and kiddy soccer teams do not keep score. Our math and science students lag behind those of Japan, partly because (and studies have shown this) we say "hey, at least you tried" when kids do not do well, instead of "try it again." What a horrible reason for the downfall of a country!

This mentality has even invaded professional sports teams. My hometown of Cincinnati recently instituted a hotline in Paul Brown Stadium. If someone next to you is shouting something you do not like you can call the hotline, then the Bengal Gestapo will spy on the offender with their cameras. Being too rowdy? Out you go, no refund for that severely overpriced ticket.

Now that we have given our feel-good program a name and paid money to put its logo on all our signage it is never going away. I can deal with that. Students: please, do not let my favorite cheer turn into "NOBODY'S SOCKS. IN FACT, THE LOSING TEAM IS DOING JUST SUCH A DARN GOOD JOB THAT WE ARE GOING TO TAKE THEM OUT FOR ICE CREAM AFTER THE GAME!"

Sincerely,

Bryan Metz '08

P.S. While many of my fellow band members agree with me I do not represent the views of the pep band as an organization, nor do I represent the views of its leadership.

Plan for Bucknell is grandiose and inane

To the Editor:

In late September, The Daily Item ran an interview with President Brian C. Mitchell including several responses that were genuinely grandiose. For example, when asked about his role in implementing the Plan for Bucknell, passed by the Board last April, he said this: "I go back to the vision statement, and the vision statement is that we aim to provide the best undergraduate experience in America. That is what we're going to do. As I said before, we're going to do it without apology and with great confidence."

Mitchell ends the interview with a dazzling rhetorical flourish: "The goal here is to move an excellent institution, already excellent, into an extraordinary position and that's my job."

Reading the Plan for Bucknell led me to the origin of Mitchell's rhetoric. Sure enough, atop page one is the word "Vision," and its essence is described on the next line: "To provide students with the premier undergraduate experience in American higher education."

We can, then, excuse Mitchell for not being alone in imagining this impossible dream of grandeur. Yet, that he sees his job as moving Bucknell from excellence to being extraordinary is a breathtaking splash of hubris. His words, "that's my job," bring to mind the mythical structures of Clint Eastwood westerns and suggest that Mitchell understands his mission at Bucknell in heroic terms. One can imagine his first stroll across the campus, heavily armed with confidence, gazing steely-eyed into the distance and seeing the possibility for glory not yet visible to others. It won't be surprising to learn that some faculty and staff members expressed to me deep resentment at hearing that their current efforts are deficient, and others worry if their particular skills will be needed in the march toward pre-eminence.

The overriding problem with Mitchell's vision is that it can never be achieved. Not ever. Why would anyone believe that there might emerge in the academic world, or anywhere else, agreement about the essential traits of the "best" undergraduate experience? Is Harvard's the best because its faculty is the most famous? Or perhaps, for other reasons, it is Vassar or the University of California at Berkeley that perches atop the heap. Maybe the best experience occurs where the faculty has the best teaching skills. But, which skills and how would we measure their effectiveness? Maybe outcomes matter the most. Would the best such school turn out graduates inclined to spend lives in service to themselves, or those inclined to serve others?

Maybe, too, being "extraordinary" would include commitment to such noble goals as the call in Bucknell's Mission Statement to "promote justice in ways sensitive to the moral and ethical dimensions of life." According to IRS public records on non-profit institutions, from July 1, 2004 to June 30, 2005 the visionary Mitchell received a salary of $330,000 and additional cash benefits of about $73,000. Surely, he makes even more now. Added to the cash, of course, is a rent-free mansion, and so on. His pay at Bucknell reflects the skyrocketing inflation of presidential salaries at universities that increasingly distances their income from that of everyone else on campus. Moreover, Bucknell has many hard working employees barely able to pay bills and many, particularly in dining services, not making a living wage (as determined by the campus living wage campaign). How does this increasing enrichment of university presidents, including Mitchell, along with low wages for many Bucknell employees, "promote justice in ways sensitive to the moral and ethical dimensions of life?" Whatever the answer, one would guess that Mitchell would hope that the "pre-eminent" undergraduate experience need not occur on a campus whose income distribution is "the fairest," or even civil.

Of course, someday a poll of Bucknell's students, staff, administration, faculty and alumni might find that it provides the best undergraduate experience in America. Maybe even the best that ever existed. But, we all know that outside the Bucknell orbit no one would believe it, even for an instant. Imagine the likelihood that the president at, say, Brown, would declare that, "Well, you know, we're good. But Bucknell is clearly the best"; or that the president at the University of Chicago would announce, "It was great all these years when experts saw our undergraduate experience as the best! But, I guess now Bucknell's is. You gotta give it to 'em."

One interesting ray of hope flitting atop the interview's ocean of bombast is Mitchell's claim that implementing the Plan will improve "both the regional economy and quality of life for the citizens of the Central Susquehanna Valley." Perhaps improving the lives of local citizens could become a beachhead against the vast, dark inequality of the world without which places like Bucknell could not exist. Serving locally might marshal a growing number of the Bucknell family to help to build a world that empowers an ever expanding slice of humanity to "Dance beneath the diamond sky with one hand waving free, Silhouetted by the sea;" a campus where the beauty of its grounds is matched by the beauty of what it stands for; a campus where Mr. Mitchell would come to realize that his inflated salary and inflated view of his role contradict the democratic search for truth and beauty that, along with wages high enough for everyone to live on, would exist at a truly eminent university.

Sincerely,

Charles Sackrey, Lewisburg, Pa.
Retired Professor of Economics

Recycling monitors worth the extra charges to hall residents

Environmental benefits of recycling offset increased cost to students

By Christy Totten
Staff Writer

I am writing this article in response to a headline that jumped out at me in The Counterweight, proclaiming: "Recycling Responsibility: RHA Brings Waste to Recycling." My interest was immediately piqued.

For all who do not know, a new recycling program commenced on campus this year. The Residence Hall Association (RHA) started the program to improve recycling statistics on campus and to contribute to the world-wide recycling movement towards environmental awareness.

This program is made possible through the hard work of several select students dubbed "recycling monitors," each assigned to a different residence hall. What do these recycling monitors do? If you read the article, you may think you know the answer to this question. But many of the facts The Counterweight presents were misconstrued and displayed in a light designed to bring out ill feelings in its eight readers. Here are the real facts:

The process of recycling requires many bins to be emptied into a shed before the contents can be condensed and reused. If a shed has even one bin with the wrong types of materials, it is considered "contaminated," and chances are the contents of the entire shed will then be thrown out and not recycled.

This year, with recycling monitors going through the bins they are less likely to be found contaminated. More materials recycled means less trash, which means less money out of the University's pocket. Every time a truck leaves campus filled up with our trash, it must be weighed and paid for accordingly before it can be emptied into a landfill.

Recycling, on the other hand, is free.

The article asserts that in the past, this was the job of hall RAs. Honestly, RAs are some of the busiest students on this campus, with their devotion to their residents and all of the meetings they have to attend with fellow staff. When you take into consideration all of the other commitments RAs have outside of their residential duties, it is doubtful they have time to pick through the trash and recycling bins. Even if they did, I doubt they ever had time to do so with the precision and purpose that this year's recycling monitors do.

Are students really not willing to shell out 50 cents per semester to pay for a recycling program that has great potential to make a huge difference?

Some of the finer, but very misleading, points of the article reference facts and figures. It says the $200 student activity fee goes towards this new recycling program, and then says the cost of the total program is one-third of $3900. (Apparently the federal government agreed to pay two-thirds of the program costs.) This averages out to less than 50 cents per student—a fee more than worth it when you consider all the good recycling does for the planet.

This brings me to the real reason why the article in The Counterweight makes me sick. The attitude it represents is incredibly disconcerting. Are students really not willing to shell out 50 cents per semester to pay for a recycling program that has great potential to make a huge difference? This is precisely the attitude that created the environmental mess in our world today.

As a student body, we should be thanking our fellow peers who are willing to go through our old cereal boxes and Dasani bottles, sorting them and putting them where they belong because they believe in the cause. Instead of writing articles about the pointlessness of the program and advocating its abolition, maybe we should talk about what it represents in the first place.

It represents students who believe in the possibility of a resourceful, clean environment and who want to make a difference locally with a hope of making an impact worldwide. I just want to say to the recycling monitors, the RHA administration and anyone else involved in this program, I truly appreciate all of your hard work and I will continue to support you and speak on your behalf to anyone who should choose to oppose your efforts.

My Favorite Mistake

Wait, we have a volleyball team?

By Michael Dippery
Opinions Editor

At the urging of my fellow editor, Matt Saylor '08, I attended the final women's volleyball game Saturday. The excitement of the game lived up to Saylor's hype, so attending it was far from my worst mistake of the week. In fact, the only error I seem to have made was not attending one sooner.

To avoid stepping on Saylor's toes, I will refrain from describing the match in great detail, aside from noting it was thrilling from beginning to end. My point is not that we have a good volleyball team; rather, the University is brimming with so many activities it seems impossible to ever be bored.

Unfortunately, most students do not take advantage of such fun.

Case in point: Trivia Night, which also occurred on Saturday. Turnout for this event was better than I expected, but since there was $150 on the line, it seemed like there should be throngs of people fighting to get in. Of course, maybe $150 is not a lot to some people, but I am pretty sure you could make a decent living simply by winning all the Activities and Campus Events (ACE) contests on campus.

The same is often true of the late-night music performers at 7th Street Café. From time to time the place is standing room-only, but more often than not there are a good number of people there, only some of whom are students (and oftentimes the same faces appear week-to-week).

Most students ignore the ubiquitous e-mails and table tents announcing these events in favor of more traditional weekend activities. While a rousing good party provides plenty of enjoyment, the little-noticed events scattered around campus can provide an exciting alternative to the status quo.

The typical weekend hosts an exciting array of activities that break up the monotony of the university lifestyle. My mistake, and the mistake of many students, is not taking greater advantage of these opportunities.

So next time you are on the prowl for something fun and entertaining, check out the café, Uptown or Davis Gym. You never know—you might really fall into something fun.

Students should take active role in shaping University's future

Open forums provide an excellent way to voice opinions on policies

By Hallie Stebbins
Opinions Editor

"What 'Plan for Bucknell'?" Responses such as this one in the face of the question "What do you think of the 'Plan for Bucknell'?" should be fewer and farther between. This is as much a campus of the students as a campus of the administration, if not more so.

The open forum for future campus changes held Tuesday by Dennis Hawley '72, associate vice president of Facilities, should have been packed. It was the first of a series of proposed forums primarily for students and faculty to ask questions and give suggestions for the changes that will be happening on campus.

These open forums give students a wonderful opportunity to shape the University of which we are so fond. Go to one and discuss the future of our campus.

The University's administration should be commended for seeking student input. Students need to step up their involvement on a widespread scale in order to give it. Other than those who attended Tuesday's forum, most students here are the embodiment of the phrase, "Well, I won't be here when that happens, so it does not really matter to me." Well guess what? It will affect you.

There are many reasons why we should all care about the future of the University, not the least of which is that every alteration made to this campus, faculty and administration could affect the future value of this education and the diploma that you will presumably receive.

The open forum last week discussed opening up the campus on all its fronts, connecting the main campus with its downtown counterpart and building a new student center. Hawley took suggestions from students present regarding many of the specifics of these topics.

In a "Pizza and Public Safety" open forum, Jason Friedberg, director of Public Safety, discussed the bridging the University campus with downtown Lewisburg. The phrase, "put in a Starbucks," was used. Whether this is an official plan in the eyes of the administration is uncertain. Many students expect that by making the downtown area part of the campus, the presence of corporations such as Starbucks may become an issue. As to whether this issue is positive or negative, students will have to voice their own opinions.

In my view, although I am an avid fan of Starbucks, I think the company's presence in our campus community can do little good. The future of small businesses such as Zelda's would presumably be at stake, and the door could be opened for other corporations to invade Lewisburg. I say "invade" because honestly, I did not see it at first, Lewisburg is an incredibly unique town. From the scavenger hunts that some stores put on for first-year students to all the "'Ray Bucknell" signs during basketball season, Market Street is already a part of our campus. I know some of us would hate to lose those aspects that make Lewisburg special.

Disagree with me? Good. Everyone at this university is obviously very intelligent and should not hesitate to voice his or her opinions. These open forums give students a wonderful opportunity to shape the University of which we are so fond. Go to one and discuss the future of our campus. Better yet, tell President Brian C. Mitchell your thoughts on the Plan for Bucknell. Do not let your four years go by without ascribing your own thoughts, especially when they are so avidly sought.

Diebold machines disenfranchise voters

Voting machines raise questions

By Chris Burroughs
Contributing Writer

I voted Tuesday. I do not know the results yet. Well that is not quite right. I think I voted Tuesday, and I will never know the results. Whatever was announced Wednesday was of little meaning, because the true margin of error is far beyond the margin of victory.

When I voted, I was met by friendly faces from polling staff, who treated their civic duty with the utmost seriousness. According to PBS, Union County was constrained in its choice of new voting equipment by state and federal laws—such as the Help America Vote Act by disgraced Congressmen Bob Ney—which forced flawed electronic machines upon us.

According to The New York Times, about 40 percent of U.S. voters now use electronic voting machines. Union County voters are part of that 40 percent, according to the League of Women Voters. Most of these machines have no voter-verified paper trail. There is no way to know if your ballot is correctly counted and it can never be recounted.

Most electronic voting machines are manufactured by Sequoia, Diebold and Electronic Systems & Software.

The Diebold Corporation does not hold itself to the ethical standards befitting one responsible for an election. Diebold purchased another company that became Diebold Election Systems in 2002. Its senior programmer has been convicted of 23 felony counts for implanting back doors in ATM software, according to BlackBoxVoting.org.

In 2003 Diebold CEO and fundraiser for George W. Bush, Walden O'Dell, promised he was "committed to helping Ohio deliver its electoral votes to the President," according to CBS News and Newsmeat.com. He resigned in 2005 after insider trading charges surfaced, according to Rawstory.com. Regardless of the trust put in Diebold officials, their products should stand on their own merits. They do not.

The Electronic Frontier Foundation cataloged many problems with Diebold machinery. In November 2003 poll workers were forced to remove a set of Diebold Accuvote TS machines, the most widely distributed model, after "no" votes on a referendum were consistently registering as "yes" votes. In March 2004, 55 percent of precincts in San Diego, Calif. had machines that experienced battery problems, and they had to turn voters away.

A July 2003 study of the machines' source code, published by computer scientists at Johns Hopkins University's Information Security Institute, found that the "voting system is far below even the most minimal security standards applicable in other contexts."

Another team of computer scientists at Princeton found, among many other problems, the Accuvote TS can be opened by a generic key used for mini bars, available over the Internet or at your local hardware store.

Union County uses the newer Accuvote TSX model. This model has not been analyzed as thoroughly, but during July 2005 testing, California found these machines to have a 10 percent error rate. But the flaws listed here of certain Diebold machines should not be taken to mean that other Diebold machines or other companies are better. Any electronic-only election system is fundamentally flawed.

They are a black box that there is no rational reason to trust.

There are legitimate reasons for ballot technology more sophisticated than pen and paper. Machines can assist the disabled and simplify ballots that may include referendums and candidates for office in multiple levels of government. But the system we choose should include voter-verified paper records that can be counted, re-counted, audited and trusted.

Bill protects U.S. from Mexico

By Mike Gibney
Contributing Writer

I am President George W. Bush. I have an idea. It came to me as I disgustedly imagined millions of immigrants from Mexico simply walking into this great nation and taking away our jobs and our, uh, freedom/democracy. I will be the hero of America, keeping these people absent from the comfortable lives we live.

Hard-working Americans (English-speaking and Christian, of course) will look to me as their leader, where once they looked towards that big, green statue carrying a torch who let those people in.

This is no longer a nation of the tired and the poor; that is so 19th-century.

"Give me your white, your wealthy, your huddled masses yearning to capitalize."

My idea is this: I will build a 700-mile fence, costing between two and nine billion dollars. This money has not all been given to me yet, but I have learned from my War on Terror that once I start something that turns out to be a mistake, they will probably let me keep going anyway.

In fact, I have heard the Department of Homeland Security does not even think this fence will work. They want to rely on tested technologies and border personnel. Imagine that! Is it harder to get into a country with a physical barrier to climb, or without one? That is what I thought. I believe the symbolic implications of a fence are unimportant.

"Humanity made a huge mistake by building the Berlin Wall, and I believe that today the United States is committing a grave error in building the wall on our border," said Felipe Calderón, my good friend and Mexican president-elect. On the contrary, I feel that walls between nations benefit relations, because let's face it, a quiet neighbor is a good neighbor. If we are never exposed to any customs but our own, there will never be any problems.

As voters I hope you realize that if this fence is not built, you, the hard-working American people, will find yourselves unemployed, with a mariachi band taking over your cubicle. Your daughters will dance the cha-cha at their public school functions with their Latino boyfriends. People will speak Spanish, for God's sake! If I do not speak Spanish, neither will my constituency!

The Senate passed a bill in May that provided "amnesty" for illegal immigrants. I looked that one up today and it is like a pardon, as in, we will let them enter our country. Doesn't anyone see something wrong with this? The bill, which I once supported but have since changed my mind, demanded that the immigrants pay fines and taxes and become citizens. I thought this was a good idea a little while ago, because it actually made sense, but I think it would be a lot more fun to build a big fence. From my time on the ranch, I have learned that to protect the mindless cattle (that's you, voters!), you need to keep out the nasty Spanish-speaking coyotes. Yee-haw!

I know it seems a little inconsistent of me to be so philanthropic in my dealings with Iraq and the freedom/democracy with which I provide their people out of the goodness of my heart, yet not to allow Mexicans to cross my border. This is for your protection, people of America. I am conserving the American way of life, the good ol' apple pie and baseball nation.

If you're with me, give me a hand with this barbed wire. And someone needs to take down that Statue of Liberty thing while we are at it.

THE Bucknellian

A subscription is just the prescription you need.

Enclose this form and a check (made out to The Bucknellian) and mail it to:

The Bucknellian, Bucknell University C3952, 701 Moore Avenue, Lewisburg, PA 17837

Name _____ __ ONE YEAR: receive 24 issues each week for the academic year for only $45, a $15 savings!

Address _____

_____

Phone _____ __ ONE SEMESTER: receive 12 issues during the fall or spring semester for $30. Please specify semester: _____

E-mail_____

For more information contact The Bucknellian at 570-577-1520 or bucknellian@bucknell.edu

Counting words and counting time

As National Novel Writing Month heats up, Sarah Novello shares some ideas to help boost your word count

By Sarah Novello
Staff Writer

Since November started, my writing style has undeniably changed from being moderately straightforward to including words such as "undeniably" and "moderately". Since I committed to writing 50,000 words of fiction this month, I discovered innumerable ways to add preposterous amounts of words to simple sentences.

For example:

Regular-style writing: November is going faster than expected (six words). NaNoWriMo-style writing: The segment of time called "a month" which lies approximately between the month of October and the month of December and is normally referred to as "November" has recently been proceeding at a much faster pace than the majority of people who are writing novels on campus and are named Sarah Novello possibly believed that the time could ever move and still exist and be able to support human existence and also novel writing (74 words).

This word padding is what November is about for the 73,913 other participants. And also caffeine.

If you were at 7th Street Café at midnight on Halloween, you saw the novel-writing frenzy begin. At 12:00:01 a.m. on Nov. 1 a booth of potential novelists began typing at breakneck speeds and creating plots and characters out of thin air. We were not the only ones starting at midnight—NaNoWriMo writers around the world did the same.

As of Monday, 187,985,950 words were written, 16,448 of which are mine. University students collectively wrote over 60,000 words—enough for a full novel.

As a NaNo veteran, I know week one is the easiest time to write. I have yet to question why I committed to writing, and the concept of sitting down to type for a few hours a day still sounds pretty fun. I am hoping to get a huge chunk of my novel done this week.

Chris Baty, the creator of NaNoWriMo, calls week one "epic".

"We step onto its stage clutching a few crumpled lines of dialogue and bearing only the haziest notions of setting and story. And, when the curtain closes on the seventh day, we're improbably directing a strange and wonderful cast of characters, all of them eager to make their mark on the tale unfolding around them," Baty said, according to www.nanowrimo.com.

It is a conglomerate of endless possibilities that makes week one so enjoyable. Caitlin Mawhinney '08 embarked on her first novel and finds week one to be very easy.

"As I write my novel, instead of running out of things to write about, I am only finding more—it is expanding itself," Mawhinney said.

Emily Johnson '07, also a first-time NaNo writer, enjoys the freedom of week one.

"I'm just writing without a whole lot of focus or aim at this point," Johnson said. "I am hoping it'll just start to happen and I'll find [plot development] as I go."

In contrast, my plot development is very questionable. In fact, calling it "a plot" might be a stretch. The concept of a housekeeper making up stories about the guests in a hotel is working well. I am just concerned about tying everything together so that, come Nov. 30, I have an actual novel rather than a series of short stories.

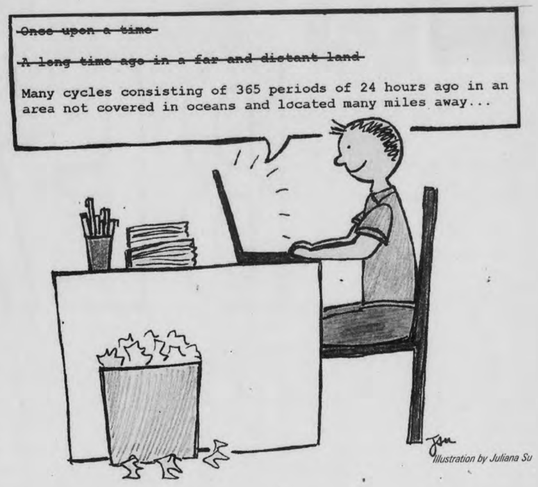
Since I write much of my novel while typing as quickly as humanly possibly (I have somehow managed 1096 words in 15 minutes), much of my plot consists of filler words that do not yield anything close to literary art. The following is an excerpt from my novel which has minimal bearing on anything related to a plot, yet helps boost my word count.

"I sorted Post-it notes. Red, yellow, fuchsia, green, turquoise, magenta, gold, chartreuse, emerald green, forest green, tickle-me-pink, hyacinth, mauve, ocean blue, midnight blue, corn flower blue, marigold orange, purple, indigo. You name the color, I sorted it. Roy G Biv was pretty jealous. I got a call from him—he said I could sit around in the text books all day if he could sort colored Post-it notes. I mean, I pretty much hated the sorting, but the fact that Roy G Biv wanted my job convinced me that it was a fantastic job, so I turned him down. That is probably some mental problem, but everything that anyone ever does can probably be classified as a mental problem, so I do not let those kinds of things bother me at all because it is just a huge waste of time."

After that taste of what a true NaNo novel is like, I am sure you all want nothing more but to drop everything, run to the nearest computer and read the entire novel in progress saved in my public space.

Technically, it is detrimental for NaNo novelists to read parts of their novel during the month, but I am making sacrifices for the sake of journalism. That passage is of absolutely no importance; about 3,000 words later I got so sick of writing about this Post-it note-sorting character that I ended his chapter with "Yeah, so I basically had no idea about the Post-it guy. On to the next room, before my sanity goes."

In the true spirit of National Novel Writing Month, the character sorts Post-it notes because "Post-it note" is three words, while "paper" is only one.



~~Once upon a time~~
~~A long time ago in a far and distant land~~
Many cycles consisting of 365 periods of 24 hours ago in an area not covered in oceans and located many miles away...
Illustration by Juliana Su

Student dancers, choreographers to perform

By Kimberly Kane
Arts & Entertainment Editor

The Studio Dance Concert will be held today and Saturday in the Tustin Dance Studio. The Studio Concert features a variety of students and gives all of the dance classes a chance to perform.

"This is really an informal performance," said Kelly Knox, assistant professor of dance. "It gives the students who have been working so hard a chance to perform without the scary elements."

The concert will be held at 5:30 p.m. on Friday and 3 p.m. on Saturday. The atmosphere of the studio concert is very casual. Unlike some larger productions, the dancers do not have to wear make-up or dance under intense lighting. The audience will sit in chairs lined up in the same studio the dancers use for rehearsal.

Many other dance performances throughout the semester focus on the members of the Bucknell Dance Company, but the Studio Concert provides a showcase for students at every level of involvement in the dance program. The students performing range from dance minors to first-time dancers. Every class will have the chance to perform a short dance piece.

Additionally, the showcase provides an opportunity for student choreographers to express themselves. Bethany Haines '08, a dance minor, choreographed a piece for six dancers.

"To start choreographing, I either hear a piece of music that inspires me or come across an idea that I think would translate well into physical movement. For this fall studio piece, I really liked how dynamic the music was," Haines said.

Alexandra Fredas '09 is performing in Haines' piece, in addition to a modern piece choreographed by Knox and the restaging of a dance, "Red Avocados," that was choreographed last year by Scott Messinger.

Fredas has been dancing since the age of three. A dance minor, Fredas has taken modern, jazz, ballet, tap and hip-hop. Her variety of talents, combined with the arts program at the University has given her many opportunities to perform.

> "Students may sign up for dance classes once they see that it isn't really scary."
> — Kelly Knox, Assistant Professor of Dance

"Last year I was able to dance in the studio concert, choreographer's showcase, twice with the Bucknell Opera Company and with a professional Opera Company that performed at the Weis Center," Fredas said.

Denise Peterson '08 is performing in the studio concert with her jazz class, which is taught by Knox. Although she danced for many years before coming to the University, this is Peterson's first performance as a dancer at the University.

"I'm really excited to get to perform," Peterson said. "It's a chance to show my friends what I've been learning in class."

The concert is also aimed to appeal to prospective students who will be visiting for Admissions Day.

"I hope this gives prospective students an incentive to come to Bucknell, knowing they have an opportunity to dance in their first year, even if they do not become involved with the company right away," Haines said.

The studio concert demonstrates to current students how easy it is to get involved. "Students may sign up for dance classes once they see that it isn't really scary," Knox said.

"I specifically chose four dancers for a piece. They are just beautiful dancers and I set the piece, working with what looked good for their style," Knox said. "Even though this is a smaller scale performance, the dancers rehearsed with the same intensity as any other performance."

Sometimes the dance experience can extend past the classroom and the stage. This particular piece was also used in a children's workshop the dancers participated in.

"It was inspiring to see the dancers to use their talent to reach out to children," Knox said.

Additional performances by Latino Dance Corner and Jelani will round out the concert.

"This performance brings together the whole dance community at Bucknell," said Er-Dong Hu, associate professor of dance.

University-affiliated poets read with passion

Courtesy of Deirdre O'Connor

Deirdre O'Connor, co-director of the Writing Center and a University alumna, read a few of her poems last Tuesday in the final Stadler Center poetry reading. Beth Martinelli, this year's Philip Roth Resident in Creative Writing, also performed.

By Mandy Hart
Contributing Writer

"This is the original form of poetry. It was an oral art," said Shara McCallum, director of the Stadler Center for Poetry, referring to poetry readings.

The final Stadler Center poetry reading of the semester took place on Tuesday. It featured two University-affiliated poets: Beth Martinelli and Deirdre O'Connor.

Martinelli, a native of Providence, R.I., is this year's Philip Roth Resident in Creative Writing. The Roth Residence is a four-month program that allows a writer time to complete a first or second book. Martinelli's first manuscript, "Water Bearing Bodies," was recently completed during this residency, which ends in December.

Martinelli read a selection of poems emotionally and precisely. She drew attention to the metaphors that held the meanings of the poems. The first poem she read, "Woman on a Pendulum of Sun," asserted, "the sun does taste like caramel." She followed this poem with more story-based poems, including "The Trees," which included one of my favorite lines of the night: "she took an axe with her mind and chopped."

Martinelli continued the reading with more abstract poems which had less-discernable story-lines. She wrote "An Apology to Winter" after a four-year stay in Michigan. During this time the poet felt she used winter as a representation that was "not nice," and this poem came as a response to that feeling.

Martinelli showed a great range of poetic skill with her "pantoon" poem, a piece in which certain lines cycle in a specific order. "Radius" was written during her stay at the University, and as the lines cycle and repeat through the poem, the theme of perpetual growth does as well.

Most meaningful of this reading was her poem entitled "November 7th," which coincidentally was the date of the reading. Martinelli wrote this poem in memory of her friend Sylvia, also a poet. Some lines written by Sylvia were infused into the poem.

"This was a moving, personal reading," Sarah Gainer '07 said. "Sometimes poets can seem detached from their poems during readings, but she clearly showed a personal attachment to this poem."

A reading by Deirdre O'Connor, the co-director of the Writing Center, followed Martinelli's reading. O'Connor, a University alumna, was a student in the first-ever Bucknell Seminar for Younger Poets, and has moved on to become the associate director of the program. She recently represented the United States at a poetry convention in Macedonia. As a winner of many awards and honors, O'Connor is one of the University's most well-known faculty members. Her second book, tentatively titled "Sky's Coincidence," is soon to be published.

O'Connor began her reading with selections from her first book, "Before the Blue Hour," available for purchase in the University Bookstore. All of her poems are rich in unique imagery and recognition of the ephemeral.

Her poems became more emotional as the reading progressed. The first, "Notes on the Unspoken," is a more general poem with a narrator cataloguing the consequences of leaving things unsaid; the second, "Braid," is a poem about finding another woman's hair in a man's drawer; the third, "The Hiss of the Sprit as it Leaves a Woman's Body," is a chilling account of a child witnessing his or her father murder his or her mother.

O'Connor moved to more recent poems that will appear in her next published work. Most memorable were "Notes on my Death," "Self-Portrait as Autistic Sky" and "Cinematic."

"Notes on my Death" is an introspective, hilarious account of the speaker's own death and the events of the funeral. O'Connor admitted she was "probably feeling grandiose that day." "Self-Portrait as Autistic Sky" is a poem which attempts to reflect what the world might look like to a person with Autism. Sensory images and less-grounded metaphors reflect the subject matter. "Cinematic" is an account of the human need to feel surprised and the desire for such surprises.

"These poems were enchanting. They were extremely moving, and so real and relatable," Naomi Hossain '08 said.

O'Connor ended with "Coincidence with the Red-Tailed Hawk," a brand-new poem written for a friend who is currently in rehabilitation. This heartfelt reading included a striking recognition of how we take advantage of our own linguistic processes. This poem concluded that "there will come a time, we can't find language to describe it."

Images courtesy of Wikimedia Commons

BEATS

Larison Dining Hall hosts 'Broadway Beats,' a collection of songs performed by the Musical Theater Club

By Melissa Duffy
Contributing Writer

The Musical Theater Club performed its highly anticipated "Broadway Beats" before a packed audience on Friday.

Set in Larison Dining Hall, the production showcased a myriad of popular Broadway hits ranging from "Don't Cry for Me Argentina" from "Evita" to "On My Own" from "Les Miserables," each brought to life in the manner of its original musical. While some expected a play-like performance, audience members were instead treated to a mixed sampling of hits from several Broadway plays, including "Rent," "Wicked," "Footloose" and "Cabaret."

Instead of lavish decor, the stage featured only the colorful advertisements seen around campus in anticipation of the event. Rather than focusing on setting, the show depended on costumes and choreography to re-create the true feeling of each song. Performances such as "I Feel Pretty" from the musical "West Side Story" achieved animation through whimsical costume and choreography, while "For Good" from "Wicked" brought characters Glenda and Elphaba to life with convincing good-witch and bad-witch apparel.

Structurally, the performance was organized effectively, endowing a sense of wholeness that connected each song. The opening of "525,600 Minutes" from "Rent" was a collaboration of all 32 cast members. The room's acoustics helped the cast provide a rich, warm welcome for the audience.

The body of the production included 13 numbers in addition to the opening and closing acts. It was comprised of solo performances, duets and group acts. Pieces involving solos were usually followed by pieces involving more singers. This type of patterning produced a filling effect, giving "Broadway Beats" a feeling of vocal and choreographic depth.

The closing of the production, like the opening, was another collaboration of all 32 members. This piece, "You Can't Stop the Beat" from "Hairspray," was a clever and visually-stimulating end to a delightful evening, combining vocal, choreographic and visual talent. The conglomeration of these elements effectively brought the act together in this miniature finale.

> "The overall performance was fantastic. The ending especially brought the whole thing together. There was so much positive energy."
>
> — Brian Reisker '09

"The overall performance was fantastic," Brian Reisker '09 said. "The ending especially brought the whole thing together. There was so much positive energy."

For those readers unaware of the Musical Theater Club, it was "formed in 2000 as an outlet for Bucknell students who are interested in performing musical theater," said Amanda Fernandez '08, who largely organized the show.

"Bucknell's Musical Theater Club is meant to give performers the opportunity to take part in shows without the stress of a rigorous rehearsal schedule," member Lauren Jaeger '09 said.

In the instance of "Broadway Beats," performers auditioned early in September and attended an average of only two hours of practice weekly, giving participants leeway to stay involved in other campus activities ranging from a cappella groups to the Dance Team.

In fact, members of the club are so involved in the University community that "the greatest challenge in pulling off the show was getting people to practice," member Nicole Brancucci '09 said. "Group practices were on Friday afternoons, so it was difficult to get all 32 members to come after a long week."

In spite of the difficulties, the performance was very successful.

"We were thrilled by the turnout ... we ran out of programs," Jaeger said.

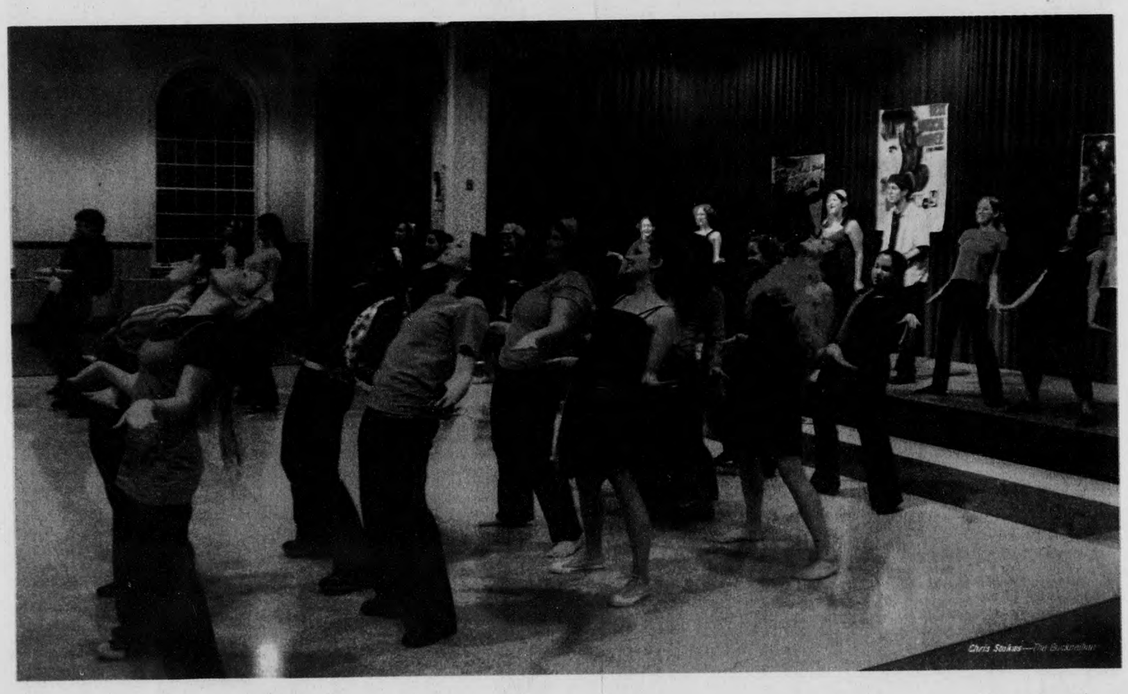
Indeed, from a simple glance at the audience it was clear the show was well-attended—after the seats set up by the club had filled, additional audience members resorted to scavenging for chairs, standing in the back and sitting on tables.

For future performances, the club hopes to attain a better venue.

"Larison is a great location but not for musical theater," Fernandez said. "Ideally, we would love to perform in Harvey Powers [Theatre], which is difficult to book due to the number of performances that go on campus-wide."

The club hopes to land the venue for the upcoming spring musical, which, according to Brancucci, will be "Urinetown." The club will soon be holding workshops in preparation for the performance.

Regardless of the venue, it is clear the campus has a lot to look forward to from the Musical Theater Club, as "Broadway Beats" was a roaring success.



Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

The Bucknellian
November 10, 2006
Sports

Bison topple Mansfield

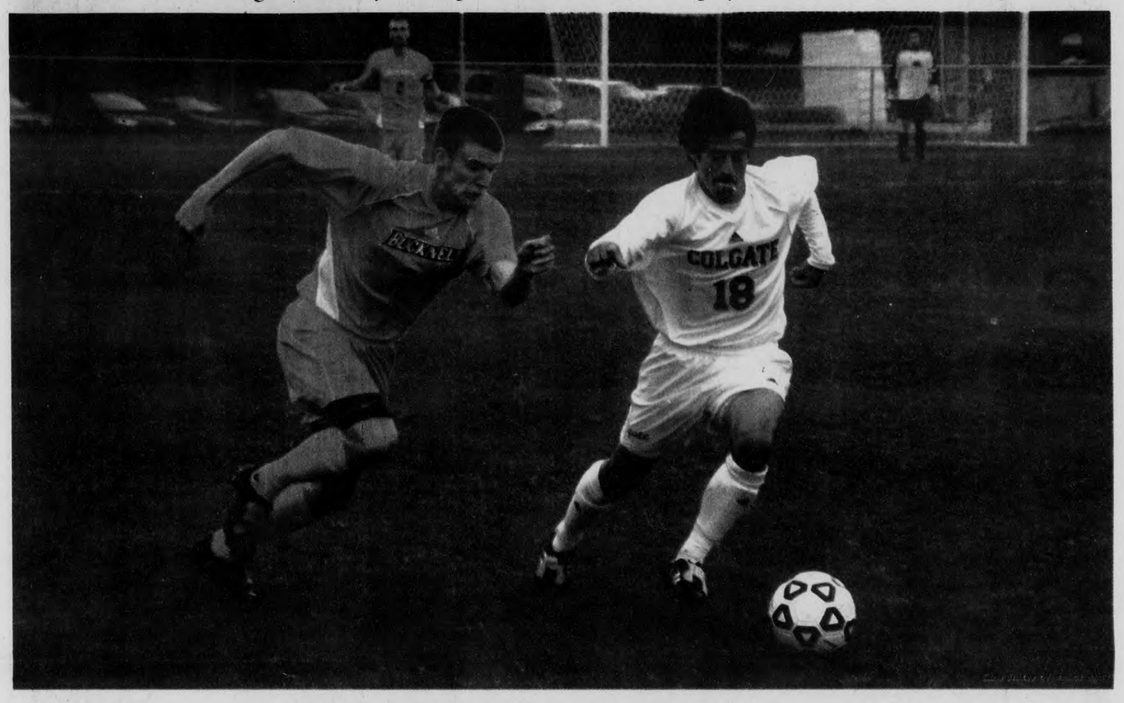
The men's basketball team defeated Mansfield 86-43 in an exhibition game Saturday.

See page B4

Volume 138, Number 10 Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

BISON DASH INTO NCAA TOURNAMENT

Men's soccer stuns Lehigh and Lafayette in pair of shootouts; team plays first round against George Mason



By John Mlodzinski
Senior Writer

The men's soccer team is heading to the NCAA tournament for the first time in 30 years. After defeating top-seeded and nationally-ranked Lehigh and second-seeded Lafayette in the Patriot League tournament over the weekend, the Bison earned an automatic berth into the NCAA tournament.

"It feels awesome to be in the NCAAs," Head Coach Brendan Nash said.

The excitement started Friday, when the Orange and Blue traveled to Lehigh to take on the No. 14 Mountain Hawks and pulled off a huge upset. The Bison secured the victory by beating Lehigh 4-1 in penalty kicks after playing to a 1-1 tie.

Bucknell 1
Lehigh 1 (W 4-1 PK)

The offensive attacks were relatively balanced but Lehigh got on the board first, as Adam Gazda scored his third goal of the season 36 minutes into the game. The Mountain Hawks' defense held strong and Lehigh took the one-goal lead into halftime.

It did not take long for the Bison to respond. Dirk Swaneveld '09 scored his first career goal off of an assist from Justin Wolf '08 to knot the game 1-1 just two minutes into the second half.

"It was a great feeling to score that goal against Lehigh," Swaneveld said. "Not only was it a huge Patriot League game, but they were nationally ranked and haven't been scored on much this season."

Neither team scored again in regulation or overtime, so the game was decided by penalty kicks. Goalkeeper Joey Kuterbach '08 excelled during penalty kicks, allowing only one kick to get by him.

"Going into the penalty kicks I knew we had a very good chance," Kuterbach said. "I was not nervous or worried at all, but more excited that I got a chance to make a big play to help win the game."

> "Going into the penalty kicks I knew we had a very good chance. I was not nervous or worried at all, but more excited that I got a chance to make a big play to help win the game."
>
> —Joey Kuterbach '08

Everyone on the team was ecstatic when the game ended with the Bison on top. Many were proud of the combined team effort it took to win against such a tough opponent.

"It was incredible how we came together as a team to pull off that win," Swaneveld said.

Next, the Bison faced Lafayette. For the second straight game, regulation and two overtimes were not enough to settle this one. Once again the Bison's fate was determined by penalty kicks.

Bucknell 0
Lafayette 0 (W, 4-3 PK)

Playing to 0-0 through the second overtime, the Bison headed into the penalty kicks full of confidence.

"Our team has prepared for penalty kicks all season long, practicing them before every game, and I knew that our shooters would make their kicks," Kuterbach said. "I also had a lot of confidence in my ability to save the penalties."

Lafayette converted its first two penalty kicks, while the Orange and Blue only scored on one of the two.

"After Lafayette went up 2-1 when our second shooter missed I was worried because I had not saved a penalty yet and things could have gone bad for us," Kuterbach said.

Kuterbach only allowed one more kick and the Bison converted their next three kicks to take the game and gain an automatic berth into the NCAA tournament.

"Our shooters were excellent and I was able to make a save or two. I have to give all the credit to the shooters, because they were in such a high-pressure situation," Kuterbach said.

Kuterbach was named Patriot League Tournament MVP for his outstanding job in goal.

"It was a little surprising being named MVP because I thought I could have played better during the run of play in both the Lehigh and Lafayette games. I was more concerned with the team getting the win and getting back to the NCAAs," Kuterbach said.

Andrew Loia '07, Corey Cumutte '08, Swaneveld and Mark Schmiegel '09 were named to the All-Tournament team.

The Bison's third trip to the NCAA tournament will begin when it faces George Mason at 1 p.m. Saturday in Fairfax, Va.

Bison shut out Red Raiders in final home match

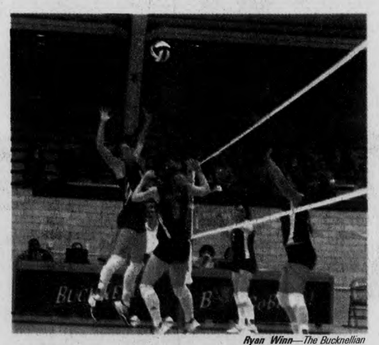
By Ellis Hudes
Senior Writer

In its final home match of the regular season, the volleyball team defeated the Colgate Raiders 3-0, putting the finishing touches on a successful home stand.

Bucknell 3
Colgate 0

The Bison went 7-1 during this stretch, including wins in three successive five-game matches and gaining plenty of fans along the way. They stand at 18-10 overall and 9-3 in league play, remaining in a second-place tie with Army.

The Bison executed their game plan to near perfection in game one and cruised to a 30-18 opening win. The next pair of games were considerably tighter. Colgate responded in the next frame by putting the Bison in a 20-11 hole. This deficient may have looked daunting to the fans on the sidelines, but the team once again showed remarkable resolve by chipping away at Colgate's lead to eventually tie the score at 24. With the momentum now firmly in their favor and supported by a vocal crowd, the Bison sealed the comeback with a confident 32-30 victory. In game three the two squads primarily traded points, but the Bison captured the necessary points at the end and clinched the win 31-29.



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Amanda Grossmann '07 leaps into the air to spike the ball off of a set by Shannon Pitsch '09. The team plays its final two regular season games this weekend, before post-season play.

Assistant Coach Anna Allison was impressed with the team's adjustments during the course of the match.

"We came out strong in the first game, but lost some of that energy in the second. Our girls showed great maturity when we were down and did not get too desperate," Allison said.

Captain Kristen Sydlowski '07 was named Patriot League Player of the Week for the first time in her four-year career. Against Colgate, she averaged

See VBALL page B7

Swimming dominates Bucknell Sprint Invitational

By Barbara Perlman
Sports Editor

Both the men's and women's swimming and diving teams enjoyed yet another successful outing over the weekend at the Bucknell Sprint Invitational. While this year's home opener was not scored, the Bison consistently clinched the top spots in many of the day's races against Villanova, American and St. Francis (Pa.).

"The Sprint Invitational is great because it allows us change up our events and maybe swim some different events that we don't usually get to race," Kristen Skroski '08 said.

Spearheaded by a stellar performance from Megan Mongan '10, the women blazed ahead of American and St. Francis (Pa.). Morgan posted a first-place victory in the 100 IM in a speedy one minute, 1.70 seconds, two second-place finishes in the 50 fly and 100 free and a third-place finish in the 100 fly. She also helped the team clinch three wins in the 200 free, 200 medley and 400 free relays.

Rebecca Scheffter '07 posted victories in both the 50 and 100 free, and Courtney Warren '10 placed first in both the 50 and 100 back with times of 28.58 seconds and 1:01.38, respectively. Nikki Woodward '07 also captured first in the 100 breast with a time of 1:09.60 and Kelly Morris '09 clinched a Bison victory in the 50 breast.

The first-year class played

See SWIM page B7

Women's soccer loses in semi-finals

Bison fail to repeat their championship run, falling to Colgate 2-1

By Joseph Debraggio
Staff Writer

The women's soccer team came up short in its bid to repeat as Patriot League Champions, losing to Colgate in the semi-finals by the score of 2-1. The game ended the Bison's record-breaking season at 12-5-1.

Colgate 2
Bucknell 1

The Raiders jumped out to an early lead, scoring in the 13th minute. A scramble in front of the net pushed the ball to Colgate player Jillian Arnault, who knocked the ball into the net.

Colgate kept shooting throughout the half as a result of them "having two good attacking players in their lineup," Head Coach Ben Landis '96 said.

That constant shooting paid off when, in the 30th minute, a shot off the crossbar found a Colgate forward, who put the ball past goalkeeper Katie Dry '07 for a 2-0 Colgate lead. In the first half, Colgate out shot the Orange and Blue nine to one.

The second half saw the Bison playing better.

The Bison had more chances and with nine minutes remaining in the game, Jennifer Dervarics '09 centered the ball to Krista Lee Gentile '08 who buried her shot into the net to cut the Colgate led in half.

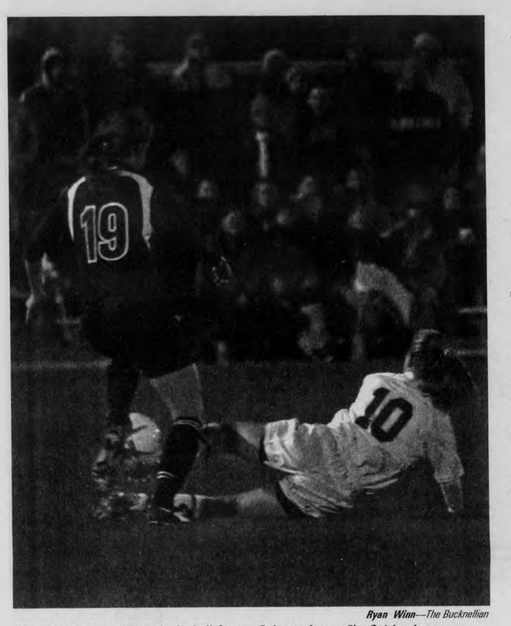
The Orange and Blue applied a lot of pressure on Colgate in the remaining time in an effort to net an equalizer.

With 18 seconds remaining, Gentile fired off an excellent strike, but Colgate goalkeeper Carly Sousa made "an unbelievable save to preserve the win," Landis said.

Sousa finished the game with two saves while Dry had five on the night. Colgate avenged a 2-1 loss at the hands of the Bison on the same field earlier in the season. Navy went on to win the tournament, defeating Colgate 1-0.

The Bison placed two players on the All-Tournament team, Gentile and captain Shannon Curd '07. While the loss may have ended the season for the Orange and the Blue, this is not a season that will be easily forgotten.

"It's very difficult now to reflect back on how good the year was but we really did have an amazing year. We matched program bests for overall and league win totals and, with a record of 12-5-1, also posted the highest winning percentage in school history at .735," Landis said. "We finished the regular season at 6-1-0 and captured a share of the Patriot League regular season title."



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Jennifer Margolis '07 steals the ball from a Colgate player. She finishes her career with 28 goals, placing her in a tie fourth on the University's all-time list with teammate Krista Lee Gentile '08.

> "We will lose a great class of seniors to graduation, and I thank them all for everything they've given to this program. We'll be back with a strong team again in 2007 and our goal will be to win the Patriot League next November and return to the NCAA Tournament."
>
> —Ben Landis '96, head coach

A few other season highlights included:

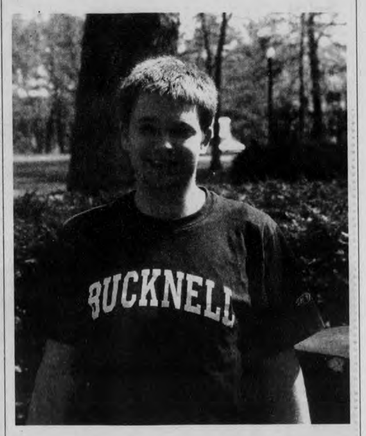
- Dry and the rest of the team tied a school record with five shutouts on the year.
- For the first time in program history, the Bison went undefeated at home during the regular season.
- The Orange and Blue ended number 14 (at the time) Navy's bid for an undefeated season by beating them 2-1 on Oct. 29.
- The Bison placed six players on the All-Patriot League First and Second team:

First team –Gentile and Nicole Marotta '09

Second team – Jennifer Margolis '07, Dervarics, Curd and Lauren Stoller '10

- The Orange and Blue were ranked No. 10 in the National Soccer Coaches Association of America (NSCAA) Mid-Atlantic regional poll.

"We will lose a great class of seniors to graduation, and I thank them all for everything they've given to this program," Landis said. "We'll be back with a strong team again in 2007 and our goal will be to win the Patriot League next November and return to the NCAA Tournament."



Saylor Says

By Matt Saylor
Sports Editor

1. Congratulations to the men's soccer team for its remarkable run through the Patriot League Tournament. Is it just me, or do Bison athletics keep getting better and better?

2. Hopefully the University will continue providing fan buses to events for our teams playing away from Lewisburg. For example, how about one to American University for volleyball's version of the Patriot League Tournament? I for one would like to be there on Nov. 18, when the Bison end the Eagles' streak of five straight tournament titles.

3. Speaking of volleyball, at the team's final home game against Colgate, the Raiders' women's soccer team was in attendance to cheer on its schoolmates. While the chants from Raider Nation drove me insane, I have to give the teams credit for supporting each other. The Raiders were loud and I'm sure gave their volleyball squad a nice boost on the road.

4. Attendance at the men's basketball exhibition game against Mansfield was over 2,500, or about seven times the average attendance at a women's basketball game last season. Women's basketball put together a good run last year, and it is unfortunate that so few people saw it. That mistake should not happen this year, when they put together a great run. As Hope Foster '08 said, "We appreciate all the fans that come out to our games now, but I want to fill up Sojka." Let's do it, starting tonight with the game against Hampton.

5. The men's basketball game Tuesday against Wake Forest is the team's only home game for November. In fact, the team only has one home game in December, too. It is frustrating that so few teams will come to Lewisburg to play us.

That being said, the games against the Demon Deacons and Northern Iowa should be the loudest Sojka has experienced, louder than last year's contest against Villanova (is that possible?). There is no reason to save your voice. There will be plenty of time to rest it over winter break before Patriot League play.

6. Good luck to Joe Paterno, head coach of football at Penn State, in his recovery from leg surgery following a vicious hit on the sideline in the team's game at Wisconsin. It will be sad not to see the 79-year-old spring out of the tunnel and lead his Nittany Lions onto the field anymore this season, but at least he will not miss any games.

7. If someone told me a month ago that the best team in Philadelphia in the second week of November would be the 76ers, I would not have believed them. But lo-and-behold, the Eagles are at .500, and the Flyers have the worst record in the NHL. How long until Spring Training?

8. There were a lot of great performances at Bison Mania, including the women of Kappa Alpha Theta (I would fear for my life if I didn't acknowledge them—I work with too many).

The basketball teams were the standout performers for me. From the costumes to the musical selections, everything was perfect. I'm not sure if it was better hearing everyone singing along with "A Whole New World" or the women in attendance losing their minds at the sight of the men's team members with their shirts open.

9. There was something weird about Bison Mania though. Did anyone else notice an event promoting the basketball teams did not feature any basketball? Would lay-up lines have been too much to ask?

10. Great job by the Pep Band over the weekend. They played Friday night at Bison Mania before traveling early Saturday morning to Worcester, Mass. for the football game against Holy Cross, returning home late Saturday evening. That is dedication.

The Sigmund and Claire Weis Center for the Performing Arts
PRESENTS

Frederick Moyer, piano

in a concert including a performance of Clara Schumann's Piano Concerto in A Minor, Op. 7 which, in place of an orchestra, will be accompanied by a computer system developed by Mr. Moyer; other works include the Adagio from Beethoven's "Moonlight" Sonata, Schubert's "Wanderer" Fantasy, Chopin's "Black Key" Etude, music by Mozart and Bach, and a "Toccata on Bach" by Donal Fox

Friday, November 10, 2006
8 p.m.

coming to the Weis Center
Turtle Island String Quartet
A Solstice Celebration: The Festival of Lights
Saturday, December 2, 8 p.m.

Bucknell University, Lewisburg, Pennsylvania
Tickets and Information: 570-577-1000
www.bucknell.edu/WeisCenter/

A Bucknell Tradition Since 1968
Bull Run Inn
Open 7 days a week:
Mon. – Sat. 11:30 a.m.—2 a.m.
and Sunday 11:30 a.m. – midnight
605 Market St., downtown Lewisburg
ph: (570) 524-2572
www.bullruninn.com
(check for current features and events)
Now serving
SUNDAY BRUNCH
Menu Available 11:30 a.m.—2 p.m.
POP QUIZ
Tuesday's—9—11 p.m.
Specials—Prizes—Giveaways
Monday Night Football @ 9 p.m.

Summer Breeze Stables
Est. 1973

10 minutes from Campus
Riding Lessons for all levels
Certified Professional Trainer
Large indoor and Outdoor Arenas
Boarding, Training and Showing
Call 570-412-0771 for an appointment

Field hockey wraps up season

Squad loses to American in semi-finals of Patriot League Championships, while four Bison receive top honors

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

Katie Urosevich '07 battles for possession against Lehigh. She was a First Team All-Patriot League selection along with teammate Amanda Faust '09.

By Shannon Pitsch
Staff Writer

The field hockey team ended its season with a tough 4-2 loss to eventual conference champion American in the semi-finals of the Patriot League Championships on Saturday afternoon in Washington, D.C. Four members of the Bison squad received All-Patriot League honors earlier that week.

American 4
Bucknell 2

Starting in all 17 regular season games, Katie Urosevich '07 and Amanda Faust '09 both notched first-team honors. Co-captain Urosevich led the offense with 17 points and three assists. She finishes the season eighth in league points per game and ninth in goals per game. Her seven goals tie her for first place on the season.

"I was so happy for Katie Urosevich, who has gone from a 'walk-on' to a first team All-League performer," Head Coach Heather Lewis said of the Lewisburg High School graduate. "This is a result of what hard work and 'heart' will do."

Sharing the first place statistic is Faust, receiving her second All-Conference distinction. Last year, she was named to the second team in addition to winning Co-Rookie of the Year. In addition to goals, she leads the Bison in assists with 10 and points with 24. The 10 assists also tie her for first place on the single-season record list with Alex Kyzmir '07. Faust ranks first in the league in assists and 17th in the nation in assists per game.

Kelly Hoffman '08 and Stephanie Graf '09 were given second-team distinctions by the coaches of the Patriot League. As the starting midfielder for the Orange and Blue, Hoffman is not recognized adequately by the statistics. She is responsible for two goals and two assists, but Hoffman also enables the defense and offense to interact effectively during games.

"Sometimes the athlete with no stats gets overlooked, so I was pleasantly surprised when Kelly Hoffman was honored," Lewis said. "She is such a 'work horse' in the middle of the field, but all her efforts ... [do] not show up on the stat sheets. And sometimes this is even more important than statistical numbers."

Graf, named Patriot League Defensive Player of the Week four times this season, leads the team in defensive saves with five. In addition to her defensive prowess she has collected four offensive assists for the Bison.

Only four Bison were selected for the All-Conference Team, but the entire team fought hard for a chance at a Patriot League Championship on Saturday. Earning a spot because of Lehigh's loss to Colgate, the Bison were determined to prove they did not receive a bid because of luck.

The match was scoreless for much of the first half with both team's defense overpowering the opposing offenses. Despite the Eagles' offense out-shooting the Bison 8-3 and holding penalty corners 4-2, the Orange and Blue's strong defense maintained the deadlock. With just three minutes left in the first half, American finally scored on a penalty stroke.

Less than 10 minutes into the second half, American's Camile Infante notched her second goal on a shot from inside the circle. Just three minutes later the Eagles scored, creating a convincing 3-0 lead.

The Bison would not relent, as Megan Krebs '10 scored off a rebounded penalty corner to earn the first Bison goal of the match and third of her season. Three minutes later American responded with another score after a scramble in front of the net. With just five minutes left in the game and down 4-1, Callista Costopoulos '07 passed to Chyncia Smith '08 inside the circle, who earned her fifth goal of the season.

"I was proud of how our team ended the game, battling for every ball and putting American on their heels," Lewis said. "We made it exciting, that's for sure. Unfortunately for us, we had dug ourselves too deep a hole initially. And, to American's credit, they have a couple of outstanding players—their two Chileans from the Chile National Team—who really made a difference in the outcome of the game."

American went on to win the Patriot League Championship with a 5-3 victory over Holy Cross.

The Bison end their season with a record of 7-10, with the highlight of the year being the 2-0 win over No. 18 Villanova.

"I always try and reflect back on the season and recognize the lessons learned along the way," Lewis said. "For me, what stands out the most this season is the fact that competitive success comes down to two important traits: the 'heart' of a team and a team's work rate."

Football's title hopes squashed by loss to Crusaders

Orange and Blue stifled by Holy Cross defense in a 27-10 loss Saturday at Fitton Field in Worcester, Mass.

By Marcus Mateer
Senior Writer

Much hype has been heaped upon the Holy Cross offense, but the Crusaders' defense truly set the tone of the football game. The Bison could only garner 252 total yards at Fitton Field in Worcester, Mass., as the they fell 27-10. The Orange and Blue (5-5, 2-3) were officially removed from Patriot League title contention. Holy Cross (7-3, 4-1) moved within a half-game of Lehigh for the conference lead.

Holy Cross 27
Bucknell 10

The tone was set on the first Bison offensive play from scrimmage. Following a brilliant defensive stand that stopped Holy Cross on downs, the offense was backed up on its own 10-yard line. A toss-sweep was called, and Peter Kaufman '07 was stopped for a 5-yard loss. Narrowly escaping a safety during the ensuing plays, a short punt gave the Crusaders a short field. Handed the excellent field position, the potent offense quickly scored.

Early in the second quarter, Holy Cross drove again, looking to add to their 14-0 lead. Dorian Petersen '07 decided they would not. On two successive plays at the Bison 1-yard line, the linebacker stuffed the Crusader runners to end the drive on downs. Petersen, battling a series of nagging injuries, had 13 tackles on the day.

"It's tough on a weekly basis, but if you want to play, you are going to find a way to play," Petersen said. "I do everything I can to get out on the field."

The Bison offense was stopped on the ensuing drive, but the defense came up big again. Stephen Collage '08 intercepted a pass at the goal line and returned it for 78 yards to set up a field goal.

The Orange and Blue started the second half with a long drive that ended with a missed field goal. The Crusaders responded by breaking a 56-yard run that led to a touchdown.

The Bison responded with their best drive of the day. Josh DeStefano '08 busted two long runs, including one for a touchdown, during the six-play, 64-yard drive. DeStefano finished the day with 90 yards rushing. His touchdown cut the Holy Cross lead to 20-10, but that was as close as the Bison would get.

The Crusaders answered with an eight-play, 68-yard drive of their own. Quarterback Dominic Randolph connected on a 34-yard pass play to key the drive. Following the third quarter score, both offenses were held scoreless.

The Bison ran for 193 yards, with DeStefano's 90 yards leading the way. The Holy Cross offense gained a balanced 235 yards rushing and 277 yards passing on its Senior Day.

The University's Senior Day falls after a late-season bye week. Colgate comes to Christy Mathewson-Memorial Stadium on Nov. 18 for the season finale, with kickoff at 1 p.m.

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

The Bison defense recovers a loose ball in a recent home match. The Orange and Blue are off this week before hosting rival Colgate in the season finale.

Not too long ago, you chose a small college in the middle of cow country. And, wisely, it chose you, too.

Now go ahead and make another good choice.

For dinner.

The Inn at New Berlin

The Inn at New Berlin is a short, 10-minute drive from the Bucknell campus, on scenic country roads. It's a perfect distraction from writing papers - or grading them.

Students and faculty love our relaxed atmosphere and our award-winning dining, while parents appreciate the luxurious lodging during parents' weekend and graduations. But don't wait till then to discover us!

Dine. Shop. Stay.

570-966-0321 InnAtNewBerlin.com

DOES YOUR CAR NEED SERVICED?

Our Service Department has $25,000 in new upgrades, including a new alignment rack, brake lathe, tire machine, and hundreds of hours of training for the techs. We now offer shuttle service to and from work or home. We have become a complete service center that can perform any work on any model, from an oil change to engine replacement.

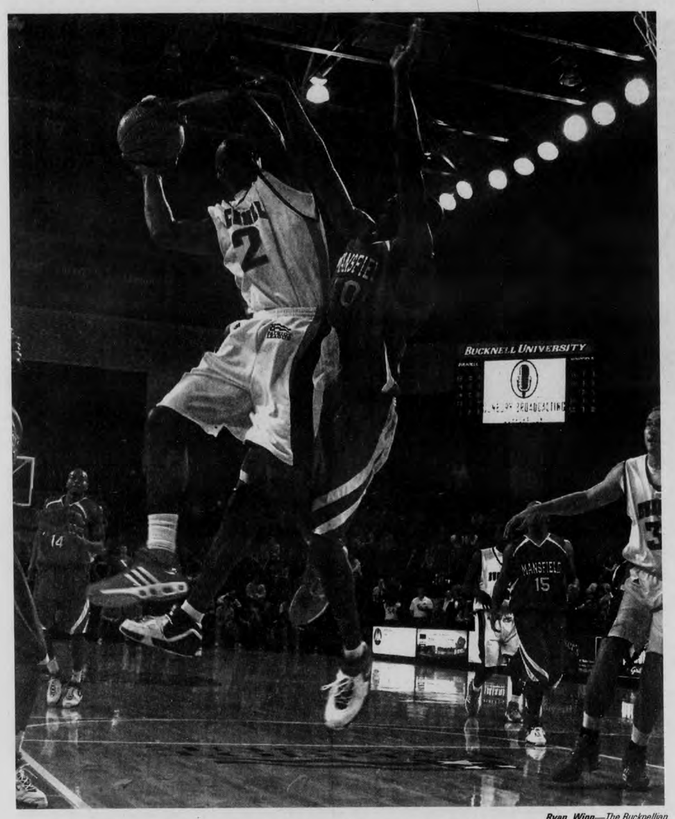
Lewisburg Ford
Oil Change w/Multi-Point Inspection
$19.95 Excludes Diesels. Must present coupon at time of service. Expires 12/31/06.

Lewisburg Ford
Oil Change/Tire Rotation w/Multi-Point Inspection
$34.95 Must present coupon at time of service. Expires 12/31/06.

Lewisburg Ford
2265 Old Turnpike Rd.
(Route 45 West)
Across From Brookpark Farm
Call Today! (570) 524-7267
Visit us on the web at www.lewisburgford.com

READY FOR TAKE-OFF

Men's basketball is poised for another successful season under the leadership of Head Coach Pat Flannery '80



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Rob Thomas '08 hangs and collides in the air with Mansfield's Brandon Smith in the team's exhibition game at Sojka Pavilion. Thomas scored a game-high 15 points for the Orange and Blue.

By Matt Saylor
Sports Editor

Following the men's basketball team's 86-43 exhibition win over Mansfield on Saturday, Head Coach Patrick Flannery '80 said what many others are thinking right now:

Bucknell 86
Mansfield 43

"It is good to finally play somebody else [other than ourselves in practice]."

The Bison Mania event may be over, but the real Bison mania is just beginning. The Orange and Blue will begin their second consecutive Patriot League title defense, while looking to again make some noise on the national stage.

With the graduation of the co-captains from the previous two years, Kevin Bettencourt '06 and Charles Lee '06, as well as Holland Mack '06 and Tarik Viaer-McClymont '06, the senior triumvirate of Abe Badmus, Donald Brown and Chris McNaughton, Patriot League Preseason Player of the Year, will be expected to lead the way for the Bison.

"As soon as we lost to Memphis [in the Second Round of the NCAA Tournament], I talked with Coach [Flannery]," Badmus said. "I have to step outside of myself as a vocal leader and a leader by example. The focus is not so much on me, but what the team is doing."

McNaughton agreed.

"Donald, Abe and I are captains," McNaughton said. "We don't have Charles and Kevin anymore. It is our team. We have to be the leaders of the team; it is our responsibility to lead the way."

Brown offered a similar sentiment.

"Being seniors now, we are looked upon as go-to guys if we need a score or a pick-me-up." Brown said. "We are the guys to do it."

The three seniors represent the identity of the team now, something they feel ready for and believe others are ready for as well.

"I think we are a different team now," McNaughton said. "We have other players who can fill their [the alumni's] shoes. I think we have guys who are going to step up."

One of those guys will be John Griffin '08, who will begin the season as the team's other starting guard opposite Badmus. Bettencourt was the starting shooting guard for the past four years.

"It was a battle between Jason [Vegotsky '09] and John all preseason for that spot," Flannery said. "Jason performed very well, but I like having John out there because he gives us an extra ball handler at the start."

Griffin showed his versatility in the win over Mansfield, scoring nine points, including drilling two three-pointers, while also handing out a game-high six assists.

Vegotsky came off the bench to nail two three-pointers of his own, accounting for six of his 10 points. He also tied for game-high honors with eight rebounds—four coming at the offensive end.

"I knew I was going to have a bigger role this year," Vegotsky said. "I spent time in the weight room trying to get bigger so I can guard those 6'5", 230-pound guards we will play against. And of course I always keep working on my shot. I can always become better."

While Griffin will see time at point guard, while Badmus is on the bench, or at shooting guard, Vegotsky will play shooting guard and occasionally slide over to the small forward position. Rob Thomas '08 will also compete for time at both of those spots. He scored a game-high 15 points against Mansfield, missing only two of his eight shots and grabbing three steals.

"I like Rob out there because he can create match-up problems with him playing at the three [small forward] and Donald playing at the four [power forward]," Flannery said. "The only thing that frustrates me about Rob is that he is not a great practice player, but does well in games."

Newcomer Stephen Tyree '10 is an excellent defender who will also challenge for time at the guard position. Look for Justin Castleberry '09 to spend more time at the point guard position this year, after seeing limited minutes last season.

Darren Mastropaolo '08 returns as the team's starting power forward. Along with several others on the team, Mastropaolo will be expected to help account for the scoring Bettencourt and Lee brought to the table in the past.

"I had accepted a role to do the little things—go after loose balls, set screens, things like that," Mastropaolo said. "I think with Kevin and Charles gone, I am going to start being in a more aggressive role."

Andrew Morrison '08 and Patrick Behan '10 will compete for time at the back-up power forward position. Morrison came off the bench first in the game against Mansfield, grabbing eight rebounds in 14 minutes of play, while Behan scored nine points in his 12 minutes on the court, making both his three free throws and three field goal attempts.

Another player who will see more time on the floor this season is Josh Linthicum '09. At 6'11" and 235 pounds, Linthicum will be counted on to provide quality back-up minutes for McNaughton, and even see time at the power forward spot, a role played last season primarily by Viaer-McClymont. He has a nice jump hook and is not afraid to mix it up inside with his opponents.

At the end of the day, it will be Badmus, Brown and McNaughton who will have to step up their games the most.

As the team's sixth man last season, Brown was known for his high energy, especially at the defensive end of the court. This year he will start at the small forward spot, previously held by Lee.

"I will still look to post-up, but being out on the perimeter more will give me more options," Brown said. "I look at my job as needing to bring energy each and every day. This year as a starter I will need to have that energy right away, just like I'd need it right away when I come off the bench."

Against Mansfield, Badmus found himself in some foul trouble, limiting his playing time some. The box score revealed that after 16 minutes of play he had not taken a shot—something that alarms Flannery.

"Abe was not even looking to shoot the ball," Flannery said. "Coming into camp he was shooting very well, and he has kind of stopped. We need him to shoot the basketball. Right now he is trying to penetrate too much. We need him to pull-up more and take jump shots."

That being said, Flannery is not concerned.

"He will be fine when we go up to Albany," Flannery said, speaking of the team's first game on Saturday against the defending champions from the America East conference. "He knows we need him to shoot, and he will."

McNaughton has always been steady, increasing his scoring average from 11.5 points per game his first year to 12.8 last year. With his high field goal percentage, he will be expected to, like Badmus, look for his own shot more this year.

McNaughton has already had an outstanding career with the Bison, ranking 20th in school history in scoring with 1,158 points and is only 37 rebounds shy of becoming the 16th player in University history with at least 1,000 points scored and 500 rebounds.

He will need to continue to impress, as will the rest of the team, with the difficult schedule the team faces this year, including home games against Wake Forest, Northern Iowa and the ESPN Bracket-Buster, and road matches at Albany, St. Joseph's, Xavier and Texas Tech. The team will also play George Mason, a Final Four squad from last season, in the BB&T Classic in Washington, D.C.

"I don't know what Coach [Flannery] was thinking," Badmus said with a laugh. "It is another great challenge for us and an opportunity to make a name for ourselves."

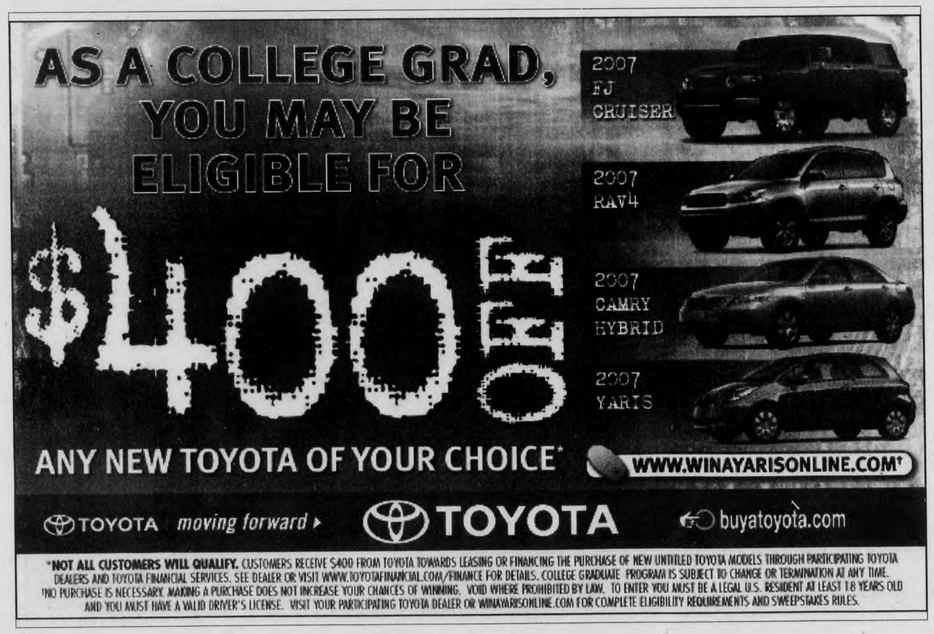
Brown also shared positive thoughts on playing tough teams.

"It is most kids' dream to have an opportunity to travel to schools like that and play teams like Texas Tech or Xavier," Brown said.

Perhaps Griffin put it best when he said, "We are looking to be a big time program so we have to play those big time teams."

The Bison get that opportunity right away, traveling to Albany on Saturday and then hosting Wake Forest on Tuesday night. The Demon Deacons are the first Atlantic Coast Conference team to ever come to Lewisburg.

With 51 wins over the past two seasons, the Orange and Blue have a lot of expectations to live up to. That was the case going into last year as well. There is no reason to doubt that the team will meet those expectations again this year. Badmus, Brown and McNaughton will make sure of that.



AS A COLLEGE GRAD, YOU MAY BE ELIGIBLE FOR $400 OFF
2007 FJ CRUISER
2007 RAV4
2007 CAMRY HYBRID
2007 YARIS
ANY NEW TOYOTA OF YOUR CHOICE*
WWW.WINAYARISONLINE.COM†
TOYOTA moving forward
TOYOTA
buyatoyota.com
*NOT ALL CUSTOMERS WILL QUALIFY. CUSTOMERS RECEIVE $400 FROM TOYOTA TOWARDS LEASING OR FINANCING THE PURCHASE OF NEW UNTITLED TOYOTA MODELS THROUGH PARTICIPATING TOYOTA DEALERS AND TOYOTA FINANCIAL SERVICES. SEE DEALER OR VISIT WWW.TOYOTAFINANCIAL.COM/FINANCE FOR DETAILS. COLLEGE GRADUATE PROGRAM IS SUBJECT TO CHANGE OR TERMINATION AT ANY TIME. †NO PURCHASE IS NECESSARY. MAKING A PURCHASE DOES NOT INCREASE YOUR CHANCES OF WINNING. VOID WHERE PROHIBITED BY LAW. TO ENTER YOU MUST BE A LEGAL U.S. RESIDENT AT LEAST 18 YEARS OLD AND YOU MUST HAVE A VALID DRIVER'S LICENSE. VISIT YOUR PARTICIPATING TOYOTA DEALER OR WINAYARISONLINE.COM FOR COMPLETE ELIGIBILITY REQUIREMENTS AND SWEEPSTAKES RULES.

WRITE FOR SPORTS

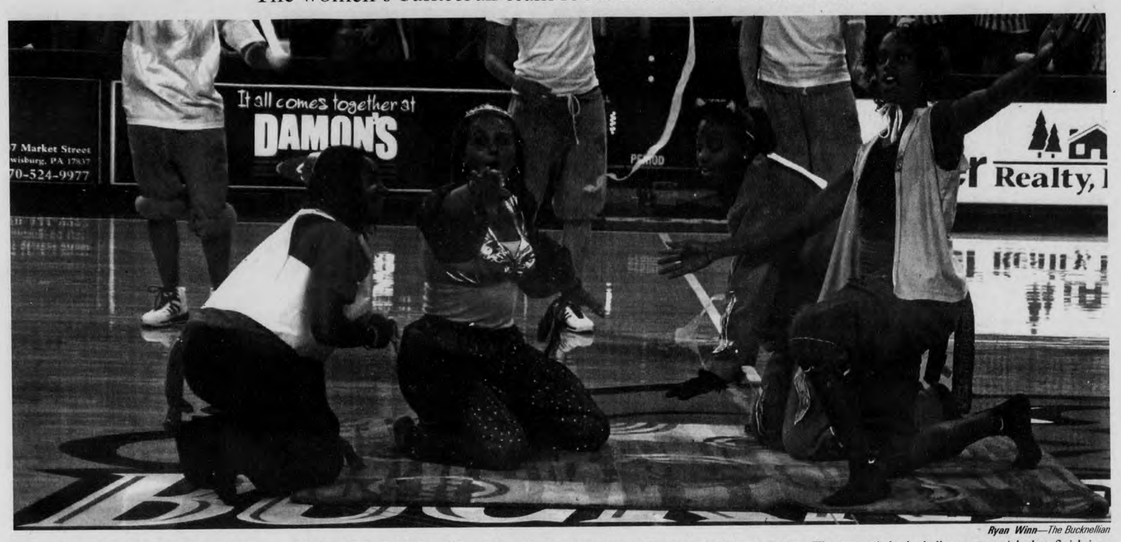
CONTACT MSAYLOR@

CatmanDo
Handyman Services
Specializing in small home repair jobs:
Custom Carpentry
Painting
Light construction
Greg H Mathias
570-524-4724
Free Estimates Fully insured

Nancy's Nu-Wave Salon
Look your best
10% Discount with Student ID
524-2315
www.nancysnuwave.com
Main Street (Rte 45) - Montandon

A WHOLE NEW WORLD: QUEST FOR A CHAMPIONSHIP

The women's basketball team looks forward to a new horizon



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

From left to right: Kristina Collymore '08, Lauren Schober '09, Le'Le' LeSeur '10 and Hope Foster '08 perform at Bison Mania this past Friday. The women's basketball team was picked to finish in a tie for second with Holy Cross in the league's preseason poll. Foster was selected to the Preseason All-Patriot League Team.

By Matt Saylor
Sports Editor

In college athletics teams go through highs and lows, ups and downs. They graduate players every year who have helped to lead the team and shape its identity. Expectations change depending on who has departed and who has been added, but ultimately are determined by who has stayed. So when the women's basketball team returns its entire core, what are its expectations? A championship. Period.

Last year was largely a success for the Orange and Blue, but it was also something of a rebuilding year. The team had nine freshmen and sophomores and no seniors, yet managed to win 18 games, a Bison record eight-game improvement from the previous year. This year the team returns nine players and adds two more who are expected to contribute right away, as the squad is looked at as one of the frontrunners to win the Patriot League Tournament title. The team would consider anything less to be a disappointment.

"To me, as a coach, I'd rather be sitting in this seat [with high expectations]," Head Coach Kathy Fedorjaka said. "They were so young and there was so much to teach [last year], but you want to get to the point with the ability to win it – to win a Patriot League championship, the regular season and the postseason."

The team made a run at the championship last year, losing to Holy Cross 64-60 in the tournament semi-finals in Worcester, Mass. In this year's preseason poll, the Bison tied for second with the Crusaders. Each received 85 points — only two behind defending league champion Army.

"The poll is great, but I think it is just preseason," Fedorjaka said. "We have to go out and play and cannot dwell on it."

The Bison will be led by team captain Lindsey Hollobaugh '07, two-time all-league selection and one of only 15 players in University history to score at least 1,000 points. The 5'9" Hollobaugh has excelled as the team's off-guard, mixing her explosive speed on the fast break with a smooth jump-shot. She is also a strong rebounder from the guard position, averaging over 5.1 per game in each of her three seasons. Combine that with her lockdown defense, and Hollobaugh represents the consummate all-around player.

"I think everyone has gotten better coming into this season, and that is not always the case, but Lindsey looks fantastic," Fedorjaka said. "She had an amazing first year, but the last two years have been a little different. Two years ago there was a lot of frustration within the team and you could tell she was very frustrated. Last year she had to deal with the injury and wearing the leg brace. Now she looks fully confident again, and as good as she ever has."

Hope Foster '08 returns as the team's dominant inside presence, following last year's First Team All-Patriot League selection by being the only Bison player named to this year's preseason all-league team. After only 57 career games Foster is already the school's leading shot-blocker with 167, a figure that places her sixth all-time in the Patriot League. She was named the league's first ever Defensive Player of the Year last season as well.

> "We need to continue to cultivate our camaraderie. That is the key to climbing this mountain."
>
> —Kathy Fedorjaka, head coach

"There is always room for improvement," Foster said. "Of course I want to improve on my shot-blocking, but also my post-defense."

Offensively, Foster showed flashes of brilliance last year, but needs to be more consistent. She finished the year averaging 10.3 points per game, a number Fedorjaka thinks can improve.

"I'm looking for day in and day out consistency from Hope and she is showing it in practice," she said. "She is getting better in our offensive schemes."

"I need to be more aggressive on offense this year," Foster said.

Hollobaugh, Foster, Takesha Champion '08, Lauren Schober '09 and either Amanda Brown '09 or Kristina Collymore '08 at point guard.

Champion has started every game in her two years with the Bison, arguably establishing herself as the team's top defender, while working to improve her offensive game. She is part of the three-guard set the team often implements to take advantage of the speed of its players.

At the end of last season, Champion found herself as the team's starting point guard, a role she enjoyed playing.

"I like being up top, being in charge," she said. "For the point guard, it doesn't matter who scores — as long as the team scores, it's all good."

Like every other player on the team, Champion's ultimate goal is to win the league title, but she has set a few personal goals as well.

"I'd like to be an all-conference player," Champion said. "Statistically I think a good goal is to lead the league in assists and assist-to-turnover ratio."

Schober returns as the team's leading three-point shooter, finishing second in the league last year by draining 40.2 percent of her shots from beyond the arc. She spent her summer at the University, working to improve her game for this season.

"Being in Lewisburg there is a lot of time for yourself," she said. "I spent a lot of time trying to get stronger and faster."

Brown, along with Schober, was named to the Patriot League All-Rookie team last season. She struggled a little bit down the stretch, but finished strong by handing out five assists and only one turnover in 47 minutes of play off the bench in the league tournament.

"Brown has become more mentally and physically tough," Fedorjaka said. "Her strength has really come along, and she has become more vocal after being a little reluctant last season."

After beginning the season as a starter, Collymore adjusted nicely to coming off the bench. She dealt with a knee injury for much of last season but is healthy again this year.

After a year adjusting to the University and the women's basketball program, look for Jacquie Seawright '07 to improve upon her strong first year with the Bison. Her energy and enthusiasm is contagious whenever she is on the floor.

Forward Le'Le' LeSeur '10 is the team's lone first-year student, but she will compete for playing time right. She is a strong back-to-the-basket player who will compliment Schober's outside shooting nicely.

Andrea Wright '08 sat out last season after transferring from the University of Pennsylvania, but is ready to contribute at the guard spot this year. At 5'10" Wright will use for her speed to create match-up problems for the opposition in the backcourt. Fedorjaka describes Wright as a "slasher and an overall great athlete."

Ashton Sprouse '08 and Ashley Branch '09 round out the team's roster. Sprouse has seen time both as a starter and off the bench in her career at the forward and center positions, while Branch will look to continue the development of her play in the post.

The key to the team's success will be its ability to take all of these individuals and turn them into a solid unit.

"They played so well for much of last year," Fedorjaka said. "We need to continue to cultivate our camaraderie. That is the key to climbing this mountain."

"Everything is on our side," Schober said. "We have the talent, the work ethic and the drive to win a title this year."

The team will have its first chance to showcase its abilities at 7 p.m. tonight, when the Bison host Hampton University at Sojka Pavilion.

BRYNWOOD Rentals
535 Inc.
In Lewisburg Since 1969
Your search begins..... and ends here.
Professional 24/7 Maintenance Staff
Apartments (furnished & unfurnished)
Houses for professionals students families
Rental Garages Also Available
Office & Retail Space
300—3,000 sq ft
brynwoodrentals.com
611 Market Street, Lewisburg
ph: 570.524.2121 x 3

ACNE?
TAKE CONTROL OF YOUR ACNE...NOW!

Blue Light Treatments Are:
*Simple
*Affordable
*Effective- They Work!
Bucknell Students Only...
Call before December 1st for a FREE consultation and receive a FREE Blue Light Treatment ($175.00)
CENTER FOR SKIN HEALTH
Ernest Normington, M.D., FACS
210 JPM Road in Lewisburg (570) 524-7777 www.drnormington.com

The ABC's of the BCS

A guide to the remainder of the College Football season

By Jared Napolitano
Business Manager

Ten weeks of college football have passed and anything can still happen before the wildest and wackiest postseason system in American sports chooses its participants. In a season with an unusually strong number of undefeated and one-loss teams, the crystal ball is extremely foggy when trying to project who lands where in the Bowl Championship Series (BCS). This conference-by-conference guide to the remaining four weeks of the NCAA Division I-A season will give you a good idea of what and who to watch.

The South Will Rise Again aka the SEC

With Florida, Arkansas and Auburn all having one loss, it would be extremely surprising to see less than two teams from this conference in the inaugural five-bowl BCS circuit. To make things even more interesting, the Gators' only loss was to the Tigers on the road and Auburn's only loss was a 27-10 thrashing to the Razorbacks in its own house. Arkansas's only defeat was a home-wrecking 50-14 defeat by the defending national runner-up, the University of Southern California (USC).

What this all translates to is an eventual odd-man out situation - because the SEC has a conference championship game (to which Florida has already clinched a berth), either Auburn or Arkansas will be left out of the late season mix.

Prediction: Arkansas has to lose both of these games to miss the SEC title game (they own the tiebreaker over Auburn), which I don't see happening. Arkansas meets the Gators in the Georgia Dome on Dec. 2, where a tight battle ends with a Chris Leak choke late in the game. The Razorbacks' overpowering run game (fourth in NCAA) controls the clock and leads the Hogs to victory.

The Big Boys aka the Big Ten

In an overall off-year in this traditional powerhouse legion, Ohio State and Michigan have captured the imagination of the national crowd. With these arch rivals sporting undefeated records after 10 contests, they rank #1 and #2 in all three major polls (AP, Coaches/ESPN, BCS). Luckily, the best rivalry in college football involves an annual meeting, which will settle the debate.

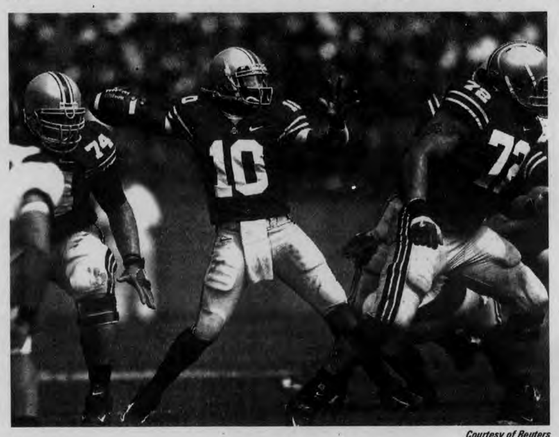
Prediction: In what may be the best college football match-up of the 21st century, the Wolverines and Buckeyes will duke it out at the Horseshoe on November 18. Two suffocating defenses with a host of offensive stars, including Heisman Trophy candidates Troy Smith and Mike Hart, will make this a must-see game for any sports fan. I couldn't possibly pick against my Wolverines, but they are the underdog in this one. Michigan gets the National Championship berth.

USC and the Rest aka the Pac 10

Even though Oregon and Oregon State have both been coming around lately, this is truly a two-team conference with USC and Califorinia at the top. Until the Beavers took out the Trojans in Corvallis, I really didn't think the polls realized that Leinart, Bush and White all left for the NFL. After escaping close contests with Washington, Washington State and Arizona State, the Trojans exposed their inexperience and youth. Cal, on the other hand, has been stomping its opponents since its disappointing opening loss at Tennessee.

USC is still a factory of talent, but Cal has certainly made a statement that the loss to the Vols was a fluke. USC needs to prove that their impressive non-conference wins over Arkansas and Nebraska were not coincidental and with upcoming back-to-back home games against Cal and Notre Dame, they will certainly have their chance.

Prediction: Cal lays it on at the Rose Bowl on November 18 and exploits the many holes left by the horde of players who left Pasadena for the NFL last year, but the Trojans put it together and John David Booty picks apart the horrendous Notre Dame defense a week later to leave the rivals both with two losses at season's end.



Courtesy of Reuters

Ohio State quarterback and Heisman Trophy hopeful Troy Smith rockets a pass in a game against University of Cincinnati. Smith has thrown for 2,006 yards this season while completing 66.7 percent of his passes.

The Back from the Dead Conference aka the Big East

Since Boston College, Virginia Tech and Miami left the Big East, it has been the laughing stock of Division I-A football. Even after West Virginia took home the Sugar Bowl crown last year, the conference is still not getting much respect. Up until Thursday when Louisville took out the Mountaineers at home, the Big East had three undefeated teams (the 'Ville, WVU and Rutgers, believe it or not).

Fortunately, with Louisville and West Virginia both on Rutgers schedule and a near-miracle required for them to beat both of these high-powered offenses, the campaign of Heisman-hopeful Ray Rice and the Scarlet Knights does not look too bright.

Prediction: Louisville runs the table and finishes the season undefeated. The Mountaineers finish with their lone loss to the Cardinals and Rutgers gets an invite to a mid-sized bowl after having two blemishes on their record (the only two ranked teams they'll play). The Big East will need to perform well in their bowl games to gain back the respect that Va. Tech, Miami and BC once brought to the conference.

The "Where Have All the Cowboys Gone?" Conference aka the Big XII

While the Big XII is usually an extremely competitive conference, this season the title is the Longhorns to win. First-year student Colt McCoy has filled the shoes of Vince Young nicely and Limas Sweed and Jamaal Charles have stepped up their efforts as well. With the team's only loss to the unanimous top-ranked team in the country (Ohio St.), Texas will definitely be a national championship contender.

The loss of Rhett Bomar to events before the season even began and the more recent injury to junior stud running back Adrian Peterson put the Sooners in a very difficult position to win and compete with their arch nemesis, Texas. And while Nebraska nearly pulled off the upset against Texas, they still are behind the Longhorns in terms of talent and experience.

Prediction: While last year's traditional Black Friday match-up between the Aggies and Longhorns was entertaining into the fourth quarter, Texas should put away A&M and Nebraska should take care of a weak Colorado team. This will result in an eventual victory for the Longhorns in a regular season rematch with Nebraska at the Big XII Championship Game and the automatic BCS berth.

The National League Wild Card Reenactment Conference aka the ACC

When I say this conference is wide open, it literally could be won by any one of six teams. With quite a few crucial match-ups in the coming month as well as the conference championship game, it is possible to see a three-loss team from the ACC make the BCS circuit.

The four contenders in the Atlantic Division are a surprising Wake Forest squad, the emerging Maryland Terps, the up-and-down Boston College Eagles and the fading fast Clemson Tigers. Clemson was as high as #10 in the polls, but an upset at Virginia Tech and a crushing 13-12 home defeat to Maryland have greatly setback the Tigers.

In the Coastal Division, a two-horse race exists between Virginia Tech and Georgia Tech. Almost sure wins over the lackluster North Carolina Tar Heels and Duke Blue Devils would vault the Yellow Jackets into the ACC Championship Game. On the other hand, Va. Tech has an easy one against Kent State, but still has to travel to 8-1 Wake Forest and host rival Virginia.

Predictions: Finally, Georgia Tech will piece together its offense with Reggie Ball, Tashard Choice and hands-down the best wide receiver in the NCAA, Calvin Johnson, and win the Coastal Division, leading to a meeting with the Golden Eagles, who get a big advantage with an easier schedule down the stretch than Maryland and Wake, in the ACC Championship game. Georgia Tech wins the championship game behind a pressure defense and a legitimate offensive attack.

The "It's All About the Benjamins" Non-Conference aka Notre Dame

I can't possibly discuss the BCS without mentioning the forever independent and always overrated Fighting Irish. Fear not, Irish fans, Notre Dame will end up in a BCS game, because that is just how the world works. The Irish still have the world convinced they play the most difficult schedule in the nation, but with Stanford, North Carolina, Army and Air Force (8-28 combined) on your plate and barely escaping the likes of Michigan State and UCLA, can anyone still say they could compete with the likes of Texas, Florida or Auburn? I don't think so. Sure they play(ed) Michigan, USC, Penn State, Georgia Tech, all good teams – but they're still not of the caliber of the three aforementioned teams – or even of one-loss teams like West Virginia or Arkansas.

The At-Large Bids

So now that I've sorted out the six power conference winners, four at-large bids remain as tickets to the BCS. Without a doubt, the loser of the Ohio State-Michigan game will obtain an at-large. The winner will become (or retain the title of) the #1 team in all the polls, so with one-loss to the best team in the nation, the loser of this epic battle will be extended a bid.

Secondly, Auburn will slip in after Florida loses the SEC title game to Arkansas. While Auburn trails the Gators by two spots in the BCS currently, a late loss to the Gators will put them behind the Tigers in not only the AP and ESPN/Coaches' polls, but also in the computer rankings and thus the overall BCS rankings.

Third, Boise State, despite no recognition previously in this article, will finish its season undefeated at 12-0 and win the WAC Conference. Normally, the BCS frowns greatly upon teams not from the power conferences. This will now be the fourth time in the past five years that the Broncos finish with one loss or less. Therefore, they will slip in past several of the power conference teams who will have a few more losses on their resume by mid-December. The pollsters will give this mid-major team another chance to prove that such programs can compete with those out of the "Big Six."

Last and certainly least, Notre Dame will find itself a spot in the BCS for many of the reasons discussed previously.

The Final Word

So there you have it – the crapshoot that is predicting the remaining course of the college football season. It will all unravel in the coming weeks, with several of my predictions undoubtedly wrong, but it's a war of attrition. The way the system works now, one game can set off a chain reaction that shakes up and affects every other bowl game in some way. Just sit back and watch the college boys play the next few Saturdays, and I'm sure you won't be disappointed with the level of competition and excitement that will culminate with the National Championship game at the Fiesta Bowl on January 8th in Glendale, Az.

Bowl Predictions

Rose Bowl
Cal (Pac-10) vs. Ohio State (at-large)

Fiesta Bowl
Notre Dame (at-large) vs. Boise State (at-large)

Orange Bowl
Georgia Tech (ACC) vs. Auburn (at-large)

Sugar Bowl
Arkansas (SEC) vs. Louisville (Big East)

National Championship Game
Michigan (Big 10) vs. Texas (Big XII)

Proud Sponsor of Bucknell
Domino's Pizza
Lewisburg (570) 524-9000
1722 Market St.
Hours: Sun-Thurs 11am - 1 am/Fri-Sat 11am - 3am
MANIC MONDAY $7.99 LARGE 1-TOPPING PIZZA - DELIVERED!
2xTUESDAY BUY ANY LARGE PIZZA AT REGULAR MENU PRICE & RECEIVE A 2ND OF EQUAL VALUE FOR FREE
HOT BROWNIES FREE OVEN BAKED BROWNIES
DOUBLE DEAL $12.99 2 MEDIUMS $14.99 2 LARGES
ORDER ONLINE WWW.DOMINOS.COM

The Pink Floyd Experience
ON SALE NOW!
Friday, November 10th at 7:30pm
Adult Tickets: $25 & $20
College Students: $22 & $17
Community Arts Center
220 West Fourth Street
Williamsport
1-800-432-9382 326 2424
www.cacltve.com

Villager GMAC Real Estate
521 N. Derr Dr. Lewisburg, PA 17837
570-523-3244
CALL US FOR THE LARGEST SELECTION OF RENTALS IN TOWN
1-5 Bedroom Units
Houses or Apartments for 2007/2008 and 2008/2009
A few choice units for 06/07 left!
Call Linda or Duska or e-mail us at linda-treese@villagerrealty.com or duska_rishel@yahoo.com for a complete list of our rentals.

SWIM From page B1

a huge role in the women's success.

"One key strength to our team this year is the addition of a large freshman class," Woodward said. "With the breadth of talent they bring and the existing depth of our returning swimmers and divers, this year's team is ready for anything."

The men performed equally well against American and Villanova. Seven different Bison posted first-place finishes. Leading the pack was diver Jeffrey Manning '09 who took first in both the 1-meter and 3-meter dives.

Grant Steadman '08 took first in the 50 fly, while Christopher Amato '09 placed first in the 100 back. Other first-place winners included Bradford Bennett '08 in the 50 breast, John Peterman '08 in the 100 free, Mark Kawczenski '09 in the 50 back and Michael Deighan '09 in the 100 breast.

The men's relay teams recorded three wins, as the 400-medley relay team of Bennett, Matt Crandell '07, Peterman and Kawczenski won in 3:36.50. The 200-medley and 400-free relay teams also captured first place in their respective races.

The Orange and Blue are optimistic for the future.

"The strengths of the team are that both the men and women have unarguably the strongest teams to come into Bucknell," Katherine Munson '07 said. "I have all the confidence that both the men and women's teams will perform better than ever."

The Bison compete with Patriot League rivals Navy and Lafayette at 2 p.m. Saturday in Kinney Natatorium.

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Jeff Ayres '09 competes in the 400 IM at the Bucknell Sprint Invitational. The Bison will host Lafayette and Navy Saturday at Kinney Natatorium beginning at 2 p.m.

VBALL From page B1

6.33 digs per game and hit three service aces. Sydlowski broke the Bison's single-season digs record, previously held by Susie Teitsworth '97. She is tied with Army's Margaret Stewart for the league record with 544 digs which has stood for 15 years.

Jenna Henderson '08 and Shannon Pitsch '09 both earned Honorable Mention for their stellar performances over the weekend. Henderson almost had another double-double with 21 kills, nine digs and three service aces while hitting .359 for the match. Pitsch displayed her usual setting expertise with 50 assists, averaging 16.67 per game.

Captains Amanda Grossmann '07 and Jennie Smith '07 provided good support at the net. Grossmann finished with nine kills, two blocks and a .316 hitting percentage while Smith tallied eight kills, seven digs and three blocks.

Both players and coaches took great pride in their preparation as the regular season winds down.

"We had a tough week of practice and felt very mentally prepared on the court against Colgate," Smith said. "To come back the way we did in that second game, staying motivated even though we already clinched a tournament berth, really showed team character."

The Bison have two more road games before they begin preparations for the Patriot League Tournament, one of which matches them against this year's tournament host, the American Eagles, before the regular season finale at Navy. The rematch with American should provide the team with a good measuring stick before the tournament, and revenge will definitely be on the players' minds after a 3-0 loss to the Eagles on Oct. 14.

Allison and Head Coach Cindy Opalski pointed out other potential advantages for the Orange and Blue.

"Playing at the same venue this late in the season and getting a chance to take in the surroundings is good prep for the tournament. It gives us a chance to try out some new strategies," Allison said.

Opalski noted the team's growing chemistry and the innate trust between players. "Like Jell-O, our team is sticking and gelling and playing well together," she said. She quoted Ralph Waldo Emerson when describing the mindset she would like for the team, saying "The task ahead of us is never as great as the power behind us."

The Bison confront American tonight and Navy on Saturday.

Viewer's guide to the New NHL

By Ty Clark
Senior Writer

The NHL's return after a yearlong collective bargaining dispute was greeted by many with a huge yawn. Due to its lockout, much has changed about the NHL, making it indistinguishable to some. What exactly should a fan—or even a casual watcher—look for?

Things to Watch

1. The Game. Speed may kill, but it certainly put the Edmonton Oilers in last year's Stanley Cup Finals.
2. Kerry Fraser. Few referees are known in any sport, but Fraser is the NHL's Ed "Huikuli" Hochuli. What other official has a nickname, let alone "Bulletproof Hair"?
3. NBC. The NHL has a larger contract with the Versus network (formerly OLN), but you have a better chance of finding "Rocky V" on TV than finding a cable package with Versus. NBC is the only real national hockey option.
4. Barry Melrose. Who does not love the mullet?

Young Players to Watch

1. Sidney Crosby. He was compared to Gretzky when he entered the draft. "Sid the Kid" has since backed it up by finishing 6th in the point race on the then-doormat Penguins in his rookie season.
2. Alexander Ovechkin. Similar to Crosby, Ovechkin put up huge numbers in his first year, finishing third in the league in goals on an equally weak team. And since Electronic Arts' NHL videogame series is not cursed like its Madden franchise, Ovechkin has been playing well this year again.
3. Evgeni Malkin. Yeah, he is a rookie, but he is the first rookie since 1917-18 to score goals in each of his first six games. To put this in perspective, the NHL was founded in 1917-18.
4. Ray Emery. The young Senators goalie leads the league in Save Percentage (.939) and set an NHL record by winning his first 9 starts. Dominik who?
5. Dion Phaneuf. Watching Phaneuf play is like watching a young Scott Stevens: strong shot, great awareness, good skating ability and that shoulder.

Other Players to Watch

1. Brian Gionta. Finding the 5-7 Gionta is like playing "Where's Waldo?" on a hockey rink. Of course, Waldo did not score 48 goals in a season.
2. Marian Hossa and
3. Ilya Kovalchuk. First and second in goals and points in the NHL. And they play on the same line.
4. Jaromir Jagr. Some said the NHL was not going to be all that physical with the new NHL. That theory went out the window as Jagr carried his team—and three defenders—on his back en route to a monster 54 goal, 69 assist campaign.
5. Brendan Shanahan. He may be 37, but his leadership and scoring touch will strengthen the New York Rangers this year.

Teams to Watch

1. Buffalo Sabres. Ten straight wins to open the year. A coach who plays to the new rules. Players who play to the coach's scheme. What more do you want?
2. Nashville Predators. Like the Sabres, a speedy, deep team that can create havoc with its quick forwards and gets terrific goaltending every night.
3. San Jose Sharks. It may have been 12 years since the Sharks stunned the world with their upset of the Red Wings, but they are still formidable, thanks to Joe Thornton's MVP play.
4. Anaheim Ducks. Simply put, there has not been a defensive pairing as good as Scott Niedermayer and Chris Pronger since Bobby Orr and anyone.
5. Pittsburgh Penguins. A year ago, a laughingstock. But now, the perennial top-five picks have started a turnaround. Look for the Penguins to make the playoffs.

Hide the Women and Children

1. Boston Bruins. ESPN's Bill Simmons said he has not cared for the Bruins in 10 years, thanks to "perpetual putridity." Unfortunately, he is 100 percent right.
2. Philadelphia Flyers. They have talent. Unfortunately, it cannot move.
3. New York Islanders. How do you further screw up a franchise that was managed for years by Mike Milbury? You force your backup goalie into retirement, then give a 15-year contract to a decent player.
4. The New Jersey Devils' Salary Cap. It is akin to playing Russian Roulette while having Chinese Water Torture performed on you.
5. Phoenix Coyotes. Captain Shane Doan returned from an injury and scored two goals, taking some pressure off embattled coach Wayne Gretzky and embattled goalie Curtis Joseph. Two days later, leading scorer Mike Comrie suffered an injury, sidelining him for four weeks.

Predictions

1. Eastern Conference Championship: Buffalo Sabres over Atlanta Thrashers, 4-2.
2. Western Conference Championship: Anaheim Ducks over Minnesota Wild, 4-3.
3. Stanley Cup Finals: Sabres over Ducks, 4-3. Ryan Miller is MVP.

The snow is coming...
That means winter sports are beginning...
Get involved
Write For Sports
msaylor@

Coldwell Banker
Penn One Real Estate
Thank You, Bucknell!!
For thirty years of calling Bucknell and Lewisburg home.
Susan Warner-Mills, Sales Associate
Competence, Integrity, Service
524-7500; swm@coldwellbanker.com

Nancy's Nu-Wave Salon
look your best
October Special
Free Paraffin Dip with Pedicure or Manicure
Main Street (Rte 45) Montandon
524-2315
www.nancysnuwave.com

$250 CASH
Sign on BONUS
Call for details
3 & 4 Bedroom Houses
CLOSE TO CAMPUS
WHIRLPOOL
WASHER / DRYER
DISHWASHER
STOVE & FRIG
Newly renovated houses available 2006/2007
570-524-5714 / 570-412-4831
or 570-524-5745 / 570-490-2922

Bucknell Bison
Bison Good Sports
Bucknell Pre-game Mixer!
November 18
11:30 a.m. to 12:45 p.m.
Before the Bucknell vs Colgate football game
Christy Mathewson-Memorial Stadium
Open to Bucknell Students (with valid B.U.I.D.)
Free wings, chips and drinks!
Sponsors: Towne Tavern, Lewisburg Hotel, Highlands Pub, Yuengling
Don't Drink and Drive!

Mer Cares

Dear Mer:

I'm a little worried about going back home for an extended period of time. Now that I've been at college and living on my own, I am afraid my parents are going to go back to their own rules and I don't want them to treat me like they did in high school. I can handle being on my own and I've been making my own rules and decisions here at school. I don't think my parents are going to see that I've changed and matured. I think they will still enforce the same guidelines and policies like they used to. How should I go about this situation?

—Fretting Freshman

Dear Fretting Freshman:

This problem seems to be making many first-year students anxious this time of the year, with Thanksgiving break right around the corner. When you return home, the first thing you may want to do is sit down and have a conversation with your parents so you can tell them how you feel right off the bat.

According to The Boston Globe, being home for long breaks can be difficult for both the parents and the child "with daily struggles over everything from eating schedules to apparent rejection of family values … it can wreck a relationship."

Returning first-year students often feel like young adults after the first couple of months at college. Though your parents are proud of your accomplishments, they may slip back into the pattern of treating you like a child when you are back at home.

I think both you and your parents need to reevaluate things when you return home, because otherwise it could be a long, difficult break.

In my opinion, parents should go over what rules may still apply, such as a curfew, but they should also be willing to compromise (for example, on a later hour). They could also allow the child to have greater use of a car or more freedom to do what they please at home.

There should always be limits, because even though you may not want to admit it, you are still living under their roof, and your parents are most likely paying your tuition.

Just make sure your parents know how you feel. They are in the same position because they do not want to scare you away and make you wish that you were back at school doing whatever you want.

The way I see it, it takes time to figure things out, and as the months go on your parents will see you for the adult you are becoming. Hopefully your bond will grow stronger by your senior year at the University.

Love,
Mer

Please send questions regarding any topic to marc001@bucknell.edu with subject line reading "advice" or you may send a letter via campus mail to box number C1099. I look forward to hearing from you!

Spruce up your fashion sense

Old trends still fashionable and vintage trends resurfac this winter

By Lauren Kushner
Writer

The arrival of snow flurries last week made it clear winter is rapidly approaching. Harsh winds and the end of daylight savings time indicate fall fashions are "out" and winter clothing is "in."

It is time to put away those Burberry wind jackets and break out fleeces and parkas. The versatile North Face jacket offers protection from wind, rain, snow and freezing temperatures in an array of colors. The most popular hues are blues and black, while orange, red and purple are also stylish.

Another dashing trend for both men and women is the sweater. Sweaters look saucy in all colors and patterns, especially when they fit loosely. This season it is hip for young women to raid their boyfriend's/brother's/father's closet. Oversized argyle patterns are popular on the runway. We are also seeing a throwback to the Spice Girls era with the leopard print.

For men, neutral-colored sweaters are always flattering.

Another bold print to resurge on the runway is crocodile print, used on boots, clutches and totes.

For women, the empire waist is back in style, emphasizing an elongated torso with an oversized belt worn right below the chest as opposed to on the hips. For a sophisticated and mature look men and women opt for the classic polo paired with Seven For All Mankind jeans.

Fashionable colors are winter white, dark orange, navy, gold and hunter green. It is all about making a statement and standing out in order to brighten up the dreary weather this season.

Missing from the women's collection is chunky jewelry. Sport tiny gold chains and small hoop earrings this winter. If wearing dangly earrings do not also wear a daring necklace; picking one or the other allows the human eye to focus on one part of the outfit.

As for shoes, the flat trend is still widespread. Moccasins, ballerina shoes and UGGS continue to set the stage for a fashionable, comfortable look. Flat ankle shoes are also popular this season.

For toting around heavy books, the ever-popular Longchamp bag is a must. The Hervé Chapelier bag remains fashionable this season. The last accessory that comes to mind is the headband. This hair item is great because it looks good on curly or straight locks. The headband should be worn behind the ears, pushing the hair back into a slight poof. Headbands look great in all patterns and designs.

For going out at night, women should dress warmly but sensuously. A low-cut tank top worn under a low-cut, light sweater gives this effect. Stiletto boots or pumps make any causal night outfit seem dressier. Bright colors and pastels are not really appropriate anymore with the change in temperature.

For men, clothes for going out are a lot more general. The casual jeans-and-sneakers look paired with a snazzy blazer, a tight logo T-shirt or a classy Lacoste or Ralph Lauren sweater creates a smart outfit.

To sum up this winter's trends, it is all about the vintage look. Regardless of the present fashion trends, never be afraid to sport what you feel most comfortable wearing. Everyone at the University has a unique style and there is nothing shameful about that. Love your style and feel confident in it; that is what makes you fashionable.

Increasing multicultural awareness

Further integration of domestic and international students desired

By Rajaa Qadri
Writer

Considering how diverse the United States has become over the years, it is important that students get a chance to study in a diverse environment so that they graduate from the University well-rounded and well aware of the world.

According to an article by Lemuel W. Watson, "multiculturalism is viewed as the process of increasing awareness and knowledge about human diversity in ways that are translated into respectful human interactions and effective interconnections."

More specifically, multiculturalism might be seen as a state of being in which humans feel comfortable communicating with people from any culture or situation due to a desire to learn about others.

Increasing the diversity of the student body has created challenges in every area of campus life. The University lacks diversity mainly due to its location and history of a homogonous student body. Fortunately, most of these challenges have given rise to dialogue about diversity and multiculturalism that has enhanced student learning, as well as faculty development and administrative practices

To ensure diversity on campus, Multicultural Student Services has been working to bring positive changes to the student body since it was founded in 1985. Changes have been initiated and implemented to improve the quality and quantity of cultural, social and educational programming in the university.

"There are many positive changes that exploring diversity can bring, and that is what we are trying to do," said Jessica Hess, director of Multicultural Student Services. "We all have parts of us that are influenced by many different factors, and when we can be open to discovering those parts in each other, we will develop and discover ourselves further."

According to the University's 1999 Plan for Diversity, "The University is obliged to provide rich and compelling opportunities for students to learn about the cultural diversity and complexity of American life and the broader world of which it is a part. Our obligation must also be realized in efforts to make the institution, and hence the learning environment, more fully representative of the multicultural and international character of life in contemporary American society."

> "I think we need to focus on getting our domestic and international students together to share their perspectives and experiences, as they all have diverse interests and ideas."
>
> —Paula Cogan, Director of International Students Services*

According to this plan, diversity in the university population is expected to rise significantly by 2010.

In addition to Multicultural Student Services, International Student Services (ISS) is also working to encourage students from different parts of the world to come and benefit from what the University has to offer. The office also works towards meeting the unique needs of international students as they adjust to life in the states. Another of ISS's objectives is to highlight different world views that international students bring to campus, so they are able to share them inside and outside the classroom.

"I think we need to focus on getting our domestic and international students together to share their perspectives and experiences, as they all have diverse interests and ideas," said Paula Cogan, Director of International Students Services.

The number of international students has been increasing over the years and they have brought a positive cultural influence on the student body and faculty.

"What influence do international students really have? Just in the past week, I've talked with a Turkish student who is learning Urdu from her South Asian friends, watched a dance at the South Asian Students Association dinner that included students from the Afghanistan, India, Japan, Pakistan, Sri Lanka, Turkey and the U.S., talked with a student who is focused on bringing back her chemical engineering degree to affect change in waste management in her home country, attended a multicultural festival in Lewisburg and had an in depth conversation about women's roles around the world with a mix of international and domestic students." Cogan said.

Providing a quality education for all students while still recognizing the diversity they bring to the academic setting of the University is not a simple task. It takes rigorous effort and a sincere commitment for the University to realize its vision for multiculturalism.

Tell us anything.
Funny, bitter, sexy, depressing.
Secrets from childhood, secrets from yesterday.
This is your chance to get it all off your chest.

Design your own postcard, write a secret on it and send it in anonymously to The Bucknellian, C-3952, through campus mail.

www.mintgems.com
Early Holiday Sale!
Shop early for holiday gifts & save!
Create your own jewelry...
Choose your metal, stones, closures & lengths
Up to 60% off
Nov. 1-15
Interested in earning some extra cash?
Mintgems is looking for sales reps
Please contact us at sales@mintgems.com if you'd like more information.

"Turn your Power ON and Add LIFE to your Years!"
MORRISON'S ADVANCED CHIROPRACTIC CARE
Michael D. Morrison D.C.
1205 W Market Street
Lewisburg, PA 17837
Office: 570-523-1221
A Healthy Spine Equals a Healthy YOU!
Bucknell Students may receive a free exam and x-rays (if needed) with mention of this advertisement.

Real Smoked BBQ!
Beef Brisket, Pork, Chicken, Ribs!
Sandwiches, Wraps, Salads, Platters!
NO RESERVATIONS NEEDED!
Call in for TAKEOUT!
SKEETERS PIT BBQ
ON THE BLUFF
OVERLOOKING THE SCENIC SUSQUEHANNA RIVER
AT THE INTERSECTION OF ROUTES 11 & 15 IS SHAMOKIN DAM
570.743.2727
Daily 11:00am - 10:00pm
Sundays till 9:00pm
www.SkeetersBBQ.com

Igniting Creative Ideas
On Fire Promotions
by trautman associates, inc.
promotional products · fundraising items
embroidered & screenprinted caps & apparel
awards · trophies · business gifts
800-538-8009
Lewisburg Showroom 434 Market 570-522-8009
www.onfirepromotions.com
Bring in this ad for one FREE SCREEN!!!
GOOD ON ANY APPAREL ORDER
(minimum 36 pieces)

How to find 'Anything Bucknell' students might be looking for

By Samantha Kantor
Contributing Writer

"Anything Bucknell," a part of the Bucknell Student Government (BSG) Web site, allows students to buy and sell just about anything they want from each other. As of Monday, items such as refrigerators, cable boxes, calculators and textbooks were ripe for the picking.

"'Anything Bucknell' started about three years ago with the Fiscal Committee of BSG under the leadership of Loren Fishkind, now senior class President," BSG member Adam Weinberg '07 said. "It began with the idea that students were looking for a place to sell their used goods other than the one single bulletin board in the mailroom."

Renee Signore '10, another BSG member, commented on the positive aspects of "Anything Bucknell."

"It's a great way for students to acquire things they may need at fair prices," Signore said.

She explained the process of accessing and using "Anything Bucknell."

"Once you log onto the BSG Web site you click on the 'Anything Bucknell' blue Post-it on the lower left side," Signore said. "The site gives you a variety of items you can choose to buy, such as electronics, furniture, books, etc."

First-time "Anything Bucknell" users must register to purchase items on the site.

"In order to register you need to have a Bucknell e-mail address. No one from outside the University can use 'Anything Bucknell,'" Signore said. "Once you enter your e-mail address, you can choose a username and password to create your account. Then you can start buying and selling."

The site resembles eBay.com.

"The seller can request a price or they can also leave it open to the best offer they get," Signore said. "There are really not many rules when it comes to 'Anything Bucknell.' It was created by BSG for the students, and the students decide how they want to use it."

When BSG first created "Anything Bucknell," Weinberg noticed overwhelming success.

"In the first few weeks of 'Anything Bucknell' back in 2004, students were flocking to the site to sell their furniture, electronics and even cars as the academic year came to a close," Weinberg said. "This exceeded our expectations, but we quickly found out the next year that students were not that interested in selling goods until the end of the year."

Some first-time users shared their thoughts about the site.

"This is such a good idea," Rachael Bulmer '10 said after browsing through the items on the site. "It really lets kids help each other out in terms of saving money. I mean, we're in college; the last thing we want to spend money on are books and calculators."

Katie Kessler '10 had mixed feelings.

"You can buy cars?" Kessler said. "This is a really cool idea, but there doesn't seem to be a lot of stuff on it. More students should really use this."

Jaclyn Spechler '10 agreed with Kessler's point.

"I've checked out 'Anything Bucknell' before, and I would definitely buy something off of it, but there doesn't seem to be that wide of a variety of items right now," Spechler said. "If I ever need books or electronics though, 'Anything Bucknell' will be one of my first stops."

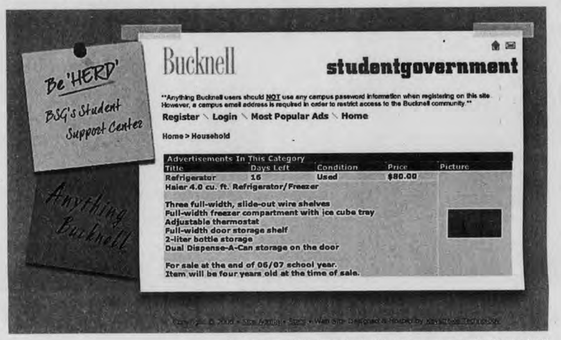
Weinberg and Signore are optimistic that "Anything Bucknell" will gain popularity.

"While we would love to see this site used more often throughout the year, we understand it may take some time for this site to become part of the culture at Bucknell," Weinberg said. "However, when May 2007 is upon us, we are positive that 'Anything Bucknell' will be a great asset for students."

Signore echoed Weinberg's sentiment.

"It may just need more publicity, which hopefully, your article can take care of," Signore said. "But like I said before, it was created for the students, and it's up to the students on how they want to take advantage of it. I'd definitely like to see it used more often though, because I think it's a great tool for our university, and I'm sure this will happen as the end of the academic year approaches."

The Web site just needs a little more involvement from the student body to become a popular tool for students. So next time you are trying to sell that Organic Chemistry book because you realized pursuing pre-medicine was the biggest mistake of your life, or when you are looking to buy a movie the library does not have, give "Anything Bucknell" a shot. You might find exactly what you are looking for.



Be 'HERD'
BSG's Student Support Center
Anything Bucknell
Bucknell
studentgovernment
"Anything Bucknell users should NOT use any campus password information when registering on this site. However, a campus email address is required in order to restrict access to the Bucknell community."
Register \ Login \ Most Popular Ads \ Home
Home > Household
Advertisements In This Category
Title
Days Left Condition
Price
Picture
Refrigerator
16
Used
$80.00
Haier 4.0 cu. ft. Refrigerator/Freezer
Three full-width, slide-out wire shelves
Full-width freezer compartment with ice cube tray
Adjustable thermostat
Full-width door storage shelf
2-liter bottle storage
Dual Dispense-A-Can storage on the door
For sale at the end of 06/07 school year.
Item will be four years old at the time of sale.

Photo courtesy of http://www.bucknellstudentgovernment.com/anything-bucknell/

"Anything Bucknell," the University's version of Ebay, provides an outlet for students to find, purchase, and sell anything from textbooks, clothing, furniture, to cars. The Web site can be accessed from the main Bucknell Student Government site.

Discover better study locations

By Genna Jerard
Contributing Writer

There is about a month left until that well-deserved holiday break in December. You may be counting down the days until winter break (literally), but you still need to keep up your study habits so you can finish the semester with a bang.

This is the time when academic effort starts to slip and studying becomes monotonous. To put an end to this problem—or at least to do your best to postpone it—try a change in pace.

For most people, the Ellen Clarke Bertrand Library or dorm rooms are the main places to study. Occasionally, students may even head over to the Seventh Street Café to hit the books and cozy up with a latte.

Yes, the University has a beautiful library filled with a variety of rooms and hidden nooks to satisfy all types of study habits. Yet walking into the same building every day and seeing the same things does get a little old, even when the view is from a purple bean bag chair.

What can students do to ease the daily pain of schoolwork? It is simple: get up from your regular seat located in the back of Lower Level One and move. The University is bursting at the seams with diverse study environments.

Here is a list of the top 10 new places to study, some of which you already know, and others you may not.

1. The Breakiron Engineering Building behind the Dana Engineering Building
2. McDonnell Hall Seminar Rooms and Lounge on the second floor
3. Krebs Fitness Center
4. Willard Smith Library in the Vaughn Literature Building
5. Basement of Olin Science Building
6. Lewisburg Cemetery
7. Bertrand Library, Level Two and Level Three
8. The Benches by the Susquehanna River
9. Lewisburg Coffee Shops (eg., Zelda's Café)
10. McDonnell Hall Amphitheater

In addition, the Olin Science Building is another site frequently void of studiers, despite the open computer labs and empty desks in the basement.

> ... Walking into the same building every day and seeing the same things does get a little old, even when the view is from a purple bean bag chair.

McDonnell residents love the residence hall and say it really is a hidden treasure on cawalking into the same building every day and seeing the same things does get a little old, even when the view is from a purple bean bag chair.mpus.

"There's almost this imaginary rule that people are to be quiet in the lounge when people are working," Jonathan Epstein '10 said. "Also, the room is so big that I feel as if there are no constrictions placed on me, as opposed to the library where we can only study at small desks."

Dana D'Amelio '10 agrees the seminar rooms and the lounge (affectionately called the ski lodge) are great places to do work, she points out there are campus events frequently occurring in these rooms.

"Just make sure you go at a time when no classes or seminars are being held, but other then that, it really is a great place to study," D'Amelio said.

The fitness center may be a logical addition to the list, but how many people really bring work to the gym? It may not be very effective to read a textbook with the up-and-down motion of the treadmill or stepper distorting your vision. On the other hand, the steady motion of the elliptical is fluid enough that you can exercise while reading the novel for your English class.

The cemetery on campus may seem a bit out of the ordinary for a study break, but it cannot hurt to try it once. It is guaranteed to be quiet and the change of atmosphere may spark the concentration you need to get your work done.

Local coffee shops, such as Zelda's Café and Seventh Street Café, are great places to do work. Go ahead and try these new hot spots. Zelda's is the perfect place to grab a cup of coffee before settling down to hit the books.

"It really has a great atmosphere and would serve as a great place to study," Sarah Wells '10 said after visiting Zelda's. "And the milkshakes are incredible."

Taking this list into consideration, the next time you are feeling the drag of studying go ahead and try a new place. If anything, you will explore a new side of campus and may even find a favorite study locale along the way.

Ten Interesting Study Spots:

1. Breakiron Engineering Building
2. McDonnell Hall
3. Krebs Fitness Center
4. Willard Smith Library
5. Olin Science Building
6. Lewisburg Cemetery
7. Bertrand Library
8. Susquehanna River
9. Lewisburg Coffee Shops
10. McDonnell Hall Amphitheater

Another tantalizing edition brought to you by ...

Love and the Bubble

Dear Ms. O,

My boyfriend and I have been together a long time even though all of my friends think he is weird. We've been having sex for a while but lately he's been changing his act, and will only make love to me if I dress up as an elven princess, and he puts on his robe and wizard hat. I think it's kind of weird, I mean we've played dress-up before but this is different. All of our dirty talk has changed. I'm just not turned on by this new persona. I've tried talking to him, but he says he really likes it and doesn't want to stop. What should I do?

- Lost in my Robe

Playing dress-up in the bedroom has been played up throughout the media, with classics like the "naughty nurse" popping up every now and then, and popular television shows throwing a costume or two into their plotline when couples are surprising each other or spicing up their sex lives.

A classic example is when Rachel dressed up as Princess Leia for Ross in "Friends" to fulfill one of his previously mentioned fantasies. A more recent addition to the costume craze was on "The O.C." when Summer's birthday surprise for Seth was suiting up as Wonder Woman.

But while this addition to sexual repertoire is tossed around in the media, it doesn't mean it's right for everyone and it shouldn't overwhelm your sex life.

Now to address where your boyfriend's fascination may stem from.

He may enjoy the fantasy of it all. He may think you look really hot as an elf. He may feel more comfortable and confident engaging in sex dressed up as a different person because he can take on the identity of someone else and leave his own insecurities behind.

But whatever the reason, he needs to respect your opinion on the subject. Your desires matterr, too.

Open communication is essential to a healthy sexual relationship, and sometimes compromises must be made.

It concerns me that he's not listening to what you're telling him. It sounds as if he's ignoring what you do and do not want to do. That's not OK.

You need to put your foot down and tell him that you don't want to continue with this new facet of your sex life. Calmly explain to him your reasoning and tell him you don't want to be a part of a relationship in which costumes are the only way for sex to commence.

If he doesn't respect your feelings, he is not treating you properly, and is not worth your time.

By continually engaging in sexual acts while in costume, it's almost as if you have become two other people having sex, not you and your boyfriend. That is not a beneficial approach to your relationship. He shouldn't need to pretend that either of you are different people in order to enjoy sex.

Also, what do you mean when you say your friends think that your boyfriend is weird? Is he just a different kind of person that they have trouble identifying with? Or are there concerns possibly legitimate? Do they worry about how he treats you?

You may want to take a good look at what they say and try to understand where they are coming from. Don't let your friends take over your life, but if they're trying to look out for you, take their view into consideration.

The bottom line is sex simply can't be as enjoyable if you're not comfortable with what you're doing. You shouldn't have to participate in anything you're opposed to.

It may be fun to break out the costumes every once in a while, but that's up to you. You need to stick you what you are comfortable with. And no one should make you feel otherwise.

~Ms. O

E-mail me your questions at MsOintheBubble@yahoo.com or send them through campus mail to Ms. O, The Bucknellian, C-3952. All authors of questions will remain anonymous.

Keep up with all the latest trends and happenings.

Write for Feats!

E-mail jjf018@

BISON MANIA

University's re-named pep rally debuts to roaring crowd

KATIE STEELE
Contributing Writer

Loud cheering emanated from Sojka Pavilion Friday as students celebrated the start of the Bison basketball season. Members of sports teams, dance groups, Greek organizations and residence halls attended Bison Mania to show their school spirit.

The pep rally, held every year at the start of the basketball season, introduces the campus to the men's and women's basketball teams. It was called Midnight Mania in previous years, but because of various rulings the name and time of the event were changed.

Tim Johnson, assistant director of admissions, commentated the event. He entertained the crowd and introduced the performing groups.

Before the teams entered the stadium, spectators watched TV clips in which players expressed their excitement for the season. The audience enjoyed performances from twirler Casey Bryant '09, the Bison Girls, the cheerleaders, Jelani and the Latino Dance Corner.

Following the performances sports teams and Greek organizations, dressed in costumes, competed in a lip-sync competition.

The men's basketball team performed first to Sir Mix-A-Lot's "Jump on It." The players entertained the crowd as they shook their hips and got in touch with their feminine sides.

Next, about 25 Delta Gamma sorority members walked out dressed in black as the "Men In Black" theme song started to play. Stopping in a diamond formation and putting on black sunglasses, the women performed a creative rendition of Will Smith's dance from the movie.

Seven Chi Phi fraternity brothers strutted out in spandex, short-shorts and tight T-shirts and danced to Shakira's "Hips Don't Lie." Halfway through the dance, one brother provocatively tore off his basketball pants, revealing tight red shorts.

> "The guy in the red spandex really knew how to shake it"
> —Bonnie Buechel '09

The judges awarded Chi Phi with the Spirit Award in the fraternity category.

"It was very Shakira ... I wish I could shake it like that," Stephanie Rosen '09 said.

Kappa Alpha Theta, the sorority that won the Spirit Award in the sorority category, performed Quad City DJ's "Space Jam." The women split up into two groups on opposite sides of the basketball court. Women on one side wore hand-crafted University basketball jerseys, while women on the other side wore shirts with the names of other universities. They ran towards each other and got into formation to dance.

The women's basketball team performed "A Whole New World," a popular song from the Disney film "Aladdin." Lauren Schober '09, a forward on the team, dressed up as Jasmine and danced around the floor animatedly mouthing the words to the song.

Members of Chi Omega sorority, dressed in flashy and creative costumes, followed a Hollywood theme and sang to Soul Kid No. One's "More Bounce in California."

Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority dressed in clothes from the '80s and performed to "All Night Long" by Lionel Richie. Members ran out with inflatable guitars, which they tossed away in the middle of the song.

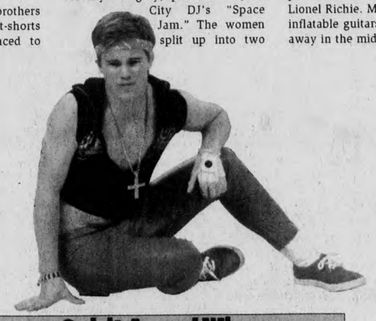
Alpha Chi Omega sorority performed last to a medley of popular songs from TV shows. The theme song from NBC's "Saved by the Bell" received much recognition from the crowd.

Residents of Larison Two, one of the biggest halls on campus, made huge banners, signs and posters and cheered loudly. They won the Spirit Award in the residence hall category.

Smith 2D also showed spirit by cheering loudly and displaying posters and banners.

Members of the women's water polo team dressed up as chefs and won the Spirit Award for sports teams. The women's softball team dressed up as referees.

Bison Mania created enthusiasm for the basketball season and gave students a chance to demonstrate their school spirit. Students are excited for the season, which begins at 7 p.m. today with the women's first home game against Hampton University.



Spirit Award Winners

Sorority: Kappa Alpha Theta	Residence Hall: Larison 2
Fraternity: Chi Phi	Sports Team: Women's Water Polo

Photos by Ryan Winn and Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

The Bucknellian

November 17, 2006

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

Volume 138, Number 11 | Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue | www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Students premiere debut album

Student hip-hop artists released their first record under the label of a University student Thursday.

See page A8

myBucknell fails to live up to student expectations

My Account
Content/Layout

Welcome Mr. Ray Bucknell
You are currently logged in.

Technical glitches trouble ticket sales

BY AMANDA SIDMAN
Staff Writer

Technical troubles with myBucknell have forced the University to abandon the server as a means of basketball ticket distribution. Tickets to the game Tuesday against Wake Forest were supposed to be available online at 7 p.m. on Nov. 5. A default in the system made this impossible and disappointed students lined up at the box office Sunday night at 7 p.m.

Several campus-wide emails were sent out in the past few weeks, boasting a new way for students to obtain basketball tickets via myBucknell. The e-mail sent from the Department of Athletics and Recreation and the Campus Box Office read, "It is our hope that this new online distribution system will eliminate lines, missed class time and other campus programs while providing the opportunity to obtain available single-game tickets."

Chief Communications Officer Pete Mackey said the University is currently learning the limits of its technology.

See TICKETS page A3

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Freshman wait in line to register for classes on Thursday morning. myBucknell crashed due to user overload, forcing students to manually schedule courses at the registrar's office. Problems with myBucknell have been frequent.

Pilot program looks to improve athlete registration

BY EVAN UNGER
News Editor

The University implemented a pilot registration program aimed at alleviating scheduling conflicts between academics and co-curricular activities of students. The program initially targeted about 500 student-athletes from all grade levels.

Spring varsity athletes were chosen to spearhead the pilot because "they were the most readily available group," said Robert Midkiff, associate dean for academic affairs.

According to Midkiff, the schedules and conflicts of athletes were most convenient to analyze.

The selected students registered for classes during the first available time slot for their grade.

"No one got bumped out; more were bumped in," Midkiff said.

Midkiff also said some of these athletes were already in the first registration slot.

If successful, the program could be applied to many activities students on campus are involved in, such as service and leadership organizations.

"The administration supports the goal to help students involved in numerous activities to have a balance [between] academics and the many things Bucknell offers," Chief Communications Officer Pete Mackey said.

See PILOT page A2

Heavy usage complicates online course selection

BY AHMED KODOUDA
Writer

Students participated in the ordeal of class selection, from Nov. 6 to Thursday night. The campus community registered for classes manually at the registrar's office or through Banner Web.

The course selection process was divided by class years. Seniors received first pick, choosing classes on Nov. 6, followed by juniors on Nov. 8, sophomores on Monday, and first-year students on Wednesday.

The registration was divided within the class years utilizing a random order. First letters of last names were randomly chosen and divided into four sections, with two sections selecting each day, one at 8 a.m. and the other at 11 a.m.

The University urged students to use the online registration rather than submitting a course selection card to the Registrar's Office. The University did not print schedule books with dates and times for courses, but instead, placed the course information online using the Banner Web portal in myBucknell.

"As a member of ISR [Information Services and Resources] staff who was at work during the freshman registration time earlier today [Wednesday], I have experienced similar problems to those of my classmates," said Tisorn Songsermsawas '10. "First of

See COURSES page A3

Greeks try to connect with faculty

BY GENNA JERRARD
Writer

Faculty representation at the Interfraternity and Panhellenic Councils' presentation on Wednesday was lacking, with only four members of the faculty showing support for the Greek organizations.

Members of the Greek system planned to use this meeting as a way to present to the faculty their goals and expectations for the future of University Greek life, outlined in the Plan for Prominence. The members presented their ideas to the four faculty members at the 12 p.m. meeting, but the 5 p.m. meeting was void of faculty members and the leaders were forced to end the night early.

Relations between the faculty and the Greek system have not always been smooth. Many issues negatively impacted their relationship throughout the years, the foremost including the faculty's attempt to shut down the Greek system in the mid-1990s.

"All of the Greek organizations worked very hard in preparing for this forum, and it's really a shame that more faculty did not show their support in attending either meeting," said Chip Marrara, assistant dean of students and director of fraternity and sorority affairs.

Marrara has consistently given his full support to the Greek system, along with other members of the administration such as Charles Pollock, vice president for external relations, David Surgala, vice president for finance and administration, Gerald Commerford, acting dean of students, and Karen Landis, assistant director of fraternity and sorority affairs. They hoped to see smoother relations between the Greek

See IFC page A2

Speaker discusses the struggles of North Korean refugees

MICHELLE LAXER
News Editor

Hannah Song, associate director of Liberty in North Korea (LiNK), spoke to students on Tuesday in Rooke Auditorium about the struggles and hardships of North Korean refugees in their attempt to find a better life in China or, ideally, South Korea. Song's presentation was complimented with a documentary entitled "Seoul Train," which followed the experiences of three refugee families.

Song's presentation explained the many human rights violations for which the North Korean government is responsible.

"There is no freedom of speech, of the press or religion," Song said. "They are completely closed off and there is no free flow of information."

The only media source, the Korean Central News Agency, focuses on the great leader and government.

According to Song, the North Korean famine resulted in the deaths of approximately 3 million people. The government received over $1 billion in food aid, which contradicts the North Korean ideology of "juche," or self-reliance. This money, instead of going to help the suffering public, is diverted to government loyalists and the military.

"Thirty to forty percent of children are malnourished," Song said.

Song briefly discussed the treatment of North Korean refugees and prisoners in the 12 prison or concentration camps throughout the country. It is believed that approximately 12,000 North Koreans are detained in these camps. Some camps are made for mindless labor to punish citizens, and some are for torture and interrogating purposes.

North Koreans can be placed in camps for the simplest "offenses" to the government, such as displaying exposure to a culture other than North Korea's, complaining about the government or way of life or "sitting on a newspaper picture of Kim Jong-il on a park bench," Song said. If a citizen is placed into a camp for suspected treason, three generations of his or her family

See LINK page A2

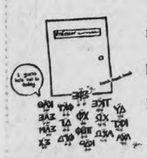
BSG executive council for 2007

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

From left to right, Sarah Cummings '08, Andy Logan '09, Cara Jellison '08 and Lindsey Pierce '08 were elected as President, VP of Operations, VP of Finance, and VP of Administration, respectively, for the 2007 BSG executive council.

INSIDE THIS ISSUE

OPINIONS



The Greeks are making an effort to maintain positive relationships on campus. What about the faculty?

A6

A&E

'The Return' of Sarah Michelle Gellar to the silver screen fails to dazzle audiences.

A10

NEWS

Formal colonel speaks to members of the campus community about the war on terror.

B4

SPORTS

After facing a difficult start to the season, Men's basketball aims to improve.

B3

Public Safety Log

Wednesday, November 8

FIRE ALARM—The Mods: Caused by burnt food.

FIRE ALARM—The Mods: Cause unknown.

MEDICAL ASSIST—Langone Center: Student transported to Evangelical Emergency Room for an elbow injury.

Thursday, November 9

FOUND PROPERTY—Weis Center: Bicycle recovered.

SUSPICIOUS VEHICLE—Bucknell West: Vehicle in the area harassing students. It was gone on arrival.

VEHICLE ACCIDENT—Bucknell West: Vehicle accident with injuries. Report filed with state.

SUSPICIOUS VEHICLE—Cowan Complex: Vehicle parked at complex. Determined to be a student vehicle.

Friday, November 10

LOST PROPERTY—Fraternity Road: Portfolio lost.

THEFT—Langone Center: Bicycle taken from the downhill side of the L.C.

Saturday, November 11

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—Tennis Courts: Student cited for underage consumption of alcohol.

THEFT—Gerhard Fieldhouse: Amplifier taken from the Fieldhouse.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Langone Center: Off campus resident transported to Evangelical Emergency Room for treatment of unresponsiveness.

FIRE ALARM—Sigma Alpha Mu fraternity: Alarm caused by smoke machine.

Sunday, November 12

SUSPICIOUS VEHICLE—Seventh St. & Moore Avenue: Vehicle driving around campus. Vehicle stopped and advised to leave campus.

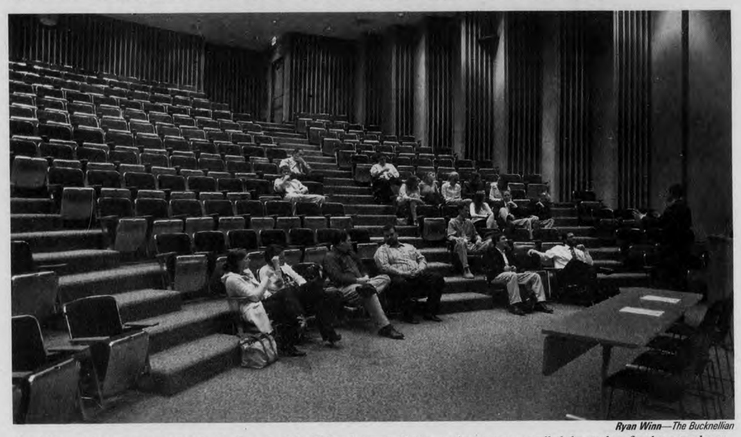
PROPERTY LOST—Moore Avenue: Non-University person reports a fanny pack may be missing out of his vehicle.

Tuesday, November 14

BURGLARY—Langone Center: Basketball tickets taken from office.

FIRE ALARM—The Mods: Caused by cooking.

Faculty lacks representation at IFC and Panhell information session



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

The IFC and Panhel presentation in the Forum of the Elaine Langone Center at 5 p.m. was cancelled due to low faculty attendance. Members of the Greek community were disappointed with the lack of interest.

IFC From page A1

System and faculty members in the future.

Michelle Wirkus '07, president of the Panhellenic Council, and Ben Portman '07, president of the Interfraternity Council (IFC), represented the University's Greek system on Wednesday.

"We really need more faculty to get involved in order to promote change," Wirkus said. "It's very hard to help the situation if more faculty aren't willing to come to these types of events to show their support."

Portman said the IFC and Panhellenic Council were very disappointed at the turnout.

"This forum was designed for both parties to engage in open discussion and learn more from one another. We sincerely hope that in the future more faculty would be willing to make the first step leading to better understanding and cooperation," Portman said. "As we continue to grow and groom the system we hope that the faculty will … help us combat the challenges we continue to face. We understand that this is only the first of many steps to building the lines of communication necessary to having strong working relationships in the future."

Leaders within the Greek community hoped that with a new focus on the Plan for Prominence they could help mend the shaky relations between the two parties.

Improving the plan also provided an opportunity for members of the Greek system to become better educated about its goals.

The objective of the plan, formulated in 1999, is to define the responsibilities, guidelines, policies and expectations of fraternities and sororities at the University today, and to create a shared vision of the University Greek community by identifying goals for the future.

David Myers '07, vice president of the IFC, said that before the Plan for Prominence, the faculty was much less inclined to view the Greeks in a positive light as the Greek chapters had less guidance and the system appeared to be largely focused on social activities.

"Since the Plan for Prominence has become a fundamental guideline for how our chapters function, the faculty has been more receptive to Greek life," Myers said.

The IFC hoped the information sessions would convince faculty members of the tremendous steps the Greek system has taken and all its positive contributions.

The IFC also plans to set forth guidelines for the various chapters to follow.

"We know we have a responsibility to the University, and we will continually try to improve our houses to make them safer," Portman said.

During the presentation, Portman acknowledged the instances of violence, underage drinking and sexual assault which occur at Greek parties and events, and said the IFC plans to increase relations with Public Safety to spread awareness among members.

In addition to outlining methods to improve the Greek system, the IFC attempted to bring light to challenges the system faces today. Greek members note that one main hardship is the high demand on their time.

"Since the Greeks have come a long way in proving themselves to the University, there have been many Greek sponsorships that have been proposed, which have put a high degree of stress on their members," Portman said.

Joe Valickus '09, president of Delta Upsilon fraternity said the faculty should "look beyond the stereotypical notions of fraternity and sorority life and understand that there is much more to the Greek system than what is frequently broadcasted to the community."

Valickus said the Greek system is built on the foundations of community outreach and social support, which are very beneficial to the University as a whole.

In addition to speaking to the members of the faculty, the Greek organizations deemed Wednesday "Faculty Appreciation Day" in which they hoped to honor the many contributions of the faculty to the University. Members delivered cookies, donuts and coffee to various departments on campus to show the faculty their appreciation.

Wirkus and Portman are confident their successors, Stacey Swift '08 and Dave Quinn '08, will continue to work hard in pursuing all the goals outlined in the Plan for Prominence, and advocate the Greek system's desire for better relations with the faculty.

Song describes North Korean human rights violations will also be placed into a camp.

LINK From page A1

Much of Song's presentation focused on the struggles North Korean refugees experienced when trying to flee across the border to China to escape the human rights violations. There are approximately 400,000 refugees hiding in China, hoping to gain political asylum from the government or to continue their flight for freedom into South Korea.

Song said even though North Koreans flee the country, they potentially face even more difficulties in China. The Chinese government has an agreement with North Korea to hunt down their refugees and repatriate them. The Chinese have gone as far as placing bounties on North Korean refugees. If caught and returned to North Korea, refugees face either imprisonment in a concentration camp or, depending on the severity of the case, public execution.

"Seoul Train," explained the three tactics refugees could use to try and gain freedom from North Korea. The most successful was to seek asylum, or official refugee status, from the Chinese embassy. Refugees also try running through a country's consulate gates and then seeking further aid there. Others choose to sneak through China to Mongolia or South Korea using underground railroad networks run by LiNK agents and other human rights activists.

Song also discussed simple acts students could do to provide some help for the situation.

The LiNK discussion was sponsored by the Korean Cultural Association (KCA), Multicultural Student Services and the department of sociology and anthropology.

"I'm always thinking about helping out and I wanted to create awareness at Bucknell," Sunny Lee '08 said. Lee was able to bring LiNK to campus, with help from KCA president Annie Bartholomew '08.

LiNK is a non-profit, nonpartisan and non-religious international non-governmental organization. It strives to educate the public about the ongoing human rights violations of North Korean citizens and their struggle to gain freedom.

They work closely with the underground railroad networks in China and Mongolia by providing agents to help refugees along their way, along with food, clothing and protection. LiNK also created an orphanage for North Korean children in China called Safe Haven.

LiNK does not receive any donations or grants from the U.S. government. All their relief work is funded through private donations, so fundraising to contribute to LiNK is a great way to help.

"[Students] can bring knowledge to the public by hosting events and discussion panels," Song said.

For more immediate participation, LiNK is always looking for new activists to help with the underground railroad networks and field work in North Korea.

"A lot of people don't know about this, but it's important for them to know," Yuri Nakamura '10 said. "Ignorance is not bliss."

PILOT From page A1

Midkiff said the Deans' Office will examine where other conflicts exist and determine the criteria it will use to choose which students belong in such a program.

"If it does not work, we will not do it anymore. It has to be a successful experiment to continue," Midkiff said.

Non-athletes know very little about the pilot program.

According to Midkiff, some secrecy exists because the program is a pilot.

"[These] things don't get talked about [initially] to make it easier for students and faculty. Let's see if it's worth pursuing [first]," Midkiff said.

The data from this semester's registration, including the day-to-day figures of students registering, course tallies and course enrollment, will be analyzed over winter break. The University will also look at how these students' schedules are balanced.

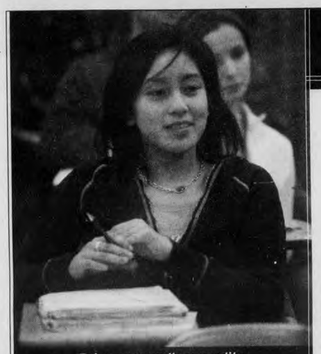
"Part of my job is to view enrollment," Midkiff said.

Some varsity athletes see the benefits of such a program.

"I haven't heard if [the program] has been beneficial or not yet," said a member of the women's track and field team. "As a senior, it didn't affect me as much as it could for the underclassmen. It could be helpful for scheduling labs."

Other students said specific majors should have preferences.

"Engineers have minimal choices and they should have top priority on getting the electives required for the major," Scott Teagarden '10 said.



Bring some college credits back to college with you!

Fairfield University
Jesuit. Personal. Powerful.

Winter Intersession Courses
Put your winter break to good use!

Earn 3-Credits in One or Four Weeks
One Week Sessions: January 3 – 9, 2007
Four Week Online Sessions: January 2 – 31, 2007

Subject areas:

Art History*	Ethics	Math*	Psychology*
Applied Ethics*	History	Management*	Religious Studies*
American Studies	Italian	Music	Sociology
Business	Literature	Politics*	Studio Arts
Economics			Writing*

(Courses also available in online format!)*

More course & registration info at:
www.fairfield.edu/ucwisbu
Register by Phone: (203) 254-4288
Registration deadline is Dec. 20, 2006

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE AT Fairfield UNIVERSITY
Jesuit. Personal. Powerful.
Fairfield, Connecticut

A Bucknell Tradition Since 1968

bull run inn

Open 7 days a week:
Mon. – Sat. 11:30 a.m.—2 a.m. and Sunday 11:30 a.m. – midnight

605 Market St., downtown Lewisburg
ph: (570) 524-2572
www.bullruninn.com
(check for current features and events)

Now serving
SUNDAY BRUNCH
Menu Available 11:30 a.m.—2 p.m.

POP QUIZ
Tuesday's—9—11 p.m.
Specials—Prizes—Giveaways

Monday Night Football @ 9 p.m.

First year students introduced to the course selection process

COURSES From page A1

all, many of them could not log on to register via myBucknell at their designated times, although this might be understandable due to heavy user loads."

First-year students seemed to have the most problems with registration.

"It brought up a lot of concerns among students who have never registered online before. They were also not informed how to get the alternative PIN number. Therefore, my colleagues and I at the ISR Tech Desk needed to be always at their services," Songsermsawas said. "Some of them even made their registrations at our desk because they did not know that they also needed their original PIN to register. Lastly, they do not know how to put their names on the waiting list online."

Amoramenkum Foy '10 enjoyed the online registration.

"Registering online seemed more convenient than manually turning in the registration form. It was extremely helpful to get feedback on the availability of courses immediately after filling out the online form," Foy said. "I [found] registering online provided me the resources for a rapid registration."

> "It brought up a lot of concerns among students who have never registered online before. They were also not informed how to get the alternative PIN number. Therefore, my colleagues and I at the ISR Tech Desk needed to be always at their services."
>
> —Tisorn Songsermsawas '10

Foy also found selecting alternative classes to be helpful. "I do however find it very important to have various alternatives at hand because one may come across an unexpected course conflict. One way to make the process more convenient is to provide the option of printing out a week's schedule of courses following the completion of the registration process," Foy said.

Stephen Norton '10 had a different experience from Foy's.

"This is one of the most frustrating processes of the school year," Norton said. "Not only are you choosing classes that shape your future, but then you find out they're closed. It's so disheartening that the only classes left are the ones at eight in the morning or ones you don't have interest in. Although some of the classes you're forced into may turn out to be interesting, why spend thousands of dollars and not be able to choose?"

Overall, the Registrar's Office has worked tirelessly to complete this years registration successfully aside from minor setbacks.

Robert Midkiff, associate dean of academic affairs, discussed the progress of registration on Monday.

"Registration is proceeding the way it always does," Midkiff said. "More and more junior and seniors are using the online registration while more sophomores are registering manually. There are always little glitches such as when myBucknell becomes unavailable."

New ticket delivery system falls short

Students resort to standing in line at the Box Office

TICKETS From page A1

"Our intentions were good, the plan was great, but the technology just wasn't there," Mackey said.

Mackey said the current campus server could not handle the simultaneous demand for hundreds of tickets.

With the basketball team growing in popularity, there is a student demand for tickets to be available online.

Erin Doyle '08 could not attend any of last season's games because she had class when tickets were distributed.

"It's very inconvenient for a lot of students," Doyle said. "Buying tickets through myBucknell would be easy, convenient and allow a lot more students to go."

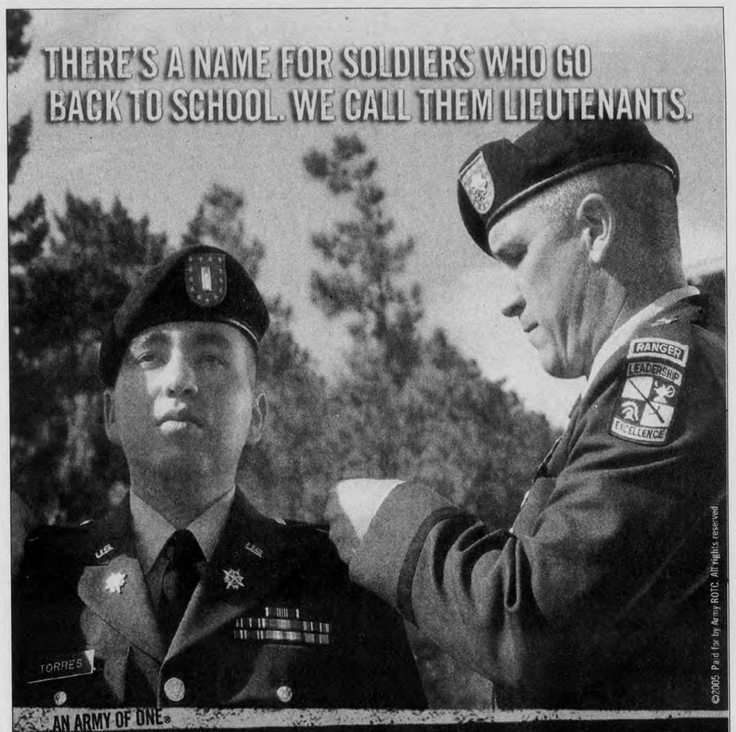
Mackey said that while the chance of obtaining tickets via myBucknell this season is slim, he and his department plan to work on it in the future.

The Office of Communications "is very dedicated" to this plan, and "there is always hope," said Mackey.

For the rest of the season students are encouraged to continue to get their tickets from the box office outside of Sojka Pavilion.

"I feel that supporting the basketball program is very important," Tommy Murray '08 said. "They are not only our fellow classmates and friends, but they have given us something to brag and be proud about for many years to come. Although getting tickets online would be a lot easier for us all, I think most students are willing to give up some free time to stand in the long lines for the tickets."

Murray and other students did line up for tickets Sunday and the Bison vs. Wake Forest was a sold-out game Tuesday night.



THERE'S A NAME FOR SOLDIERS WHO GO BACK TO SCHOOL. WE CALL THEM LIEUTENANTS.
RANGER
LEADERSHIP
EXCELLENCE
TORRES
AN ARMY OF ONE.
©2005 Paid for by Army ROTC. All rights reserved.

Green to Gold is the Army ROTC program for enlisted Soldiers to become Army Officers. Get your college degree and become one of the Army's newest leaders.

ENROLL IN ARMY ROTC
BECOME AN ARMY OFFICER
U.S.ARMY

All National Guard & Reserve Soldiers interested in participating in Army ROTC call CPT Griffiths @570-577-1013.
Check out our website, http://armyrotc.com/edu/bucknell

News Briefs

South Africa recognizes same-sex marriage

On Tuesday, the South African Parliament passed the Civil Union Bill, which will recognize same-sex marriages. The bill passed with an overwhelming majority of 230-41, with three abstentions, reported The Washington Post. It allows for the "voluntary union of two persons, which is solemnized and registered by either a marriage or civil union." The victory was not a surprise, despite homosexuality being illegal in Zimbabwe, Kenya, Uganda, Nigeria, Tanzania, Ghana and other sub-Saharan countries. Some African countries are still considering constitutional amendments to prohibit same-sex marriages. The South African bill is not expected to be opposed in the National Council of Provinces before it is presented to President Thabo Mbeki to be signed into law. "When we attained our democracy, we sought to distinguish ourselves from an unjust painful past, by declaring that never again shall it be that any South African will be discriminated against on the basis of color, creed, culture and sex," Home Affairs Minister Nosiviwe Mapisa-Nqakula said to The Washington Post.

Shark maims tourist

A Canadian tourist swimming off the coast of Maui, Hawaii beach was attacked by a shark Saturday. Kyle Gruen, 29, suffered leg and hand injuries. According to The Washington Post, Gruen was swimming about 30-40 feet offshore when the shark grabbed the left side of his body. Jeff Gruen, the victim's twin brother, said, "He was just swimming along when just all of a sudden it got him. He pulled away and kicked it off, and it took off right away." Gruen was taken to Maui Memorial Medical Center and was listed in stable condition. Authorities closed beaches one mile in either direction of the attack as a precaution.

Active volcanic island discovered near Tonga

According to two separate reports from passing vessels, a new island has risen in the South Pacific near Tonga. Crewmembers from the Maiken, a yacht that left Tonga in August, reported an active volcanic island they spotted. One crewmember identified as Haken, wrote it, was "one mile in diameter with four peaks and a central crater smoking with steam and, once in a while, an outburst high in the sky with lava and ashes." According to CNN.com, the crew marveled at pumice stone floating in the water before discovering the island. A separate sighting of the island was provided by fishing boat captain Siaosi Fenukitau. "A previous eruption in the area generated a small island and similar fields of floating pumice," said Richard Wunderman, editor of the Bulletin of the Global Volcanism Network. There has been no official confirmation of the island from Tongan authorities.

New Zealand allows text speak in schools

The New Zealand Qualifications Authority announced Friday that high school students will be allowed to use "text-speak" in their answers to this year's national exams. Text-speak is the use of abbreviated words, such as "ttyl" for "talk to you later." It has become widely popular among teenagers. Credit will be awarded if an answer using "text-speak" demonstrates a clear understanding of the material, but authorities still strongly discourage its use. "In some exams, including English, text abbreviations would be penalized," said Bail Haque, the authority's deputy chief executive for qualifications according to CNN.com. Many teacher associations throughout the country fear this latest move will destroy the English language. Some critics have claimed the decision is degrading to the National Certificate of Educational Achievement.

Appointment Setter

Flex-Hours
Part-Time
Great for Students

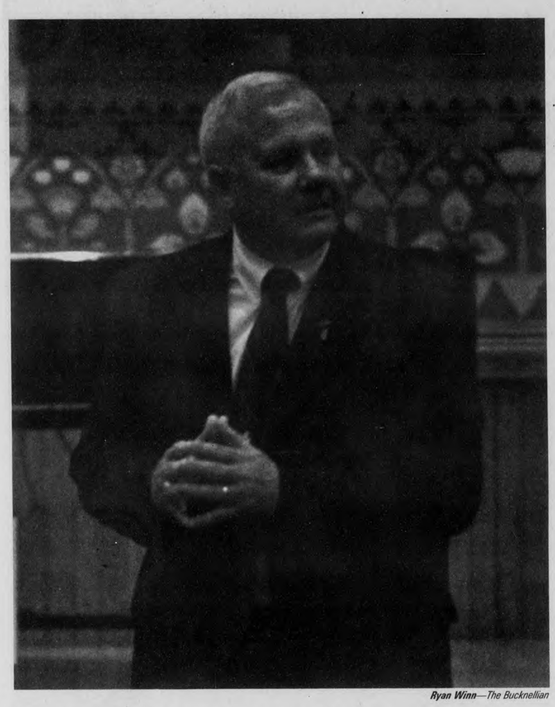
Must have a great voice and know how to qualify potential customers.

We Do Metal Roofs
a division of Prudential Realty

570-522-6555

Former colonel speaks about war on terror

Reitzell discusses keys strategies for victory in Iraq



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Former Colonel John Reitzell speaks about the war in Iraq and the importance of analyzing past mistakes. Reitzell participated in more than 35 counter-terrorism operations worldwide.

By Wes Kinter
Writer

Colonel John Reitzell said the country's war on terror has been marked by its inability to follow through with action, in a lecture on Wednesday in Bucknell Hall. He said the history of the movement in the United States has had an impact on the global fight today.

Reitzell said the key to victory in the war is closely examining past mistakes. He said by remaining strong and maintaining firm ground the United States would succeed.

"The job is to win America's war, and that's what we have to do today in Iraq," Reitzell said.

Reitzell took part in over 35 counter-terrorism operations worldwide, was deployed in a classified assignment under the Joint Special Operations Command and had one mission chronicled in Tom Clancy's "Shadow Warriors."

"[Reitzell] led a distinguished military career marked by countless awards and achievements," said Scott Gosnell '09, vice president of events for the Bucknell Conservatives Club.

He said a trend in American government throughout military and political history is to never quite "close the deal" on important issues.

"We did not sufficiently stamp out the threat in the Treaty of Versailles, allowing a new threat to rise," Reitzell said regarding the massive losses the United States and other countries suffered during World War I.

"What signal does that send to our future enemies? You stick it out long enough and in the end we'll pack up and leave," Reitzell said.

Reitzell further cited the effects of mistaken approaches to policy through a lecture on the legacy left by former President Carter's administration. Reitzell said one of the more important effects of Carter's presidency was his "dismantling of the CIA." In reflection, he said, "Think that hurt us on 9/11?"

He then discussed the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks and the current war on terror and in Iraq.

"No U.S. soldiers were on Iraqi soil on Sept. 11, yet we were cowardly attacked in our own country," Reitzell said. "Whether or not we pull out in Iraq, we'll have to fight them eventually. We must have a stable country in the Middle East."

He said America does not realize the scope of the present global war.

"You sit and watch the television, but you don't really believe we are at war," Reitzell said. "We are at war, folks."

Following the lecture, members of the audience had the opportunity to respond to Reitzell's remarks and ask questions.

Ghayda Ali, visiting assistant professor of Arabic, disagreed with Reitzell that the Sept. 11 terrorist activities were connected to Iraq. Ali said he did not see the "proof" Reitzell offered as valid.

When asked if we can ever win the war in Iraq, Reitzell said, "Yes. Deeply in my military heart, yes."

> "No U.S. soldiers were on Iraqi soil on Sept. 11, yet we were cowardly attacked in our own country. Whether or not we pull out in Iraq, we'll have to fight them eventually. We must have a stable country in the Middle East."
>
> —Colonel John Reitzell

BUCKNELL BISON

BISON GOOD SPORTS

Bucknell Pre-game Mixer!

November 18

11:30 a.m. to 12:45 p.m.

Before the Bucknell vs Colgate football game

Christy Mathewson-Memorial Stadium

Open to Bucknell Students (with valid B.U.I.D.)

Free wings, chips and drinks!

Sponsors: Towne Tavern, Lewisburg Hotel, Highlands Pub, Yuengling

Don't Drink and Drive!

"Writing is a struggle against silence."
—Carlos Fuentes

Write for News
email etu001@

BRYNWOOD 535 Inc. Rentals

In Lewisburg Since 1969

Your search begins..... and ends here.

Professional 24/7 Maintenance Staff

Apartments (furnished & unfurnished)

Houses for professionals students families

Rental Garages Also Available

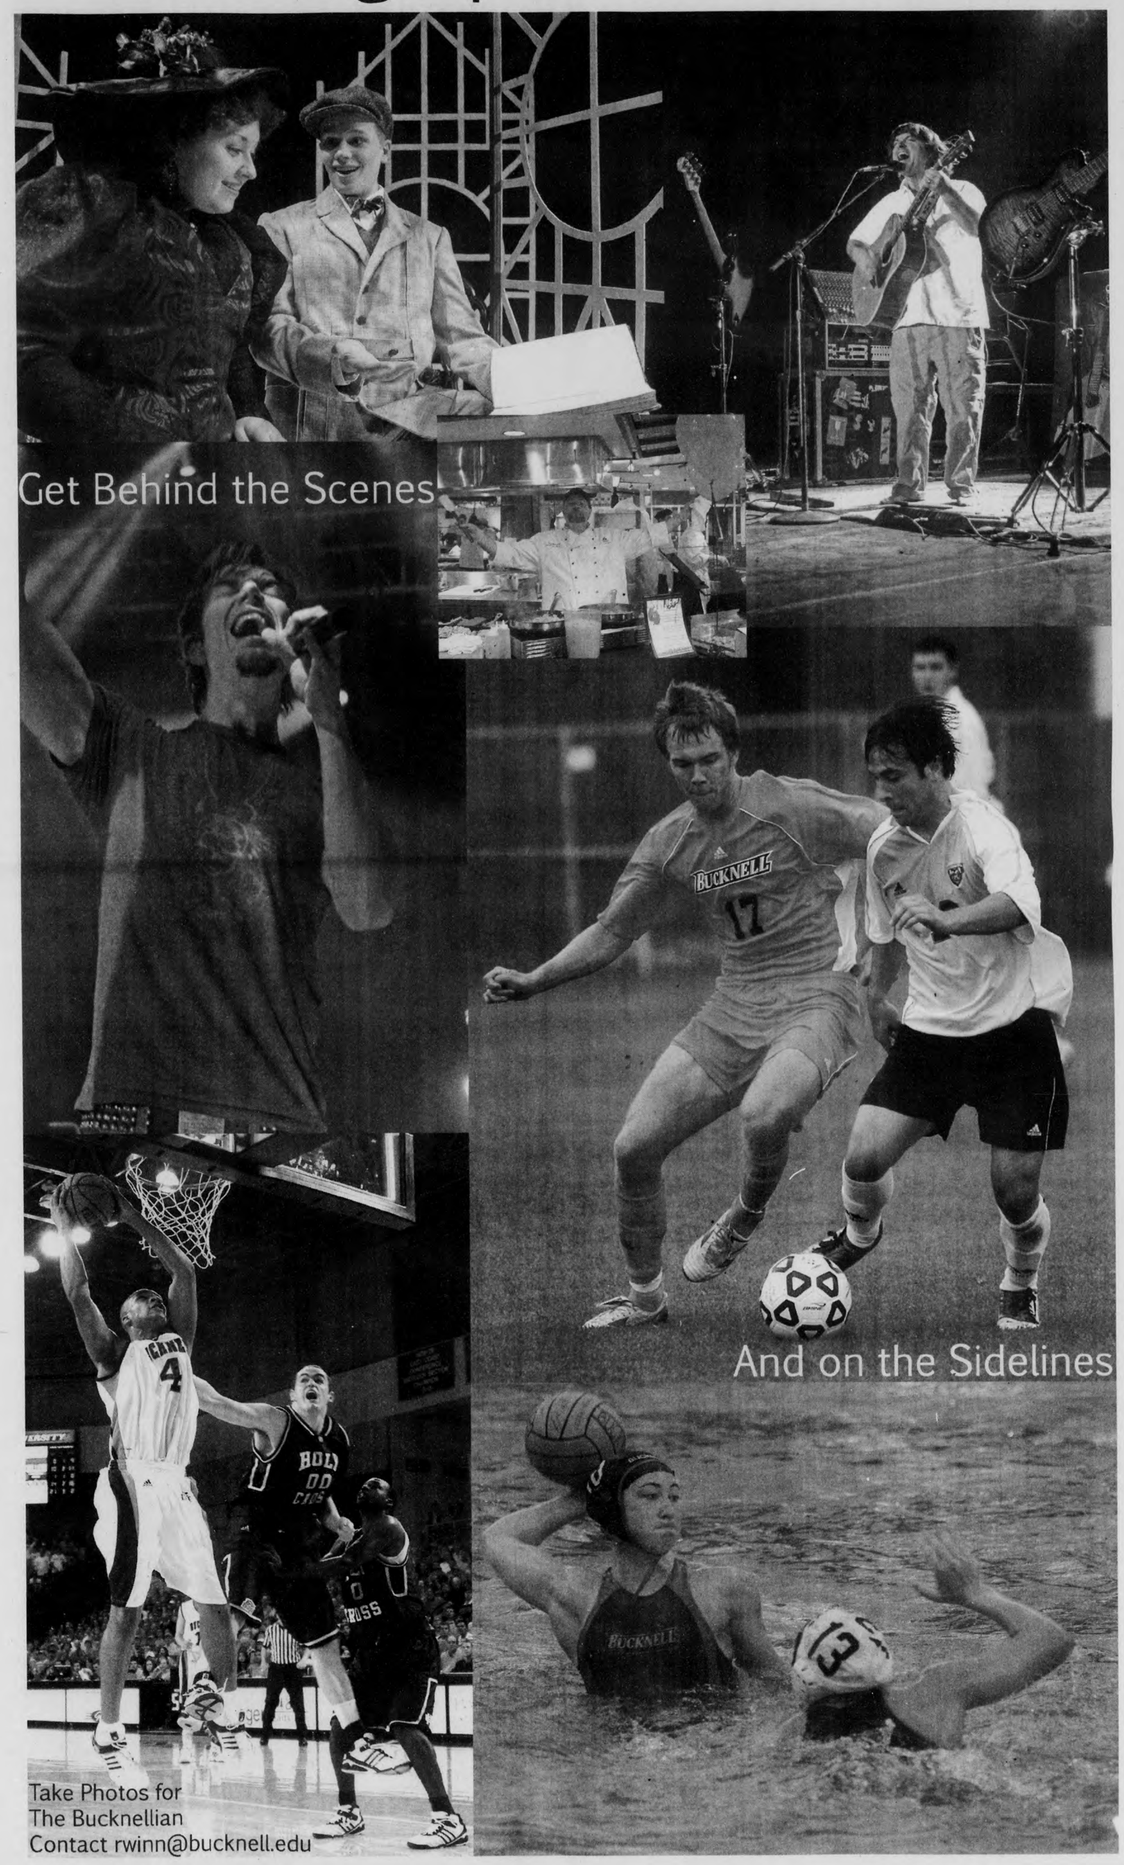
Office & Retail Space 300—3,000 sq ft

brynwoodrentals.com

611 Market Street, Lewisburg

ph: 570.524.2121 x 3

Photographers wanted:



The Bucknellian
Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue
Volume 138, Number 11
C-3952 Bucknell University
Lewisburg, Pa. 17837
(570) 577-1520
bucknellian@bucknell.edu
http://www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Editor-in-Chief
Catherine Heverling '07

Associate Editor of Content
Jamie Jacobson '08

Associate Editor of Layout
Rina Van Orden '08

Business Manager
Jared Napolitano '08

Senior Editor
Drew Larson '08

News Editors
Evan Unger '09
Nilanjana Saha '09
Michelle Laxer '09

Opinions Editors
Hallie Stebbins '08
Michael Dippery '08

Sports Editors
Matthew Saylor '08
Barbara Perlman '09
Brian Mulligan '08

Features Editors
Julia Fuchs '09
Brianna DelValle '10

Arts & Entertainment Editors
Kimberly Kane '08
Lily Beauvilliers '09

Photography Editors
Ryan Winn '08
Ellyn Ercolano '09

Chief Copy Editors
Kathleen Conti '08
Greg Hamilton '08

Advertising Managers
Meredith Reighard '07
Kat Wallis '07
Katie Casteel '08
Emily Senko '08

Office Manager
Kate Wood '07

Circulation Manager
Adam Kahler '07

Cartoonist
Juliana Su '09

Adviser
James F. Lee

Op-Ed Policy
The editorials of The Bucknellian reflect the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the editor-in-chief. All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

Letters to the editor must be received by noon on the Tuesday before publication. Letters may not be longer than 600 words and the Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny or edit any letter to the editor. Letters must contain the writer's name and phone number (used for verification purposes and not to be printed). Mail or e-mail letters using the addresses above.

Publishing Information
The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester entirely by Bucknell students. All published material is chosen by the paper's Editorial Board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its adviser, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

Subscription Information
Subscriptions are available for $45 per year or $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian Subscriptions, Bucknell University, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, Pa. 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

Members of the local community may pick up a complimentary issue each week, with the understanding of one free issue per person. If you would like more for a nominal fee, contact the print office.

Advertising Policy
The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements if deemed offensive, illegal or in bad taste. Advertisements reflect the opinion of the advertiser and not necessarily that of The Bucknellian. For advertising rates and information, please contact the advertising department at (570) 577-1085. Copyright © 2006 The Bucknellian

The Bucknellian EDITORIAL

Professors too quick to reject Greeks

The Bucknellian staff gathers every Wednesday night to discuss the editorial topic for each issue. Nearly every week we sit in a circle tossing ideas back and forth only to find that the heart of the matter is student apathy.

But this Wednesday night the staff discussed the positive steps students in the Interfraternity and Panhellenic Councils have taken toward improving relations with faculty members.

And we found that the heart of the matter was lack of interest from the faculty.

Wednesday was designated "Faculty Appreciation Day" by the Greek community. Greek students delivered cookies, donuts and coffee to departments on campus and dressed formally to express unity among the organization.

At noon, the Greek councils held an information session in the Forum of the Elaine Langone Center meant to inform faculty about the past, present and future of Greek life at the University.

Four members of the faculty were present for that session, and the presenters abandoned an empty forum at the 5 p.m. session.

Now it would be ludicrous to say students look solely to the faculty for guidance on how to live their lives, but a university is meant to be a marketplace of ideas. It certainly would not hurt for even a dozen members of this tight-knit academic community to show a little interest in something the majority of students on campus are involved in: Greek life.

Members of the IFC and other Greek organizations have gone to great lengths to engage the faculty in the Plan for Prominence and its positive effects on the Greek community.

While professors are quick to point fingers and blame fraternities and sororities for the abundance of alcohol use on campus, they do not seem too interested in the possibility that Greeks might offer more to campus life than parties.

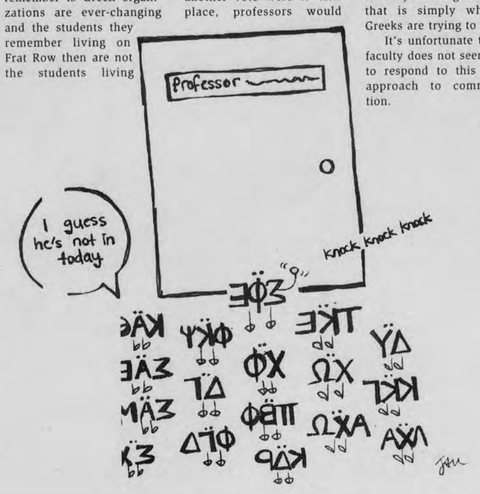
This is not to say professors do not have the right to an opinion, but they should base that opinion on facts.

There are still professors on campus who, years ago, voted to abolish Greek organizations at the University. What professors need to remember is Greek organizations are ever-changing and the students they remember living on Frat Row then are not the students living there today.

The point of the forum was to provide the faculty with information about the current Greek system so if another vote were to take place, professors would have an accurate and up-to-date frame of reference to consult first.

In any small community, it does not hurt to get to know your neighbors, and that is simply what the Greeks are trying to do.

It's unfortunate that the faculty does not seem ready to respond to this mature approach to communication.



Letters to the Editor

BSG executive board supports Strategic Plan

To the Editor:

We are writing in response to the letter to the editor written by Charles Sackrey, retired professor of economics, in the Nov. 10 issue of The Bucknellian. The Bucknell Student Government (BSG) Executive Board is quite concerned and puzzled by Sackrey's pessimistic response to the Plan for Bucknell. Despite Sackrey's objections, the Plan embodies the values of the University's entire community and we continue to support its vision and strategies wholeheartedly.

As a point of clarification, the Vision of the Plan was drafted primarily by University students. The vision statement reads: "To provide students with the premier undergraduate experience in American higher education." University students are expected by faculty, administrators and themselves to excel in and out of the classroom. As the creators and bearers of these lofty aspirations, we ought to expect nothing less than the same effort from our University. In accordance with our values, this very statement was affirmed and supported unanimously by the students, faculty and trustees of this University.

Students have come to learn at the University from faculty and administrators alike that nothing is too grandiose and lofty to pursue. The University attitude is to strive for the best and this vision encapsulates this very ideal. While seemingly unattainable for some, trying to reach these goals is in no way absurd and irrational. Not supporting these aspirations is problematically pessimistic and against all which makes this University great.

President Brian C. Mitchell is one individual in particular who rose to the challenge students have asked of him: to enhance our personal development and advance our University. People ought to refrain from public, personal attacks and instead evaluate him on his effectiveness at the position for which he was chosen. Mitchell has been incredibly productive in his role as president over the past two and a half years. He has involved students in the decision-making process and has encouraged campus dialogue and cooperation among all constituencies. Furthermore, the University endowment has increased significantly during his presidency and he has truly "[brought] Bucknell to the world—and [brought] the world to Bucknell" through various programs, grants and his business travels.

Students recognize the changes on campus and see the Plan as motivation for everyone to do better and achieve more. Thanks to the initiative of current students, faculty, staff and Mitchell, the vision of the Plan for Bucknell is indeed being fulfilled. Our progress through it will go as far as what we challenge ourselves to do and we intend to exceed all expectations.

Sincerely,

Adam Weinberg, President
JT Dean, VP Operations
John Kimball, VP Finance
Lindsey Pierce, VP Administration
BSG Executive Board

Students must respect downtown

To the Editor:

As a University fraternity alumnus now living in the borough, I would like to suggest that the Bucknell Student Government (BSG) might have more success improving relations between students living off-campus and the borough if, instead of attempting to impose respect by standardizing leases, its officers showed some genuine leadership by recognizing that part of the problem is the behavior and attitude of the students themselves.

Walking my dog down South Sixth Street on a recent Sunday, I was appalled at the sheer volume of litter on the sidewalks and lawns.

Trash spilled over into the street the whole distance from Market Street to St. George: dozens of empty plastic cups tossed underneath first-floor windows, across the sidewalk and up the street; garbage, bottles, what looked like an entire ream of blank paper—trash was everywhere. I saw a similar, if not quite as extensive, display of thoughtless disrespect in the middle of the week.

Perhaps if, as the students believe, the Lewisburg police do not respect them, it is because the students clearly do not respect the community and the laws the police are responsible for protecting and enforcing: laws against disturbing the peace, against public drunkenness, against littering. How hard is it to pick up trash after a party?

Instead of attempting to impose standardization on landlords, whose livelihoods depend to some extent on their protecting themselves with leases with which they are comfortable (an initiative that reinforces the stereotype of self-centered arrogance that all-too-many—although by no means most—University students have engendered over the years), BSG should point out to off-campus students that respect is earned—not negotiated, not imposed, not standardized—and suggest they clean up their act before complaining about how ill-treated they are.

Sincerely,

Michael Derman '71

Cheering fans fuel school spirit

To the Editor:

My husband and I are veterans of countless high school and college sporting events, and I think we have heard just about every chant and boisterous cheer and jeer known to the sporting fan. We were among the crowd at the Parents Weekend football game against Fordham, and yes, we were among the masses of parents chuckling at the "Fordham's Socks" chant, as noted by Bryan Metz '08 in his letter to the editor, "Fan hand-holding stifles enthusiasm" (Nov. 10).

I thought it was one of the more clever and harmless chants I have witnessed over the years. It certainly caught the attention of our daughter, who loves the idea of school spirit surrounding sports.

So imagine my surprise when I read in Bryan's letter that the chant is being banned because it doesn't comply with the "Bison Good Sports" program. While I am for eliminating vulgar language and profanity from sporting events, as the program aims to do, "Fordham's Socks" hardly seems to fit that bill. This particular case certainly sounds like some sort of political correctness run amok.

Let the students be enthusiastic about their team. This chant was not hurting anyone and seemed to contribute to a large wave of school spirit.

Sincerely,

Patrice Mitchell

Mandatory service encourages community cooperation

All students should follow Greeks' lead and contribute to community

By Lily Beauvilliers
Arts & Entertainment Editor

University students participate in community service in at least 100 ways, from tutoring with Bucknell Buddies to involvement in Alpha Phi Omega to volunteering at RiverWoods Senior Living Community. Students also donate blood during the American Red Cross Blood Drive, hair through Locks of Love and of course money in a variety of ways, such as the University's United Way campaign. We must be one socially conscious campus, right?

Not quite. Plenty of students donate time and money because they want to, but some students undeniably do it because they have to. What is forcing them? Participation in the Greek system.

In order to meet the Plan for Prominence's standards on social responsibility, fraternities and sororities are required to "establish philanthropic and community service goals and plans and implement events and projects that will assist the chapter in meeting those goals," according to Initiative #23 of the Plan.

To meet these objectives, fraternities and sororities require members to volunteer for and help with philanthropic events.

Inevitably, then, some students volunteer simply because of their Greek affiliation. Is this the "right" reason to be volunteering? Or should fraternities and sororities attempt to raise a social consciousness in their members, hoping that knowledge of the problems in the world outside the Bucknell "bubble" will get them to volunteer on their own?

I believe mandatory community service is the number-one aspect of the Greek system on campus. To explain, I will have to tell a personal story.

In Pennsylvania, high school students are required to complete a senior project. In my high school, students are encouraged to take on a volunteer project during their junior year.

Even if volunteering remains a chore because it is mandatory, his or her work is still valid and important.

Never before had I considered doing community service, but my junior year I began volunteering at a used bookstore whose profits benefit my local hospital. I had such an amazing experience, I decided to try to make community service a part of my life even after the senior project was due.

I can only hope Greek students who may have previously dreaded volunteering find, in projects sponsored by their fraternities and sororities, the same fulfilling experience I found. Hopefully, this participation will lead them to pursue volunteer projects for the rest of their lives.

For the sake of argument, let us posit that a student begins volunteering and does not enjoy the experience or does not make any life-altering decisions like I did. Even if volunteering remains a chore because it is mandatory, his or her work is still valid and important.

When students come to the University, they become citizens of the Lewisburg community. As college students, we are in a privileged position—all we are expected to do, day in and day out, is go to class, do homework and maybe hold down a work-study job or two. A student's life can seem overwhelming, but many of our basic needs, like food and shelter, are taken care of.

We have a responsibility to get involved in this community. For four years, we attend classes a short drive away from Lewisburg High School, RiverWoods, Evangelical Hospital and Geisinger Medical Center. The truth is, Greeks should not be the only ones required to volunteer. Community service should be a requirement for all University students, as part of a well-rounded education and an aid to personal growth.

National ties let immigrants feel a sense of self and community

Populations of American cities naturally segregate by cultural identity

By Soo-Hyun Lee
Contributing Writer

A "diaspora," according to the Encarta dictionary, is the "dispersion of people, language, or culture that was formerly concentrated in one place." When applying this term to the United States, the melting pot of the world, diasporas do not seem to register conceptually. The chief sociological characteristic of the United States is that it is composed of states, counties and ethnicities.

I have observed, living both in the United States and abroad for equal durations, that there is a certain tribal characteristic to diasporas. I mean tribal in the sense that there is an almost natural segregation that occurs in society between peoples of different socio-economic classes, interests or races. It is within this framework that I wish to discuss the Asian identity, as I understand it as an expatriate Korean-American, by an observational theory that I call the "regenerative identity."

Every city in the United States, it seems, is severely fragmented. Its peoples are separated categorically, according to ethnicity, religious affiliation, sexual orientation, professional status and so on. This is a typical pattern, just as how species of animals remain in homogenous packs so that they function with greater fluidity and cohesion.

The reason for this is that it is much easier to assume characteristics and principles within a bracket of similar beings. In other words, segregation is natural because it occurs on a level of egoism.

There is a proverbially natural segregation that occurs in society, and within these segregated parts, each individual benefits by feeling a solidification of their identity, or egoism.

All members of a group in a segregated society are presumed to have an overarching trait or characteristic that is similar, whether that be decorum brought upon by ritual, tradition or whatever. By remaining closely bound to a group of similar people, there seems to be a solidification of identity by a reaffirmation of what one suspects all the others of the group share (values, traditions, etc.).

There is a proverbially natural segregation that occurs in society, and within these segregated parts, each individual benefits by feeling a solidification of his or her identity, or egoism. The "regenerative identity" will rely on this thesis: that each diaspora, or segregated and segregating group, is energized by a social identity that, while every member does not possess it, it is descriptive of the whole. This applies to the strengthening of the individual identity by participating in a group.

For instance, the Korean-American diaspora in New York City is bound together not because of individual similarities between the people, but rather a belief in the similarity of Koreans as a whole. It is not because we look similar that this social bonding takes place, but rather the assumption that every Korean possesses a special attribute or characteristic that fundamentally separates him or her from every other ethnicity. This article does not discuss whether this is true, but it will assume its truth to explain the previously mentioned theory.

The regenerative identity theory is that any member of a diaspora will be a member because, without at least occasional exposure to the originating culture—the overarching personality—the person will begin to lose a part of his or her identity. In other words, solidification does not occur and cultural identity gradually diffuses. It is for this reason the regenerative theory proposes an explanation to the social phenomenon of diasporas in the modern world. It may have been under a separate cause in the past, but the lasting effects are fueled by this theory. Understanding this concept allowed me to think more holistically on broader ideas like segregation, racism and cultural identity, which are discussed separately.

My Favorite Mistake

Numbers cannot describe the finer things in life

By Michael Dippery
Opinions Editor

As a computer science student, it is only natural for me to like numbers (such as e). Unfortunately, sometimes my love of the "international language" gets the best of me—a fact never more obvious than at a party last weekend.

Some fellow partygoers and I got into a discussion about the nature of romantic relationships on campus. This, I have found, is a place that has no room for mathematics of any sort. Picture this: I was talking to a friend and a complete stranger, and I brought up a story about a girl I took to dinner a few weeks back, since I often illustrate my points with personal anecdotes.

I pointed out that it had been a couple of semesters since I had been to dinner with such a lovely young woman. If I were to graph the number of semesters between dates, I mused, I feared the graph might be linear—or worse yet, exponential. There were not yet enough data points to draw a definitive conclusion.

I pointed out that it was still possible the graph could be something like e^{-x}. That would be good (and quite natural, I might add), since as the number of girls I date approaches infinity, the time between girls would approach zero.

I realized that when $x = 2$, $y = 2$, so e^{-x} does not fit. But, I pointed out, the graph of $e^{-x} + 1.865$ fits perfectly.

Satisfied, I shut up and waited for congratulations to roll in.

My friend responded that if I stopped graphing and started, well, going out more often, maybe my graph would approach zero more rapidly.

Not the answer I anticipated, but a great answer nonetheless. I must admit that her wisdom cannot be spanned by a finite set of vectors.

The discussion highlights another interesting idea about the nature of dating and romance, one that stems from a favorite hobby of mine: eating delicious food.

I have noticed that a lot of restaurants have comment cards so diners can let the managers know how they can improve the eating experience. Dating should be the same way. Imagine this: after you stop seeing someone, you hand her a little card. "What did you like about my service? How can I improve?" Instant feedback.

I will have to ask Meredith Chambers '09 to start the trend by suggesting it in her weekly column "Mer Cares."

Perhaps my biggest mistake, though, is attempting to apply my knowledge of mathematics to non-numerical areas of my life. My mathematics professors would likely suggest that if I concentrated harder on applying my math skills only to mathematics, my success could grow in both areas (and it could certainly stand to grow in the math arena, believe me). Numbers are beautiful—especially when visualized with Mathematica—but not everything should be described with mathematical formulae.

"Great minds discuss ideas; Average minds discuss events; Small minds discuss people."
— Eleanor Roosevelt

Write for Opinions

E-mail hstebbin@

Looking to advertise within the Bucknell Community?

Contact our advertising department now if you would like to advertise next semester.

Contact The Bucknellian Business Department today to get an Advertising Guide by calling 570-577-1085 or e-mailing bucknellianads@bucknell.edu.

Working through the week-two bust

The second week of National Novel Writing Month may be the time to procrastinate, but genius lies ahead

By Sarah Novello
Staff Writer

Three things are better than week two of National Novel Writing Month (NaNoWriMo): week one, week three and week four.

Think of the month-long timeline in relation to that of a bad movie. In the first quarter, the quirky characters are introduced and their futures are outlined. In the back of your mind you know this movie will not be anything amazing, but there is a flicker of hope that it might be. The third quarter is where the climax occurs, so it is always moderately exciting. In the fourth quarter, everything gets tied together and you realize, despite the atrociousness of the film, you have made it this far and might as well finish it.

You slept through the second quarter because it is not important and only exists to build excitement up for the third quarter. Nothing interesting happens in this portion of the film. That is a perfect representation of the weeks of NaNoWriMo.

Week two is a morale-ruiner. Right now, NaNoWriMo writers across the globe start questioning why on earth they signed up for this crazy novel-writing thing.

Week two sees the most quitters. Chris Baty, creator of NaNoWriMo and month-long novelist himself, encouraged writers to stick with it in his weekly pep talk on the Web site www.nanowrimo.org.

"If you quit in Week Two, you're going to miss an amazing moment—the moment when your novel begins to click," Baty said. "You'll miss a genius plot twist you can't foresee right now that will suddenly elevate your book from a distressing mess to a sort-of-tolerable mess. And then you'll miss the euphoric breakthrough that follows that twist, when your book improves itself all the way to not-half-bad. Not-half-bad will make you scream, it feels so good."

For writers at the University, myself included, this week is about padding and procrastination. Technically, all I want to do is write my novel. I have organized my school work in such a way that I have plenty of time to write.

Strangely, I find myself vacuuming my room twice a day, making complicated Excel spreadsheets to show my noveling splendor and making endless lists of possible characters for my novel. I am incredibly prepared to sit down and write, I just rarely seem to get around to it. Ah, week two. Luckily, the energy of week one yielded 20,000 words, so while my morale is seeing the horrible effects of week two, my word count is not suffering.

Caitlin Mawhinney '08 wrote 15,000 words over the past four days. She sits down at the computer without any real plans and types out a few thousand words.

"My inspirations are not directly from my day-to-day experiences, but the tone in which I am writing and the way ... my characters act respond to my mood," Mawhinney said.

One of my favorite things about NaNoWriMo is trying to write as quickly as I can while making the longest sentences possible. I talk around specific things, pad my sentences with unnecessary words and descriptions and call my characters names like "Miss Number Twenty-Seven Cherry Street" because she lives there.

Making run-on sentences is not only fun because you cannot do it in papers, but it also forces you to talk about things more creatively. You have to add in things that would normally be implied.

"Instead of a 'bad day,' one of my characters had a 'cold, annoying and migraine-inducing type of day,'" Mawhinney said.

Illustration by Juliana Su

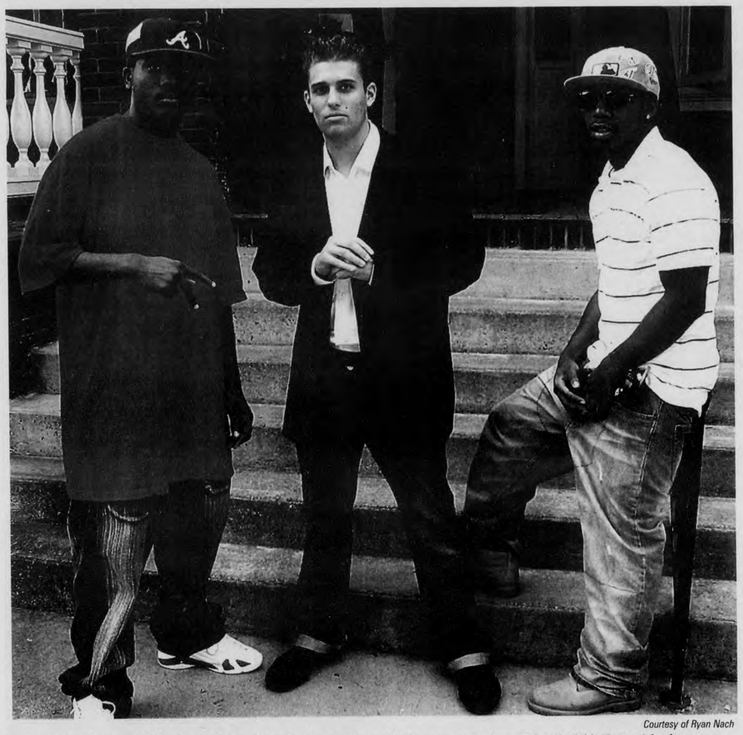
Emily Johnson '07 reached 30,000 words on Friday and said she easily could have reached 50,000 words by the end of week two.

"I'm actually way ahead of schedule," Johnson said, "but I mainly decided to do NaNo to get myself back into wanting to write."

As a creative writing major, Johnson has an actual novel in progress and was motivated by NaNoWriMo to continue working on it. She does not plan to continue with her NaNo novel unless she needs more inspiration for her other novel.

Johnson's experience this week demonstrates what I love about NaNoWriMo. By forcing yourself to write, you realize that you do have some brilliant things to say.

University students to release hip-hop album



Courtesy of Ryan Nach

Ryan Nach '07, owner of the Knock it Out Records, poses with the label's newest act, Young Fo and Ziekk Knoxx (also known as Mahdi Woodard '09 and Thaddeus Davis '09). Woodard and Davis' new 15-track CD, "My Own Worst Enemy," will be sold all over campus, including the Langone Center, and elsewhere on the East Coast.

By Samantha Kantor
Contributing Writer

On Thursday, Young Fo and Ziekk Knoxx released their debut album "My Own Worst Enemy." You may know Fo and Knoxx as Mahdi Woodard '09 and Thaddeus Davis '09. Woodard and Davis are University students, exceptionally talented hip-hop artists and part of Knock it Out Records, a label owned by Ryan Nach '07.

The duo met the first semester of their first year, but didn't know about each other's interest in rap until after Christmas Break.

"Then we got started, and we did a whole 19 track mixed tape in a month and a half," Woodard said.

Woodard and Davis chose the 15 tracks featured on the album from an archive of approximately 30 songs. The songs they selected all contained the theme of the inner struggle that occurs in all of us when we become our own worst enemy.

Woodard is from Atlanta, Ga. and started rapping at a very young age.

"When I first started rapping, it was just something to do, just making a couple of songs for fun," Woodard said. "But then I actually found out that people liked the songs." Woodard realized he could turn his talent into a career.

Davis grew up in Staten Island, N. Y. and also became involved with hip-hop music early.

"I personally feel like hip-hop music is the voice of urban America," Davis said. "It allows you to see people in the same position you're in, from the same economic background. It represents a voice that a lot of kids don't get anywhere else. That's part of the reason why it attracted me."

"My Own Worst Enemy" will be sold all over campus, including the Langone Center. Nach's label, Knock it Out Records, extends far beyond the bubble of the University, and markets to universities and high schools all along the East Coast.

Nach and VP of Marketing and Promotion Mike Becker '07 are the business minds behind the talent. Nach has been producing hip-hop since age 15. By the time he reached the University, he had developed his talent and worked with a variety of rappers, including Holland Mack '06.

"We had done a couple of albums together, and we did the Bison Anthem," Nach said.

"I had heard of [Davis and Woodard] through a friend of mine, Rich Simpson ['07], and I didn't really know much about them," Nach said. "But at the freestyle contest here, all I heard about was how this new guy, [Davis], was going to come in and beat Holland."

Thaddeus Davis defeated Mack and caught Nach's interest.

"So far it's been everything that I have imagined and more," Nach said. "They are the best artists I've ever worked with, and I see us doing very big things, not just in the long run, but over the course of the next year."

Woodard is nervous about the release of "My Own Worst Enemy," but he is ultimately excited.

"This is my first real CD. I mean, it's got a bar code on it," Woodard said.

Though the bar code is exciting, there is serious artistic quality to the work. I had the chance to listen to some of the sample tracks. The lyrics are profound and infused with metaphorical language and the beats are both catchy and original.

"It's two different styles on the same track, and it brings something that you usually don't see in rap music. You get to hear two different styles rapping about similar aspects of their respective hometowns," said Becker.

Woodard and Davis were inspired by other rappers to remain true to their own experiences and ideas.

"We're not rapping about Bentleys and mansions. We don't have that. We're going to be rapping about what we've got. It's all about keeping it real," Woodard said.

> "You get to hear two different styles rapping about similar aspects of their respective hometowns."
> — Mike Becker '07, VP of Marketing and Promotion

Mahdi Woodard chose the name Young Fo both by removing the "e" from the word foe and from his football jersey number in high school, four. Thaddeus Davis' name, Zeikk Knoxx, went through a more gradual manifestation.

Davis got his name from compliments he received on his nice physique.

"I took that 'sique' sound and ran with it. I was 'Physique' for about two years, but when I got older I changed it to something that sounded more professional: Zeikk," Davis said. "I just added Knoxx because it sounded cool."

Everyone involved in the project wants to expose the campus to the music of Woodard and Davis.

"We will be in your face every which way over the next couple weeks, whether it's through Facebook, myspace, AOL, at fraternity or sorority events, at Uptown, the Bison or the caf. There is no way you are going to be able to turn and not know who Zeikk Knoxx and Young Fo are," Nach said.

With the release of "My Own Worst Enemy," Woodard and Davis have become the new faces of Knock It Out Records.

"And that's two nice faces. Two very nice faces," Woodard said.

Beyond Unison sells out—audiences thrilled

By Kimberly Kane
Arts & Entertainment Editor

Beyond Unison performed to a sold out audience on Saturday in Bucknell Hall. Every ticket had been sold before the doors opened.

The co-ed a capella group delighted the audience with a mix of old arrangements and songs performed for the first time. Alex Numeroff '07 began the concert with Neve's "The Last Three Years." Numeroff was also featured in Beyond Unison's rendition of Natasha Bedingfield's "Unwritten." In both songs, Numeroff's beautiful voice lent itself to the emotional lyrics.

Lauren Brian '07 continued the program of Beyond Unison favorites with Maroon 5's "She Will Be Loved," a song the group often performs. The new music began with "Istanbul" by They Might Be Giants. Stephen Dewey '09 and Mark Ulbrecht '07 were featured on the song, combining the comical lyrics with equally comic dance moves.

Kelly Bates '09, Kerry Flanigan '09 and Brian followed with "Seasons of Love" from the musical "Rent" in one of the most powerful performances of the concert.

"This is my favorite song," Kat Morgan '08 said. "Even though people sing it all the time, their version is the best. It also showcases their voices perfectly."

One of the strengths of the group is its ability to showcase talent in particular songs. Nearly every song not only allows the featured performer to demonstrate his or her talent, but also his or her personality. Members of Beyond Unison use their own dance moves, tweak the lyrics and interact with the audience.

Chelsea Tamte-Horan '10 provided one of the most energetic performances of the concert. Along with Numeroff she sang Panic! At the Disco's "Time to Dance." With her exceptional voice and enthusiastic performance, Tamte-Horan resembled a professional performing to a sold-out arena.

Tamte-Horan is one of four new members of the group. The other new members are Joe De Metro '09 Pat Stedman '10 and Casey Hubert '10. The new members' presence was important to the show, with DeMetro singing Snow Patrol's "Chasing Cars." Stedman performed Matchbox 20's "Real World," another song that debuted on Saturday.

Since the repertoire changes frequently, the singers often have trouble choosing a favorite.

> Members of Beyond Unison use their own dance moves, tweak the lyrics and interact with the audience.

"This semester it's 'Real World,'" Laura Householder '08 said. "But it changes all the time."

Brian's favorite song is Carbon Leaf's "What About Everything," featuring Zaf Kamar '09. Beyond Unison performed "What About Everything" as an encore. Kamar also provides the beat-boxing for much of the concert. The acoustics of Bucknell Hall captured the variety of sounds and voices.

All of the songs are arranged by members of the group. After an arranger presents a song to the group, Beyond Unison votes collectively on what songs to pursue.

Beyond Unison revived Ben Folds' "Rockin' the Suburbs" with the help of Dave Allen '06, a former member of the group in the audience. When Beyond Unison started the song, Dewey invited Allen to join the group and Allen did not miss a beat.

Allen remained on the stage as the group honored its seniors. Householder and Anna Riker '08 presented flowers to seniors Numeroff, Brian, Ulbrecht and Jon Backhaus. All four seniors were original members of the group.

"This year has been really rewarding because we've come into our own and people have embraced us," Brian said.

Householder said Beyond Unison was excited to have such talented new members because it insures the future success of the group.

"We know we have a great core of singers who will keep it going," Householder said.

The group, established by Householder, Riker and Backhaus, has potential to be around for years to come.

"I can't wait to come back in 10 years and see Beyond Unison at Christy's," Brian said.

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Stephen Dewey '09 and Mark Ulbrecht '07 solo on "Istanbul," originally by They Might Be Giants. The duo incorporated new lyrics and amusing dance moves into the song, which opened up Beyond Unison's set of new music.

Uptown to host the Ataris tomorrow

Courtesy of kungfurecords.com

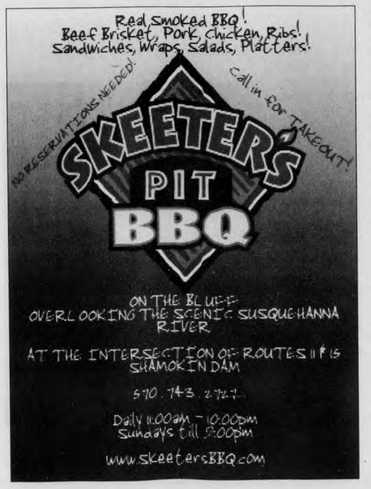
The Ataris, whose hits include "Boys of Summer" and "This Diary," will replace the Plain White T's for the Uptown concert tomorrow. Doors open at 9:30 P.M. and the show is free, so don't miss this unique opportunity!

Do you like music? movies? books? art?

Write about your passion. Write for A&E!

e-mail kkane@

"Turn your Power ON and Add LIFE to your Years!"
Michael D. Morrison D.C.
1205 W Market Street
Lewisburg, PA 17837
Office: 570-523-1221
MORRISON'S ADVANCED CHIROPRACTIC CARE
A Healthy Spine Equals a Healthy YOU!
Bucknell Students may receive a free exam and x-rays (if needed) with mention of this advertisement.



Igniting Creative Ideas
On Fire Promotions
by trautman associates, inc.
promotional products · fundraising items
embroidered & screenprinted caps & apparel
awards · trophies · business gifts
800-538-8009
Lewisburg Showroom 434 Market 570-522-8005
www.tapromoproducts.com
www.onfirepromotions.com
Bring in this ad for one FREE SCREEN!!!
GOOD ON ANY APPAREL ORDER
(minimum 36 pieces)

Grassroot
Marketing Manager
PA, NY, NJ
We are searching for a clever, entrepreneurial, hard working individual with stamina.
Who will have fun Generating Leads for:
We Do Metal Roofs
a division of Prudential Realty
1-888-With-Bob
(1-888-948-4262)

NEW ON THE SILVER SCREEN

As winter arrives, film quality flies south for the winter, leaving these recently released movies without merit

'The Return' fails to return Gellar's stardom

Courtesy of imdb.com

Joanna (Sarah Michelle Gellar) unexpectedly meets Kurt (Adam Scott), a business competitor and former acquaintance, in a bar. Kurt follows Joanna back to her hotel room, where an attempted rape leads to a confrontation with a mysterious stranger.

BY CATHERINE HEVERLING
Editor-in-Chief

❖ MOVIE REVIEW

Some remember her as the quick-witted vampire slayer with the one-liners and skimpy skirts. Others know her as Helen, the high-heeled beauty queen trying to scurry her way to safety in "I Know What You Did Last Summer." Regardless, most of Sarah Michelle Gellar's fans hoped that her latest film, "The Return," would give one of Hollywood's forgotten gems a chance to shine again.

Unfortunately, this film does not give Gellar the means to do so.

Gellar plays Joanna Mills, a 25-year-old saleswoman working for a St. Louis trucking company, whose main—and only—character trait is her drive to succeed in the business. The film opens with Joanna at age 10 attending the town "Funfest" with her father, adequately played by Sam Shepard. While her dad is explaining to the cotton candy clerk that they had a car accident a few months before, Joanna spots a shady-looking fellow by the carousel and jumps under a table to avoid him. Enter the villain: a man whose black boots are all we catch a glimpse of as he creepily coos, "Sunshine, I just want to talk to you."

The film returns to the present-day when Joanna's sales endeavors lead her back to her hometown near La Salle, Texas. En route, the horror-movie stakes rise as she has "visions," swerves off the road when she hears a haunting oldies tune on the radio and encounters some cell phone interference: a voice asking for "Sunshine."

The editing neglects the cohesion of time and space between scenes, with Joanna cutting herself in a phone booth in one scene and waking up in a bathroom stall in the next.

If it was the director's aim to convey Joanna's own confusion through the film's editing, he should consider his mission accomplished. The editing neglects the cohesion of time and space between scenes, with Joanna cutting herself in a phone booth in one scene and waking up in a bathroom stall in the next.

The puzzle pieces begin to take shape when Joanna heads home to see her dad, who does not recognize her when she rings his doorbell. She asks him what happened when she was a child and it is clear she repressed the car accident her father let us in on at the beginning of the film.

Unconvincingly frustrated by her father's lack of concern, Joanna leaves the house, takes a room at a hole-in-the-wall hotel and heads over to Arlo's Barbecue, an establishment she recognizes from one of her visions.

At the bar, she sees both a man who looks strangely familiar to her, and her biggest business competitor and former love interest, Kurt (Adam Scott). One of the film's most unbelievable plot points is the fact that Kurt is in La Salle at all, considering the distance between St. Louis, where he lives, and Texas. Kurt follows Joanna back to her hotel room, where he attempts to rape her but is stopped when Terry (Peter O'Brien), the other man from the bar, storms in to save the day. Joanna is lucky his bar stool was situated at an angle from which he could peak into the curtained hotel room across the street and two floors up.

Joanna and Terry have a strange bond and even though their relationship seems inexplicably necessary to her and their interactions are wooden and awkward, the film would virtually be empty without them.

For the remainder of the film, Joanna discovers her strange connection with Terry by catching sight of a different woman in her reflection and happening upon a collection of conveniently exposed newspaper articles in Terry's bedroom.

In the end, Terry and Joanna's cosmic connection is explained, Joanna comes face-to-face with the "Sunshine" killer and the lapses between time and space are bridged. Once the mystery is solved, Joanna finds herself and the audience finds some satisfaction.

Is it enough to leave the theatre a happy viewer? Not really. But it is enough to eliminate the desire for a sequel.

Courtesy of imdb.com

Terry (Peter O'Brien) and Joanna recovering in Terry's barn. By the end of the movie, Joanna realizes that her connection with Terry has a unique explanation.

'Borat' more scandalous than successfully satirical

Courtesy of imdb.com

Borat (Sacha Baron Cohen) fully immerses himself in American culture. "Borat: Cultural Learnings of America for Make Benefit Glorious Nation of Kazakhstan" (the movie's full title) focuses on Borat's botched attempt to make a documentary about America.

BY DIANA KORETSKY
Contributing Writer

❖ MOVIE REVIEW

As a Jewish Ukrainian immigrant raised in New York City, my cultural identity has always been so divided between Eastern Europe and America that I have never fully recognized or felt particularly protective of either. Imagine my surprise at feeling utterly scandalized upon leaving a screening of "Borat" last weekend. For those who have somehow managed to miss the buzz surrounding this abomination of a film, "Borat" is the brainchild of Sacha Baron Cohen (aka Ali G), who stars as the title character, a television personality from Kazakhstan who travels to the United States to film a documentary about American life.

Over the course of his travels, Borat encounters and manages to offend a myriad of groups—feminists, southerners, homosexuals, members of a college fraternity, African Americans, Midwesterners, New Yorkers, and so on. These people, presumably, represent the melting pot (or is it tossed salad?) that is "America" (one wonders what happened to Native Americans in the making of the movie).

Theoretically, this could have made for a successful formula. At a time when most of the world already subscribes to a less than compassionate view of Americans, a satire inviting us to laugh at our culture's inconsistencies, as seen from the perspective of a foreigner, could have resulted in an interesting and timely film. "Borat" is not that movie.

Whether intentionally or the result of poor writing, the most contemptibly portrayed figure winds up being Borat himself. America is satirized to some extent, and a few scenes do emerge as potentially eye-opening; the scene in which an arms dealer passively accommodates Borat's request for a gun that will most effectively destroy Jews comes to mind.

"Borat" predominantly plays on American stereotypes of which we are already aware, bringing nothing new to the table (did we really need a reminder that New Yorkers can be incredibly rude or that many frat guys drink to excess?). Borat, as a representative of the people of Kazakhstan, represents a whole other level of offensiveness.

The character is presented as a disturbingly racist, sexist, anti-Semitic, crass, tactless fool. To that end, I have to ask – what does a film that expends so much time and energy ridiculing a foreigner say about a country that, correct me if I am wrong, is currently involved in a pretty intense dispute over border security? Moreover, the scenes which portray Borat's home country are incredibly alarming in the level of contempt the filmmakers appear to hold for the developing nation. Is it any wonder that the president of Kazakhstan is currently suing the producers?

The film mercilessly pokes fun at Kazakh culture without the slightest bit of sympathy or understanding toward Eastern European customs and traditions. The people are presented as quintessentially "folksy"—that is, backwards and ridiculous. For no apparent reason, Borat suggests that he and his mentally challenged brother (referred to as a "retard" throughout the film) have had incestuous relations with his sister, about whom he excitedly brags, "She is number four prostitute in all of Kazakhstan!" as though Kazakhs actually consider such matters culturally significant.

The film also exaggerates Kazakhstan's relationship with Jews to a truly disgusting degree. Borat makes anti-Semitic comments in nearly every episode of the film, including one in which he accuses the Jewish community of being responsible for the Sept. 11 attacks. In point of fact, the history of Jews in Eastern Europe is a deeply complicated issue. We do not make movies abusing the history of slaves in this country; why cheapen a situation of similar magnitude in another country? The fact that most people in America do not know enough about the problem to be seriously offended does not make it acceptable.

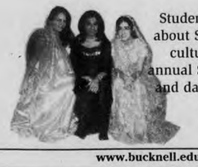
Maybe I am being hypercritical of the film or maybe I am not smart enough to understand the intricacies of its social commentary. There are moments of uproarious humor, and as I said, it was a good idea in theory. Ultimately, there is something hugely unsettling about a movie that comes off as so derisive and so smug about our relationship to Kazakhstan, Eastern Europe and the concept of foreignness in general. Personally, after 84 minutes that felt like three hours, I left the theatre unenlightened, disgusted and downright dirty. Did I forget to mention the ultra-gratuitous male nudity?

Courtesy of imdb.com

Borat poses for his crew in front of a cactus. The film attempts to explore American stereotypes through parody.

The Bucknellian
November 17, 2006
Sports

Celebrating with SASA



Students learned about South Asian culture at the annual SASA dinner and dance Nov. 4.

See page B10

Volume 138, Number 11 | Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue | www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Bison defeat George Mason in overtime, 1-0

Men's soccer wins first round NCAA tournament game, loses to No. 4 Virginia to end championship season

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Andy Kummer '08 redirects a ball in a recent home game. The Bison finished their season with an overall record of 9-8-6.

BY JOHN MLODZINSKI
Senior Writer

On Saturday, the men's soccer team defeated George Mason 1-0 in the first round of the NCAA tournament. Although the teams combined to take 43 shots, only one was able to get past either goalie. A little over five minutes into overtime, a pass by Justin Wolf '08 to Mark Schmiegel '09 caught George Mason's goalie Sean Kelley slightly out of position. Schmiegel was able to loft the ball over Kelley and, despite a valiant effort by a George Mason defender, find the back of the net to secure the victory for the Bison.

Bucknell 1 (OT)
George Mason 0

"I was there at the right moment and Wolf played a perfect ball to me. It was one of the best moments I've had at Bucknell," Schmiegel said.

The goal was Schmiegel's second of the year and the assist was Wolf's third.

The match was relatively even, as neither team was able to gain much momentum. George Mason did get the ball rolling late in each half, but was not able to convert on any of its scoring chances. The best scoring opportunity the Patriots had occurred when Adam Lobene headed a ball past goalie Joey Kuterbach '08 for what looked like a goal, but Andrew Loia '07 was there to prevent any damage.

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Matt Hittson '09 bodies up against an opponent in a earlier game. Hittson was a key component of the defense this season, allowing only 1.02 goals per game.

The men's soccer season came to a close Wednesday evening, as the Virginia Cavaliers defeated the Bison 4-0. Joey Kuterbach '08 made 10 saves for the Orange and Blue, facing 28 shots from the Cavaliers who will play California on Saturday. The Orange and Blue only were able to manage three shots against the stingy Virginia defense. The Bison end the year with a 9-8-6 record, and look poised to make a run at the Patriot League Championship again next year, returning the bulk of this year's squad. Co-captain Andrew Loia is the lone senior.

The Bison had two great opportunities to take a 1-0 lead in regulation but were unable to deliver. The first occurred four minutes into the game, when Anthony Ferraro '09 beat Kelley to a loose ball. Three Patriot defenders prevented Ferraro from scoring. The second occurred halfway through the second half when Dirk Swaneveld '09 was able to get by the George Mason defense and only had Kelley separating the ball from the net. Swaneveld took a great shot, but a diving save by Kelley stopped the threat and drew a huge ovation from the crowd.

When asked about the victory and his team's play, Head Coach Brendan Nash had nothing but praise.

"The biggest feeling I get is pride. They deserve all the good things that are happening to them, because they have worked so hard for it," Nash said.

This was the first overtime victory for the Bison, who have gone 0-0-6 in previous overtimes this year.

Cross country squads send two to national championship

BY BRIAN MULLIGAN
Sports Editor

The highlights of the NCAA Mid-Atlantic Regional for the Orange and Blue were exceptional finishes from two senior leaders on both the men's and women's teams.

Matt Forys '07 posted the top finish for the Bison, crossing the finish line in 30 minutes, 40 seconds to grab a fifth-place finish overall. His top-five finish also gave him an automatic bid to the NCAA National Championship on Monday at Indiana State University. Leanna Nastase '07 received an at-large bid to the championship, finishing ninth in 21 minutes at the regional meet.

"It feels amazing to have qualified for the NCAA championship my senior year," Forys said. "It has been a goal of mine since I started running at Bucknell, so to have finally achieved that goal is overwhelming."

The men's team finished 11th out of a 25-team field, ahead of Patriot League competitors Lehigh and Lafayette. No .15 Georgetown won the meet.

"Our goal was to finish, as a team, in the top 10," Head Coach Kevin Donner said. "Although we were 11th, this year's season was very gratifying, as we made some great improvements from the previous two years."

Wallace Campbell '08 finished next for the Bison in 31:40, good enough for a 37th-place finish. Michael Gibney '08 took a 69th-place finish in 32:38. Andrew Corral '08 finished the 10-kilometer race in 32:51, placing 85th overall. Clinton Orloski '09 rounded out the top five scorers for the Orange and Blue, finishing only 14 seconds behind Corral and taking 96th place.

The women's squad had an impressive finish, tying powerhouse Villanova for fifth place. Princeton won the meet, but the Bison finished ahead of teams such as UPenn and Maryland because of Nastase's phenomenal performance.

"Leanna continues to have a super year by qualifying for the NCAA Championships as an individual," Donner said. "Two years ago she placed in the 50s at the regional meet and last year she was in the 30s. Four years of hard work has really paid off."

Erin Cranmer-Hart '08 and Jenny Stevens '07 finished within five seconds of each other to grab the 27th and 30th spots, respectively. Nicole Falcaro '09 was the next Bison to cross the finish line in 22:05, taking 55th overall. Gillian Nordquist '09 was the fifth scorer for the Orange and Blue, finishing seven second behind Falcaro for a 59th-place finish.

"Our women ran very tough," Donner said. "To finish fifth along with Villanova and ahead of Penn State, Penn and Maryland shows that we have improved a lot since the start of the season and we peaked at the right time."

Both Forys and Nastase were selected to the United States Track & Field and Cross Country Coaches Association All-Regional Team for their performances..

The team is looking forward to its final meets of the season. The men will compete at the IC4A championship, while the women will compete at the ECAC Championship. Both will be held Saturday in Bronx, N.Y.

Courtesy of Athletic Communications

Matt Forys '07 sprints towards to the finish line, taking fifth place and earning a bid to NCAA Nationals.

Women's basketball prevails against Hampton and Columbia

BY MATT SAYLOR
Sports Editor

The women's basketball team had a strong opening week of play, winning two of its three games, leading to its match-up tonight with No. 17 Michigan State in East Lansing, Mich.

In their home and season opener last Friday, the Bison defeated Hampton 85-77, before embarking on the road for matches against Saint Joseph's and Columbia. The Orange and Blue fell to the Hawks 63-56 on Sunday. They bounced back against the Lions on Tuesday, winning 71-53 in a game where all 10 Bison who played managed to score.

There were1,075 fans at Sojka Pavilion for the Hampton game, the largest women's basketball crowd since 1,861 fans came to the March 2, 2003 game against Colgate. The Bison came out strong against the Hampton Pirates taking a comfortable 45-29 lead into halftime. Captain Lindsey Hollobaugh '07 scored 16 first-half points, making six of her nine field goal attempts including all three from behind the arc. Jacquie Seawright '07 added nine points off the bench in just 10 minutes of play.

Bucknell 85
Hampton 77

The Pirates battled back in the second half though cutting the lead to as low as four. They were aided by foul trouble for Hollobaugh, Kesha Champion '08 and Hope Foster '08.

"They [the Pirates] came out a lot more physical and aggressive in the second-half than they did in the first," Hollobaugh said.

Both Champion and Hollobaugh fouled out of the game, but Foster, playing the final four minutes and 53 seconds with four fouls, carried the load. She scored nine points and gathered five rebounds in that final stretch, finishing the game with 20 points and a game-high 16 rebounds-a career-high eight at the offensive end. It was Foster's block total that brought awe to the arena. With eight blocks, Foster set the school's single-game record for block shots, besting the seven she has twice previously recorded along with Ann Kirwin '87.

Foster had a double-double alone in the second-half with 16 points and 10 rebounds, along with six blocks.

"In the first half I was trying to feel out the game," Foster said. "In the second half I had to come out strong. I feel like I could have done a lot more tonight."

"We have played great together. These games are tests for us, so we can learn from our mistakes and prepare for the future."
—Lauren Schober '09

In addition to Foster's prowess, Hollobaugh finished with 22 points and Amanda Brown '09 added 12 points, six assists and five steals, sinking seven free throws in the final 44 seconds of play to seal the win.

The team had little time to enjoy the victory as the game with the Hawks was less that 48 hours later. Both teams battled back-and-forth for the entire game, and the Bison led 50-49 with 5:39 to play, but St. Joseph's controlled the game the rest of the way, scoring 14 of the final 20 points.

SJU 63
Bucknell 56

"I thought that we competed real strong at St. Joe's but needed to do a better job of converting on some critical possessions down the stretch," Head Coach Kathy Fedorjaka said.

Foster scored 19 points to go along with seven rebounds and five more blocked shots. Hollobaugh added 15 points, Brown had 12 and Lauren Schober '09 had a nice all-around game with six points, six rebounds and a team-high four assists. All but two of the Bison's points were scored by the starting line-up, and four starters played more than 34 minutes.

Against Columbia, the Orange and Blue received contributions from everybody on the team on the way to the 18-point victory. The Bison only led by four with eight minutes to play in the game, but outscored the Lions 21-7 to close out the game.

Bucknell 71
Columbia 53

Foster continued to lead the way for the Orange and Blue, recording her second double-double of the young season with 21 points and 10 rebounds to go with four blocks. Brown had 15 points, five steals, four assists and four rebounds, missing only two of eight field goals, and draining all three of her three-pointers.

Hollobaugh added 13 points and six rebounds, and Ashton Sprouse '08 tied career-highs with six rebounds and two blocks, in addition to two points, off the bench.

"I was very proud of their [the Bison players] mental and physical toughness in gutting out this win on a third game in five days, with two of those games being on the road with very little turnaround time in between," Fedorjaka said.

The players also are pleased with their early season success.

"We have played great together," Schober said. "These games are tests for us, so we can learn from our mistakes and prepare for the future."

The future starts with tonight's game against the heavily-favored Spartans.

It will be a tremendous experience for the players to play in a game of that magnitude with the kind of atmosphere that I'm sure we'll see," Feodorjaka said. "We are all definitely going out there to get a win and not just compete."

The Bison return to action at Sojka Pavilion on Monday with a 7 p.m. tip against Cornell.

Volleyball splits pair on the road

By Ellis Hudes
Senior Writer

The volleyball team clinched the third seed for the Patriot League Tournament after a weekend of mixed results. On Friday, the Bison were overwhelmed 3-0 by a powerful American squad poised to defend its Patriot League title. But the Orange and Blue put this loss behind them and defeated Navy 3-1 Saturday. Their final regular-season record stands at 19-11 and 10-4 in league play. This is the team's best record since 1997, when the Bison went 19-8.

The Eagles came out firing and never allowed the Bison to find much team rhythm. American ran away with the first two games 30-17 and 30-15, respectively, and the Bison found themselves in a hole. They made the last game more competitive by jumping out to an 11-2 lead, but American rediscovered its form and closed the gap. They completed the sweep with a 30-23 victory, snapping the Bison's five-game winning streak.

American 3
Bucknell 0

Emilie Hardinge '09 had a team-best 10 kills in the match while Amanda Grossmann '07 added six more kills. Jennie Smith '07 had a balanced game with five kills, two service aces and three block assists. Kristen Sydlowski '07 recorded 12 digs and Shannon Pitsch '09 added another seven digs to go along with her 23 assists.

The Bison came into their final regular-season match with a tournament berth already in hand. They could have fallen to the fourth seed with a loss and a Lafayette win over Army, so a win was crucial.

Bucknell 3
Navy 1

"These last two games were very important for us, not only as to determining our final standings going in to the Patriot League match, but also as our last means of preparation before this coming weekend," Hardinge said. "We realize how tough our competition is but we also realize that with the right mental attitude and execution of our game plan, we are more than capable of taking home a championship."

In the first game the Bison went on a 7-1 run to claim a narrow 14-12 lead, but the Midshipmen countered with a 7-0 run to recapture the lead and take the first game 30-28. Game two saw neither team establish any substantial momentum until the latter stages. Two crucial kills gave the Bison necessary separation to steal the game 30-25.

The next game also came down to the final plays. With the score knotted at 29, the Orange and Blue registered a kill and Navy committed the game-clinching error for a 31-29 victory. The Bison stayed poised late in the fourth game to get past Navy 30-26 and end their regular season on a positive note.

Pitsch played some outstanding volleyball against Navy by tallying four service aces and a career-high 59 assists. She finished the year with 1,134 assists, the second-highest single-season total in University history.

Four Bison reached double figures in kills. Jenna Henderson '08 added 20 kills and seven digs to the Bison's offensive effort. In an impressive all-around game, Smith contributed 15 kills and three blocks while hitting .414 for the match. Sarah Groman '07 posted 13 kills and Grossmann chipped in with 11. Sydlowski, always scrambling around the back line, had a match-best 22 digs.

Sydlowski and Pitsch received Honorable Mentions in last week's Patriot League awards. Sydlowski averaged 4.86 digs per game and broke the Patriot League single-season digs record with 578 digs on the season. Pitsch averaged 11.71 assists per game last week. Henderson was named to the All-Patriot League First Team and Sydlowski to the All-Patriot League Second Team for outstanding regular season play.

It has been an exciting season for the team.

"We all want to win the championship, but regardless of the outcome of this weekend, this season has been such a dream season," Hardinge said. "The increase of the student body attending our matches, amazing leadership from not just the captains but from each class, chemistry on and off the court and the so many amazing memories will never be forgotten."

During the season coaches and players talked about building momentum and reaching peak form for the Patriot League Tournament, and now that moment has arrived.

"The team is psyched for this upcoming weekend," Sydlowski said. "We have worked hard since last season and we know that this is the time that all that work pays off."

The No. 3 Bison begin tournament play against No. 2 Army tonight at American University.

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Co-captain Kristen Sydlowski '07 digs a serve in an early home match as Lindsay Smith (15) '10 and Jennifer Rupp (4) '10 look on. The team will travel to Washington, D.C. tonight to take on Army in the semi-finals of the Patriot League Tournament.

Saylor Says

By Matt Saylor
Sports Editor

The men's basketball game against Wake Forest on Tuesday night was as physically, mentally and emotionally draining as any I have ever seen. The outcome of the game had me feeling some combination of sadness, anger and disappointment.

Then I went to the post-game press conference featuring Head Coach Pat Flannery '80, co-captain Abe Badmus '07, Andrew Morrison '08 and Rob Thomas '08. I don't think I have ever been as proud to be a Bison as I was after I heard them speak. I felt happy. After such a loss how could I possibly feel happy?

Badmus had the tough task of being asked by the media to explain his thoughts on the controversial (read: incorrect) traveling call against him with 6.7 seconds left in overtime and the Bison down by only two points. He responded with poise, saying the official made the correct call.

He explained how prior to the season teams receive videos about what referees are going to emphasize when officiating a game. That kind of move, something he has been doing for the last three years, was something on the tape.

It was exactly the right way to answer the question, an answer that will make a coach proud. He took responsibility for the turnover, not placing blame on those calling the game. That was when Flannery, who had put his arm around Badmus's shoulder to comfort him when he entered the press room, interjected with what everyone knew, but didn't think anyone would say.

"You can't make that call at that time in the game," Flannery said. "Come on! You can talk all you want, I'm tired of us sitting here like we're Ivy [League], that's bull. They emphasized palming. If they called that, they should've been emphasizing it all night. They emphasized bodying up, stepping up and pushing kids when there're trying to set screens, you emphasize that all night. I'm tired of sitting, listening and taking it and having my kids sit here and talk about it. Call that at that time of the game, to end the game. [smacks table] That's crap. That's crap. ACC team coming [smacks table] into our place. And again, we don't ever sit here and say that decides the game, but my kid is sitting here bleeding, and we're gonna say, he's gonna say, he walked on it. You could've called a palm on [Wake Forest point guard Ishmael] Smith every time he walked it down the floor and carried the ball from one end to the other. You can't. You can't. And he [Badmus] doesn't think he was walking either. He's trying to tell you that because that's the way you're taught. He'll tell you that wasn't a walk."

Flannery continued on this course for a little longer, and then a few more times when he was asked about the 62 foul calls and 80 free throws attempted on this night, along with how these ACC officials got assigned to this game.

It was moving to see him stand up for his players and his players for him. It was moving to see Badmus put his arm around Flannery, after the coach's tirade in support of his player. And it was moving to hear Morrison and Thomas talk about their day in the spotlight, after so many spent in the shadows.

"I guess it's nice to get into the game," Morrison said. "But I'd rather sit on the bench for a win than be a part of a loss like that because you put so much effort into a game. That's two games in a row that we could've had and you just come up empty."

Thomas chimed in about how the whole is greater than the sum of its parts.

"You are never satisfied with individuality," Thomas said. "You win and lose as a team. We've been taught ever since we've been here to not look at stats, don't worry about how you play-it's how the team plays. And the final outcome is what really matters and who cares about the stat sheet."

Morrison agreed.

"That's what made our team good the past two years and that is what is going to make us good again this year, Morrison said. "We graduated two great players [Kevin Bettencourt '06 and Charles Lee '06] and never once did they say 'I had a great game tonight'. They said 'we won.'"

Have there ever been two guys so mature in their first post-game press conferences? Flannery beamed like a proud father, watching his "kids" speak about the team. I did not even include the quotes where Thomas thanked the fans for their support and said how there are no individual names on the banners raised just "Bucknell."

The way the players spoke is a testament to Flannery's program, their parents and their teachers. They have been taught the right way and Tuesday night they showed it.

His players did not let him down, and Flannery would not let them down, so he spoke about the situation for what it was. He acknowledged the team could have played better, but Flannery was not going to let his player take responsibility for something that was not his fault.

After this press conference I forgot that we were 0-2. I forgot we have a continuously tough schedule ahead of us, that some players are struggling and how many people think we may not be the same caliber team as last year or the year before.

All I remembered is we are the Bison. And after Tuesday night, there is nothing else I'd rather be.

Street Smart | World Class

GRADUATE PROGRAM IN Public Policy at Johns Hopkins

Earn a Master of Arts in Public Policy at a world-class institution that pairs practical experience with access to the top minds in public policy. Tackle the big questions in small classes, where professors know who you are and help you to achieve your goals.

Make a decision that could change the world.

For more information or an application, call 410-516-4167 or e-mail mpp@jhu.edu. Online, visit us at www.jhu.edu/ips/mpp. Applications for Fall 2007 admission are due January 15, 2007.

Bison struggle with difficult schedule

After losses against Albany and Wake Forest, men's basketball looks toward showdown with St. Joseph's

By Marcus Mateer
Senior Writer

The men's basketball team, with huge expectations following back-to-back Patriot League Championships, had a disappointing start to the 2006-2007 campaign. Losses at home to Wake Forest Tuesday and at Albany Saturday showed the disappearance of some veteran players and the emergence of potential new stars.

Center Chris McNaughton '07 and forward Donald Brown '07, two corner-pieces of past success, have played below expectations. McNaughton's 10 points and five rebounds and Brown's nine turnovers indicate uncharacteristic production through the opening two games.

Four players have emerged. John Griffin '08 and Jason Vegotsky '09 scored a combined 32 points in the Albany game. When foul trouble forced Head Coach Pat Flannery '80 to turn to his bench during the Wake Forest game, Rob Thomas '08 and Andrew Morrison '08 answered the call. Thomas scored a career-high 16 points and snagged three rebounds, while Morrison added his career-high 10 points and grabbed five boards.

The story of the Wake Forest game was the 62 fouls and subsequent 80 free throw attempts. Forty turnovers added to the nearly constant whistles. Wake Forest was the first ACC team hosted by the Bison, and the officials made sure the game would be a long one.

"[The flow of the game] felt like it was choppy," Flannery said, "because of so many whistles and so many free throws."

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Andrew Morrison '08 leaps towards the hoop for a lay-up against Wake Forest. Morrison posted career-highs with 10 points and five rebounds.

"Just little things weren't going our way at the end. Hopefully, we'll learn from it."
—Jason Vegotsky '09

The Bison led by as many as 12 points early on, but a 26-point performance by Kyle Visser kept the visitors in the game. The Bison held the lead for nearly the entire game but lost it in the waning seconds of the second half.

With the Bison leading 74-69 with only 2 minutes 25 seconds left, Vegotsky came away with a steal. His three-point attempt was off target and Michael Drum was fouled on the rebound. Drum hit both free throws to bring Wake Forest within three. McNaughton hit one of two from the line at the other end, which was followed by another pair of free throws from Drum to pull the Demon Deacons within two. Griffin fouled out when he made contact with Harvey Hale. Hale converted from the stripe to tie it at 75 and send the game into overtime.

Wake Forest 86
Bucknell 83

Wake Forest jumped out to a seven-point lead in overtime. Five points from Abe Badmus '07 and a jumper by Morrison sandwiched a Demon Deacon basket to bring the Bison within two at 85-83. With 16 ticks left, Vegotsky grabbed the board and kicked it out. Badmus drove towards the basket but was received a questionable traveling call on a spin move. The ensuing foul with 5.7 seconds left sealed the deal for Wake Forest, as Hale hit one of two from the line and Morrison's desperation shot fell short. Wake Forest came away with the victory, 76-73.

The Bison got off to a quick start in Albany, but the Great Danes recovered from a 12-point halftime deficit to pull off a 55-49 point victory. The Bison's second half shooting was abysmal, going only 4-21. The Bison were outscored 15-33 in the closing period.

Albany 55
Bucknell 49

Late in the second half, Griffin hit back-to-back threes to break a 14:01 minute scoring drought from the field. The 46-44 lead would not last, as Albany would outscore the visitors 11-3 the rest of the way. The final seven Great Dane points all came from the free-throw line.

"We came out flat in the second half," Flannery said. "We just didn't have any fire."

The Bison's defense was stifling. Albany committed 14 turnovers during the contest. They also only managed to shoot 35.2 percent from the field and 25 percent from three-point range.

The biggest obstacle to victory in both games was turnovers. Despite the miscues, both games were winnable. Neither outcome should diminish the chances of a successful season for the team.

"Just little things weren't going our way at the end," Vegotsky said. "Hopefully, we'll learn from it."

The Orange and Blue's next game is against Saint Joseph's at 2:00 p.m. on Sunday in Philadelphia. Last year, the Bison defeated the Hawks 63-51 in Lewisburg.

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Rob Thomas '08 shows a little flare as he scans the defense in the first half. The Bison's tough schedule continues with a game at St. Joseph's Sunday afternoon.

Wrestling breaks out on national scene

By Kyle Barndollar
Writer

Bison wrestling returned to official varsity competition Saturday in Philadelphia. The Bison, sporting a 22 man roster that includes 20 first-year students, sandwiched wins against Maryland and James Madison around a loss to host team Drexel.

"This weekend showed that, although we are all freshman and probably the youngest of all Division I wrestling programs in the country, we definitely have what it takes to be a respectable competitor" Eric Lapotsky '09 said.

The Bison opened the meet against the ACC favorite Maryland Terrapins and claimed the lead after Andy Rendos '10 defeated Jason Kiessling in overtime 3-2. The Terps fought their way back to a 14-12 lead, heading into George Mann's '10 match against Rich Dipietro at 184 pounds. Mann, despite being considerably outweighed, defeated Dipietro 6-4 and the Bison went on to win 27-14. Also claiming big wins in the match were Mike Powers '10, Lapotsky and George Hingson '10. Powers pinned Eric Grida at 157, Lapotsky pinned Hudson Taylor at 197 and Hingson pinned Jerry Afari in the heavyweight division. The victory was the Orange and Bue's first Division I win since 2001.

Bucknell 27
Maryland 14

The Bison's second match of the day against Drexel saw David Marble '10 and Rendos each advance to 2-0. At 133, Marble defeated Drexel's Morgan Remillard 6-3 and Rendos defeated Billy Haydt 4-2 in the 165 class.

Powers went into his match against Drexel's Kristopher Park looking to duplicate his pin over Grida. Unfortunately, Powers would be forced to forfeit his match due to injury. Powers hit his head hard after slamming his opponent down to the mat, receiving a concussion that left him momentarily unconscious. The Bison would eventually lose the match 26-10.

Drexel 26
Bucknell 10

"This weekend showed that, although we are all freshman and probably the youngest of all division I wrestling programs in the country, we definitely have what it takes to be a respectable competitor"
—Eric Lapotsky '09.

"Mike's concussion in his match against Drexel was a very tough forfeit for the team and it cost us some momentum, which was a factor in the loss," Dave Bernstein '10 said.

The Orange and Blue came back against James Madison and dominated the Dukes 24-9. Rendos would collect his third win of the day against JMU with a 17-0 triumph over John Divello.

Hingson went 2-1 for the day with a win over heavyweight Zach Winfrey 8-1, and Michael Gutilla '10 also collected his second win over Nick Broccoli 9-3 at 149. Overall, the Bison lost just three out of 10 matches against James Madison, posting wins in six of their first seven bouts.

Bucknell 24
JMU 9

It was a promising start for Bison wrestling, whose return to the main stage of Division I wrestling is an exciting one for the coach as well as for the players.

"It was an amazing weekend. It has been a long wait for the last 18 months, and I feel great not only for our athletes but everyone involved with our reinstatement," Head Coach Dan Wirnsberger said. "To beat Maryland did not surprise me because I knew we were prepared physically for the challenge. It was a matter of our young athletes believing in our preparation."

With so many first-year students, a few growing pains are expected as this team matures and gels, but nobody on the team will tell you that the Bison cannot win now.

"We're definitely going out there with the expectation of winning," Lapotsky said.

The Bison look to continue their progress Saturday in Annapolis, Md. where they will compete in the Navy Classic.

Nancy's Nu-Wave Salon
..look your best
10% Discount with Student ID
524-2315
www.nancysnuwave.com
Main Street (Rte 45) - Montandon

Create Color with Clear Vision LOGICS.
The choice for clean, clear, pure tone color. Haircolor with maximum versatility.
Infinite creativity.
Call for an appointment today.
Joseph Carroll Salon
HAIR CARE FOR THE ENTIRE FAMILY
431 Market Street, Lewisburg
524-0790
Open Tuesday-Saturday Walk-ins when time permits
www.matrix.com SALON REALITY(S). ENJOY! MATRIX

Domino's Pizza
Proud Sponsor of Bucknell
Lewisburg (570) 524-9000
1722 Market St.
Hours: Sun-Thurs 11am - 1 am/Fri-Sat 11am - 3am
MANIC MONDAY $7.99 LARGE 1-TOPPING PIZZA - DELIVERED!
2xTUESDAY BUY ANY LARGE PIZZA AT REGULAR MENU PRICE & RECEIVE A 2ND OF EQUAL VALUE FOR FREE
HOT BROWNIES FREE OVEN BAKED BROWNIES
DOUBLE DEAL $12.99 2 MEDIUMS $14.99 2 LARGES
ORDER ONLINE WWW.DOMINOS.COM

$250 CASH
Sign on BONUS
Call for details
3 & 4 Bedroom Houses
CLOSE TO CAMPUS
WHIRLPOOL
WASHER / DRYER
DISHWASHER
STOVE & FRIG
Newly renovated houses available 2006/2007
570-524-5714 / 570-412-4831
or 570-524-5745 /
570-490-2922

A MATCH MADE IN HEAVEN
THIS MVP IS NEVER WITHOUT HIS MVP.

PATRIOT LEAGUE MOST VALUABLE PLAYER CHARLES LEE &
BUCKNELL'S MOST VALUABLE PAPER, THE BUCKNELLIAN

Take a time out once a week and go one-on-one with The Bucknellian to stay up-to-date with all of the action happening on campus.

Enclose this form and a check (made out to The Bucknellian) and mail it to:

The Bucknellian, Bucknell University C3952, 701 Moore Avenue, Lewisburg, PA 17837

Name _____ __ ONE YEAR: receive 24 issues each week for the academic year for only $45, a $15 savings!

Address _____

_____

Phone _____ __ ONE SEMESTER: receive 12 issues during the fall or spring semester for $30. Please specify semester: _____

E-mail _____

For more information, contact The Bucknellian at 570-577-1520 or 570-577-1085 or e-mail bucknellian@bucknell.edu.

Men's crew competes at Belly of the Carnegie

Two first-year boats make their mark and raise eyebrows against nation's best in Princeton, N.J.

By Brian Mulligan
Sportes Editor

The men's crew team sent two novice boats to the prestigious head race the Belly of the Carnegie on Sunday in Princeton, N.J. The team competed against several top-20 crews in the nation, placing 18th and 19th in a field of 23 boats.

The race consisted of teams sending two novice boats of even speed, mixing recruits with walk-ons to judge the depth and skill of each school's first-year class. The Bison rubbed elbows with some of the most prestigious programs in the nation, including Ivies Yale, Princeton and Cornell, who annually recruit some of the best high school rowers in the nation. The Orange and Blue team consists of mainly walk-ons.

"The program has never attempted to race at this level before and the fact that we got out there and went toe-to-toe with these programs speaks to the progress the program is making," Head Coach Paul Bugenhagen said.

The Orange and Blue fielded "A" and "B" boats finishing the 2 3/4-mile head race in 15:05.74 and 14:56.87, respectively. The team finished ahead of rivals Delaware and Georgetown. The "A" boat comprised coxswain Mike Gunderson '10, and from stern to bow, Zach Kosin '10, Zach Etzel '10, Kyle Lafferty '10, Chris Ostman '10, David Schluter '10, Ketigh Dezmin '10, Byron Garoufalis '10 and Peter Kasper '10.

The "B" boat consisted of coxswain Kells Green '10, and from stern to bow, David Ross '10, Dan Elies '10, George Rockett '10, Zach Manburg '10, Chris Ostman '10, Andrew Watson '10, Kaz Kawamura '10 and Adam Lessing '10.

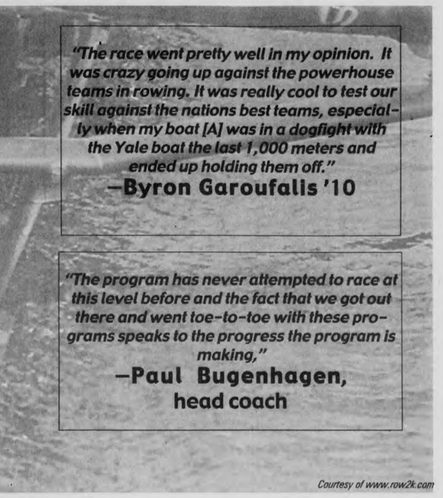
"The race went pretty well in my opinion," Garoufalis said. "It was crazy going up against the powerhouse teams in rowing. It was really cool to test our skill against the nations best teams, especially when my boat [A] was in a dogfight with the Yale boat the last 1,000 meters and ended up holding them off."

Along with an impressive finish, the Bison made another statement with their racing shirts. The slogan "I Am A Great Big Hairy American Winning Machine" was plastered across the back of each rower's racing shirt. The slogan made such a big impact at the regatta that an image of the T-shirt was featured on the main page of rowing's premier Web site, www.row2k.com.

The Belly also marked the end of the fall season for the men's crew team and the beginning of the winter training season. Training season consists of a strength and endurance program to prepare for the spring championship season. The winter season ends with a week-long training trip to Austin, Texas.

"We're going to row 1 million meters from now until we take the first strokes in Austin on Jan. 9," Bugenhagen said. "This will help us to take a lot of very high quality strokes and allow us to develop a fitness base that we can really build on as we head into the spring sprint season."

With a strong first-year class, the Bison are poised to compete with the nation's best and create a name on the national rowing scene.



"The race went pretty well in my opinion. It was crazy going up against the powerhouse teams in rowing. It was really cool to test our skill against the nations best teams, especially when my boat [A] was in a dogfight with the Yale boat the last 1,000 meters and ended up holding them off."
—Byron Garoufalis '10

"The program has never attempted to race at this level before and the fact that we got out there and went toe-to-toe with these programs speaks to the progress the program is making,"
—Paul Bugenhagen, head coach

Courtesy of www.row2k.com

Player Profile:
Jennifer Margolis '07

By Joseph Debraggio
Writer

"It's not the size of the dog in the fight, but the size of the fight in the dog."

That famous phrase accurately describes the intense play that has been a characteristic of varsity soccer player Jennifer Margolis '07 throughout her four years at the University.

While not always the biggest player on the field, her hard work often saw her making the largest impact out of the 22 players on the team.

"Jenn is a very savvy and smart soccer player," Head Coach Ben Landis '96 said. "She knows the game extremely well, the tactics that encompass the game from an individual perspective and team point of view and brings her best in competitive environments."

That extensive soccer knowledge is evident from Margolis' high school career, in which she was a four-year letter winner at Englishtown High School in New Jersey. She captured such honors as All-County and All-Conference First Teams for three years. Margolis was also selected as an All-State player.

Despite these accolades, Margolis was nervous coming into her first year as a Bison.

"The hardest thing I had to overcome was adjusting to school and soccer my freshman year," Margolis said.

Margolis adjusted very well in the first year of her campaign. She led the team with six goals. Those goals, along with three assists, gave her a point total of 15 which also led the team. Four of the goals were game-winning goals. Margolis also led the team her junior year with 29 points from 13 goals and three assists.

Listed as a forward/midfielder, Margolis plays both positions extremely well.

"She can score goals and has done so with a relative amount of ease, but she is at her best finding her teammates and setting up others to be in dangerous spots on the field," Landis said. "For those reasons, she often finds herself as a withdrawn forward or central midfielder. We've played her in both spots but she can also burst through a gap with her quickness and be a scoring threat."

While her skills are beyond question, Margolis was integral to the team in other ways as well.

"She brought some leadership to the team but mostly dependability as a player that she would compete hard on game day," Landis said.

Margolis cited team unity as a key to her success on the field.

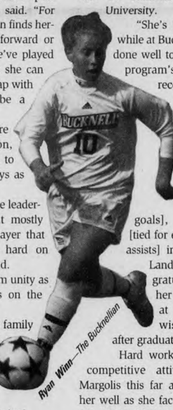
"This really was a family and if you needed anything there was a teammate there to pick you up," Margolis said.

Landis, who coached Margolis for two of her four years, said she is loyal to close friends and family as well as the team.

Sadly, Margolis' days streaking through opposing defenses for the Orange and Blue have ended. The senior's fondest memory was of winning the Patriot League Tournament last year.

"The whole weekend was just amazing," Margolis said.

Margolis plans to attend graduate school to become a school counselor. She is leaving at the end of this year to conquer new challenges, but her spirited play will be remembered at the University.



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

"She's learned a lot while at Bucknell and has done well to finish in our program's all-time record lists to be in the top 10 for points [tied for fourth with 67 points], goals [tied for fourth with 28 goals], and assists [tied for eighth with 11 assists] in her career," Landis said. "I congratulate her on her storied career at Bucknell and wish her well after graduation."

Hard work and a fierce competitive attitude pushed Margolis this far and will serve her well as she faces life beyond the Christy Mathewson Gates.

Swimming squad looks to find footing

By Barbara Perlman
Sports Editor

The men's and women's swimming and diving teams faced Patriot League foes Lafayette and Navy Saturday. While the women came up fruitless, tying Lafayette 150-150 and losing to Navy 100-200, the men split the meet, crushing Lafayette 217-82 and falling to Navy 66-234.

Under the new head coach, Dan Schinnerer, the teams have been seeing much longer and more intense practices in order to fully prepare them for the coming season.

"The team has been working so hard lately," Nikki Seaman '09 said. "Everyone is just excited to keep competing. We are just going to get faster and faster as the season progresses." This hard work was evident as the meet included three top-10 all-time performances from the women's team. The 200-yard medley relay team of Courtney Warren '10, Kelly Morris '09, Katherine Munson '07 and Rebecca Scheffter '07 took the 10th best in Bison history. Individual winner Morris swam the 100 breast in 2 minutes, 29.56 seconds, good for 10th best, and Laura Goeller '07 touched at 2:09.17 in the 200 back to take 10th in program history as well.

"Our goal is to have every swimmer and diver on our team improve and achieve their full potential as an athlete."
—Dan Schinnerer, head coach

The women experienced difficulty snatching any first place finishes but consistently placed in the runner-up and third-place positions. Goeller took third in the 200 back and second in the 400 IM. Munson claimed the second-place spot in the 200 fly in 2:08.39 and Nikki Woodward '07 took second in the 200 breast in 2:27.19. Kristen Skroski '08 and Warren took third in the 1,000 free and 100 back, respectively.

The women divers were also strong as Rebecca Bersani '10 took second in the three-meter dive with a score of 233.0. Teammate Eliza Massie '10 also claimed second place in the one-meter posting 235.30 points.

The men swam hard against the competition with Matt Crandell '07 taking second in both the 100 meter and 200 meter fly. Michael Deighan '09 claimed third in the 200 breast, touching in 2:12.82, and snatched the number four spot in the 100 breast. John Peterman '07 performed well individually, clinching third and fourth place in the 50 and 100 free, respectively. Christopher Amato '09 and Mark Kawczenski '09 rounded out the Bison's top individual performances, as Amato took third in the 200 back while Kawczenski claimed third in the 100 back.

The Bison 200-medley team of Kawczenksi, Bradford Bennett '08, Grant Steadman '08 and Peterman took second in 1:35.84. The 200-free relay team of Peterman, Steadman, Kawczenski and Daniel Fletcher '10 also claimed second place, finishing in 1:26.73.

Diver Jeffrey Manning '09 continued to excel, placing third in the three-meter dive with 250.80 points and fourth in the one-meter dive with 246.70 points.

While the Bison did not come away with all four wins, they are improving and are optimistic about the future of the team.

"Our goal is to have every swimmer and diver on our team improve and achieve their full potential as an athlete," Schinnerer said. "If we do this, good things will happen from a team perspective."

The Orange and Blue compete in the Bucknell Trials/Finals Invitational beginning at 10 a.m. Saturday and Sunday in Kinney Natatorium.

DOES YOUR CAR NEED SERVICED?

Our Service Department has $25,000 in new upgrades, including a new alignment rack, brake lathe, tire machine, and hundreds of hours of training for the techs. We now offer shuttle service to and from work or home. We have become a complete service center that can perform any work on any model, from an oil change to engine replacement.

Lewisburg Ford
Oil Change w/Multi-Point Inspection
$19.95 Excludes Diesels. Must present coupon at time of service. Expires 12/31/06.

Lewisburg Ford
Oil Change/Tire Rotation w/Multi-Point Inspection
$34.95 Must present coupon at time of service. Expires 12/31/06.

Lewisburg Ford
2265 Old Turnpike Rd. (Route 45 West)
Across From Brookpark Farm
Call Today! (570) 524-7267
Visit us on the web at www.lewisburgford.com

COLDWELL BANKER
PENN ONE REAL ESTATE
Thank You, Bucknell!!
For thirty years of calling Bucknell and Lewisburg home.
Susan Warner-Mills, Sales Associate
Competence, Integrity, Service
524-7500; swm@coldwellbanker.com

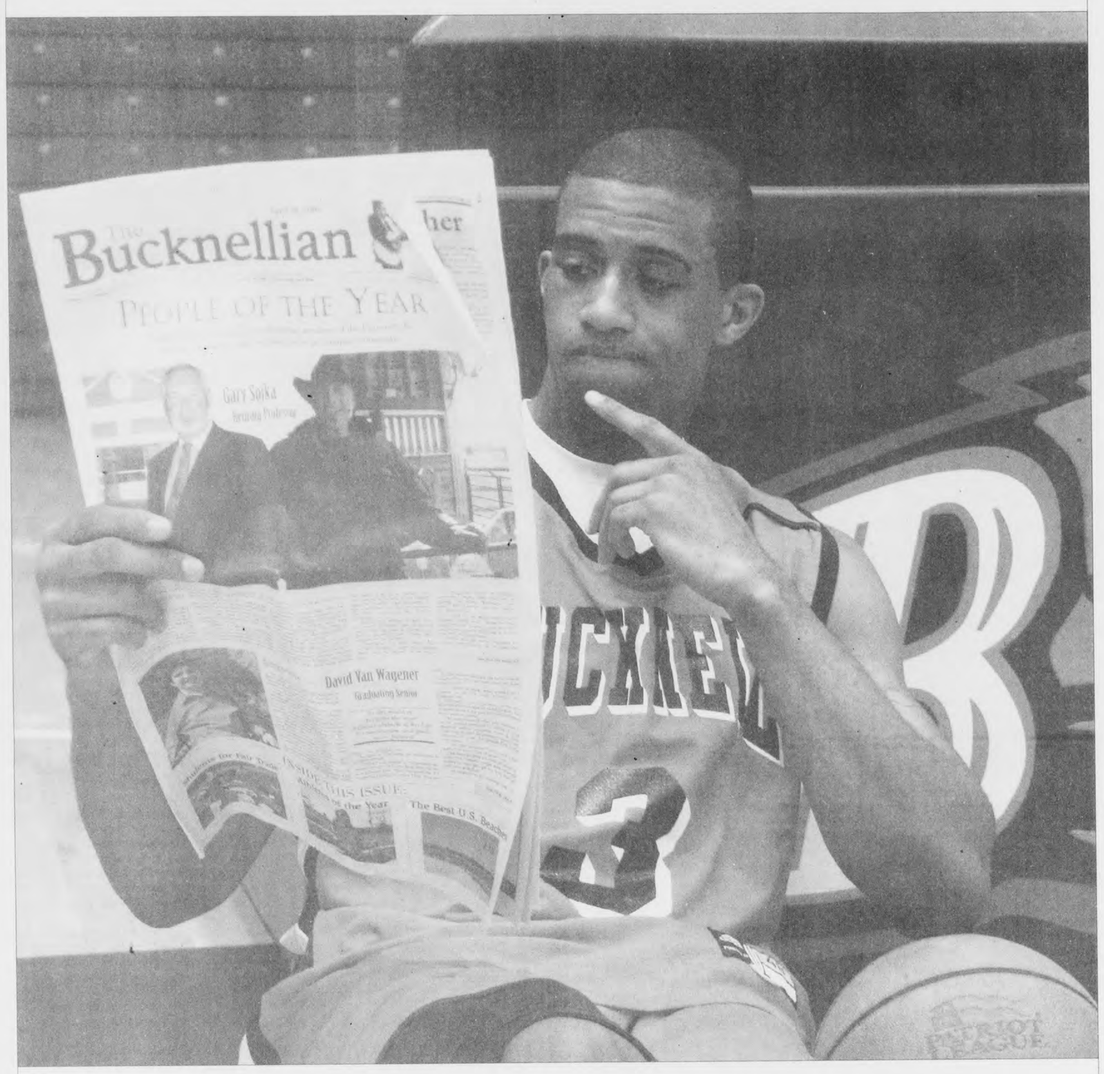
Nancy's Nu-Wave Salon
look your best
October Special
Free Paraffin Dip with Pedicure or Manicure
Main Street (Rte 45) Montandon
524-2315
www.nancysnuwave.com

CatmanDo
Handyman Services
Specializing in small home repair jobs:
Custom Carpentry
Painting
Light construction
Greg & Mathias
570-524-4724
Free Estimates Fully insured

Villager GMAC Real Estate
521 N. Derr Dr. Lewisburg, PA 17837
570-523-3244
CALL US FOR THE LARGEST SELECTION OF RENTALS IN TOWN
1-5 Bedroom Units
Houses or Apartments for 2007/2008 and 2008/2009
A few choice units for 06/07 left!
Call Linda or Duska or e-mail us at linda-treese@villagerrealty.com or duska_rishel@yahoo.com for a complete list of our rentals.

A MATCH MADE IN HEAVEN

THIS MVP IS NEVER WITHOUT HIS MVP.



PATRIOT LEAGUE MOST VALUABLE PLAYER CHARLES LEE &
BUCKNELL'S MOST VALUABLE PAPER, THE BUCKNELLIAN

Take a time out once a week and go one-on-one with The Bucknellian to stay up-to-date with all of the action happening on campus.

Enclose this form and a check (made out to The Bucknellian) and mail it to:

The Bucknellian, Bucknell University C3952, 701 Moore Avenue, Lewisburg, PA 17837

Name _____ ___ ONE YEAR: receive 24 issues each week for the academic year for only $45, a $15 savings!

Address _____

_____

Phone _____ ___ ONE SEMESTER: receive 12 issues during the fall or spring semester for $30. Please specify semester: _____

E-mail _____

For more information, contact The Bucknellian at 570-577-1520 or 570-577-1085 or e-mail bucknellian@bucknell.edu.

Men's crew competes at Belly of the Carnegie

Two first-year boats make their mark and raise eyebrows against nation's best in Princeton, N.J.

By Brian Mulligan
Sportes Editor

The men's crew team sent two novice boats to the prestigious head race the Belly of the Carnegie on Sunday in Princeton, N.J. The team competed against several top-20 crews in the nation, placing 18th and 19th in a field of 23 boats.

The race consisted of teams sending two novice boats of even speed, mixing recruits with walk-ons to judge the depth and skill of each school's first-year class. The Bison rubbed elbows with some of the most prestigious programs in the nation, including Ivies Yale, Princeton and Cornell, who annually recruit some of the best high school rowers in the nation. The Orange and Blue team consists of mainly walk-ons.

"The program has never attempted to race at this level before and the fact that we got out there and went toe-to-toe with these programs speaks to the progress the program is making," Head Coach Paul Bugenhagen said.

The Orange and Blue fielded "A" and "B" boats finishing the 2 3/4-mile head race in 15:05.74 and 14:56.87, respectively. The team finished ahead of rivals Delaware and Georgetown. The "A" boat comprised coxswain Mike Gunderson '10, and from stern to bow, Zach Kosin '10, Zach Etzel '10, Kyle Lafferty '10, Chris Ostman '10, David Schluter '10, Ketigh Dezmin '10, Byron Garoufalis '10 and Peter Kasper '10.

The "B" boat consisted of coxswain Kells Green '10, and from stern to bow, David Ross '10, Dan Elies '10, George Rockett '10, Zach Manburg '10, Chris Ostman '10, Andrew Watson '10, Kaz Kawamura '10 and Adam Lessing '10.

"The race went pretty well in my opinion," Garoufalis said. "It was crazy going up against the powerhouse teams in rowing. It was really cool to test our skill against the nations best teams, especially when my boat [A] was in a dogfight with the Yale boat the last 1,000 meters and ended up holding them off."

Along with an impressive finish, the Bison made another statement with their racing shirts. The slogan "I Am A Great Big Hairy American Winning Machine" was plastered across the back of each rower's racing shirt. The slogan made such a big impact at the regatta that an image of the T-shirt was featured on the main page of rowing's premier Web site, www.row2k.com.

The Belly also marked the end of the fall season for the men's crew team and the beginning of the winter training season. Training season consists of a strength and endurance program to prepare for the spring championship season. The winter season ends with a week-long training trip to Austin, Texas.

"We're going to row 1 million meters from now until we take the first strokes in Austin on Jan. 9," Bugenhagen said. "This will help us to take a lot of very high quality strokes and allow us to develop a fitness base that we can really build on as we head into the spring sprint season."

With a strong first-year class, the Bison are poised to compete with the nation's best and create a name on the national rowing scene.

> "The race went pretty well in my opinion. It was crazy going up against the powerhouse teams in rowing. It was really cool to test our skill against the nations best teams, especially when my boat [A] was in a dogfight with the Yale boat the last 1,000 meters and ended up holding them off."
> –Byron Garoufalis '10

> "The program has never attempted to race at this level before and the fact that we got out there and went toe-to-toe with these programs speaks to the progress the program is making,"
> –Paul Bugenhagen, head coach

Courtesy of www.row2k.com

Player Profile:

Jennifer Margolis '07

By Joseph Debraggio
Writer

"It's not the size of the dog in the fight, but the size of the fight in the dog."

That famous phrase accurately describes the intense play that has been a characteristic of varsity soccer player Jennifer Margolis '07 throughout her four years at the University.

While not always the biggest player on the field, her hard work often saw her making the largest impact out of the 22 players on the team.

"Jenn is a very savvy and smart soccer player," Head Coach Ben Landis '96 said. "She knows the game extremely well, the tactics that encompass the game from an individual perspective and team point of view and brings her best in competitive environments."

That extensive soccer knowledge is evident from Margolis' high school career, in which she was a four-year letter winner at Englishtown High School in New Jersey. She captured such honors as All-County and All-Conference First Teams for three years. Margolis was also selected as an All-State player.

Despite these accolades, Margolis was nervous coming into her first year as a Bison.

"The hardest thing I had to overcome was adjusting to school and soccer my freshman year," Margolis said.

Margolis adjusted very well in the first year of her campaign. She led the team with six goals. Those goals, along with three assists, gave her a point total of 15 which also led the team. Four of the goals were game-winning goals. Margolis also led the team her junior year with 29 points from 13 goals and three assists.

Listed as a forward/midfielder, Margolis plays both positions extremely well.

"She can score goals and has done so with a relative amount of ease, but she is at her best finding her teammates and setting up others to be in dangerous spots on the field," Landis said. "For those reasons, she often finds herself as a withdrawn forward or central midfielder. We've played her in both spots but she can also burst through a gap with her quickness and be a scoring threat."

While her skills are beyond question, Margolis was integral to the team in other ways as well.

"She brought some leadership to the team but mostly dependability as a player that she would compete hard on game day," Landis said.

Margolis cited team unity as a key to her success on the field.

"This really was a family and if you needed anything there was a teammate there to pick you up," Margolis said.

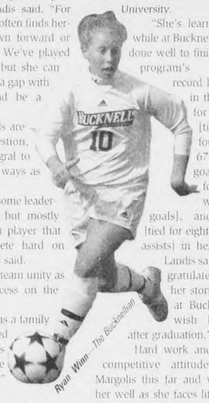
Landis, who coached Margolis for two of her four years, said she is loyal to close friends and family as well as the team.

Sadly, Margolis' days streaking through opposing defenses for the Orange and Blue have ended. The senior's fondest memory was of winning the Patriot League Tournament last year.

"The whole weekend was just amazing," Margolis said.

Margolis plans to attend graduate school to become a school counselor. She is leaving at the end of this year to conquer new challenges, but her spirited play will be remembered at the University.

"She's learned a lot while at Bucknell and has done well to finish in our program's all-time record lists to be in the top 10 for points [tied for fourth with 67 points], goals [tied for fourth with 28 goals], and assists [tied for eighth with 11 assists] in her career," Landis said. "I congratulate her on her storied career at Bucknell and wish her well after graduation."



Ryan Winn – The Bucknellian

Hard work and a fierce competitive attitude pushed Margolis this far and will serve her well as she faces life beyond the Christy Mathewson Gates.

Swimming squad looks to find footing

By Barbara Perlman
Sports Editor

The men's and women's swimming and diving teams faced Patriot League foes Lafayette and Navy Saturday. While the women came up fruitless, tying Lafayette 150-150 and losing to Navy 100-200, the men split the meet, crushing Lafayette 217-82 and falling to Navy 66-234.

Under the new head coach, Dan Schinnerer, the teams have been seeing much longer and more intense practices in order to fully prepare them for the coming season.

"The team has been working so hard lately," Nikki Seaman '09 said. "Everyone is just excited to keep competing. We are just going to get faster and faster as the season progresses." This hard work was evident as the meet included three top-10 all-time performances from the women's team. The 200-yard medley relay team of Courtney Warren '10, Kelly Morris '09, Katherine Munson '07 and Rebecca Schefftter '07 took the 10th best in Bison history. Individual winner Morris swam the 100 breast in 2 minutes, 29.56 seconds, good for 10th best, and Laura Goeller '07 touched at 2:09.17 in the 200 back to take 10th in program history as well.

> "Our goal is to have every swimmer and diver on our team improve and achieve their full potential as an athlete."
> —Dan Schinnerer, head coach

The women experienced difficulty snatching any first place finishes but consistently placed in the runner-up and third-place positions. Goeller took third in the 200 back and second in the 400 I.M. Munson claimed the second-place spot in the 200 fly in 2:08.39 and Nikki Woodward '07 took second in the 200 breast in 2:27.19. Kristen Skroski '08 and Warren took third in the 1,000 free and 100 back, respectively.

The women divers were also strong as Rebecca Bersani '10 took second in the three-meter dive with a score of 233.0. Teammate Eliza Massie '10 also claimed second place in the one-meter posting 235.30 points.

The men swam hard against the competition with Matt Crandell '07 taking second in both the 100 meter and 200 meter fly. Michael Deighan '09 claimed third in the 200 breast, touching in 2:12.82, and snatched the number four spot in the 100 breast. John Peterman '07 performed well individually, clinching third and fourth place in the 50 and 100 free, respectively. Christopher Amato '09 and Mark Kawczenski '09 rounded out the Bison's top individual performances, as Amato took third in the 200 back while Kawczenski claimed third in the 100 back.

The Bison 200-medley team of Kawczenski, Bradford Bennett '08, Grant Steadman '08 and Peterman took second in 1:35.84. The 200-free relay team of Peterman, Steadman, Kawczenski and Daniel Fletcher '10 also claimed second place, finishing in 1:26.73.

Diver Jeffrey Manning '09 continued to excel, placing third in the three-meter dive with 250.80 points and fourth in the one-meter dive with 246.70 points.

While the Bison did not come away with all four wins, they are improving and are optimistic about the future of the team.

"Our goal is to have every swimmer and diver on our team improve and achieve their full potential as an athlete," Schinnerer said. "If we do this, good things will happen from a team perspective."

The Orange and Blue compete in the Bucknell Trials/Finals Invitational beginning at 10 a.m. Saturday and Sunday in Kinney Natatorium.

DOES YOUR CAR NEED SERVICED?

Our Service Department has $25,000 in new upgrades, including a new alignment rack, brake lathe, tire machine, and hundreds of hours of training for the techs. We now offer shuttle service to and from work or home. We have become a complete service center that can perform any work on any model, from an oil change to engine replacement.

Lewisburg Ford Oil Change w/Multi-Point Inspection $19.95 Must present coupon at time of service. Expires 12/31/06

Lewisburg Ford Oil Change/Tire Rotation w/Multi-Point Inspection $34.95 Must present coupon at time of service. Expires 12/31/06

Lewisburg Ford
2265 Old Turnpike Rd. (Route 45 West) Across From Brookpark Farm
Call Today! (570) 524-7267
Visit us on the web at www.lewisburgford.com

COLDWELL BANKER
PENN ONE REAL ESTATE
Thank You, Bucknell!!
For thirty years of calling Bucknell and Lewisburg home.
Susan Warner-Mills, Sales Associate
Competence, Integrity, Service
524-7500; swm@coldwellbanker.com

Nancy's Nu-Wave Salon
look your best
October Special
Free Paraffin Dip with Pedicure or Manicure
Main Street (Rte 45) Mifflinburg
524-2315
www.nancysnuwave.com

CatmanDo
Handyman Services
Specializing in small home repair jobs:
Custom Carpentry
Painting
Light construction
Greg H Mathias
570-524-4724
Free Estimates Fully insured

Villager GMAC Real Estate
521 N. Derr Dr. Lewisburg, PA 17837
570-523-3244
CALL US FOR THE LARGEST SELECTION OF RENTALS IN TOWN
1-5 Bedroom Units
Houses or Apartments for 2007/2008 and 2008/2009
A few choice units for 06/07 left!
Call Linda or Duska or e-mail us at linda-treese@villagerrealty.com or duska_rishel@yahoo.com for a complete list of our rentals.

Bison finish up season

Water polo places fourth at Eastern Championship

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Chet Eimstad '10 scans the field as he looks to pass in a recent game. Eimstad notched a total of 12 goals over the course of his rookie season in 26 games off the bench.

BY TY CLARK
Senior Writer

The men's water polo team ended its season with a 15-13 record after finishing fourth at the Eastern Championships Sunday.

"This past weekend was in some ways successful and some ways a disappointment," Mark Masterson '07 said. "Everyone played hard this weekend. It was just that some things did not go our way."

The Bison opened the weekend seeded sixth in the eight-team field, but defeated third-seed Brown 9-7 in the opening game with four goals and an assist from Jason Rechel '08.

> "It will be very exciting to see what this team can do next year; everyone has a solid year of experience under their belt and there will be a strong senior class to lead the way."
> —Mark Masterson '07

"There is always a fear that a team will look past their first game in a tournament," Masterson said, "but we focused solely on Brown and were able to come away with a strong win."

Brown did not score until 1 minutes, 31 seconds remained in the first half, after the Bison built a 5-0 lead. The Bison remained in complete control, leading 8-3 after three quarters before Brown scored a couple of late goals to pull the margin closer. Masterson led a stingy Bison defense, making four of the 14 total steals.

Bucknell 9
Brown 7

In the late game on Saturday, the Bison fell to second-seed Navy 11-8—their fourth loss to Navy this season. Sean Robinson '07 and Masterson each tallied three goals while Rechel added a goal and two assists. The game was close the entire way. Champion Navy only led 5-4 at the half and 8-6 after the third quarter.

Navy 11
Bucknell 8

"It is very frustrating to lose to them again by such a close margin but to their credit they play very well as a team and in order to beat them you have to play almost mistake-free," Masterson said.

Rechel agreed.

"It is most frustrating that we have come within two or three goals each game," Rechel said. "To play so competitively and repeatedly end up faltering down the stretch of games is extremely frustrating, and I think has worn us [down] mentally over the course of the year."

In their final match of the season, the Bison fell to No. 10 St. Francis 11-7 in the third game of the championships to claim fourth place. Randy Ang '10 scored three goals and Masterson added a pair, but St. Francis pulled away in the third quarter, turning a 5-4 halftime lead into a 8-4 margin with a quarter to play.

St. Francis 11
Bucknell 7

Masterson and Rechel were named to All-Eastern Championship teams (Masterson to the First Team, Rechel to the Second Team), shortly before they were both named to the CWPA All-Southern Division Second Team.

"Overall I think the season was very successful," Rechel said. "We were in the national rankings every week of the season, which shows our overall team consistency and ability to beat the teams that we are supposed to beat."

Masterson has similar sentiments.

"We had a young team this season but I think everyone stepped up to the challenge and as a team we got better over the season," Masterson said.

Masterson and Rechel are looking forward to next year.

"We have all the talent, coaching and ability to win the Eastern Championships," Rechel said, "and it is just the little extra effort and work during the next year that will put us on top and will ultimately decide our success in our goal next season."

Though a senior, Masterson has a possible year of eligibility, and said he is trying extremely hard to get that extra season.

"It will be very exciting to see what this team can do next year; everyone has a solid year of experience under their belt and there will be a strong senior class to lead the way," Masterson said. "I would very much like to be a part of that, should I be able to receive another season of eligibility."

Rechel maintains a positive outlook despite the impending loss of valuable team members like Robinson and Masterson.

"The key to this year was balance," Rechel said. "The key to our success next season will be each person's individual effort to improve themselves and this team, and I look forward to an extremely successful year next fall."

Player Profile:

Jeff Manning '09

Bucknellian Archives

BY CONNIE BARKO
Senior Writer

Over the weekend the University swimming and diving team competed against Navy and Lafayette in a meet at the Kinney Natatorium. Because swimmers seem to take center stage at events, fans often forget about the diving competition that occurs simultaneously in the adjacent pool. Jeff Manning '09 led the team with a third-place finish in the three-meter and a fourth-place finish in the one-meter, scoring 250.80 and 246.70, respectively.

Manning has earned four first-place finishes this season.

Last year, Manning performed well at the Patriot League Championships despite it being his first year competing at a collegiate level. He finished 10th on the one-meter and 11th on the three-meter, but Manning was still in the shadow of the team's talented upperclassmen.

"I did well for a freshman, but we had three seniors on the team who were really good and I wasn't going to beat them," Manning said. "I trained all summer so that I could take the place of the seniors."

In addition to his improvements on the boards this year, Manning has begun to develop his role as a leader on the diving team.

"Jeff is one of those guys that is a natural leader," fellow diver Matt Traver '10 said. "Sometimes he's upfront about it, and sometimes he just does the dives and leads by example. Although not a captain at this point, I can absolutely see him as one of our official leaders in the near future."

Steven Schmaltz '09 has also witnessed Manning's leadership on the team. Schmaltz was not planning on diving in college. When he began to miss the sport, Schmaltz contacted the coach who had him talk with Manning.

"He basically convinced me to join the team, and made my transition back into the sport easier than I could have imagined," Schmaltz said.

Diving is a specialized sport and not all children grow up with a desire or the ability to compete. Manning's beginnings followed a similar pattern.

"It was random how I got started," Manning said. "I joined the swim team in sixth grade and while I was swimming, the coach asked if I wanted to try diving."

Manning has since been diving for nine years. At his high school in Bringhurst, Ind. he won sectionals three times, regionals once and went to state championships two consecutive years. In addition to his school team, Manning also joined a club team and was able to compete in the Junior Olympics.

Diving is similar to gymnastics in that there are three judges whose scores are added and multiplied by the degree of difficulty for each dive. There are five categories athletes compete in—front, back, inward, reverse and twisting. Six dives are taken on each board. Divers earn points per place which contributes to an overall tally with the swimming team.

The nine-person diving team is composed of four men and five women. Although they do not appear to work up a sweat, their training schedule is intense. In addition to two-hour practices five times a week, the squad has two morning practices and a Saturday practice when there is no meet scheduled. The sessions include lifting, abdominal work and even running for overall fitness. Although their physical training is important, athletes must also maintain a mental edge.

"Diving is 100 percent mental," Manning said. "Last year I coughed up blood. This year I got a concussion. It's about going up after that takes a lot of mental capabilities. That's the hard part of diving."

Divers often belly flop and smack the water when learning new techniques. The complex components of the dive make it easy to forget something mid-air. For example, Manning has found that getting over the fear of hitting the board was a challenge since divers often jump back towards the board in order execute a dive.

When Manning is not diving, he is a student program assistant for the CHOICE program. Manning is pursuing a degree in education with a focus on student affairs. He hopes to be involved in college life even after he graduates, as a residential life coordinator or dean of students.

While balancing these activities, Manning's expectations for the season are high as he hopes to improve on his performance in the Patriot League Championships. The team seems to possess high aspirations for the upcoming year.

"I really hope that this team, this group of people that I have come to be a part of, can rise up and be one of the best teams Bucknell has ever seen," Traver said, "And I think Jeff is going to help lead that and make it happen."

WEEKEND SCHEDULE

Friday

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL - Michigan State, 7 p.m., East Lansing, Mich.
WOMEN'S VOLLEYBALL - Army, 8 p.m., Washington, D.C.

Saturday

FOOTBALL - Colgate, 1 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
WOMEN'S SWIM & DIVE - Bucknell Trials/Finals Invitational, 10 a.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
MEN'S SWIM & DIVE - Bucknell Trials/Finals Invitational, 10 a.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
MEN'S CROSS COUNTRY - IC4A Championship, 10:30 a.m., Bronx, N.Y.
WOMEN'S CROSS COUNTRY - ECAC Championship, 11:15 a.m., Bronx, N.Y.
WOMEN'S VOLLEYBALL - Patriot League Championship, 7 p.m., Washington, D.C.
WRESTLING- Navy Classic, All Day, Annapolis, Md.

Sunday

MEN'S BASKETBALL - Saint Joseph's, 2 p.m., Philadelphia, Pa.
WOMEN'S SWIM & DIVE - Bucknell Trials/Finals Invitational, 10 a.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
MEN'S SWIM & DIVE - Bucknell Trials/Finals Invitational, 10 a.m., Lewisburg, Pa.

ACNE?
TAKE CONTROL OF YOUR ACNE...NOW!

Blue Light Treatments Are:
*Simple
*Affordable
*Effective- They Work!

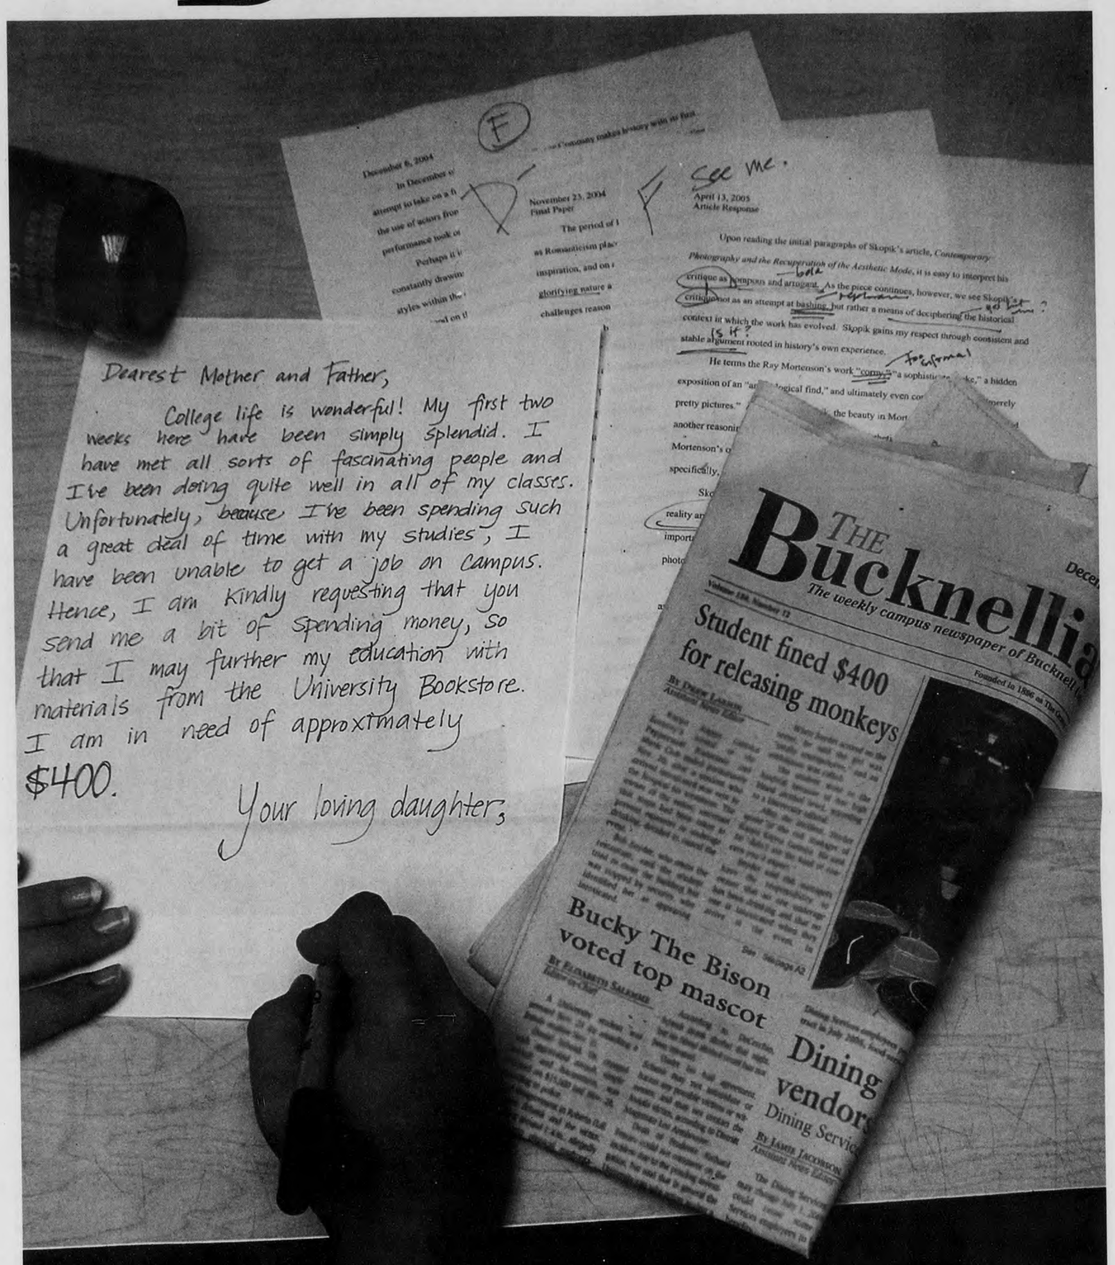
Bucknell Students Only...
Call before December 1st for a FREE consultation and receive a FREE Blue Light Treatment ($175.00)

CENTER FOR SKIN HEALTH
Ernest Normington, M.D., FACS
210 JPM Road in Lewisburg (570) 524-7777 www.drnormington.com

Summer Breeze Stables
Est. 1973

10 minutes from Campus
Riding Lessons for all levels
Certified Professional Trainer
Large indoor and Outdoor Arenas
Boarding, Training and Showing
Call 570-412-0771 for an appointment

THE Bucknellian



Dearest Mother and Father,
College life is wonderful! My first two weeks here have been simply splendid. I have met all sorts of fascinating people and I've been doing quite well in all of my classes. Unfortunately, because I've been spending such a great deal of time with my studies, I have been unable to get a job on campus. Hence, I am kindly requesting that you send me a bit of spending money, so that I may further my education with materials from the University Bookstore. I am in need of approximately $400.
Your loving daughter,
THE Bucknellian
The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell
Student fined $400 for releasing monkeys
Bucky The Bison voted top mascot
Dining vendors

Find out what's really happening on campus.

Subscribing to The Bucknellian for the Spring 2007 semester is easy!

Enclose this form and a check (made out to The Bucknellian) and mail it to:

The Bucknellian, Bucknell University C3952, 701 Moore Avenue, Lewisburg, PA 17837

Name _____

Address _____

_____

Phone _____ ___ ONE SEMESTER: receive 12 issues during spring semester for $30.

E-mail _____

For more information contact The Bucknellian at 570-577-1520 or bucknellian@bucknell.edu

Mer Cares

Dear Mer:

Recently, one of my close friends told me she was a lesbian and soon thereafter decided she was actually bisexual. This comes as a shock to me – I never really "saw it coming" when we were in high school together. Now that we are at different schools and meeting new people, I guess she really found her niche and I am happy for her. What is strange is how she is going about this new situation. She has told her new friends at school because many of them are gay or bisexual but was slow to tell her old friends, which is understandable since we aren't with her during this time, but she should be able to tell us since we grew up together. Not only is this a bit hurtful, but I don't know what to think of her anymore. I'm afraid I'm going to start treating her differently and I don't want or mean to. I respect her for who she is but I've never had a friend like this before. When we went home for fall break, she almost sort of expected all her friends to go crazy with her decision—she kept trying to defend what she wants and her desire to be "bi" but we are all taking it in good stride and accepted her for who she is and will support her in whatever she chooses to do. Why is she acting like this and how can I continue to support her through this all?

–Crazy Confused

Dear Crazy Confused:

I am sure there are plenty of issues going through your head. You need to give your friend some breathing room because she is just finding herself, as most people do in college. She is learning what she wants and she is unsure how her old friends will take the news. She feels comfortable telling her new friends at college because they knew her at the beginning of college and know her "new" self.

It is good that you have not rejected your friend because times like these show her who her true friends are. I understand you are confused and do not know exactly how to react. You need to remember she has been your friend for some time and nothing has really changed. In a way, you know her a bit better than before. You and the rest of your old friends need to assure your friend that she is welcome to share anything with you and you will support her in any decision she chooses to make.

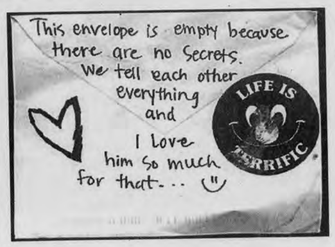
Most importantly do not treat your friend any differently. You might think you need to watch what you say about boys or girls. Explain to your friend that you do not want to treat her any differently, but if you do unintentionally then she should let you know. Make sure you establish a forum of open communication.

Acting strangely by trying to justify a decision is normal. Society is not entirely accepting of people with different sexual orientations. She may defend her decision and be blunt about whom she likes to make sure you know that this decision is for real. She wants to be prepared and show you where she stands on the issue.

You may have questions or concerns, but remember to voice them in a non-threatening way and show her you will love her no matter what she chooses to do because all your friend needs right now is support and acceptance.

Love,
Mer

Please send questions regarding any topic to marc001@bucknell.edu with subject line reading "advice" or you may send a letter via campus mail to box number C1099. I look forward to hearing from you!



This envelope is empty because there are no Secrets. We tell each other everything and I love him so much for that... "
LIFE IS TERRIFIC

Tell us anything.
This is your chance to get it all off your chest.

This is the last week to send us submissions!

Design your own postcard, write a secret on it and send it in anonymously to The Bucknellian, C-3952, through campus mail.

Connecting high school and college at the fall open house

By Liza Banhalmi
Writer

Finally. You made it to college. No more parents, no more bells ringing to signal the change of classes (with the exception of Rooke Chapel's church bells) and no more dragging your feet through the boring routine of high school. You have made it to the University, and you will never have to deal with annoying high school students anymore.

Think again. Three times each year, swarms of high school juniors and seniors flock to the Christy Mathewson Gates trying to decide if the University is right for them. They try to get to know the University in one day from 8 a.m. to 2 p.m. during an Open House Program.

The University holds two Open Houses in the fall for prospective students and one in the spring for accepted students. These programs are planned months in advance and the dates are decided years ahead. In order to notify high school students of these events, the Office of Admissions posts the dates on the University's Web site and advertises at college fairs and high school visits.

Over the weekend, between 400 and 700 students came to the University with their families to the Fall Open House.

Early Saturday morning, parents and students had the opportunity to attend Financial Aid's information session prior to registration. The information session is optional, but it is a good way for families to sit down, listen and concentrate on the University's financial aid options without the activity and excitement of later events. Even if students and parents could not attend the "Early Bird" session, Financial Aid officers were available throughout the day to answer questions.

At 8:30 a.m. Open House officially began.

"Students are presented [with] a 'slice of Bucknell life' within a relatively tight schedule," said Kurt Thiede, vice president for enrollment management and dean of admissions. "During this time, there are panel presentations on the admissions process, academic life and opportunities outside the classroom, along with campus and special building tours."

First, students and their families registered at the Kenneth Langone Athletic and Recreation Center (KLARC) and attended the all-campus fair in the Gerhard Fieldhouse. This fair is similar to the club fair the University holds for students in the beginning of the year, where clubs and organizations set up information tables for prospective members.

Many departments gave tours and presentations. Students and their families also participated in "Life in the Classroom" and "Beyond the Classroom" panel discussions.

Optional tours of the entire campus were available at the end of Open House.

If these formal events did not answer the prospective students' questions, or if the students wanted to have one-on-one conversations to get a better feel of the campus, University students were present to answer questions.

"Admissions staff and other members of the campus community are available for individual questions at the all-campus fair in the fieldhouse and around campus throughout the day," Thiede said.

Another opportunity for prospective students to get to know the University was the "Issues for the 21st Century" program intended for students interested in diversity.

"Bucknell needs to be a place that is not only diverse racially but in thought, culture and a myriad of other ways," said Tim Johnson, assistant director of admissions.

High school students applied to this program through the University's Web site. Those admitted came to the University Friday and participated in a mini-conference where they listened to a guest speaker and broke into small groups to discuss various topics.

